

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual

Twelfth Edition

Columbia Human Rights Law Review

2020

Legal Disclaimer

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (JLM) is written and updated by members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review. The law prohibits us from providing any legal advice to prisoners. This information is not intended as legal advice or representation nor should you consider or rely upon it as such. Neither the JLM nor any information contained herein is intended to or shall constitute a contract between the JLM and any reader, and the JLM does not guarantee the accuracy of the information contained herein. Additionally, your use of the JLM should not be construed as creating an attorney-client relationship with the JLM staff or anyone at Columbia Law School. Finally, while we have attempted to provide information that is up-to-date and useful, because the law changes frequently, we cannot guarantee that all information is current.

Preface

This book is the newest edition of A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (JLM). First published in 1978, the JLM is a practical legal resource written to provide incarcerated people with information about their rights while in prison. Student members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review at Columbia Law School write, edit, publish, and distribute the JLM in collaboration with lawyers and law professors. In addition to the main manual, the JLM publishes several “supplements” geared towards people incarcerated in particular states, as well as an Immigration and Consular Access Supplement. In the past four decades, the JLM has supported tens of thousands of incarcerated people across the United States in understanding and exercising their legal rights.

Now more than ever, jailhouse lawyers are sorely needed. The number of people incarcerated in the United States has increased dramatically since the JLM began. In 1978, around 300,000 people were locked up in the United States. Today, that number is 2.3 million. No other country in the world imprisons people at a higher rate than the United States. As this book goes to print, the COVID-19 pandemic continues to rage in prisons across the country. The loss and prolonged family separation that incarcerated people and their loved ones have suffered throughout the pandemic is devastating. During a time in which the harms of mass incarceration are particularly severe, jailhouse lawyers are critically important.

Like previous editions, the 12th Edition of the JLM contains important updates to the law and procedures relevant to incarcerated people across a wide range of issue areas. In addition to our usual updates, we have made a few changes to the language we use throughout the manual. We have moved towards using the term “incarcerated person” rather than “prisoner,” except where we are directly quoting a legal authority. We made this change because we recognize that people in prison are much more than their circumstances, and want the language we use to reflect that. We are also working towards changing other language in the JLM that is outdated, biased, or exclusionary. In particular, we have changed much of the language we use to discuss the LGBTQ community. While we continue to use the words “man” and “woman” throughout the JLM, our use of those words is not meant to exclude people who are transgender, non-binary, or gender nonconforming. We will continue to update our language, and welcome your feedback.

All JLM material is available to download for free on our website, listed below. We now also have a website where you can order all of our publications. For information about how to order by mail, please visit our website or write to us at the mailing address or e-mail address below:

Columbia Human Rights Law Review, A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual
435 West 116th Street
New York, NY 10027
jlm.board.mail@gmail.com
JLM Website: <http://jlm.law.columbia.edu/>
Order JLM online: <https://clsjournals.directfrompublisher.com/>

The responses and feedback we receive from incarcerated people throughout the country are our most valuable resource for improving and developing the JLM. We thank the many jailhouse lawyers whose helpful comments have contributed to the improvements that may be found in this edition. The process of improving the JLM begins again even as this edition goes to press, and we ask that the readers of the JLM continue to share their ideas and suggestions.

Foreword

A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual is an important and impressive work. Although it is well-established that prisoners have a constitutional right to affirmative governmental assistance in the preparation and filing of legal papers, see Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817 (1976), state and federal prisoners often still lack the necessary information and resources to obtain effective and adequate judicial review. This manual will help alleviate that problem. Written in a clear, readable fashion, the manual provides an easy, step-by-step guide to assist prisoners in understanding and maneuvering their way through an increasingly complex legal system. By making difficult and sensitive legal issues accessible to the lay person, the manual helps to empower prisoners to exercise a right we, as a society, hold dear—the right to speak for oneself. I commend Columbia's law students for publishing so comprehensive and insightful a manual. A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual should be read by everyone involved in, or concerned about, prisoners' rights.

Justice Thurgood Marshall
February, 1992

Acknowledgements

Special thanks to the many practitioners and professors whose thoughtful contributions and ideas helped make the Twelfth Edition of the JLM possible. They include but are not limited to John Boston, Philip Genty, Brett Dignam, and Colleen Shanahan.

Putting together a resource like A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (JLM) requires the hard work and dedication of several students, professors, practitioners, and volunteers. We would like to thank everyone who contributed to this publication, and particularly all of the Articles Editors who spent so much of their time ensuring that we published the most accurate and readable JLM yet. Additionally, we are grateful to the students who served as staff editors on the JLM since 2017, all of whom worked on this edition of the manual. We are particularly appreciative of our current staff editors (2020–2021) and those from last school year (2019–2020), whose hard work on the 12th Edition of the JLM—during difficult circumstances—was invaluable. Additional thanks go to fellow law students and friends who volunteered their sharp eyes and time to improving the JLM.

Distribution of the JLM would not be possible without our Managing Directors and Undergraduate Fellows. The COVID-19 pandemic has made distributing the JLM especially challenging. Despite the difficulties, the Managing Directors have made huge improvements to our distribution system that we hope will make it easier for incarcerated people to access our publications going forward.

All of the students who work on the JLM do so in addition to their schoolwork and extracurricular activities. That work has been particularly challenging in 2020. The grace, patience, and diligence of the students who worked on the 12th Edition is greatly appreciated.

Special thanks also to those who sent artwork to the JLM. The cover art for this edition was contributed by Joseph Pippen. The title page art is by Scott Cook.

Finally, we would like to thank all the jailhouse lawyers who read the JLM. Your dedication to fighting for justice for people in prison is why we write our publications. Thank you.

The Columbia Human Rights Law Review is an academic journal that publishes articles and commentary concerning legal issues of domestic and international human rights. The Human Rights Law Review strives to illuminate subjects of concern to advocates, activists, organizations, courts, scholars, and students of human rights around the world.

The material published in A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual may be reproduced and distributed in part by nonprofit institutions for educational purposes, including distribution to students, provided that the copies are distributed at or below cost; that they include a legal disclaimer; and that they identify the author, the Columbia Human Rights Law Review, A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual, the edition, the page numbers, and the year of the work's publication.

Table of Contents

Preface.....	vii
Foreword by Thurgood Marshall	viii
Acknowledgments.....	ix
Legal Disclaimer.....	x
Table of Contents.....	xi

Section I: Introduction to the JLM and How to Use It

Chapter 1: How to Use the JLM

A. General Comments	1
B. How to Use the JLM to Learn About the Law	2
C. How to Use the JLM When Filing a Lawsuit	2
D. How to Use the JLM if You Are Not Incarcerated in New York State.....	3

Section II: Learning Your Rights

Chapter 2: Introduction to Legal Research

A. Introduction	4
B. An Overview of the Court System	4
C. Legal Research: How to Find and Support Legal Arguments	9
D. Citation	25
E. Important Next Steps.....	27
F. Summary.....	29
G. Other Ways to Learn About Legal Research	30
H. Conclusion.....	30
Appendix A	31

Chapter 3: Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court

A. Introduction	34
B. Fulfilling the Actual Injury Requirement.....	35
C. How the State's Limited Duty to Provide Access to the Courts May Apply to You.....	36
D. What is an Adequate Law Library	39
E. The State's Duty to Permit Access to Adequate Legal Assistance	41
F. The State's Duty to Provide Materials	43
G. The State's Duty in the Internet Age	45
H. Conclusion.....	45
Appendix A	46

Section III: How to File a Lawsuit and Learn About Your Case

Chapter 4: How to Find a Lawyer

A. Introduction	56
B. Lawyers for Criminal Appeals.....	56
C. Lawyers for Civil Cases.....	57
D. Conclusion.....	59

Chapter 5: Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit

A. Introduction	60
B. Lawsuits to Challenge Your Conviction or Sentence	60
C. Lawsuits to Challenge the Conditions of Your Imprisonment.....	62

D. Conclusion.....	67
Appendix A	68
Appendix B	69
Chapter 6: An Introduction to Legal Documents
A. Introduction: The Right and Responsibilities of Self-Representation	72
B. The Legal Documents	73
C. Conclusion.....	77
Appendix A	78
Appendix B	81
Chapter 7: Freedom of Information
A. Introduction	92
B. The Federal Freedom of Information Act.....	92
C. Conclusion.....	103
Chapter 8: Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery
A. Introduction	104
B. Civil Discovery	105
C. Criminal Discovery	116
D. Conclusion.....	123
Appendix A	124
Section IV: How to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence
Chapter 9: Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence
A. Introduction	128
B. Limits on Your Right to Appeal.....	129
C. What You Can Ask the Courts to Do Before Your Appeal is Heard	146
D. What You Can Ask the Court to Do in Your Appeal	148
E. Preparing Your Papers for Your Appeal	159
F. Continuing Your Appeal.....	162
G. Three Options for Dealing with Ineffective Assistance of Appellate Counsel	164
H. Conclusion.....	167
Appendix A	168
Appendix B	169
Chapter 10: Applying for Re-Sentencing for Drug Offenses
A. Introduction	180
B. Re-Sentencing for Federal Drug Crimes	180
C. Re-Sentencing for Drug Crimes in New York State	202
D. Re-Sentencing: What Happens if You Apply?.....	212
E. Conclusion.....	218
Appendix A	219
Appendix B	226
Appendix C	230
Chapter 11: Using Post-Conviction DNA testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence
A. Introduction	233
B. Common Procedures Used to Obtain DNA Testing.....	233
C. Legal Assistance for Those Seeking Post-Conviction DNA Testing	241
D. Conclusion.....	241
Appendix A	242

Chapter 12: Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

A. Introduction	249
B. Ways to Claim Ineffective Assistance of Counsel	249
C. How to Prove Ineffective Assistance of Counsel	253
D. Common Ineffective Assistance of Counsel Claims	258
E. Conclusion	261

Chapter 13: Federal Habeas Corpus

A. Introduction	262
B. The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Agreement	268
C. What You Cannot Raise in Your Habeas Petition	284
D. Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus	289
E. The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus	317
F. How to Get Help from a Lawyer	328
G. Conclusion	330
Appendix A	331
Appendix B	333
Appendix C	334

Section V: How to Attack the Conditions of Your Imprisonment

Chapter 14: The Prison Litigation Reform Act

A. Introduction	348
B. Filing Fees	349
C. The “Three Strikes” Provision	357
D. Screening and Dismissal of Incarcerated People’s Cases	374
E. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies	375
F. Physical Injury Requirement: Section 1997e(e) of the PLRA	418
G. Attorney’s Fees	439
H. Waiver of Reply	441
I. Hearings by Telecommunication and at Prisons	442
J. Revocation of Earned Release Credit	443
K. Diversion of Damage Awards	444
L. Injunctions	445
M. Conclusion	449

Chapter 15: Inmate Grievance Procedures

A. Introduction	450
B. Exhausting Your Administrative Remedies	451
C. Grievances in New York	452
D. The Basic Structure of the New York IGP	456
E. The New York IGP Rules	457
F. Rules for Inmate Grievance Procedures in Other States	465
G. Conclusion	466

Chapter 16: Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law

A. Introduction	467
B. Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Challenge State or Local Government Action	471
C. Procedural Requirements for Your Lawsuit	489
D. Alternate Ways to Bring Lawsuits	520
E. Special Concerns for People Incarcerated in Federal Prisons	522
F. Conclusion	526
Appendix A	527

Chapter 17: The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions
A. Introduction	552
B. Know Your Rights: Tort Actions	552
C. Protecting Your Rights	561
D. Checklist for Filing with the Court of Claims.....	573
E. Conclusion.....	574
Appendix A	575

Chapter 18: Your Rights At Prison Disciplinary Proceedings
A. Introduction	600
B. Definition of “Due Process”	600
C. Due Process in Prison.....	601
D. Incarcerated Person’s Basic Rights in Disciplinary Procedures	616
E. New York Disciplinary Proceedings and Appeal Procedures.....	629
F. Administrative Segregation Proceedings	636
G. Conclusions	641

Chapter 19: Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World
A. Introduction	642
B. The Right to General (Non-Legal) Correspondence.....	643
C. Legal Correspondence with Courts, Public Officials, and Attorneys: Privileged Correspondence.....	652
D. Internet Communication.....	658
E. Receipt and Possession of Publications	659
F. Access to the News Media	664
G. Visitation.....	665
H. Using Telephones	670
I. Conclusion.....	672

Section VI: How to Attack Your Conviction, Sentence, or Prison Conditions at the State Level

Chapter 20: Using Article 440 if the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence
A. Introduction	674
B. When to Use Article 440.....	674
C. How to File and Article 440 Motion.....	690
D. What to Expect After You Have Filed Your Article 440 Motion.....	692
E. What Relief the Court Can Provide Under Article 440.....	693
F. How to Appeal if Your Article 440 Motion is Denied.....	694
G. Conclusion.....	695
Appendix A	696
Appendix B	697

Chapter 21: State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan
A. Introduction	704
B. Florida	710
C. New York.....	721
D. Michigan.....	736
E. Conclusion.....	741

Chapter 22: How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules

A. Introduction	742
B. What You Can Complain About Under Article 78	744
C. When You Can Obtain Relief Under Article 78	750
D. Procedures for Filing an Article 78 Petition	753
E. How to Bring an Article 78 Proceeding	762
F. How to Appeal Your Article 78 Decision	764
G. Conclusion.....	766
Appendix A	767

Section VII: General Health and Safety Rights in Prison

Chapter 23: Your Right to Adequate Medical Care

A. Introduction	783
B. The Right to Adequate Medical Care	784
C. Specific Health Care Rights.....	798
D. Medical Care for Female Incarcerated People	805
E. Your Right to Informed Consent and Medical Privacy.....	809
F. Actions You Can Bring When You Are Denied Medical Care.....	812
G. Conclusion.....	815

Chapter 24: Your Right to be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated People

A. Introduction	817
B. Your Right to be Free from Assault.....	819
C. Sexual Assault and Rape	840
D. Assault on LGBTQ Incarcerated People	844
E. Legal Remedies Available for Victims of Unlawful Assault	848
F. Conclusion.....	850

Chapter 25: Your Right to be Free from Illegal Body Searches

A. Introduction	851
B. Involuntary Exposure.....	852
C. Body Searches.....	854
D. Legal Remedies.....	874
E. Conclusion.....	876

Chapter 26: Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prison

A. Introduction	877
B. Background Information on Infectious Diseases	877
C. Constitutional Rights in a Prison Setting.....	883
D. Legal Rights Concerning Testing for Infectious Diseases.....	884
E. Legal Rights and Prevention of Infectious Diseases	890
F. Legal Rights and Confidentiality.....	894
G. Legal Rights and Medical Treatment.....	895
H. Discriminatory Treatment and Infectious Diseases	898
I. Sentencing Persons with Infectious Diseases	901
J. Life After Imprisonment: Planning for Your Release.....	902
K. Conclusion.....	902
Appendix A	903

Section VIII: Issue-Specific Rights

Chapter 27: Religious Freedom in Prison

A. Introduction	910
B. The First Amendment Establishment Clause	912
C. The First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA)	917
D. Your Rights Under New York State Statutes.....	941
E. Faith-Based Rehabilitation Programs.....	944
Appendix A	945

Chapter 28: Rights of Incarcerated People with Disabilities

A. Introduction	948
B. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act	949
C. Enforcing Your Rights Under the ADA and Section 504	974
D. Conclusion.....	983

Chapter 29: Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness

A. Introduction	984
B. Your Right to Receive Treatment.....	988
C. What to Do if You Receive Unwanted Treatment	998
D. Conditions of Confinement for Prisoners with Mental Illness.....	1010
E. Special Considerations for Pretrial Detainees	1015
F. Planning for Your Release	1021
G. Planning for Parole.....	1021
H. Where to Go for Help.....	1021
I. Conclusion.....	1022
Appendix A	1023
Appendix B	1026

Chapter 30: Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and/or Queer Incarcerated People

A. Introduction	1027
B. Unequal treatment Because of Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity.....	1028
C. Your Right to Control Your Gender Presentation While in Prison	1031
D. Your Right to Confidentiality Regarding Your Sexual Orientation or Gender Identity	1037
E. Assault and Harassment.....	1041
F. Housing and Protective Custody	1048
G. Visitation Rights: Special Issues for LGBTQ Incarcerated People.....	1052
H. Right to Receive LGBTQ Literature.....	1056
I. Changes in the Law.....	1058
J. Jury Bias.....	1062
K. Conclusion.....	1064
Appendix A	1066

Chapter 31: Security Classification and Gang Validation

A. Introduction	1068
B. General Security Classification	1068
C. Gang Validation.....	1079
D. Conclusion.....	1085

Chapter 32: Parole

A. Introduction	1086
B. New York.....	1086
C. Minimum Term of Incarceration Under an Indeterminate Sentence & Conditional Release Under Determinate Sentence	1087
D. Shock Incarceration Program	1088
E. Sentence of Parole Supervision.....	1089
F. Parole Release Hearing and Appeals	1090
G. Release on Parole.....	1101
H. Revocation of Your Parole (Taking Away Your Parole).....	1104
I. Appeals.....	1109
J. Parole Violator Reappearances.....	1110
K. Release from Parole Supervision	1110
L. Parole in California	1111
M. Parole in Florida	1113
N. Parole in Illinois	1115
O. Parole in Texas	1116
P. Parole in Michigan	1117
Q. Conclusion.....	1119

Chapter 33: Rights of Incarcerated Parents

A. Introduction	1121
B. Private Placement with a Relative or Friend	1123
C. Foster Care	1124
D. Involuntary Termination of Parental Rights	1141
E. Voluntary Adoption	1148
F. Incarcerated Fathers with Children in Foster Care.....	1149
G. Getting to Court.....	1152
H. The Right to Counsel.....	1152
I. Conclusion.....	1153
Appendix A	1154
Appendix B	1155

Chapter 34: The Rights of Pretrial Detainees

A. Introduction	1162
B. Your Rights Before You Are Charged.....	1163
C. Your Rights After You Are Charged.....	1168
D. What Determines Whether You Stay in Jail or Are Released Pretrial	1171
E. Conditions of Confinement.....	1180
F. Conclusion.....	1189
Appendix A	1191

Chapter 35: Getting Out Early: Conditional and Early Release

A. Introduction	1195
B. New York State.....	1195
C. Sentencing Structure in New York.....	1195
D. Good-Time Credit	1197
E. Merit-Time Credit	1202
F. Conditional Release.....	1204
G. Early Release from a Definite Sentence.....	1211
H. Presumptive Release	1212
I. Clemency and Commutation in New York.....	1213
J. Compassionate Release for Persons with Terminal Diseases.....	1218

K. Federal Sentences.....	1220
L. Credit for Time Served.....	1220
M. Substantial Assistance Prosecuting Others.....	1223
N. Additional Ways to BOP Can Shorten a Federal Sentence.....	1224
O. Federal Supervised Release.....	1238
P. Federal Executive Clemency.....	1242
Q. Conclusion.....	1246
 Chapter 36: Special Considerations for Sex Offenders
A. Introduction.....	1247
B. Protective Custody.....	1248
C. “Recommended” Counseling and the Loss of Good Time Credits.....	1249
D. HIV Testing.....	1251
E. Post-Conviction DNA Testing.....	1255
F. Special Parole Considerations.....	1255
G. Incarceration Beyond Your Conditional Release Date.....	1256
H. The Importance of Following Parole Rules.....	1256
I. Community Registration and Notification Laws.....	1256
J. Civil Commitment.....	1266
K. Conclusion.....	1271
Appendix A.....	1272
 Chapter 37: Rights Upon Release
A. Housing Rights and Registration.....	1273
B. Eligibility for Public Benefits and Entitlements.....	1280
C. Employment.....	1286
D. Child Custody.....	1297
E. Military Service.....	1301
F. Voting Rights.....	1304
G. Conclusion.....	1307
Appendix A.....	1308
Appendix B.....	1310
Appendix C.....	1319
Appendix D.....	1321
 Chapter 38: Rights of Youth in Prison
A. Introduction.....	1324
B. The Federal System.....	1326
C. Procedure in New York State.....	1336
D. Prison Conditions.....	1343
E. Conclusion.....	1348
Appendix A.....	1349
 Chapter 39: Temporary Release Programs
A. Introduction.....	1351
B. Overview of Temporary Release Programs.....	1351
C. Eligibility Requirements for Temporary Release Programs.....	1359
D. How to Apply for Temporary Release Programs.....	1362
E. What to Do if Your Temporary Release Application is Denied or Revoked.....	1370
F. The Second Chance Act of 2007 and Federal Bureau of Prisons Temporary Release Programs.....	1375
G. Conclusion.....	1377

Chapter 40: Plea Bargaining

A. Introduction	1378
B. Plea Bargaining Considerations	1378
C. Plea Bargaining Agreements	1383
D. Court Acceptance of a Plea Bargain	1386
E. Withdrawing from a Plea Bargain.....	1398
F. Conclusion.....	1400

Chapter 41: Special Issues of Incarcerated Women

A. Introduction	1401
B. Equal Protection and Programming.....	1402
C. Adequate Medical Care	1404
D. Sexual Assault, Harassment, and Privacy Concerns	1413
E. Drug Treatment Programs.....	1421
F. Clemency.....	1422
G. Conclusion.....	1427
Appendix A	1428

Section IX: Appendices

Appendix I: Addresses of Federal Courts & New York State Prisons and Their Respective Federal Judicial Districts	1430
Appendix II: New York State: Filing Instructions & Addresses of New York State Courts	1461
Appendix III: Addresses of New York District Attorneys	1473
Appendix IV: Directory of Legal and Social Services for Incarcerated People	1478
Appendix V: Definitions of Words Used in the JLM	1500
Appendix VI: Definitions of Latin Words Used in the JLM	1516

CHAPTER 1

HOW TO USE THE JLM

A. General Comments

If you have been convicted of a crime and sentenced to prison, A Jailhouse Lawyer's Manual (the “JLM”) is for you. It contains information about challenging your conviction or your sentence, what your rights are while you are in prison, and different ways to obtain an early release from prison.

The JLM contains 41 chapters. You should begin by reading Chapters 2, 5, and 6. These Chapters teach you the basics of understanding and using legal materials. You can also look in the Table of Contents for the subject or subjects that are related to your concerns.

The Appendices at the end of the JLM are also important. Appendices I and II contain the addresses of the federal courts and state courts in New York. Appendix III is a list of addresses for District Attorneys' offices in New York. Appendix IV contains a list of several organizations that support incarcerated people. Appendix V contains a dictionary of legal terms used in the JLM. Appendix VI defines Latin terms used in the JLM.

There are also supplements to the JLM. There is an immigration supplement that will give you information on how to handle any immigration-related legal problems you might have. There are also state-specific supplements for Louisiana and Texas, and additional state supplements currently being written. For more information about these state supplements, refer to Chapter 1, Part D. A full copy of this edition of the JLM as well as our supplements is available online for free at blogs2.law.columbia.edu/JLM.

The JLM discusses only those areas of law that relate to the rights of incarcerated people. To learn about the law relating to other matters—such as automobile accidents or apartment leases—you will need to look elsewhere. Chapter 2, “Introduction to Legal Research,” explains how to research these and other areas of law in your prison law library.

Similarly, although the JLM explains the procedures you can use to attack your conviction, it does not explain many other areas of the law, such as the constitutional limits on the power of the police to search you, seize evidence from you, or arrest you. The JLM does not describe the limits on a grand jury's power to indict you, the limits on what the prosecutor can say to the jury, or the questions the prosecutor cannot ask witnesses or defendants during the trial. If you have been convicted of a crime, these are areas of law that you will probably need to know more about to determine whether your conviction was lawful. The most important rules in these areas of the law come from the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, and from court rulings declaring what these amendments mean in relation to specific cases. To learn about Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendment issues, you may research them in the library using the skills you will learn by reading Chapter 2 of the JLM.

In general, it is always a good idea to seek the help of a lawyer in pursuing any legal action. But it is often not possible to get professional legal help—at least at first. If you do not have a lawyer, the JLM can help you initiate a legal action on your own or show you how to get a lawyer interested in your case. Even if you have a lawyer, the JLM can help you understand your rights. Understanding what your lawyer is doing, what papers he or she should be filing, and what questions he or she should be asking will enable you to actively participate in your case. You might even be able to help your lawyer with some of the work. Remember: there are very strict deadlines in criminal appeals and most other actions. Learn these deadlines and make sure your lawyer files all necessary papers on time.

Two final suggestions about using the JLM: use it cautiously and share it. Use it cautiously because the law changes often, and so the JLM may contain statements that are out-of-date by the time you read them. To make sure that a statement, statute, or holding is up to date, follow the steps described in Chapter 2, which explain “Shepard's” and “pocket-parts.” Remember that an incorrect or weak legal argument may waste a valuable opportunity to challenge a violation of your rights.

Please share the JLM because there are not enough copies of the JLM to go around and because you will benefit from others' understanding and assertion of their rights. One person's victory in court may bring about changes in prison conditions that will improve life for all the people incarcerated in that person's jail or prison, including you.

B. How to Use the JLM to Learn About the Law

If you are not a jailhouse lawyer and you want to learn the basic tools of legal research, begin by reading Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research." If at all possible, read Chapter 2 in the law library and look at each book the chapter mentions. Do not expect to understand all of Chapter 2 the first time you read it. It often takes law students many months before they understand how all of the different research tools work. The key to learning how to do legal research is practice.

The next step is to read Chapter 6, which introduces you to basic legal papers and to the most common types of legal proceedings. After you have read Chapters 2 and 6, you will be able to understand how the research for the memorandum in Chapter 6 was done and why the memorandum was written. From this point on, it is simply a question of improving your skills and becoming more familiar with the law. The best way to do this is to read the rest of the JLM.

If you come across a word in the JLM that you do not understand, look it up in Appendix V. If the word is not explained there, use the legal dictionary in your prison's law library.

If you already know how to do legal research but have a specific problem, look at the Table of Contents to see which sections may apply to your problem. If you need to determine your rights in an area covered by the JLM, like religious freedom or temporary release programs, read the appropriate chapter and then confirm what it states through research in the library. This is done by finding the part(s) of the chapter discussing your problem and then writing down the cases or statutes that are cited in the footnotes. If these authorities are cases, read the cases and then "Shepardize" them; if they are statutes, find the statutes, check their pocket-parts to make sure that they have not been repealed or amended, and then look at the "notes of decisions" in the pocket-parts to see if they have been recently interpreted by the courts. Although terms like "Shepardize" and "notes of decisions" may seem strange to you right now, Chapter 2 will explain them. You should make sure to read all the chapters that might contain information on any part of your case.

You should read Chapter 5 if you have a serious problem and you think you require relief (help) from a court. This chapter points you to other chapters that explain the kinds of legal proceedings you can use. Again, verify and update anything cited in the JLM that you plan to use in your case. Outdated and incorrect cases or statutes will hurt your chances of winning and may delay the process.

If no chapter in the JLM discusses your problem, you will have to start from the beginning, using the legal research skills that you will learn by reading Chapter 2. It is also possible that one of the chapters in the JLM discusses a similar problem. If this is the case, it may be helpful to start your research by reading some of the cases or statutes cited in that chapter.

C. How to Use the JLM When Filing a Lawsuit

Once you have decided that your rights have been violated or that you have a valid claim and you want to go to court, you should turn to the sample legal papers in Chapters 9, 16, and 17 (and Chapters 10, 20, and 22 for people incarcerated in New York State). Each of these chapters discusses a different kind of lawsuit and provides examples of the legal papers that you must send to the court in order to initiate the suit. These legal papers are called "forms" because you can use the basic language provided in the sample form and fill in the blanks with the facts that apply to your case. For example, Chapter 9, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," contains the types of papers you will need to start a criminal appeal.

It is important that you do not tear these sample legal papers out of the JLM and do not copy them word for word. If you tear them out and try to send them to a court, or if you simply copy them and then send your copy to a court, the court will either throw them out or send them back to you. Before using these forms, you should read the first part of the chapter that discusses how to use them. Then follow the footnotes contained in each legal paper, which will tell you exactly how to prepare your own version.

After you have written your version of the legal papers, you must make copies of what you have written. Each chapter tells you how many copies you will have to make. Then you will have to mail the original form plus several copies to a court. Appendices I and II tell you which court you should send the papers to. You may also have to send copies to the District Attorney. Appendix III contains the mailing addresses of all the District Attorneys in New York. Most prisons have photocopying machines. If your prison does not, you can copy your papers by retyping or rewriting them.

Chapters 4 and 9 also explain how to request a court-appointed lawyer to pursue your case. When you make this request—by filing “poor person’s” or in forma pauperis papers—you can also ask the court to assume the responsibility for “serving” all of your papers on your opponents and to allow you to proceed without paying court fees up front. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”), incarcerated people may be required to pay court-filing fees in full. The full cost of the fees will be deducted gradually from your prison account. For a fuller discussion of the PLRA and how it affects your rights, read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

D. How to Use the JLM if You Are Not Incarcerated in New York State

Many of the Chapters in the JLM discuss the law as it exists in New York State. If you are not incarcerated in New York State, these laws do not apply to you. You must find out what laws and regulations your state or municipality has issued. Similarly, cases decided by New York state courts that are described in the JLM do not apply directly to people incarcerated in states outside New York.

If you are unable to find materials dealing with the laws and regulations of your state in the JLM, do not be discouraged. The JLM is valuable for people incarcerated outside of New York for several reasons. First, many of the Chapters discuss laws that affect people incarcerated outside of New York. Several Chapters have parts on, or are entirely focused on, the law of states other than New York, like Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan.” In addition to Chapters in the JLM that address state law outside of New York, you may find information on the laws and regulations affecting you in the State Supplements. There is a Louisiana and Texas supplement to the JLM, and supplements for additional states are currently being written. If you are incarcerated in Louisiana or Texas, these supplemental books will provide you with information on the state laws and regulations affecting your rights, especially when they are different from the laws discussed in the main JLM. The JLM is also valuable for people incarcerated outside of New York for two other reasons. First, as you will learn in Chapter 2, decisions by the United States Supreme Court discussed in the JLM often apply to all people in prison or jail across the country. Second, by reading the chapters in the JLM you will learn how to effectively research the laws of your own state.

Although this book does not always answer your specific question, it teaches you how to get the answer on your own. Wherever you are incarcerated, you can use your new skills to protect your rights. Carefully reading the JLM will allow you to think like a lawyer and to analyze your problem from a legal perspective. Knowing how to think this way is very important because what matters most is knowing what remedies you are entitled to, and not what remedies you think are best.

CHAPTER 2

INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL RESEARCH*

A. Introduction

To be an effective “jailhouse lawyer,” you must understand both how the judicial system is organized, and how to find and use the law so that you can work within that system. This Chapter will first explain the structure of the courts that make up the judicial system. Then this Chapter will discuss how you can research the law in your prison library. Legal research is important in helping you understand your legal rights so that you can present your position to a court clearly and effectively.

Before you research the law, you will need to know the powers and functions of the court where you will make your argument. Different types of courts have different powers and hear different types of arguments. For example, the argument you make in a trial court may not be appropriate in an appellate court. Part B of this Chapter describes how the judicial system is organized and will help you understand the different powers that courts have at each level of the system. Part C explains basic legal research and provides an outline for how to develop legal arguments. Part D provides the general rules for how to cite cases and statutes (laws passed by a state legislature or Congress) in documents that you submit to a court. Part E suggests next steps you should take after you complete your legal research, such as double-checking that all your cases are up-to-date and have not been overruled.

B. An Overview of the Court System

In order to move your case successfully through the judicial system, you need to understand the system’s basic structure. Some courts will only hear cases that have to do with a certain subject matter. Other courts will only hear specific types of legal proceedings (such as an appeal) or will only hear cases from a certain geographic area. So, before you file a case, you have to make sure that you are filing it with the correct court.

Courts are responsible for determining what a law means. There are two types of law: law created by a legislature, and law created by judges in a court. Understanding this basic structure will help you be an effective jailhouse lawyer.

1. The Court System

The American judicial system is made up of two types of courts: trial courts and appellate courts. In trial courts, lawyers put evidence before a judge or jury who will decide the outcome of the dispute. “Criminal trials” determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, while “civil cases” determine whether the defendant is “liable” (responsible for harms or wrongs) to the plaintiff. In civil cases, one party sues another party for a “remedy,” usually money. “Appellate courts” review the legal conclusions of trial courts for errors. If the appellate court finds legal errors, it may order a new trial. The major difference between trial and appellate courts is that the trial courts decide issues of fact (for example, “did person A hit person B with a baseball bat?”). However, appellate courts generally will only check to make sure that the trial court correctly applied the law to those facts (for example, “if person A did hit person B, was it an assault as defined by the law?”). Appellate courts will rarely interfere with the facts that have been found by a trial court. If the trial court decided person A did hit person B, the appellate court will generally accept that as true. Appellate courts will normally only consider arguments about the law, and not about the facts.¹

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Maples based on previous versions by Kristin Heavey, Jennifer Parkinson, Paul Quinlan, William H. Knight, Andrew Cameron, and Patricia A. Sheehan.

1. Normally, appellate courts will overturn factual findings of a trial court only if the findings were “clearly erroneous.” “A fact finding is clearly erroneous only when ‘although there is evidence to support it, the reviewing

Most states and the federal system have two levels of appellate courts. In the state system, the “intermediate” appellate court² is often called the Court of Appeals. In the federal system, it is called the Circuit Court of Appeals. The higher level of appellate court, sometimes referred to as the “court of last resort,” is often called the Supreme Court. If you are a criminal defendant, you usually have an automatic right to appeal your conviction or sentence to the intermediate appellate court.³ You can only appeal to a higher appellate court if that court agrees to hear your case. Usually, higher appellate courts only grant appeals to cases that raise new legal issues. The typical court structure is shown below in Figure 1.

Figure 1: Typical Organization of State and Federal Courts. (For a more detailed diagram, see the inside front and back covers of the JLM.)

Some states have different names for their courts, but the basic organization remains the same.⁴ Every state (and the District of Columbia) has its own court system. Each court system only handles cases in its “jurisdiction.” Jurisdiction is the area over which a court has the power to resolve disputes and enforce its decisions. Some courts have jurisdiction only over certain subject matter, and some courts only have jurisdiction over certain geographic territory. Both of these types of jurisdiction are discussed below.

(a) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Courts are divided into state and federal courts. Federal courts have jurisdiction over cases that involve the U.S. Constitution or a law passed by the U.S. Congress (called a “federal statute”).⁵ You can also file a civil complaint in federal district court if you and the other party are citizens of different states and the dispute involves more than $75,000.⁶ State courts, on the other hand, are generally free to deal with any matter; that is, generally a state court can decide a dispute that has to do with a court on the entire evidence is left with the definite and firm conviction that a mistake has been committed.” Catharine M. Goodwin, Jay E. Grenig & Nathan A. Fishbach, Federal Criminal Restitution § 13:4 (2012); see also Speedy Trial, 35 Geo. L.J. Ann. Rev. Crim. Proc. 360, 380 n.1269 (“Most courts adopt . . . a clearly erroneous standard of review for questions of fact.”).

2. The first level of appellate court is called an “intermediate” appeal court because it is between the trial court below and the higher appellate court above. However, some states lack an intermediate appellate court, and only have trial courts and the high appellate court.

3. Prosecutors, on the other hand, can only rarely appeal. See, e.g., Gary Muldoon, Handling a Criminal Case in NY § 24:43 (2018) (“The prosecution has the right to appeal in certain limited circumstances.”).

4. For example, New York State has a more complicated court structure, but it still follows the basic pattern of other states. In New York, the trial court is called the Supreme Court. The intermediate appellate courts are called the Appellate Division, which is subdivided into four regional Departments; each Department has jurisdiction over different parts of the state. The highest court is called the Court of Appeals. For more details on the organization of the New York State court system, see the diagrams on the inside back cover of the JLM.

5. U.S. CONST. art. III, § 2. The § symbol means “section.” Additional federal statutes also provide original jurisdiction in federal district court for civil cases that concern the “Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

6. 28 U.S.C. § 1332.

state law or a federal law. Defendants often prefer to bring their case in federal court, if possible, because federal courts can often hear cases more quickly than state courts.

In addition to the distinction between state and federal law, some courts are further limited in the subject matter of law they may consider. For example, the New York City Criminal Court can only hear non-felony criminal cases; the Federal Tax Court can only hear tax cases.⁷

(b) Territorial Jurisdiction

Courts are also limited to hearing cases from particular regions. For example, the Criminal Court of New York City can only hear cases about crimes that took place in New York City. Similarly, the federal court for the Eastern District of New York is restricted to hearing cases about incidents arising in Long Island, Queens, Brooklyn, and Staten Island. So, even if a case is within a court's subject matter jurisdiction, the court cannot hear the case unless it also took place in the court's territorial jurisdiction.

Appellate courts also have limited geographic jurisdiction. Each federal circuit court of appeals represents a specific geographic region; the regions are numbered and may include more than one state. The following are the twelve Circuit Courts and the states (and territories) that are in their jurisdiction:

First Circuit: Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Puerto Rico, and Rhode Island;
Second Circuit: Connecticut, New York, and Vermont;
Third Circuit: Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the Virgin Islands;
Fourth Circuit: Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia;
Fifth Circuit: Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas;⁸
Sixth Circuit: Kentucky, Michigan, Ohio, and Tennessee;
Seventh Circuit: Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin;
Eighth Circuit: Arkansas, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota;
Ninth Circuit: Alaska, Arizona, California, Guam, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and the Northern Mariana Islands;
Tenth Circuit: Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Utah, and Wyoming;
Eleventh Circuit: Alabama, Florida, and Georgia;
D.C. Circuit: District of Columbia.

The U.S. Supreme Court, also known as “the Court,” is the highest appellate court in the federal judicial system and is the final court of appeal for all federal cases. The Court can also hear criminal appeals from the highest appellate state court, but only if those cases involve constitutional questions or issues of federal law.⁹ If a case does not have a federal legal issue, then the State Supreme Court is the court of last resort for criminal cases that began in the state court system.

Understanding the position and powers of different courts will help you make sure that you file your case in a court that has the power to hear it, and has the power to grant you the remedy you are asking for. If you know the limited jurisdiction of various courts, you will also know if a court has acted beyond its powers. For example, if you were convicted of assault in the Federal Tax Court, the conviction may be invalid because that court is only authorized to hear tax cases; convicting someone of assault would exceed the Tax Court's subject matter jurisdiction. Similarly, if you were convicted of

7. See Handeland v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 519 F.2d 327, 329 (9th Cir. 1975) (quoting Burns, Stix Friedman & Co., Inc. v. Comm'r of Internal Revenue, 57 T.C. 392, 396 (1971)) (“[T]he basic jurisdiction of the Tax Court . . . is now limited to . . . [f]ederal income, estate, and gift taxes.”).

8. Before Oct. 1, 1981, the Fifth Circuit included all of the states that are now in the Fifth Circuit plus all of the states now in the Eleventh Circuit.

9. As explained in Part B(1)(a) of this Chapter, federal law includes matters involving the Constitution, a federal statute, or a treaty.

a crime in the Criminal Court of New York City but the offense took place outside the City of New York, then that court would not have territorial jurisdiction over the case.

2. The Basis of Judicial Decision Making: What is “The Law”?

(a) Types of Law: Constitutions, Statutes, and Case Law

Judges make decisions based on law. Your goal as a jailhouse lawyer is to convince the judge that the law supports your arguments. There are three sources of law: (1) constitutions; (2) legislation (also called “statutes” or “statutory law”); and (3) “case law” (previous decisions made by judges). Judges weigh each source of law in the following order: constitutions are more “persuasive” (more convincing to the court) than legislation, and legislation is more persuasive than case law. Figure 2 lists the sources of law from the most to the least persuasive.

Figure 2: Hierarchy of Sources of Law

Part C of this Chapter will describe how to find the relevant law(s) for your case. Before you start researching, though, it is important that you understand how the different kinds of law work together.

A constitution is the supreme law of the jurisdiction. The United States Constitution is the supreme law of the United States. Each state also has a constitution; if a state constitution and the U.S. Constitution are in conflict, a court will follow the U.S. constitution.¹⁰

The second type of law, legislation, refers to laws passed by a legislature (by the U.S. Congress for federal law and state legislatures for state law). Legislation is the typical form in which laws are enacted.

Finally, case law is the law that results from a court decision regarding a particular dispute or criminal proceeding. Judges often explain how they interpreted and applied the law when making their decision by writing an “opinion.” The opinions are good places to look to figure out how to interpret statutes and constitutions. The following section provides additional information on case law.

(b) Case Law: How to Use Legal Precedents

In deciding a case, the court is making law in two ways. First, the court determines what the law says about the dispute between the parties directly involved in the case. Second, this decision will also affect other people in the future because the court’s resolution of the issues in the case forms “precedent” for other similar cases: the case becomes an example and sets a rule that other judges will follow in similar cases. Therefore, when a court is deciding a case, it will look at how other courts decided similar precedential cases in the past and will follow those examples (precedents). Courts rely on earlier, similar cases to determine how a current case should be resolved. This process is called “stare decisis,” which means “already decided.” The greater the similarity between the cases, the stronger the precedent. This means that if a past case is very similar to your case it will be more persuasive to the judge. However, if there are important distinctions between your case and the past case, the judge may have more freedom to depart from that decision. Therefore, it is very important to find out whether issues in your case have already been decided by your court or other courts. These other cases can help you predict how a judge would rule in your case. You can also see what arguments were successful in other cases, so that you can use those arguments to succeed in your case. If you find arguments that hurt your case, you will need to rebut (argue against) them before the court and show why they are different from your case.

10. U.S. CONST. art. VI.

If you find precedential cases which are similar to your case, where the court ruled favorably on issues that you want to argue, you can use them to support your arguments. You will try to show the court that your case is similar enough to the previous cases so that the conclusions in those cases should be followed in your case. For example, suppose that you have been placed in solitary confinement because you complained to a newspaper reporter about prison conditions. You should look for a precedential case that ruled that the prison could not punish an incarcerated person, or put an incarcerated person in solitary confinement, for similar complaints. If you find such a case, your next step is to convince the court that you were put in solitary confinement because of your complaints, and not for a different, valid reason. Then, you should use the rulings in the precedential cases to argue that your case should be decided in the same way.

If the precedential case works against you, you will have to convince the court that your case is different enough that the judge should not follow the precedent. This is called “distinguishing” a case. One way you can distinguish your case is to show that there were factual differences between your case and the earlier cases. A superficial (or insignificant) difference will not help your case, for example, saying: “that case involved that person, but my case involves me.” A useful distinction is one that casts doubt on whether the precedent should be applied in your case. For example, it would be useful to demonstrate that the facts are so different that the cases are not really the same. You might want to say, “in that case the defendant didn’t get a speedy trial because he fired his lawyers three times when they were ready to go to trial, but my trial has been delayed over and over through no fault of my own.” You should always try to distinguish a precedential case that works against you. Ignoring the case is not a good idea because the other side will likely use it against you in its arguments.

It is important for you to note that not all precedential cases are equally persuasive. If the case was decided by a judge on the same court as your judge or by an appellate court above your court, the case will be very persuasive. After all, earlier cases define the law in your particular jurisdiction. A lower court must follow the higher court’s precedent or risk almost certain “reversal” (a decision by the appellate [higher] court rejecting the outcome decided by the lower court). The court that created the precedent is also unlikely to overrule its prior decision without extremely good reasons. Precedents from the same court or from the appellate court above it are sometimes called “controlling precedents.”¹¹ Thus, a case decided in the U.S. Supreme Court, the highest court, is controlling precedent for all other courts.

Courts almost always follow controlling precedents. However, there are exceptions. In some instances, courts will recognize that older controlling precedents have become outdated when applied to modern facts. Furthermore, precedents can be overruled and therefore become useless. This might happen if a higher court believes a lower court made an incorrect decision, or if the legislature passes a law that invalidates a court's decision. It is therefore very important to make sure the precedent you have found is still good law and has not been overruled.

11. Certain state court systems are structured to require trial courts to consider the decisions of all appellate courts within the state as controlling. For example, New York’s first level appellate courts are called the Appellate Division. The Appellate Division is divided into four departments. An appellate decision from any department is controlling for all trial courts within the state, unless the trial court’s own department rules otherwise. Stewart v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 181 A.D.2d 4, 7, 584 N.Y.S.2d 886, 889 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1992), rev’d on other grounds, 81 N.Y.2d 203, 597 N.Y.S.2d 612, 613 N.E.2d 518 (N.Y. 1993); Mountain View Coach Lines, Inc. v. Storms, 102 A.D.2d 663, 664, 476 N.Y.S.2d 918, 919–20 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept. 1984). But see People v. Salzarulo, 168 Misc. 2d 408, 411, 639 N.Y.S.2d 885, 887 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1996) (holding that while other departments are “entitled to have their rulings accorded great respect and weight,” trial courts are only bound by the appellate court in their judicial department).

Precedents from other jurisdictions are valuable but are not controlling (so your judge is not obligated to follow those precedential cases). A case from another jurisdiction sets out the law in that court, but not necessarily for your court. Still, the reasoning in the case might persuade your judge, especially if no court in your jurisdiction has ruled on the legal issue. Additionally, if most courts in other states have decided the issue in the same way, that can be a persuasive suggestion for how your state should decide the issue.

Chapter 6 of the JLM, “An Introduction to Legal Documents,” will discuss the legal papers you need to provide to a court. These documents are very important; they should be written clearly and persuasively, and should have no errors. Before you write any papers, however, you will need to figure out your most compelling or convincing arguments and find cases to support those arguments. Finding precedential cases is an extremely important part of your research because those cases will reveal which arguments were successful with other courts. They will also show you which arguments failed and why the court rejected them. Cases from higher courts, and cases that are very similar to yours, carry the greatest weight and will help your case the most. You should search for similar cases not only in your jurisdiction but also in other jurisdictions, even though cases from your own jurisdiction will be much more persuasive. You will also need to distinguish any precedential cases that do not support your argument, as discussed above. Finally, you should also consider public policy reasons for why a court should rule in your favor. Public policy arguments focus on why ruling in your favor will be good for society as a whole, not just for you.

C. Legal Research: How to Find and Support Legal Arguments

1. Sources for Legal Research

There are three categories of resources in your law library. The first category is “primary sources.” Primary sources include the documents that make up the “law”: constitutions, legislation, and case law (court decisions). Primary sources also include law created by “delegated authority.” That includes executive orders, regulations, and the rulings of administrative tribunals. Legislative bodies like the U.S. Congress cannot regulate the details of every law. So, other government bodies (such as administrative agencies) fill in the details of generally-worded statutes, usually by creating regulations. Courts base their decisions on all of these primary sources of law.

The second category of resources found in a law library is “secondary sources.” These are not law, but books and articles that discuss and comment on the law. This commentary can help you understand the law and help you find relevant primary sources. Secondary sources include textbooks, treatises, form books, dictionaries, periodical literature such as law journals, and manuals like the JLM. While courts prefer primary sources, sometimes you can use a secondary source, such as a law review article or a treatise, if you cannot find any applicable cases or statutes. These sources can be useful in persuading a court to rule a certain way. However, you should not use a manual such as the JLM as authority for the court—you should use the JLM to help you find law that you can use to persuade the court.

The third category of resources found in a law library is “search books.” Search books are library tools that help you find primary and secondary sources of authority. They include digests of court decisions, “citators” (which are indexes of legal resources, such as Shepard's), and annotated statute books. These search tools can help you find cases to make strong arguments. They are discussed in more detail in the rest of this Chapter.

2. Methods of Legal Research

Your goal in researching a legal question should be to find relevant primary sources. Your prison library may have research tools that will help you find these primary sources and, of course, the sources themselves. Although you will need to find different sources for each case, the research process will be similar. This process has seven basic steps:

- (1) Analyze the problem;
- (2) Get an overview of the subject matter;
- (3) Find relevant legislation;
- (4) Find relevant cases;
- (5) Check other sources;
- (6) Update your research; and
- (7) Cite cases. Part D of this Chapter explains more about citations.

If you know an issue well, you may be able to skip some steps, but we recommend that you follow all seven steps for each research issue. This way, you can be sure that you have researched your question completely and accurately.

Remember to take careful notes during your research. Your notes will provide a record of your research and will help you to avoid losing information. Careful note-taking is very important in successful legal research.

(a) Analyze the Problem

Your case will begin with a story. While you will eventually translate the story into legal issues, you must first confirm the facts of your story. If you are preparing to appeal your criminal conviction, you must first review all the evidence from the trial court transcript. If you are filing a civil case (for example, if you are suing the prison for use of excessive force), you should gather as much information as possible about what happened. Written documents (like medical records, complaints you have filed, etc.) are especially important. As your research goes on, you will need to look at the facts again to figure out which ones are most important.

If you are planning to appeal a lower court decision, remember that the appellate court will accept the facts as found by the lower court. As footnote one of this Chapter explains, challenging the factual findings of the lower court is very difficult. Therefore, you should research your legal issues as they apply to the facts that the lower court found to be true in your case.

Once you have a strong grasp of the facts of your case, you should examine the legal issues these facts raise. In doing so, you should start by asking yourself the following three questions:

- (1) What are the legal issues that I want to introduce?
- (2) Which court has the power to hear my case and rule on the issues I will bring up?
- (3) If the court agrees with my legal arguments and rules in my favor, does the court have the power to award me the relief that I seek (such as award me money, reverse my conviction, or force someone else to take a specific action)?

The last question is whether the court can grant you your requested remedy. Remedies are discussed in detail in Chapter 9 and Chapters 13–17 of the JLM. The rest of this Chapter deals with the first two questions.

The first question goes to the heart of your case: What legal issues do you want the court to consider? To answer, you should look first at the general areas of law in your case. Is your case about arrest? Bail? Parole?

In a civil case, you need to find out what you will have to prove in order to show that the defendant is liable for each claim you are asserting. In civil cases, you are the plaintiff and each person or prison you are suing is a defendant. You should also be prepared to rebut (argue against) any defense the defendant may claim. You will find a lot of this information in case law, but statutes may also be important.

If you are appealing a criminal conviction, you should focus on errors made by the trial court. You should review secondary sources covering arrest and trial practices to learn the most common arrest and trial errors. Then you should carefully review the lower court proceedings and the judge's decision in your case to find any areas of possible error. Carefully researching the laws that apply to your case will help you figure out if an error was made. This Chapter focuses on how to conduct the legal research that you need for your appeal, but you should also read Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.” Chapter 9 has important information such as how to file your appeal, time limitations you might face, and your right to have a lawyer.

As you are deciding which issues to investigate, it may be helpful to break down the general areas of law into more specific problems. For example, you may start your research in a broad area of law (such as “criminal procedure”) and move to a narrower area (such as “searches incident to arrest”). Then you can go to a precise question (such as: “Can a police officer use a ‘choke hold’ to arrest a suspect and search for drugs?”). It is easier to research a narrow issue and build it into a larger case than to try to research the entire case right away.

Once you have a legal question, you must ask which court has jurisdiction to hear it. As discussed in Part B(1) of this Chapter, there are both territorial (geographic) and subject matter limits on a court’s power. You must bring your action or appeal in a court that has jurisdiction to hear it, or your case will be dismissed. Territorial jurisdiction for a trial court will depend on where the alleged incident took place. For an appellate court, territorial jurisdiction will depend on which court made the ruling that you are appealing.¹² You should also confirm subject matter jurisdiction before doing more research on the merits of your case. Most cases will not have complicated jurisdictional issues, but you must make sure you are filing your case in a court that has jurisdiction to hear it.

(b) Get an Overview of the Subject Matter

Legal research is hardest at the beginning, since you will need to understand the general area of law that covers your case before you focus on narrower issues. Background reading will help you understand how to apply the current law to your facts. Legal encyclopedias are very helpful sources for general overviews because they provide short summaries of the law. Treatises are also very helpful and provide a more detailed analysis of a particular type of law. Prison libraries usually have the two most common legal encyclopedias, American Jurisprudence and Corpus Juris Secundum. They also usually have copies of treatises like McCormick on Evidence, Johnson’s The Elements of Criminal Due Process, Kerper’s Introduction to the Criminal Justice System, and Kerper’s Legal Rights of the Convicted.¹³ As you read these background materials, take notes about any cases, legislation, or constitutional provisions that seem like they may apply to your case. To find a subject in an encyclopedia or treatise, use either the “index” (usually found in the back of a book) or the “table of contents” (usually found in the beginning of a book). Both types of research are fully described later in this Chapter.

(c) Find Relevant Legislation

After learning the basics of a subject area, you should turn to the main sources of law—legislation and cases. Research can take a long time, so remember to take good notes about the sources you read and to follow the outline this Chapter provides.

You should start your research by reading legislation. Legislation includes constitutions, federal and state statutes, and supporting governmental enactments, like regulations and administrative decisions. Constitutions and statutes are generally broken down into parts called articles, sections (the § symbol means “section”), and clauses. Regulations issued by state or federal agencies, like the New York Department of Correctional Services or the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, are important forms of legislation and should be checked during your research. Each form of legislation will now be discussed in greater detail.

12. See Part B(1) of this Chapter.

13. Online legal dictionaries are available at <https://dictionary.law.com/> (last visited January 25, 2019) or <https://www.merriam-webster.com/legal> (last visited January 25, 2019).

(i) Federal Constitution

Constitutions create the structure of government and define individual rights and liberties. They are the most important authorities. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the United States.¹⁴ Any federal case or statute, or any state constitution, case, or statute that violates the U.S. Constitution is “unconstitutional,” which means it is completely invalid. So, the Constitution should be your first source to research your case. You should determine if a constitutional provision applies to your case at the beginning of your research. The first ten amendments to the Constitution (known as the “Bill of Rights”), along with the Fourteenth Amendment, are the most important parts of the Constitution for criminal defendants and incarcerated people. They have guarantees of personal rights and liberties. The First Amendment (freedom of speech, religion, and association), Fourth Amendment (search and seizure), Fifth Amendment (grand jury indictment, double jeopardy, self-incrimination, and due process), Sixth Amendment (jury trials for crimes and procedural rights), and Eighth Amendment (excessive bail and cruel and unusual punishment) are all very important. The Fourteenth Amendment is also very important because it prohibits state governments from depriving you of life, liberty, or property without due process of law (that is, certain legal procedures, typically including notice and a hearing). It also guarantees the equal protection of law (meaning it bans discrimination by the state on the basis of race, sex, and national origin). The Fifth Amendment ensures that these guaranteed rights apply to both state and federal actions.

(ii) State Constitutions

Each state has its own constitution. The text of the New York State Constitution appears in the first few volumes of McKinney’s Consolidated Laws of New York Annotated (“McKinney’s”). Each state’s constitution is supreme over all other laws of that state. This includes state statutes passed by the legislature, and precedent from cases that state courts decide. But state constitutions are not more important than federal law (federal law includes the U.S. Constitution and laws passed by the U.S. Congress). State constitutions apply only to state law. Many provisions of state constitutions are similar to provisions found in the U.S. Constitution, but your state constitution may give you more rights than the U.S. Constitution. So, you should always check your state constitution after reviewing the U.S. Constitution.

The U.S. Constitution and most state constitutions are found in annotated volumes. Following the constitutional text is a section titled “Notes of Decisions” (on Westlaw) and “Case Notes” (on LexisNexis) which have the case summaries grouped into separate legal subjects. There is an index to these legal subjects at the beginning of each Notes of Decisions section. You will find the case citation¹⁵ at the end of each summary. Annotated volumes also contain other helpful research tools. These include cross-references, which are citations to legal encyclopedias and relevant treatises in which the same legal subject is discussed. They also include the West “key number system,” which is discussed in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter. Finally, annotated volumes often have summaries of legislative history, which give you information about why a particular law was passed.

14. The text of the Constitution can be found in each of the first twenty-eight volumes of the United States Code Annotated (“U.S.C.A.”). Annotated volumes include the text of each constitutional provision and summaries of cases that have interpreted them. The un-annotated text is available at <http://www.law.cornell.edu/constitution/> (last visited January 25, 2019) or <http://constitutionus.com/> (last visited January 25, 2019).

15. Case citations are discussed in Part D of this Chapter.

To find the relevant constitutional provisions for your case, use the constitutional index found at the back of the final constitutional volume.¹⁶ The methods you use to locate statutes¹⁷ and cases¹⁸ related to your legal question also apply to finding relevant constitutional provisions in a constitutional index.

(iii) Federal Statutes

The U.S.C.A. (which stands for United States Code Annotated) contains the text of the U.S. Constitution and all laws passed by the U.S. Congress. Following the text of many of the legislative provisions is a section titled “Notes of Decisions” which contains summaries of cases that have interpreted each provision. These summaries are not law but will give you an idea of which cases may be helpful to read in detail, and will show you how the law was applied to different situations. The U.S.C.A. also has other useful research tools like cross-references to the West key number system (discussed in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter), which can be found in the section called “Library References,” located after each legislative provision.

The U.S.C.A. is divided into fifty “titles.” Each title brings together in one place all federal laws in a particular subject area. For example, Title 18 contains all federal laws about crimes and criminal procedure. Title 28 contains all laws about the judiciary and judicial procedure. Each title may have multiple volumes. There is a paperback index to the entire U.S.C.A. (not including the constitutional volumes) shelved after the main volumes that tells you where a given subject can be found in the U.S.C.A. Each title also has its own index located in its last volume.

The text of all federal laws also appears in the United States Code (“U.S.C.”). The U.S.C. is organized in exactly the same way as the U.S.C.A. It is different from the U.S.C.A. only because each title only has the law, not the Notes of Decisions. Your prison library may have the U.S.C.A., the U.S.C., both, or neither.

If you are charged with an offense under federal law, a good starting point is to review the text of the provision you are charged with. Beneath the text of that provision of law there may be summaries of cases interpreting the text that will allow you to see how courts have applied that provision in other cases.

It is very important that your research is current. Hardcover volumes of sources are not replaced often. The most up-to-date information is in soft cover updates found in a folder inside the back cover of each hardcover volume or next to the volumes on the shelf (called the “pocket part”). Soft cover updates have information received after publication of the hardcover volume. These pocket parts will have any recent amendments (changes) to the statutory provision and any recent cases interpreting that provision. You must check the pocket part for the most current law whenever you use a hardcover volume of any source in your research.¹⁹

The entire U.S.C. is updated every six years. The most recent volumes are from 2018. The U.S.C.A. is updated more often. If your prison library has not updated its collection of hardcover volumes, you should continue to check the pocket parts to make sure that your research is up-to-date.

You should always check whether statutes have changed before using them in a legal paper. When referring to a federal statute, cite to the most recent U.S.C. or U.S.C.A. in your prison library, meaning

16. Note that there is a separate index for the constitutional volumes of the U.S.C.A. A larger multi-volume paperback index is published for the rest of the U.S.C.A. volumes that refer to legislation, but that index does not contain any references to the Constitution.

17. Statutes are described in Part C(2)(c)(v) of this Chapter.

18. Cases are described in Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter.

19. When a statute has been amended or repealed within the past twelve months, the pocket part may not have the most recent change. For the most up-to-date information, consult the paperback supplement normally shelved at the end of the volumes you are using. Paperback supplements are updated monthly.

the book and pocket parts that you looked at while researching your case. It may not be the same year as the versions cited in the JLM.

(iv) State Statutes

State statutes are organized in a way similar to federal statutes. Each state organizes its statutes a little differently, but consider New York as an example. The permanent laws of New York are found in a set of books called McKinney's Consolidated Laws of New York Annotated ("McKinney's").²⁰ Like the U.S.C.A., McKinney's is organized according to subject matter but divided into "books" rather than "titles." It is arranged in alphabetical order. Like titles, each book may contain multiple volumes. Thus, Book 10B brings together all New York laws on the subject of Correction Law (Prison Law), Book 11A does this for Criminal Procedure, and Book 39 does this for Penal Law (Criminal Law). McKinney's also contains "Notes of Decisions," which summarizes cases that have interpreted each provision of the statutes. When working with state statutes, like with federal statutes, be careful to consult the pocket parts (located inside the back cover of the book). The pocket part has information on the most current statutes and cases. State statutes are updated frequently. The years listed in JLM citations to state statutes may not correspond to the version in your prison library. As with federal statutes, cite to the version in your prison library.

McKinney's also contains a section called "Practice Commentary" following certain statutory provisions. This commentary is neither a case summary nor actual law; it is the comments of a lawyer who has studied the statute. The commentaries help researchers understand the law. Like general summaries of particular subjects, commentaries can be useful sources of analysis and research information. They explain how a lawyer would use a given statute or how that statute has been used in the past.

If you are charged with an offense under state law, a useful starting point is to review the text of the provision under which you are charged. In New York, crimes are defined in Book 39, "Penal Law." The procedural aspects of criminal prosecution are found in the New York Criminal Procedure Law ("N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law"). The N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law is found in the fifteen volumes that make up McKinney's Book 11A. Do not confuse the N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law with the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules ("N.Y.C.P.L.R."), which explains the rules of the courts in New York.

(v) Finding Statutes—The General Index

You will not always have a particular statute or statutory section to begin your research. If you are starting from scratch and the provision under which you were charged is not helpful, the best place to turn is the "general index" of a source. This is true whether you are researching the U.S. Constitution, federal legislation, or state legislation. The general index is normally found in separate volumes at the end of the source you are using. For example, the general index for New York legislation is found in several paperback volumes after the McKinney's main volumes. The index lists topics in alphabetical order. So, you can begin by searching for a word that describes or is related to your problem. These descriptive words can refer to an event (for example, "arrest" or "homicide"), certain persons (for example, "addicts" or "police"), places (for example, "prison" or "hospital"), or things (for example, "motor vehicles" or "weapons"). General descriptive words are divided into subcategories. For example, under "weapons" you will find separate entries for different types of firearms. The general index is designed to lead you to the relevant statutes from a variety of descriptive words. So, you do not need to find the perfect word. Keep track of the different possible descriptive words as you research and use the many indices to help you find relevant authorities.

20. If you need to find a law that is no longer in force (for example, if you were convicted under a version of the Penal Law that was later changed), look first to McKinney's for the current version of the law. After the current statute, find the "Historical and Statutory Notes" section, which will tell you what year of the Session Law to look at in order to find the old law. That year's "Session Law" can be found in McKinney's Session Laws of New York. It is unlikely, however, that a prison library will have the Session Laws. If your library does not have the Session Laws, the "Historical and Statutory Notes" section often lists a short summary of changes that have been made to the original law.

A second way to find legislation is to check the title or book index. The title or book index is similar to a table of contents, and is found at the beginning of each volume. So, for example, scanning the names of the McKinney's volumes shows three possible criminal titles: "Correction Law," "Penal Law," and "Criminal Procedure Law."²¹ If you were researching a procedural issue (say your home was searched under a search warrant in the middle of the night), the volumes on Criminal Procedure Law (Book 11A or "11A") seem like the most useful place to begin. You would then take out a volume of 11A and turn to its "book index." Note that this table appears after the shorter "Table of Contents" section, and is immediately before the statutory provisions. The book index breaks down the general subject of Criminal Procedure into smaller topics and subtopics.

Following each subtopic is a list of statutory sections that deal with that subtopic, so you can review the subtopics to find statutory provisions that may be helpful for your research. For example, on the issue of "nighttime searches," the book index in any of the volumes of 11A shows a section on "procedures for securing evidence," and another on "search warrants."²² If you go to the volume of 11A that contains the legislation on search warrants (Sections 690.05 to 690.55) and turn to the beginning of that section, you will see another listing of even more specific subtopics that includes "search warrants; when executable" (Section 690.30). Turning to that section of the legislation, you will find that, in New York, search warrants may only be used between 6:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. unless the warrant provides otherwise. Thus, you have found a law to support your complaint if the warrant used to search your house did not explicitly allow the search to be conducted after 9:00 p.m. After the text of Section 690.30, you will find a "Practice Commentaries" and a "Notes of Decisions" section that contains summaries of a number of cases applying this legal rule to various circumstances. To locate even more recent cases on nighttime searches, check the pocket part of that volume. Checking the pocket part is one way to update your research to make sure that there have been no new cases or statutes that have changed the law.

Do not be discouraged if you are having trouble finding a relevant law. Research takes time, and you may need to try the general index, the title or book index, or even a little browsing before you can find relevant legislation. Or, the issue in your case may have been dealt with through court cases rather than legislation. Finding case law is the subject of Part C(2)(d) of this Chapter.

(vi) Legislative History

When reading legislation, the "legislative intent," or what the legislators hoped the statute would accomplish, is sometimes unclear. Knowing the legislative intent can often help you to better understand the legislation. It may help you apply the legal rule to the facts of your case. Remember that legislators may not have considered your exact factual situation when they created the law. One of the best ways to find legislative intent is to review the "legislative history" of the legislation. State legislative history is difficult to find and often cannot be found at all. This Subsection will concentrate on how to find the legislative history of federal laws and therefore learn the congressional purpose behind federal legislation.

Legislative history consists of the written record of what Congress considered before passing a law. It includes the text of the bill²³ introduced into the legislature, any later amendments (changes) to the bill, committee and conference reports,²⁴ congressional hearings, and the debates of the House of 21. Criminal Procedure Law sets out the procedures (processes) used to enforce and prosecute crimes. So, Criminal Procedure Law describes, for example, how a trial is supposed to happen. Penal Law is the law that actually defines the crimes. Correction Law is the law relating to incarcerated people in correctional facilities.

22. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 690.05 (McKinney 2009).

23. A "bill" is a proposed statute before it has either been passed or rejected by legislators.

24. The House of Representatives and the Senate are subdivided into committees that work in particular areas. For example, the House Judiciary Committee works on legislation that concerns the federal judiciary.

Representatives and Senate. Committee reports are produced by the Congressional Committees that review legislation.²⁵ Conference reports are produced by “conferences” set up when the House and Senate pass different versions of the same legislation. Because the conference report is produced jointly by the committees of both the Senate and the House just before the final passage of the legislation, it is perhaps the most important source of legislative intent.

Legislative history is found in many books that are not located in prison libraries. However, one publication, the United States Code Congressional and Administrative News (“U.S.C.C.A.N.”), publishes “compiled” legislative histories that bring several sources together in one place. Although the U.S.C.C.A.N. does not provide all legislative history, it is the only source of legislative history you are likely to find in a prison library. There are several volumes of the U.S.C.C.A.N. for each year. To use these books, you must know the year in which the statute was passed. The U.S.C.A. tells you the year the statute was passed at the end of each section. It may also tell you where in the U.S.C.C.A.N. to find the legislative history. Each set of annual U.S.C.C.A.N. volumes also contains a table of “Legislative History.” This table lists all the laws passed during that year and identifies certain parts of the legislative history. To find legislative history in U.S.C.C.A.N., look in the index found in the last volume of that year. Search the index for the name or the subject matter of the statute you are researching. The index will list the page number where you can find legislative history for that topic. The volumes of U.S.C.C.A.N. with “Legislative History” on their spines contain the text of the legislative report from the House of Representatives or the Senate.

If you review the legislative history of a statute, you will often find a statement by a member of Congress or by a committee that explains what Congress intended the statute to mean. If this explanation helps your argument, you should quote it in the papers you submit to the court.

Legislative histories of state statutes are hard to find because few states keep a record of the process of enacting a bill. In New York, legislative history is usually found in the New York Legislative Annual,²⁶ which you are unlikely to find in a prison library. Your library may, however, have McKinney’s Session Laws of New York (see footnote 18 of this Chapter), which contains limited legislative history for some bills enacted that year. This legislative history is found at the end of the final Session Law volume for that year.

(vii) Court Rules

Court rules lay out how to get a case into court and what procedures are used once the case is before the court. Sometimes these rules are called “rules of practice” or “rules of procedure.” The U.S. Supreme Court has created court rules that apply to all cases in federal courts. The rules are published as part of Title 28 of the U.S.C.A. (in the volumes that have the word “rules” on their spines) and include “Notes of Decisions” sections summarizing cases interpreting the rules. Formally, the rules are separated into three parts: the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (rules for federal civil cases), the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (rules for federal criminal cases), and the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (rules for appellate procedure in all federal cases). There may also be additional local rules enacted by local federal courts. In addition, the Federal Rules of Evidence govern what can be used as evidence in federal cases. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the Federal Rules of Evidence are published in separate volumes that are part of Title 28 of the U.S.C.A.

State courts have their own court rules. In New York, for example, the rules are contained in McKinney’s New York Rules of Court.²⁷ This paperback volume contains the rules of court for all New York state courts. It also contains the “local federal rules” for the federal district courts in New York and the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. These rules will tell you which court to file papers in and how the papers should be filed (size, form, etc.). The rules will also tell you the normal court calendar.

25. See About Committee Reports of the U.S. Congress, available at <https://www.congress.gov/congressional-reports/about> (last visited January 25, 2019).

26. N.Y. Legis. Ann. (2009).

27. N.Y. Ct. R. (McKinney 2009).

For example, some courts hear certain kinds of cases only on specific days of the week. The rules will also tell you what information is required for certain kinds of lawsuits. If you are involved in a New York State or federal case, always review the New York Rules of Court. In particular, review the section(s) that apply to the court to which you are sending your papers. This review should be done before filing any legal papers, since you do not want to find out afterwards that the deadline for filing the papers has already passed. If you cannot figure out something in the New York Rules of Court, sometimes a court clerk will tell you the answer over the telephone. The addresses and telephone numbers of the trial courts in New York are contained in Appendix II of the JLM. Call the courthouse and ask for the court clerk's office. Although this does not always work, it might save you time and effort.

(viii) Administrative Codes

Federal and state legislatures often give government agencies the power to create rules or regulations that govern specific subjects. The rules are often referred to as "administrative rules" or "regulations." Here are two examples: the federal government gives the Bureau of Prisons power to make specific rules about how federal prisons are run,²⁸ and a state will often allow the state's Department of Corrections to make specific rules about how state prisons are run.

All federal administrative rules and regulations are published in the Code of Federal Regulations ("C.F.R."). Similarly, rules and regulations from all departments or agencies within a state are also collected together and published. Each state organizes the regulations a little differently, but publications of the rules and regulations are often referred to as the administrative "code," "rules," or "regulations." For instance, New York's administrative rules are published in the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules & Regulations of the State of New York ("N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs."), and Texas's codes are published as the Texas Administrative Code ("Tex. Admin. Code"). Your prison library may have a copy of the C.F.R. and/or a copy of your state's administrative code.

If you are in a federal prison, you may want to review a copy of the C.F.R. to find out if any provisions are relevant to your case. The C.F.R. has many volumes, organized alphabetically by subject matter, and a separate general index will likely be shelved after the main volumes. This general index is a good place to begin your research. For instance, you can open the general index and look under "Prisons Bureau," and under this main heading (which will be in bold type), there are several subtopics. You can scan those subtopics, and if any of them appears to be related to your case, the index will refer you to the appropriate title and section of the C.F.R. For example, if you are interested in parole issues, you can look under "Prisons Bureau" for the subtopic on "Parole," which will refer you to "28 C.F.R. 572."²⁹ This means that the rules on parole in federal prisons are contained in Title 28, Part 572 of the C.F.R. You can then pull out the volume from the shelf which contains Title 28, Part 572 (the title and part information is on the spine of the book), and read through Part 572 to see if there is a "section" that interests you. In the C.F.R., "sections" are simply subtopics under each Part. For example, if you are referring to a smaller subtopic within Part 572—for instance, section 572.30—you would say "section 572.30," not "Part 572." The index to the C.F.R. is updated once every year.³⁰

If you were charged or convicted of a crime by the state government, you may want to review a copy of your state's administrative code. The administrative code will likely have many volumes, organized by subject. A good place to begin your research is in the general index, which should be in one or more volumes shelved after the code's main volumes. For instance, if you have a question about how much exercise time incarcerated people are supposed to have, you may want to begin by looking in the general index under "prisons." In New York, the index would then refer you to the section on

28. 18 U.S.C. § 4042.

29. 28 C.F.R. § 572 (2020).

30. To get updates before the new version is printed, you first have to look at the monthly "List of C.F.R. Sections Affected" which will refer you to the appropriate section in the Federal Register. This can be accessed online at <https://www.govinfo.gov/help/lssa> (last visited January 25, 2019).

“correctional institutions.” Under “correctional institutions,” there are many subtopics. One of these subtopics is “exercise,” which refers you to “7 § 304.3” and “7 § 1704.6 of the N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs.”³¹ If you then read Title 7, section 1704.6 of the N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs., you will find that in New York, most incarcerated people have the right to exercise outside of their cells for at least one hour each day. If you are using a state administrative rule or regulation in your legal papers, be sure to check whether the regulation has been recently updated or changed. Updates to state administrative codes can usually be found in soft cover volumes that follow the main volumes of the administrative code.

(d) Find Relevant Cases

The bulk of your research time will be spent trying to find cases to support your arguments about how the court should decide your case or request. In researching cases, you want to search for a case that is similar to your case. To be most useful to you, the case must have very similar facts to your case and have been decided by a court in the jurisdiction you have been charged with the crime in. In addition, the cases cannot have been reversed or overruled by a later case or statute. It also helps if the case is recent.

Sometimes you may hear about the “holding” or the “dicta” of a case. Parts of a judge’s decision may either be described as part of the “holding” or as “dicta.” The holding is the major part of the decision in a case and usually controls only those cases with facts like the case the court decided. Dicta is all of the other things that the court says in the opinion. For example, the holding of a case may be that you have the right to an attorney in a criminal case, and other comments that the court may make about the general role of an attorney would be dicta. Dicta can also be found in the footnotes to a case. For example, the Supreme Court decided in a case that the defendant had to prove that they were under duress (being threatened), instead of the government disproving that they were under duress, but described what a good defense of duress would look like in a footnote in the decision.³² You will rarely find a “perfect” case (one that matches the facts of your case exactly). Thus, your search should be for cases that have strong similarities to your case.

In addition to looking for similar cases that help you, you need to be aware of any similar cases that do not support your position. You must be prepared to explain to the judge why that conflicting case should not apply to your situation or why the judge should not follow that case.³³ Remember, your opponent will also be researching your case. You must be ready to respond to your opponent’s arguments and to make your own.

A law report is the written record of the decision reached by the court. The decision set out by the court is called an “opinion.” Books that contain these reports are known as “reporters.”³⁴ This is where you will find case law to support your arguments.

(i) Federal Reporters

There are three levels of courts in the federal system, and each level has a separate reporter containing the court’s decision. The Supreme Court reporter is called the United States Reports (abbreviated as “U.S.”).³⁵ The circuit court (federal court that will hear your case if it is appealed) reporter is called the Federal Reporter (abbreviated as “F.,” “F.2d,” or “F.3d”).³⁶ The trial court is called a district court and its reporter series is called the Federal Supplement (abbreviated as “F. Supp.” or 31. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 304.3 (2020); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1704.6 (2020).

32. Dixon v. United States, 548 U.S. 1, 4 n.2; 126 S. Ct. 2437, 2440 n.2; 165 L. Ed.2d. 299 (2006).

33. See Part B(2)(b) of this Chapter for more information on precedential cases.

34. See, e.g., United States Reports (for Supreme Court decisions) and North Eastern Reporter (for New York Court of Appeals decisions).

35. See, e.g., Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493 (2011).

36. See, e.g., Welch v. Galie, 207 F.3d. 130 (2d Cir. 2000).

“F. Supp. 2d”). Not all decisions of federal district courts are published. Publication is called “reporting” a decision. In New York, there are four federal district courts: the Northern, Southern, Eastern, and Western Districts. Reported decisions of each of these courts are found in the F. Supp. Each reported case is found and referred to by its “citation.” The citation of a case provides the official way of referring to an opinion, and tells you where to find the text of the opinion in the correct reporter. Citations will be explained in Part D of this Chapter, but you may want to read that Part now.

Unfortunately, many opinions that are of interest to incarcerated people are “unreported” or “unpublished”—that means they do not appear in the Federal Supplement or Federal Reporter volumes available in prison law libraries. Many unpublished cases may appear in the Federal Appendix. Citations to the Federal Appendix look like citations to cases in the Federal Reporter or Federal Supplement, but cite instead to the Federal Appendix (F. App’x).³⁷ Other cases that do not appear in a reporter are available on computer services like Lexis and Westlaw. Citations like “2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 12345” or “2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12345” are Lexis citations. Citations like “2016 WL 1256789” are Westlaw citations. In the JLM, unpublished cases are generally cited to Lexis (“LEXIS”), and occasionally Westlaw (“WL”), and are always indicated with the text, “(unpublished)” after the citation. Sometimes cases have book citations (such as “F.2d”), but the opinions are not actually printed; they are just listed in a table. In the JLM, table citations are included, where available, along with a citation to an electronic source.

You should note that a citation like “___ F. Supp. ___, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12345” does not mean the case is unpublished, but that it is merely a recently reported decision that will be available in the Federal Supplement in the near future. You should check to see if this decision has been published in a reporter since the JLM was printed.

The JLM cites published decisions whenever possible. Courts generally prefer that you cite published cases, so you should research the rules of the court in which you are filing before you cite unpublished cases. Some courts may not allow citations to unpublished cases altogether; some allow it in certain circumstances where specific requirements are met, such as serving, or providing, a copy of the case to other parties and to the court. These rules can be obtained for a small fee from the court clerk (the pro se clerk in New York), and they should also be available on the websites of most courts.³⁸ At the very least, an unpublished case may help you predict the outcome of similar lawsuits. Many legal researchers find unpublished cases helpful because they can shed light on particular applications of law or provide insight into how a court may respond to a certain type of claim. Recently, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure were changed, which affects your ability to cite to unpublished cases in certain situations. For federal appellate courts, you can now cite to any unpublished cases that were decided on or after January 1, 2007.³⁹ You should note that most unpublished cases are not precedential, which means that courts do not have to follow their holdings. They can be cited, however, for their persuasive value. Also, you generally must attach a paper copy of the case to your petition or brief, unless the case is available on a publicly accessible electronic database.⁴⁰ Some jurisdictions have more specific rules. For example, many federal courts allow you to cite to unpublished cases of their 37. See, e.g., United States v. Hayes, 409 F. App’x 277 (11th Cir. 2010).

38. For example, the rules for New York courts can be found at <http://ww2.nycourts.gov/rules/index.shtml> (last visited January 25, 2019) and the rules for Texas courts can be found at <http://www.txcourts.gov/media/806639/texas-rules-of-appellate-procedure-updated-with-amendments-effective-1114-w-appendices.pdf> (last visited January 25, 2019). The New York rules do not actually address the issue whether unpublished opinions can be cited. Therefore, we recommend you call the pro se clerk to confirm where you can find a rule on the citing of unpublished opinions, or confirm whether unpublished opinions can be cited, even if the rules are available online.

39. FED. R. APP. P. 32.1A.

40. The courts’ own databases and the two commercial services mentioned above, Lexis and Westlaw, are examples of publicly accessible databases.

own even if they were decided before January 1, 2007.⁴¹ There are a few ways you can learn about cases that don't appear in the federal reporters. First of all, you can read the JLM. Usually you shouldn't cite a case that you haven't read. For some cases, however, you may have to rely on the descriptions in this book. But you should only do so after you read the rules of the court where you are filing your claim and decided it is acceptable to cite unpublished cases. The West Group sells a 41. The 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 10th, and 11th Circuit Courts allow citation to unpublished cases decided before and after Jan. 1, 2007, by specifically saying so or by not mentioning a date. 1st Cir. R. 32.1.0(a) ("An unpublished judicial opinion, order, judgment or other written disposition of this court may be cited regardless of the date of issuance."); 1st Cir. R. 32.1.0(b) ("The citation of dispositions of other courts is governed by Fed. R. App. P. 32.1 and the local rules of the issuing court."); 3d Cir. L.A.R. 28.3(a) ("Citations to federal decisions that have not been formally reported must identify the court, docket number and date, and refer to the electronically transmitted decision."); 4th Cir. R. 32.1 ("If a party believes . . . that an unpublished disposition of this Court issued prior to January 1, 2007, has precedential value in relation to a material issue in a case and that there is no published opinion that would serve as well, such disposition may be cited if the requirements of FRAP [Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure] 32.1(b) are met."); 5th Cir. R. 47.5.3 ("Unpublished opinions issued before January 1, 1996, are precedent. Although every opinion believed to have precedential value is published, an unpublished opinion may be cited pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 32.1(a)."); 5th Cir. R. 47.5.4 ("Unpublished opinions issued on or after January 1, 1996, are not precedent" but "may be cited pursuant to Fed. R. App. 32.1(a)"); 6th Cir. R. 32.1(a) ("The court permits citation of any unpublished opinion, order, judgment, or other written disposition. The limitations of Fed. R. App. P. 32.1(a) do not apply."); 10th Cir. R. 32.1(C) ("Parties may cite unpublished decisions issued prior to January 1, 1997, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as are allowed by Fed. R. App. P. 32.1(a)(i) and part (A) of this local rule."); 11th Cir. R. 36.2 ("Unpublished opinions are not considered binding precedent, but they may be cited as persuasive authority."); 11th Cir. R. 36, I.O.P. 7 ("The court generally does not cite to its 'unpublished' opinions because they are not binding precedent. The court may cite to them where they are specifically relevant to determine whether the predicates for res judicata, collateral estoppel, or double jeopardy exist in the case, to ascertain the law of the case, or to establish the procedural history or facts of the case."). However, the 2nd, 7th, 8th, and 9th Circuit Courts allow citation to unpublished cases only if the cases were decided on or after Jan. 1, 2007 or fall within specified exceptions. 2d Cir. R. 32.1.1(b)(2) ("In a document filed with this court, a party may not cite a summary order of this court issued prior to January 1, 2007, except: (A) in a subsequent stage of a case in which the summary order has been entered, in a related case, or in any case for purposes of estoppel or res judicata; or (B) when a party cites the summary order as subsequent history for another opinion that it appropriately cites."); 7th Cir. R. 32.1(d) ("No order of this court issued before January 1, 2007, may be cited except to support a claim of preclusion (res judicata or collateral estoppel) or to establish the law of the case from an earlier appeal in the same proceeding."); 8th Cir. R. 32.1A ("Unpublished opinions issued on or after January 1, 2007, may be cited in accordance with FRAP 32.1. Unpublished opinions issued before January 1, 2007, generally should not be cited."); 9th Cir. R. 36-3(b) ("Unpublished dispositions and orders of this Court issued on or after January 1, 2007 may be cited to the courts of this circuit in accordance with FRAP [Fed. R. App. P.] 32.1."); 9th Cir. R. 36-3(c)(i)—(iii) ("Unpublished dispositions and orders of this Court issued before January 1, 2007 may not be cited to the courts of this circuit, except in the following circumstances. (i) They may be cited . . . when relevant under the doctrine of the law of the case or rules of claim preclusion or issue preclusion. (ii) They may be cited . . . for factual purposes, such as to show double jeopardy, sanctionable conduct, notice, entitlement to attorneys' fees, or the existence of a related case. (iii) They may be cited in a request to publish a disposition or order made pursuant to Circuit Rule 36-4, or in a petition or panel rehearing or rehearing en banc, in order to demonstrate a conflict among opinions, dispositions, or orders."). When filing in the D.C. Circuit Court, you can cite to its own unpublished opinions dating back to Jan. 1, 2002, but you can only cite to unpublished opinions from another circuit court decided prior to Jan. 1, 2007, if that particular court's rules allow it. D.C. Cir. R. 32.1(b)(1)(B) ("All unpublished orders or judgments of this court, including explanatory memoranda (but not including sealed dispositions), entered on or after January 1, 2002, may be cited as precedent."); D.C. Cir. R. 32.1(b)(2) ("Unpublished dispositions of other courts of appeals and district courts entered before January 1, 2007, may be cited when the binding (i.e. the [Rule 32.1] res judicata or law of the case) or preclusive effect of the disposition is relevant. Otherwise, unpublished dispositions of other courts of appeals entered before January 1, 2007, may be cited only under the circumstances and for the purposes permitted by the court issuing the disposition, and unpublished dispositions of district courts entered before that date may not be cited. Unpublished dispositions of other federal courts entered on or after January 1, 2007, may be cited in accordance with FRAP [Fed. R. App. P.] 32.1.").

compilation of U.S. Court of Appeals unpublished opinions called the Federal Appendix. You could ask your library to subscribe to the Federal Appendix, but your library might not grant your request, as the 182-volume set is very expensive. You can also ask a lawyer or someone else with access to Lexis or Westlaw to print out the case and send it to you. Keep in mind that these electronic sources are expensive and lawyers who assist pro se incarcerated people may not have the resources to respond to such requests.

Finally, some federal courts will send incarcerated people copies of unreported cases, upon request and for a fee. Others will not. Send your request to the clerk of the court in which the case was decided. You could also try writing a letter to the chambers of the judge who wrote the opinion to request a copy. In both instances, be sure you include the case name, the docket number (for example, “No. 12-345 67”), the court, and the date of the decision you are requesting. If you can tell which decision you are looking for (for example, the summary judgment motion, the motion to dismiss, or the motion to set aside the jury verdict, etc.), indicate that as well.⁴²

Citations will be discussed further in Part D of this Chapter. However, here is a short example of a citation: Mukmuk v. Comm’r, 369 F. Supp. 245 (S.D.N.Y. 1974). The italicized portions of the citation are the parties involved in the case. (Comm’r is the accepted abbreviation for “Commissioner.”) The first number, 369, is the volume number of the reporter, which appears on the spine of the book. “F. Supp.” identifies the Federal Supplement reporter. The second number, 245, is the page in the 369th volume of the Federal Supplement where the case of Mukmuk v. Comm’r begins (the 245th page). The information in parentheses refers to the court in which the case was decided (S.D.N.Y. is the accepted abbreviation for the Southern District Court of New York) and the year in which the case was decided (1974). Thus, if you need to refer to this case in your legal papers, you should use the citation listed above. In your research, you will come across many similar citations, or variations of such citations. You can use a citation to find the text of the case by following the procedure explained in this paragraph. A fuller explanation of citations is provided in Part D and Appendix A of this Chapter.

For now, however, this Subsection will continue the discussion of the federal reporters. District courts are at the lowest level in the federal system. They are trial courts, and their reporters were described at the beginning of this Subsection. The second level of courts in the federal system is called the circuit court of appeals.⁴³ There are twelve such circuits in the United States.⁴⁴ Circuit courts are the intermediate appellate courts in the federal system. Reports of all circuit court decisions are found in the Federal Reporter (abbreviated as “F.”, “F.2d” or “F.3d”). The Federal Reporter has three series of reporters, to keep the volume numbers from getting too high within each series. Volumes are individually numbered within each series. Each circuit court of appeals covers the appeals from several federal district courts. For example, cases from the four New York federal district courts plus the district courts of Connecticut and Vermont are appealed to the Second Circuit Court of Appeals (abbreviated “2d Cir.”). Thus, the case United States v. Bush, 47 F.3d 511 (2d Cir. 1995) is a 1995 case from the Second Circuit Court of Appeals found on page 511 of volume 47 of the Federal Reporter (Third Series).

The third and highest level of the federal court system is the United States Supreme Court. There is only one U.S. Supreme Court. In addition to hearing cases from lower federal courts, the Supreme Court can also hear certain cases from the highest state courts. All Supreme Court decisions are reported in the “official” reporter, United States Reports (abbreviated as “U.S.”). Decisions of the Supreme Court are also reported in two “unofficial” reporters, the Supreme Court Reporter (abbreviated as “S. Ct.”) and the United States Supreme Court Reports, Lawyers’ Edition (abbreviated as “L. Ed.” or “L. Ed. 2d”).⁴⁵ The text of the opinions published in any of the three Supreme Court reporters is identical, although the citations are different. However, if you are citing a case in a legal paper, use the United States Reports (“U.S.”) citation, if available. Thus, the citation for the famous case that requires the police to inform those in custody of their rights is Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436 (1966). Because only Supreme Court cases are reported in the reporter “U.S.,” it is not necessary to list the court name in the citation.

42. You can sometimes tell what motion the decision relates to by the parenthetical explanation that follows the citation. For example, if a case citation has a parenthetical explanation that begins with “(granting motion to dismiss where),” the opinion you are looking for decided the motion to dismiss.

43. When a losing party is not satisfied with the outcome of a trial court case in the federal system, it can challenge the decision by bringing the case before the Circuit Court for review.

44. See Part B(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of the Circuit Courts of Appeals.

Prison libraries usually have copies of only the Supreme Court Reporter. However, you can find the “U.S.” citation at the top of each case in the Supreme Court Reporter listed above the case name. The “S. Ct.” version of the case also provides cross-references throughout the opinion to the corresponding “U.S.” pages. This is useful if you are quoting text from the decision, since you can read the decision in the “S. Ct.” reporter but cite the correct page in the “U.S.” reporter. We have tried to give the citations to all three of the Supreme Court reporters in the JLM.

(i) State Reporters

State reporters are organized in the same way as federal reporters. New York has three levels of courts and three official state reporters. New York Miscellaneous Reports (abbreviated as “Misc.” or “Misc. 2d”) reports the decisions of state trial courts.⁴⁶ Appellate Division Reports (abbreviated as “A.D.” or “A.D.2d”) reports the decisions of New York’s intermediate appellate courts.⁴⁷ New York Reports (abbreviated as “N.Y.” or “N.Y.2d”) and the North Eastern Reporter (abbreviated as “N.E.” or “N.E.2d”) both report decisions by New York’s highest court, the New York Court of Appeals.⁴⁸

Important appellate decisions of the New York courts are also reported in an unofficial reporter called the New York Supplement (abbreviated as “N.Y.S.” or “N.Y.S.2d”). This is the only New York reporter in most New York prison libraries. The text of opinions published in the New York Supplement is identical to that published in the official reporters. However, if possible, citations to the official reporter should be used when submitting papers to New York State courts. The N.Y.S. or N.Y.S.2d version of the case provides the official citation at the beginning of each opinion. Every state has its own official reporter. Check your prison library to find the official reporter of your state.

(ii) Reporters as Research Tools

All reporters are useful as research tools, but those published by West Publishing Company (“West”) are the most useful. West reporters begin each case by providing “headnotes.” Headnotes are separate paragraphs that summarize each of the major issues decided in the case. Each headnote is numbered and labeled with a “key number” that identifies the legal issue that was discussed. As the next Subsection of this Chapter will explain, these key numbers allow you to find other cases that deal with the same issue.

Although they are useful research tools, headnotes are not official parts of the decision, so you should not quote or discuss them in legal papers. Reading only the headnotes may give you a mistaken understanding of the decision. If the headnote discusses a topic that might be relevant to your case, you should find and read the section of the decision on which the headnote is based. If this section of the decision is helpful, you can use that part of the decision in your legal papers. To find the part of the decision that supports a particular headnote, refer to the paragraph(s) in the decision labeled with the same number as the headnote. Because West publishes almost all of the major reporters, headnotes

45. One advantage of the Lawyers’ Edition is that for selected cases, not only is the text of the case provided but attorneys’ briefs submitted to the Court are also summarized. This reporter also includes essays written by its editorial staff on important issues raised by certain cases. These essays provide a good review of the case law on those issues.

46. See, e.g., Ross v. Fay’s Drug Co., 132 Misc. 2d 65 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1986).

47. See, e.g., Small v. Lorillard Tobacco Co., 252 A.D.2d 1 (1st Dept. 1998).

48. See, e.g., Sabetay v. Sterling Drug, 69 N.Y.2d 329 (1987).

will be present in most case reports that you read. Ultimately, however, you must read the entire case to determine if the case will be truly useful to you.

(iii) Digests and the “Key Number System”

You may have found helpful cases while doing your background reading (for example, in treatises), or while researching relevant constitutional or statutory references (in the “Notes of Decisions” section of the applicable source). If you have not found any useful cases (and even if you have), the next step is to look at a “digest.” A digest is a book with a list of legal concepts showing which cases support each concept. Your prison library probably has three digests. The United States Supreme Court Digest is the digest used to find relevant Supreme Court cases. For relevant cases from other federal courts, use the Federal Practice Digest. Your prison library should also have a state digest, which will help you find relevant cases from your state. In New York, that digest will be the New York Digest.

Digests summarize case law using the West headnotes discussed above. Whereas cases have individual headnotes for each issue discussed in the case, the digests take headnotes from all the reported cases and group them together by subject matter. These subject areas, known as the “Digest Topics,” are arranged alphabetically. You can use digests by finding the broad subject area relating to your issue. Examples of Digest Topics include arrest, bail, convictions, and criminal law. The Digest Topic number will be the first number in a key cite. Within each Digest Topic, there will likely be many subtopics, each of which is assigned a “key number.” You will know you are looking at the key number because it will have a little picture of a key in front of it. The key number will be the second number in a key cite. Once you find the Digest Topic and key number of a particular legal point, you can use that number to find cases on that legal point in any jurisdiction. The key numbers are the same for all digests. For example, the digest topic number for criminal law is 110 and within that topic, the key number for the subject of entrapment is 37(1). So, if you use the New York Digest to find Criminal Law (110) key number 37(1)⁴⁹ you will find cases in on the subject of entrapment in New York State. That same key number can be used to find cases in the Federal Practice Digest on the subject of entrapment under federal law, in the U.S. Supreme Court Digest to find U.S. Supreme Court cases on the subject of entrapment, or in the digest for any state for cases on entrapment from that state. For this reason, finding a key number for a particular issue in your case can greatly advance your research.

Under each key number, a digest will list “headnotes,” i.e., cases and their citations that address the topic of the key number. Depending on how often a particular issue is litigated, there may be no headnotes, or there may be hundreds of headnotes under each key number. Headnotes are listed first by the level of the court that decided the case, next in alphabetical order by jurisdiction, and finally in reverse chronological order (by date, beginning with the most recent) within each jurisdiction. Each headnote also provides a citation to the relevant case.

Digests do not provide comments on cases. They simply contain organized lists of headnotes (cases by topic). It is up to you to decide whether a particular case might apply to your legal issue. Once you decide that a headnote discusses a topic that might be helpful, you should write down the citation given in the headnote and use that case citation to find the text of the case in a reporter. You should decide whether the headnote has pointed you to a useful case only after you have actually read that case. But remember that digests are only research guides. You may find that a headnote points you to a helpful case, but you also may find that a promising headnote leads you to an unhelpful case.

Note that digests are usually published in several series, with each series limited to a certain time period. For example, the fourth series of the New York Digest only contains headnotes for cases decided from 1978 to the present. For earlier cases, you would need to consult an earlier series of this digest. You must be aware of the period covered by the digest to maximize your research effort. Each digest

49. “110” refers to the section containing Criminal Law, “37” refers to the key number for entrapment, and “(1)” refers to the subsection of “entrapment” entitled “in general.” This is where you will find the cases most often cited for the concept of entrapment.

will explain its coverage in its preface, found at the beginning of each volume. As with all other sources, do not forget to check to make sure the statute is still accurate by referring to the pocket part of each hardcover volume you consult.⁵⁰

(iv) Finding Key Numbers

There are three basic ways to find relevant key numbers. The first and easiest way is if you have already found a useful case. Obtain the case from a reporter published by West. Next, review the headnotes found at the beginning of the case. One or more of the headnotes will concern the issue(s) with which you are interested. At the beginning of the headnote, there will be a number preceded by the picture of a key. This is the “key number.” As described earlier, this key number can be used to find other cases that address the same issue by looking in the digests under that key number.

The two other ways to obtain key numbers are similar to the way you would find relevant legislation. As described earlier, one of these ways is the “book index” method. This method requires looking in a digest’s book index (located at the front of the volume) and scanning the alphabetical list of subject areas (digest topics) and the breakdown of each subject area into smaller topics and even smaller subtopics. For example, suppose that you were looking for federal cases on whether a search pursuant to a search warrant could be executed at night. You would start by finding the volume that has “Search and Seizure” on the spine of the book (Volumes 84 and 85 in the Federal Practice Digest [Fourth Series]). At the beginning of the Search and Seizure section is an index that breaks down the large topic of Search and Seizure into smaller and more specific legal areas. Part III refers to “Execution and Return of Warrants.” By looking at the subtopics under Part III, you will find an entry for “Time of Execution” and an even more specific entry for “Nighttime Execution.” This last entry of “Nighttime Execution” corresponds to the key number 146 in the digest topic “Search and Seizure.” You should then write down all relevant key numbers (here, “Search and Seizure 146”) and look up each key number and review a few headnotes under each number. Through this process, you can find useful key numbers and potentially helpful cases.

The final method to find key numbers is to use the general index of the digests. This index is called the Descriptive Word Index (“DWI”) and contains several volumes. The DWI lists words in their common, everyday usage. It then tells you what digest topic in the main part of the digest you should look at to find cases and headnotes related to that word. Often, the DWI will give you the key number under which to look.

For example, suppose that you wanted to know whether you were entitled to be represented by a lawyer in prison disciplinary proceedings. A reasonable place to start looking would be the digest topic “Prisons,” since that is where the disciplinary proceeding is to occur. In the DWI of the New York Digest (Fourth Series), there is a subheading under “Prisons” called “Proceedings” under which you will see a section titled “Discipline and Grievance,” which includes “Counsel and Counsel Substitutes.” Next to “Counsel and Counsel Substitutes” is the key number “Prisons 13(9).”

You would then look at the digest volume containing the digest topic “Prisons” and turn within that volume to key number 13. You will see that the specific issue of whether you are entitled to be represented by counsel in prison disciplinary proceedings is discussed as the ninth heading under key number 13, or “13(9).” As indicated earlier, you should read the descriptions of the cases, write down the citations of potentially useful cases, and then read these cases. To find similar cases in another jurisdiction, look up “Prisons 13(9)” in the digest for that jurisdiction.

A more specialized digest index is the Words and Phrases Index, which is found in a separate volume of each digest series. This index gives citations of cases that define a word or phrase. For example, if you want to know in detail what is meant by the term “detention,” look it up in this index. The index will give you the citations of cases that have defined that term. Although the Words and

50. For a discussion on pocket parts see Part C(2)(c)(iii) of this Chapter.

Phrases Index will not give you a key number, you can go to the cases it cites to obtain relevant key numbers.

D. Citation

Whenever you mention cases, statutes, regulations, etc. in your legal writing, you must reference them in a proper legal form known as a “citation.” Legal citations allow a reader to easily find the sources that you use in your legal writings.

There are many rules about citation style, and the major ones are detailed below. In addition, Appendix A at the end of this Chapter analyzes the most common types of citations and will help you understand basic citation style. Detailed rules for every imaginable legal citation are contained in The Bluebook: A Uniform System of Citation—a publication that your prison library may have. Proper legal citation of cases, statutes, regulations, etc. should not be ignored, as proper citation not only helps your readers find the materials that you are discussing, but also gives the judge a good first impression of your research.

3. Citing Cases

A case citation includes: (1) information about the parties involved in the case, (2) the reporter (a bound compilation of cases) in which the case can be found, (3) the court that decided the case, and (4) the date of the decision. An example of a complete case citation is: People v. Delaremore, 212 A.D.2d 804 (N.Y. App. Div. 1995). The case name (a listing of the names of the parties on either side) comes first and is underlined or italicized: People v. Delaremore or People v. Delaremore. Next comes the information that tells you where to find the case, in this order: the volume number of the reporter, the abbreviation of the reporter, and the page number where the case starts (in this example, 212 A.D.2d 804). The final portion of the citation is enclosed in parentheses. It includes the court that decided the case and the year the decision was released (here: N.Y. App. Div. 1995). The court name “N.Y. App. Div.” stands for the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division. Note that in New York, the intermediate level of appellate court (the Appellate Division) is split into four separate “Departments.” If you are citing a case that was decided in the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, you may also want to include which Department the decision came from. So, in the example above, the court name could be expanded to “N.Y. App. Div. 2d Dept.” in order to show that the decision came from the Second Department. If the reporter that you are using publishes the decisions of only one state (for example, N.Y.S.2d), it is not necessary to repeat the state in the court name. For example, a correct citation would be: People v. Aponte, 759 N.Y.S.2d 486 (App. Div. 1995), not “(N.Y. App. Div. 1995).” If the reporter publishes the decisions of only one court (for example, the “S. Ct.” reporter only publishes Supreme Court cases), it is not necessary to list that court in the citation. Appendix A at the end of this Chapter summarizes the major citation styles.

You will sometimes want to refer to a particular page within the written opinion. If you are citing part of a case for the first time, put a comma after the number of the first page of the case and then put the specific page number (called a “pincite”). For example, Allen v. Hardy, 478 U.S. 255, 259 (1986) indicates you are specifically referring to page 259 of the case Allen v. Hardy, which starts on page 255 of the 478th volume of the “U.S.” reporter. If you have already given a citation to that particular case earlier in the paper, you can use a “short form citation” (abbreviated citation). The basic rule for a short form is to write the name of the first party in the case (for example, Allen), then the volume number of the reporter and the reporter abbreviation, and then the word “at,” followed by the page number of what you want to cite. For example, the short form citation of this case would be: Allen, 478 U.S. at 259. If the first party is a governmental party, use the other party’s name. Thus, United States v. Rosario would be shortened to Rosario and never to United States.

Normally, you cite to the decision of the highest court that considered a case. For example, if the case was appealed and ultimately decided by the New York Court of Appeals (the highest state court in New York), it is not necessary to cite to the decisions of the lower New York courts that heard the same case. There may be times, however, when you wish to cite to the lower court decision specifically.

It would be appropriate to cite a lower court decision where the lower court considered an issue that a later court upheld, or agreed with, without commenting on or not addressing at all why it agreed. However, if the case has been appealed to a higher court, this should be reflected in the citation. For example, Schmuck v. United States, 840 F.2d 384 (7th Cir. 1988), aff'd, 489 U.S. 705 (1989). In this citation, “aff'd” shows that the U.S. Supreme Court “affirmed,” or agreed with, the decision of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the Schmuck case. If a decision has been reversed on appeal but the part of the decision that helps you was not reversed, the citation should reflect this—for example, People v. Perkins, 531 N.E.2d 141 (Ill. App. Ct. 5th Dist. 1988), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292 (1990). This citation tells you that the Supreme Court decided the Perkins appeal two years after the Fifth District of the Illinois Appellate Court made its decision and that it reversed that decision for a reason unrelated to the part of the case that helps you. The citation also shows that the Supreme Court considered the case under a different name than the Fifth District of the Illinois Appellate Court (which is what “sub nom.” means).

When you cite a federal appellate court decision, you also should show whether the Supreme Court has refused to review the decision. For example, United States v. Fisher, 895 F.2d 208 (5th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 834 (1989). “Cert.” stands for “writ of certiorari,” which is what the Supreme Court issues, or gives, to the parties when it decides to review a lower court decision. “Cert. denied” means that a party asked the Supreme Court to review the case, but the Supreme Court refused to grant certiorari (meaning refused to review the case). The Supreme Court refuses to review most of the cases that come before it for certiorari.

You must check each case you cite to find out whether it was appealed and whether it was reversed or affirmed on appeal. Read Part E(2)(a) of this Chapter for information of how to update a case. If the entire case was reversed, you should not mention the lower court’s decision in your legal papers because it is no longer good law.

4. Citing Statutes and Administrative Regulations

Citations for statutes are similar to other legal citations. The citation shows: (1) the “volume” number of the book the statute is in (the “title” or “book” number); (2) the statutory source in which you found the statute (for example, the United States Code is cited as U.S.C.); and (3) the section of the law to which you are referring. An example is 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Here, “42” is the title, “U.S.C.” is the abbreviation for United States Code, “§” means section, and “1983” means section 1983 within title 42 of the U.S.C. If the statute was changed recently, you must cite to the changed version of the statute. You can see if a statute has been changed by looking at the supplement or “pocket part” at the back of the hardcover volume. For instance, if section 1983 had been amended in 2019, you would cite the amended section like this: 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (Supp. 2019). If you want to refer to the entire statute and only part of it has been amended, you would cite it like this: 42 U.S.C.A. § 1983 (2018 & Supp. 2019). Note that the U.S.C. is only published in full every six years, so if a statute was amended in between the six-year period, you must cite to the supplement or pocket part. Please cite to the United States Code when possible. However, if a statute does not yet appear in the United States Code and does appear in an unofficial code (like West’s United States Code Annotated or the United States Code Service), you should cite to the unofficial code instead. The proper citation for a statute in the United States Code Annotated is: 12 U.S.C.A. § 1321 (West).

Citations for federal administrative regulations are very similar to citations for statutes. The citation includes: (1) the title number of the regulation, (2) the source in which you found the regulation (the Code of Federal Regulations is cited as C.F.R.), (3) the specific section cited, and (4) the year of the code edition you found the regulation published in. For example, 28 C.F.R. § 544.70 (2013) refers to section 544.70 of Title 28 of the C.F.R. volume published in 2013. This section discusses the Federal Bureau of Prisons’ literacy program.

The format for citations to state administrative codes is slightly different in each state, but generally contains the same information as citations to federal statutes or regulations. Generally, the citation includes: (1) the source that contains the state’s administrative code (for example, the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules & Regulations of the State of New York, cited as N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs.); (2) the title or book number of the regulation (for example, in New York, Title 7 contains the rules and regulations of the Department of Corrections); (3) the specific section of the regulation you are referring to; and (4) the publishing year of the volume where you found the regulation. For example, N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7 § 1704.6 (2013) is the correct citation for Title 7, section 1704.6 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York volume that was published in 2013. Although the format varies slightly in each state, you may be able to find the correct citation format for your state's administrative code by looking in the first few pages of any volume of the code. Depending on the publisher of your state's code, these pages may include information that gives the correct, official citation format. Otherwise, the Bluebook has a complete guide to each state's citation style.

Any citation in a footnote should be followed by a period, unless it is part of a string or list of citations, in which case the each citation but the last one would not be followed by a period, but a semicolon. The last citation should end with a period.

E. Important Next Steps

1. Check Other Sources

A final way to research an issue is to read the JLM. If there is a chapter that discusses the issue or topic that you are interested in, read the cases cited in that chapter. If you want additional cases in a subject area, you can obtain the key numbers by looking at the case headnotes in the relevant reporter. The key numbers will allow you to find additional cases in the digests.

To find out more about a relevant case and its subject matter, you can look up that case in the "Table of Cases" of a relevant treatise. A treatise is a written work that gives an in depth explanation of a topic of the law. If the case is listed in the table of cases, read what the treatise author has to say about the case and the issues it discusses. While not binding on courts, treatise commentary can be helpful to a researcher and can be used to support your legal arguments.

Although legislation and case law will be the major sources of support for your legal arguments, other sources in your library might also be useful. Another review of general treatises may be helpful in explaining some of the cases you found, and may also provide leads for other possible arguments. You may also want to read legal magazines and newspapers. Your prison library will likely have the local legal newspaper, such as the New York Law Journal. Any other type of legal aid found in your library should also be consulted. Practice commentaries, loose-leaf services, manuals, form books, textbooks, and legal dictionaries are all useful sources that your law library may have.

2. Update Your Research

It is extremely important that your research is up to date. You should make sure that any authority you use is current law. For example, you might want to use a case from two years ago, but there could have been a case one year ago that changed the law in some way. If you do not check, you could miss important changes. To make sure that statutes are current, look at the latest code editions and supplements. As described in Part C(2)(c)(iii) of this Chapter, a hardcover volume will likely have soft cover supplements in the pocket located at the back of the volume. There could also be other updates that were shelved separately from the hardcover volume. Additionally, you must make sure that any case or statute you use has not been changed (overruled, overturned, amended, repealed, etc.). Finally, you must check to see if recent cases or statutes have changed the issue you have been researching. You normally check to make sure that cases and the issues decided in them are up-to-date with a research tool called Shepard's Citations ("Shepard's").

(a) Shepard's

Shepard's is a research tool that provides a listing of all cases or statutes that have cited the case or statute you are checking. Shepard's comes in a print version call the Shepard's Citation booklet and on internet legal research databases like Westlaw and LexisNexis. However, you will need someone with accounts on these websites to help you get access online. Using this tool is called “Shepardizing.” Shepard’s serves two purposes: (1) it allows you to update your research and to make sure that other cases have not overruled, criticized, or otherwise affected the case you want to use in your legal documents; and (2) it points you to more cases that might be helpful.

There is a separate series of Shepard’s Citation booklet volumes for each level of federal courts. Thus, there is a separate series for the Federal Supplement, the Federal Reporter, and the United States Reports. Shepard’s volumes are also available for state reporters. The basic function of Shepard’s is to list every reported case that discusses a particular case. You use it to check for updates to cases that you want to cite. Updating means checking to see if the case is still good law that you can rely on. Thus, if ten other cases discuss Miranda v. Arizona, Shepard’s will identify these ten cases. Shepard’s will list any cases that overrule the case you are researching, as well as other cases that discuss, explain, or even mention the case you would like to use. This will allow you to find out what other courts have said about the case you are researching and will also show you how other courts have handled the issues raised by that case.

Cases are listed in Shepard’s only by citation, not by name. To “Shepardize” a case, first find the Shepard’s series that matches the reporter in which your case is found. The reporter name is printed on the spine of each Shepard’s booklet volume. For example, if the case you are updating is reported in “F.2d,” find the Shepard’s volumes that have “Federal Reporter (Second Series)” printed on the binding. The binding will also show what year(s) or volume(s) of the reporter are covered by that Shepard’s volume. Next, find the volume number in the citation of the case you are updating. The volume is the first number in the citation. Look for the binding that includes the volume number of the reporter. Then, search for that volume number in the upper right-hand corner of the page. Once you’ve found the page where the citations for that volume number begin, look down the columns of citations listed until you find the starting page number of the case you are updating. This page number will be printed in large bold type. Under the bold page number are citations to cases that have mentioned the case you are researching. Citations in Shepard’s are provided alphabetically by the jurisdiction where the court is that decided the case. Within each jurisdiction, the cases are listed from the most recent to the oldest. The citations are not given in full. They contain only the volume number, the reporter, and the page number that refers to the case you are researching. The page number listed in Shepard’s is the page that mentions the case that you are researching. It is not the first page of that particular case.

Each Shepard’s volume has a list of abbreviations in the front to help you decode the reporter abbreviations. There are often letters in front of the listed citations. The letters tell you whether a later court overruled, criticized, or followed the case that you are researching. The code letters are explained in a table on the inside of the front cover of each Shepard’s volume. The most important symbols to look for are “o,” which means the case you are researching has been overruled, “r,” which means that the case you are researching has been reversed, and “d,” which means that the case you are researching has been distinguished (that is, another court has identified why this case is different from others dealing with the same rule). These are “negative treatments” of the case. Negative treatment makes a case less reliable. If the case you are researching has been overruled or reversed, then it is no longer useful to you. If it has been distinguished, try to figure out why it was distinguished. Then, you will have to think of reasons why the court you are going in front of or filing your papers in should not distinguish your situation from the case you are researching. Sometimes a court reverses, overrules, or distinguishes only a part of a previous case rather than the entire opinion. That means that you might still be able to use that case. Therefore, it is important to determine whether the specific issue of interest to you has been reversed, overruled, or distinguished. Even if the court overruled or reversed the case based on a different issue, if you use this case in your legal documents, your case citation should show that the case was reversed on other grounds so the court knows you have done your research.

To find the most recent cases that have mentioned the case you are updating, check the hardcover Shepard’s supplement books, if any. Next, check the current paperback Shepard’s supplement books.

You should check the supplements just as you would the main volume because they are organized in the same way. There are also volumes of Shepard's citations for statutes and federal regulations, which list the judicial opinions that cite particular statutory provisions or federal regulations. These are used to update statutes and regulations in the same manner as the series for updating case law.

You can Shepardize not only to update cases but also to find other helpful cases. If you already have one case that is useful, Shepardizing that case will often lead you to other cases that will be helpful. The disadvantage of this method of finding cases is that Shepard's does not contain headnotes. Thus, you must read the cited case to learn whether it is helpful. However, you can shorten your search if you know the relevant headnote number from the case you are updating. You can use this headnote number to limit the cases you need to review to those containing the same number. In some citations there is a small superscript number between the reporter abbreviation and the page number. This shows that the cited case discusses the issue described in that headnote (superscript is text written small and high like this: ^{superscript}). For example, if you are interested in the issue discussed in headnote number 2 of the case you are updating, scan the list of citations for those that have a superscripted "2" in the citation. This will limit your review of cases to those that discuss the issue corresponding to headnote number 2 of the case you are updating. However, not all citations will list which headnotes are discussed. If you find a citation that does not list which headnotes are discussed, then you cannot tell whether that case will be useful until you read it.

Regardless of whether you use Shepard's to find cases, you must always use it to ensure the cases you are citing were not overruled, reversed, or distinguished.

F. Summary

Research is a key step in developing and presenting a legal argument. This Chapter has suggested an outline for the development of your legal arguments:

- (1) Analyze the problem: separate your case into small, separate issues. This will help you get started and provide manageable issues for you to research;
- (2) Get an overview of the subject area: review treatises and legal encyclopedias to become familiar with a particular area of law;
- (3) Find relevant legislation: consult the annotated codes to find U.S. and state constitutional provisions, federal statutes, state statutes, and legislative history;
- (4) Find relevant cases: read cases cited in annotated codes such as U.S.C.A. and McKinney's. Find additional cases through digests, key numbers, indices, words and phrases tables, and Shepard's;
- (5) Check other sources: review treatises, legal periodicals, practice commentaries, manuals, form books, texts, and legal dictionaries for additional commentary;
- (6) Update your research: make sure that you rely on the most up-to-date editions and supplements, and that you Shepardize your case law and legislation; and
- (7) Complete your citations: properly cite the authorities upon which you rely.

Two issues you should figure out before beginning your research are: (1) which court has jurisdiction to hear your case (both territorial and subject matter jurisdiction), and (2) if you are appealing a conviction, whether the prosecutor followed proper court rules to get your case to court. The following are the sources most often used in prison law libraries to find the law.

For federal law:

- (1) U.S.C.A. (for statutes and the annotations that follow the statutory text); and
- (2) Modern Federal Practice Digest (for federal cases on specific topics).

The major reporters you will be looking to for reported federal cases will be: (1) the Federal Supplement, cited as __ F. Supp. __, __ F. Supp. 2d __, and __ F. Supp. 3d __ (the 3d series will contain the most recent cases), for selected cases from all federal district courts; (2) the Federal Reporter, cited as __ F. __, __ F.2d __, and __ F.3d __ (the 3d series will contain the most recent cases), for cases from all federal circuit courts of appeals; and (3) the Supreme Court Reporter, cited as __ S. Ct. __, for cases from the U.S. Supreme Court. In case citations, the reporter volume number goes before the reporter name, and the page number on which the case begins goes after.

For New York law:

- (1) McKinney's (for statutes and for the case annotations that follow the statutory text); and
- (2) New York Digest (for New York cases on specific topics).

The major reporter for reported New York cases is the New York Supplement (Second Series). It is cited as __ N.Y.S.2d __.

G. Other Ways to Learn About Legal Research

Many organizations have developed materials to help non-lawyers understand the law. For example, Gale Group publishes Gale Encyclopedia of American Law, which is directed toward non-lawyers.⁵¹ Additionally, you can find a detailed explanation of how to conduct legal research in M. Cohen's Legal Research in a Nutshell.⁵² Finally, the law is full of technical terms. Black's Law Dictionary is particularly helpful in explaining legal terms.⁵³

H. Conclusion

Legal research is an important task for jailhouse lawyers because it provides you with the legal rules and principles you will need to argue your case effectively. The process begins with identifying the appropriate court (state versus federal, trial versus appellate, and one with proper jurisdiction). The next step involves breaking down the issues in your specific case—the factual story—to see what legal sources you can use to make your argument. You should start with finding the legislation or administrative rules that apply, which can help you identify where your rights have been violated or how the court got it wrong. It will then be important to find previous cases that have facts similar to your case and support your position. Finally, after you gather different legal sources, you must make sure these sources are still valid and up-to-date (i.e., Shephardize) and cite to them properly.

51. GALE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN LAW (Donna Batten ed., 3d ed. 2011).

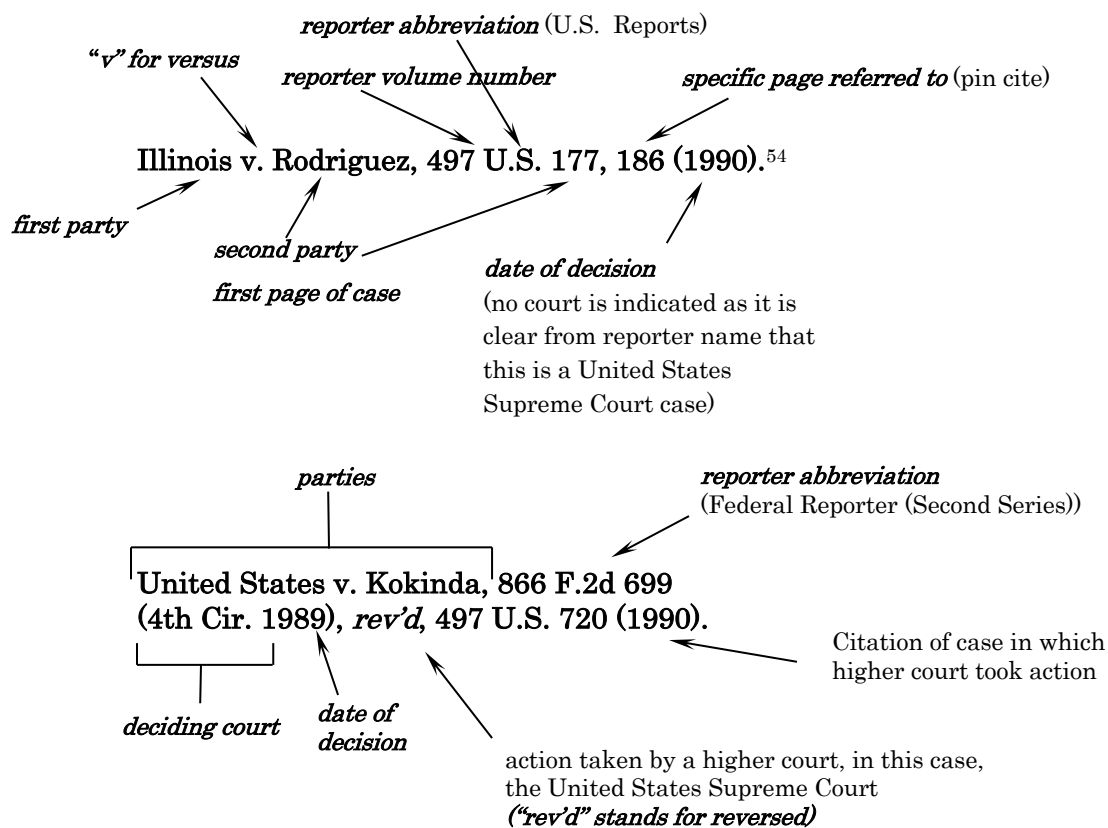

52. MORRIS L. COHEN & KENT OLSON, LEGAL RESEARCH IN A NUTSHELL (11th ed. 2013).

53. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

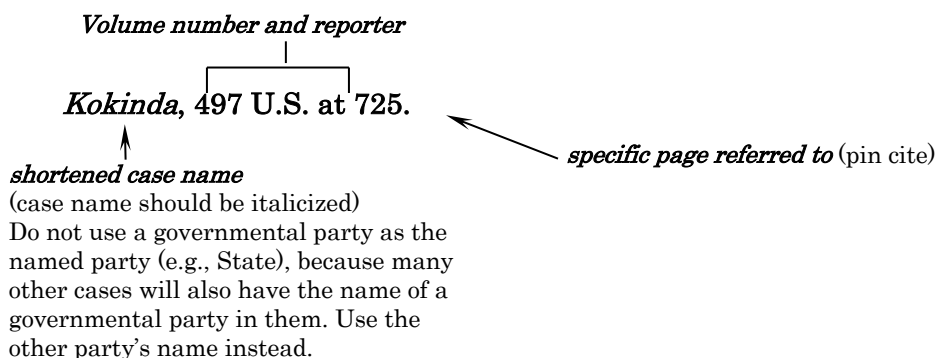

APPENDIX A

CITATION EXAMPLES OF COMMON AUTHORITIES

A-1. Federal Cases

Shortform (abbreviated) citation for the above case after it has been cited in full earlier in your legal paper:

54. You will notice that the JLM often cites to many different reporters for each case. Often, cases are published in more than one reporter; these “extra” citations are “parallel citations.” If possible, you should always cite to an official reporter (for example, “U.S.” or “F.2d.”). If you do not have the official reporter available at your prison library, just make sure that your citation to an unofficial reporter is accurate.

A-2. State Cases

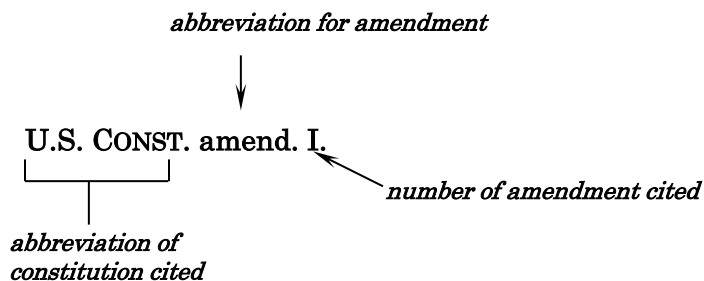

Action taken by a higher court, in this case, the United States Supreme Court. (“cert. denied” indicates that the U.S. Supreme Court denied the petition for certiorari). The reporter “S. Ct.” is an unofficial reporter for the U.S. Supreme Court. This is a recent case—often cases are available in the Supreme Court Reports (“S. Ct.”) before they are printed in the United States Reports (“U.S.”). The next number is the citation of the case in which the Supreme Court took action.

parallel citations

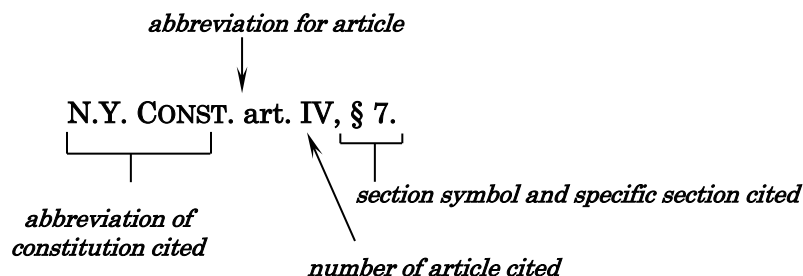

The two citations that refer to “N.E.2d” and “N.Y.S.2d” are parallel citations. For more information on parallel citations, see note 55 of this Appendix A.

A-3. Constitutions

United States Constitution

State Constitution

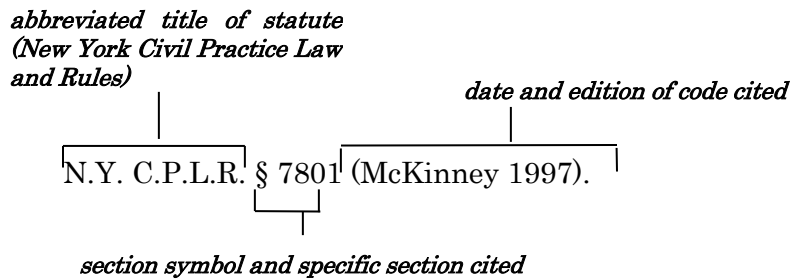

A-4. Statutes

Federal Statute

State Statute

A-5. Definitions for Common Statutory Abbreviations

Ann.	Annotated
App.	Appendix
art.	Article
Civ.	Civil
Comp.	Compilation
Const.	Constitution
Ct.	Court
Crim.	Criminal
et seq.	et sequentes, latin for 'and the following ones'
Gen.	General
Jud.	Judicial
P. or Proc.	Procedure
Rev.	Revised
R.	Rules
Stat.	Statutes
S. Ct.	Supreme Court
tit.	Title

CHAPTER 3

YOUR RIGHT TO LEARN THE LAW AND GO TO COURT*

A. Introduction

Incarcerated people have a constitutional right to access the state and federal courts (referred to as “right of access”).¹ This right includes an incarcerated person’s ability to prepare and submit petitions and complaints, including federal habeas corpus petitions and civil rights actions.² The prison authorities are required by the Constitution to provide incarcerated people with “adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in law.”³ In other words, incarcerated people have a right to legal resources to prevent harmful legal outcomes. If the state stands in the way of your ability to do legal research or get legal assistance, you may be able to file a suit claiming that you have been denied access to the courts. You may also be able to file a suit claiming a denial of court access if the state prevents you from creating and mailing your legal papers by withholding necessary resources or materials. The Supreme Court has stated that the right of access to the courts includes the state’s obligation to provide indigent incarcerated people “with paper and pen to draft legal documents with notarial services to authenticate them, and with stamps to mail them.”⁴

The Supreme Court has limited the circumstances in which an incarcerated person can win a denial of access suit. To win a right of access case, an incarcerated person must show: (1) that he suffered an “actual injury,” and (2) that this injury was connected to a “non-frivolous legal claim.”⁵ An incarcerated person cannot satisfy the “actual injury” requirement “by establishing that his prison’s law library or legal assistance program is subpar in some theoretical sense.”⁶ In other words, you cannot simply base your claim on any perceived harm caused by the denial of access. The harm must be related to the loss of an opportunity to raise a specific substantive legal claim.⁷ One example could be losing the opportunity to file an appeal.⁸

*This Chapter was revised by Sarah Jackel based on previous versions by Laura Burdick, Shima Kobayashi, Monica Ratliff, Jeffra Becknell, Carolyn Hotchkiss, and Marianne Yen. Special thanks to John Boston of the Prisoners’ Rights Project at The Legal Aid Society.

1. See Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 243 (1974) (describing right of access to courts as part of constitutional due process of law requirements); see also Murray v. Giarratano, 492 U.S. 1, 11 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 2765, 2771 n.6, 106 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 n.6 (1989) (tracing right of access to courts to due process and equal protection clauses of United States Constitution).

2. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828 n.17, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498 n.17, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 n.17 (1977). For an explanation of federal habeas corpus petitions and how to use them, see JLM, Chapter 13. Civil rights actions involve the violation of your constitutional rights. For more information about your constitutional rights and how to sue those who violate your constitutional rights, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” which discusses Section 1983 and Bivens actions.

3. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977). For recent cases discussing the right of access, see Hebbe v. Pliler, 627 F.3d 338 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding that the incarcerated person Hebbe satisfied the Lewis “actual injury” requirement, because while the prison was on lockdown, Hebbe was denied access to the law library to file a brief for his appeal); Benjamin v. Kerik, 102 F. Supp. 2d 157, 164–69 (holding that three of the eight allegations of “actual injury” fulfilled the Lewis requirement).

4. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 824–825, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1496, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 81 (1977).

5. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 352–355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180–2182, 35 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618–620 (1996).

6. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996).

7. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351–353, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180–2181, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–619 (1996). Lewis was a class action claiming denial of incarcerated people’s right of access to courts. The Supreme Court reversed a Ninth Circuit decision ordering Arizona to provide incarcerated people with extensively equipped law libraries and experienced library staff.

8. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 350–351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179–2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–618 (1996); see also

Congress has also limited the ability of incarcerated people to bring denial of access suits. In 1995, Congress enacted the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). The PLRA, among other things, requires incarcerated people to exhaust their prison’s administrative remedies before filing claims alleging violation of civil rights under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 in federal court. The information provided in this Chapter is to be used only as a supplement to the information provided in Chapter 14 of the JLM. If you decide to pursue any claim in federal court, you must read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act. Failure to follow the requirements of the PLRA can lead to the loss of your good-time credit and the loss of your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee at the time you file your claim, among other negative consequences.⁹

This Chapter explains what is considered a violation of your right of access to the courts. Parts B and C explore the threshold requirements that you must prove before the court will weigh your opportunities for access. There are two threshold requirements: (1) that you suffered an actual injury, and (2) that you did so because the state failed to fulfill its duty to provide access to the courts. Part B explains the actual injury requirement. Part C outlines the extent of the state’s¹⁰ duty to provide you access to the courts. The Parts following Part C explain your rights once these requirements have been met. Part D explains what adequate law libraries must contain. Part E explains what is considered adequate assistance from persons trained in the law (including the role of “jailhouse lawyers”¹¹ in providing adequate assistance). Part F explains the state’s duty to provide you with legal materials. The Appendix at the end of this chapter provides a list of useful, publicly accessible online resources. Most of these websites provide access to searchable databases of recent trial and appellate decisions, in addition to Supreme Court cases. The Appendix highlights websites that integrate various types of secondary resources most effectively. Be aware, however, that these organizations usually charge a fee for access to their services.

Because the rights described in this Chapter relate to the conditions of your confinement, the PLRA requires you first try to protect your rights through your institution’s administrative grievance procedure. Read Chapter 15 of the JLM for further information on grievance procedures for incarcerated people. If you are unsuccessful or do not receive a favorable result through these procedures, you can then either bring a case under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, file a tort action in state court (or in the Court of Claims if you are in New York), or file an Article 78 petition in state court if you are in New York. More information on all of these types of cases can be found in Chapter 5, “Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options;” Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act;” Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law;” Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions;” and Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” of the JLM.

B. Fulfilling the Actual Injury Requirement

The Supreme Court requires that you show “actual injury” from the alleged violation in order to establish that your right to access the courts has been violated.¹² This requirement makes it harder

Christopher v. Harbury, 536 U.S. 403, 413–415, 122 S. Ct. 2179, 2185–2186, 153 L. Ed. 2d 413 (2002) (distinguishing between forward-looking claims, where future adjustments can solve the problem, and backward-looking claims, where the opportunity was already lost. In both cases, the complaint must describe the legal opportunity that will be or was missed. In backward-looking claims, the complaint must identify a remedy that could not be awarded in some other suit that can still be brought.).

9. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

10. “State” in this chapter means either a state government or the federal government. In other words, if you are a federally incarcerated person, when we refer to “state” in this chapter, for you it means the federal government.

11. BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014) defines a jailhouse lawyer as “[a] prison inmate who seeks release through legal procedures or who gives legal advice to other inmates.”

12. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–618 (1996); see also for incarcerated people to succeed in their right to access cases. Establishing that the prison's law library or legal assistance program is inadequate is not enough to prove actual injury. You must show that you were kept from pursuing a non-frivolous claim because of these deficiencies.¹³ A "non-frivolous claim" is "a claim for relief that is at least arguable in law and in fact."¹⁴

Here is one way to prove an actual injury: you can show that a complaint you prepared was dismissed for failure to meet a "technical requirement" that you could not have known about because of the insufficient legal assistance provided at your prison facility.¹⁵ "Technical requirement," in this context, could refer to a procedural or document-related rule of a court that, if broken, might be grounds for dismissal of the claim. Another way may be to show you were prevented from filing a claim in the first place because of deficiencies in the legal facilities of the prison.¹⁶ If you and others bring a class action, you must show that the injury was systemic, which means, you must show a system-wide problem.¹⁷

C. How the State's Limited Duty to Provide Access to the Courts May Apply to You

There are a few things to keep in mind when developing your claim:

- (1) the state's duty to provide you with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance by persons trained in law may not extend to the type of action you want to bring;
- (2) your correctional facility can choose how it will meet its duty to provide legal information or expertise;
- (3) the state's duty almost always applies, regardless of the kind of facility in which you are incarcerated;
- (4) it is currently unclear how far the state's duty to provide access extends; and
- (5) the state's duty applies whether or not you are considered indigent (meaning whether or not you

Chriceol v. Phillips, 169 F.3d 313, 317 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding that denial of access to funds from prison accounts to pay for filing fees did not constitute an actual injury because the complaint had been successfully filed); Tourscher v. McCullough, 184 F.3d 236, 242 (3d Cir. 1999) (finding that defendant failed to allege facts demonstrating that the number of hours he was required to work frustrated his access to the courts); Klinger v. Dep't of Corr., 107 F.3d 609, 617 (8th Cir. 1997) (showing a complete and systematic denial of access to the law library or legal assistance was not enough to demonstrate actual injury); Oliver v. Fauver, 118 F.3d 175, 178 (3d Cir. 1997) (granting summary judgment for state corrections officers because the incarcerated person suffered no injury as a result of alleged interference with legal mail); Pilgrim v. Littlefield, 92 F.3d 413, 416 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that pro se incarcerated people failed to demonstrate that inadequacy of the prison law library or legal assistance caused actual injury); Sabers v. Delano, 100 F.3d 82, 84 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding incarcerated person had to show actual injury due to denial of access to courts, even if denial was systemic; specifically, incarcerated person had the burden of showing that the "lack of a library or the attorney's inadequacies hindered [her] efforts to proceed with [the] legal claim in a criminal appeal, post-conviction matter, or civil rights action."); Stotts v. Salas, 938 F. Supp. 663, 667–668 (D. Haw. 1996) (holding that a state incarcerated person transferred to another state must show actual injury to have law books sent from the state of his former prison); Cody v. Weber, 256 F.3d 764, 769–770, (8th Cir. 2001) (holding that there was no "actual injury" when the inmate was not allowed to access his computer which stored his legal data, because no specific injury was demonstrated; rather the inmate vaguely claimed that the data would set him free); Hartmann v. O'Connor, 415 Fed. Appx. 350, 352 (3rd Cir. 2011) (holding that there was no "actual injury" when the inmate was allegedly denied access to the internet, because the inmate eventually made his legal claims in court).

13. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996) (concluding that "the inmate ... must ... demonstrate ... the alleged shortcomings in the library or legal assistance program hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim").

14. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 399, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2203, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 662 (1996).

15. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996).

16. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996) (arguing that an incarcerated person could prove actual injury if the "inadequacies of the law library" prevented him from even filing a complaint).

17. See, e.g., Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 349, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 616 (1996) (holding that "isolated instances of actual injury" are not enough to show a systemic Bounds violation).

can afford to sue).¹⁸

First, courts disagree about whether your right of access to the courts is applicable in all cases or only in those cases where your constitutional rights are involved. In Lewis v. Casey,¹⁹ the Supreme Court stated that your right of access does not guarantee your right to file any claim. Instead, this right is limited to non-frivolous lawsuits that either attack prison sentences or challenge the conditions of confinement at your prison.²⁰ This language is somewhat unclear. But, Lewis and subsequent cases have narrowly defined the claims to which the right of access to the courts applies.²¹ For example, some courts have held that the state's duty extends only to the initiation of habeas corpus proceedings, direct appeals, and civil rights actions,²² because these are the only actions specifically mentioned in Bounds v. Smith.²³ Bounds was the first case where the Supreme Court held that the right to access courts placed a constitutional duty on the states to provide adequate law libraries and adequate assistance by persons trained in the law to incarcerated people.²⁴ Thus, your state's duty to provide 18. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977) (holding federal habeas corpus or state or federal civil rights actions are encompassed within right of access to the courts); see also Knop v. Johnson, 977 F.2d 996, 1009 (6th Cir. 1992) (determining that requiring a state to provide affirmative legal assistance to incarcerated people in actions unrelated to constitutional rights or their incarceration would be “an unwarranted extension of the right of access”); cf. Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 269 (6th Cir. 1996) (finding female incarcerated people not entitled to legal assistance in child custody matters beyond those related to “habeas corpus, and civil rights matters involving the prisoner’s custodial situation or constitutional claims personally involving the prisoner”); John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 235–236 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding states do not have a duty to provide affirmative assistance to incarcerated people on civil matters arising under state law, but noting that “states are required to provide affirmative assistance in the preparation of legal papers in cases involving constitutional rights and other civil rights actions related to their incarceration ... [and also that] in all other types of civil actions states may not erect barriers that impede the right of access of incarcerated people”); Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 229 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding incarcerated people have no constitutional right to assistance from the state to pursue child custody matters).

19. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606 (1996).

20. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2182, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 620 (1996) (holding “Bounds does not guarantee inmates the wherewithal to transform themselves into litigating engines capable of filing everything from shareholder derivative actions to slip-and-fall claims. The tools it requires to be provided are those that the inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration”).

21. See, e.g., Thaddeus-X v. Blatter, 175 F.3d 378, 391, 1999 Fed. App. 0088P (6th Cir. 1999) (holding that “a prisoner’s right to access the courts extends to direct appeals, habeas corpus applications, and civil rights claims only”); Wilson v. Blankenship, 163 F.3d 1284, 1291, 12 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 373 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding that the civil forfeiture case that the plaintiff was attempting to litigate was “not a type of case that is included under the right of inmates’ access to courts under Lewis”).

22. Thaddeus-X v. Blatter, 175 F.3d 378, 391, 1999 Fed. App. 0088P (6th Cir. 1999).

23. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977) (holding federal habeas corpus or state or federal civil rights actions are encompassed within right of access to the courts); see also Knop v. Johnson, 977 F.2d 996, 1009 (6th Cir. 1992) (determining that requiring a state to provide affirmative legal assistance to incarcerated people in actions unrelated to constitutional rights or their incarceration would be “an unwarranted extension of the right of access”); cf. Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 269 (6th Cir. 1996) (finding female incarcerated people not entitled to legal assistance in child custody matters beyond those related to “habeas corpus, and civil rights matters involving the prisoner’s custodial situation or constitutional claims personally involving the prisoner”); John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 235–236 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding states do not have a duty to provide affirmative assistance to incarcerated people on civil matters arising under state law, but noting that “states are required to provide affirmative assistance in the preparation of legal papers in cases involving constitutional rights and other civil rights actions related to their incarceration ... [and also that] in all other types of civil actions states may not erect barriers that impede the right of access of incarcerated people”); Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 229 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding incarcerated people have no constitutional right to assistance from the state to pursue child custody matters).

24. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977).

access to the courts may not extend to ordinary civil proceedings.²⁵ Nonetheless, you should check your state's law on this issue, which may extend the right of access to cover civil proceedings.

Second, the state may choose how to fulfill its duty to provide incarcerated people access to legal information and expertise.²⁶ The state may provide you with an adequate law library, adequate assistance from persons trained in the law, a combination of the two, or something slightly different.²⁷ For example, an inadequate or non-existent law library may not violate a incarcerated person's right of access when the state provides some other sort of legal assistance.²⁸ At the same time, while the state is free to devise its own legal access plan, there is no guarantee that courts will find that plan sufficient to satisfy your right of access to the courts.²⁹

Third, the state's duty to provide incarcerated people with access to the courts is not limited to those in state prison, but also extends to incarcerated people in county and city jails,³⁰ incarcerated

25. See Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 269 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding female incarcerated people not entitled to legal assistance in child custody matters beyond those related to "habeas corpus, and civil rights matters involving the prisoner's custodial situation or constitutional claims personally involving the prisoner"); John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 235–236 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that states do not have a duty to provide affirmative assistance to incarcerated people on civil matters arising under state law).

26. Morello v. James, 810 F.2d 344, 346–347 (2d Cir. 1987) ("The right of access to the courts is substantive rather than procedural. Its exercise can be shaped and guided by the state but cannot be obstructed, regardless of the procedural means applied." (citations omitted)); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 583 (10th Cir. 1980) ("Bounds does not hold that inmates have an absolute right to any particular type of legal assistance. The states are still free to choose among a variety of methods or combinations thereof in meeting their constitutional obligations [to provide access to the courts]." (citations omitted)); Glover v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 264, 266–267 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that state could terminate funding for prison legal services program that provided female incarcerated people with assistance on child care matters because the termination did not violate the right of access to courts).

27. The Supreme Court has pointed out that "while adequate law libraries are one constitutionally acceptable method to assure meaningful access to the courts," alternative programs may be acceptable. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 830, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1499, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 84 (1977). The Bounds Court suggested some alternatives to having a law library:

"Among the alternatives [to providing law libraries] are the training of inmates as paralegal assistants to work under lawyers' supervision, the use of paraprofessionals and law students ..., the organization of volunteer attorneys through bar associations or other groups, the hiring of lawyers on a part time consultant basis, and the use of full-time staff attorneys, working either in new prison legal assistance organizations or as part of public defender or legal services offices."

The Bounds Court did not consider this list of proposed alternatives complete, stating that "a legal access program need not include any particular element we have discussed, and we encourage local experimentation." Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 831–832, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1499–1500, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 84–85 (1977).

28. Prison authorities may "replace libraries with some minimal access to legal advice and a system of court-provided forms ... that asked the inmates to provide only the facts and not to attempt any legal analysis." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 352, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618–619 (1996) (citations omitted); see also Blake v. Berman, 877 F.2d 145, 146 (1st Cir. 1989) (finding law school clinical program might be considered an adequate alternative to a law library).

29. See Novak v. Beto, 453 F.2d 661, 663–664 (5th Cir. 1971) (finding that a prison legal access program consisting of a small "library," permission to use the law books of fellow incarcerated people, the prison employment of two full time attorneys, and three senior law students employed one summer may not be a sufficient alternative to allowing incarcerated people to provide some form of legal assistance to one another).

30. See Leeds v. Watson, 630 F.2d 674, 676–677 (9th Cir. 1980) (finding that there is a question of obstruction when incarcerated people in a county jail are required to get a court order to have access to a law library close by, and must be accompanied by a guard, and are not given sufficient information concerning these requirements); Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1340 (4th Cir. 1978) (finding that a situation where an incarcerated person in a city jail was only allowed access to legal resources 45 minutes a day, three days a week was "on its face a constitutional violation"); Cruz v. Hauck, 475 F.2d 475, 476–477, 23 A.L.R. Fed. 1 (5th Cir. 1973) (holding that prison regulations must not unreasonably invade the relationship of the incarcerated person to the courts in a case where the incarcerated person was in a county jail); Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 36–37 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (discussing how the fundamental right of access to the court may be applied in a county jail).

juveniles,³¹ persons serving brief sentences in local jails, pretrial detainees, and mental patients under commitment. Incarcerated people who are transferred from one state correctional facility to another or from a state correctional facility to a federal correctional facility retain their right of access to the courts, and therefore, must be provided some legal access program.³² For example, a federal court in New York has suggested that a state might fulfill its obligation to provide access to the courts by either supplying law books or providing legal counsel to state incarcerated people incarcerated in federal facilities.³³ However, as in Blake v. Berman, the court may find that the state has fulfilled its duty by providing you with persons trained in the law, although the state did not provide any legal materials pertaining to the state in which you were convicted.³⁴

Fourth, the extent of a state's duty to help you access the courts is unclear. For example, is it enough for a state to assist only until you are finished writing your complaint? In Lewis, the Supreme Court said that prison authorities have no duty to assist the incarcerated person to find or recognize violations of his rights³⁵ or to "litigate effectively once in court."³⁶

Finally, the right of access to the courts applies to all incarcerated people regardless of their financial status.

D. What is an Adequate Law Library?

The Supreme Court has never defined exactly what is an "adequate" law library.³⁷ The American Association of Law Libraries' ("AALL") Special Committee on Law Library Services to Prisoners has a suggested list of resources that should be in a prison law library. But, states are not required to follow the AALL's guidelines. Additionally, various lower courts have come up with their own list of what a prison law library should contain.³⁸ Even if a prison has a law library that meets either a court's 31. John L. v. Adams, 969 F.2d 228, 233 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding that incarcerated juveniles have a constitutional right of access to the courts).

32. Messere v. Fair, 752 F. Supp. 48, 50 (D. Mass. 1990) (holding that neither a copying service providing Massachusetts law that required specific citations, nor a Connecticut legal assistance program that refused to work on Massachusetts legal materials, provided an incarcerated person "meaningful access to the Massachusetts courts within the contemplation of Bounds v. Smith").

33. See Kivela v. U.S. Att'y Gen., 523 F. Supp. 1321, 1325 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (holding incarcerated people' right of access to courts satisfied where state has provided either law books or legal counsel), aff'd, 688 F.2d 815 (2d Cir. 1982).

34. Blake v. Berman, 877 F.2d 145, 146 (1st Cir. 1989) (finding prison program providing legal assistance instead of full law library satisfied access requirements).

35. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 354, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2181, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 619 (1996) (denying that "the State must enable the incarcerated person to discover grievances" (emphasis omitted)).

36. The Lewis Court restricted the Bounds ruling to require states to provide the tools "that the inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration." Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2182, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 620 (1996).

37. The Court simply stated that incarcerated people' access to the courts should be "adequate, effective, and meaningful" and that "[m]eaningful access' to the courts is the touchstone." Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 822–823, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1495, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 79–80 (1977) (quoting Ross v. Moffitt, 417 U.S. 600, 611, 612, 615, 94 S. Ct. 2437, 2444–2446, 41 L. Ed. 2d 341, 351, 353 (1974)).

38. In Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 856 (9th Cir. 1985), the Ninth Circuit held that the following list of books "meets minimum constitutional standards and provides inmates with sufficient access to legal research materials to prepare pro se pleadings, appeals, and other legal documents" for Idaho State: Idaho Code; Idaho Reports; United States Reports, from 1962 to present; Federal Reporter Second Series, beginning with volume 273 [1960]; portions of the United States Code Annotated, including Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure and Federal Rules of Evidence; Appellate Rules of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals; Local Rules of the United States District Court for the District of Idaho; various Nutshells on procedure, civil rights, criminal law, constitutional law, and legal research; West Pacific Digest Second Series; various volumes of Federal Practice & Procedure; Manual for Complex Litigation Pamphlet Subscription; Federal Practice & Procedure, Criminal Pamphlet; West Federal Practice Digest 2d; Pacific Digest Second Series; Federal Supplement, beginning with requirements or the AALL's guidelines, a court may still decide that access to the court has been denied if books are frequently missing³⁹ or if incarcerated people cannot use the library.⁴⁰ For example, functionally illiterate incarcerated people,⁴¹ non-English speakers,⁴² and the blind cannot use typical law libraries.⁴³ When incarcerated people cannot use the law library because of illiteracy, an inability to speak English, or a disability, the state may need to provide a legal assistance program with persons trained in the law in addition to, or in place of, an adequate prison law library.⁴⁴

Generally, the state may limit your access to law libraries and legal materials for security reasons.⁴⁵ As long as the restrictive practices are justified by security reasons, they are upheld in courts, even if the restrictive practices make court access more difficult for incarcerated people.⁴⁶ For example, prison officials may restrict the amount of time an individual incarcerated person may spend in the library⁴⁷ and the amount of time the library is open "in light of legitimate security volume 482 [1980]. In Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 39 (W.D. Tenn. 1985), the court stated that the law library in this case should include the following: "[all] volumes and titles of U.S.C.A. ... which cover the United States Constitution, and Titles 5, 15, [and] 18 [of the U.S.C.A.] with complete rules of the various courts, [Title] 28 with complete rules, [Title] 42 and the General Index ... Federal Practice and Procedure by Wright and Miller, ... Tennessee Code Annotated Volume 7 and 10 and Criminal Law Library (2-volume set, latest edition)[.] ... [and] Black's Law Dictionary latest edition." See also Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1020–1025 (N.D.N.Y. 1990), in which the court detailed and examined the inventory of the Clinton Main law library and stated that it was constitutionally sufficient and provided incarcerated people with "access to a law book inventory which rises above the constitutional minimum."

39. Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 226–227 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding that prison's replacement of missing volumes only once a year appeared to be inadequate maintenance of library, and holding that even if incarcerated people might be responsible for stealing the missing volumes, "each plaintiff's right of access to the courts is individual, and therefore a . . . [prisoner] cannot be prevented access by ... theft").

40. See, e.g., Cruz v. Hauck, 627 F.2d 710, 721 30 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 494 (5th Cir. 1980) ("Library books, even if 'adequate' in number, cannot provide access to the courts for those persons who do not speak English or who are illiterate."); Acevedo v. Forcinito, 820 F. Supp. 886, 888 (D.N.J. 1993) ("[F]or prisoners who cannot read or understand English, the constitutional right of access to the courts cannot be determined solely by the number of volumes in, or size of a law library").

41. A functionally illiterate person is someone who has reading and writing skills that are inadequate to help him with tasks beyond a basic skill level. See, e.g., Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 855–856 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that "[a] book and a library are of no use, in and of themselves, to a prisoner who cannot read"); U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1105–1107 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (the elimination of a jailhouse lawyer association, leaving only a law library for incarcerated people, would leave functionally illiterate incarcerated people without court access), aff'd, 835 F.2d 285 (3d Cir. 1987).

42. See, e.g., U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1106 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (stating that "Spanish-speaking inmates who cannot read or write English are unable to present, with reasonable adequacy, complaints to the courts without assistance").

43. Phillips v. United States, 836 F. Supp. 965, 967–968 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) (accepting that an incarcerated person's blindness may effectively deny him access to the prison law library).

44. Phillips v. United States, 836 F. Supp. 965, 967–968 (N.D.N.Y. 1993) (stating that in some circumstances denial of access to a legal assistance program may give rise to a claim of denial of access to the court).

45. Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., 776 F.2d 851, 858 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that "[p]rison officials of necessity must regulate the time, manner, and place in which library facilities are used") (citing Twyman v. Crips, 584 F.2d 352, 358 (10th Cir. 1978)).

46. Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 361–362, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2185, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 624 (1996) (holding that "delays in receiving legal materials or legal assistance" are "not of constitutional significance, even where they result in actual injury" as long as they come from "prison regulations reasonably related to legitimate penological interests").

47. Shango v. Jurich, 965 F.2d 289, 292–293 (7th Cir. 1992) (holding that restrictions on library hours which included: being closed nights, weekends, and holidays; allowing general population prisoners to use library, optimally for 10 to 11 hours, one day each week; and limiting the library visitation hours for prisoners in segregation and protective custody to about three hours every third to fifth weekday, did not deny prisoners the constitutional right of meaningful access as described in Bounds); see also Lindquist v. Idaho State Bd. of Corr., considerations.”⁴⁸ However, the state may not limit your access to law libraries or legal assistance to the point that it functionally blocks access to the courts.⁴⁹

Prison regulations can also affect segregated incarcerated people’s access to law libraries, legal materials, and legal assistance. Courts have stopped states from enforcing regulations restricting or withholding law books from incarcerated people in solitary confinement.⁵⁰ Several (but not all) courts have criticized “paging systems” where incarcerated people are given access only to legal books they specifically request.⁵¹ Other request requirements for library access have also been criticized.⁵² However, a prison can meet its obligation to provide a segregated incarcerated person with access to the courts by allowing some (but limited) access to legal materials or some access to legal assistance.⁵³

E. The State’s Duty to Permit Access to Adequate Legal Assistance

It is unclear what “adequate” means in the context of adequate assistance from persons trained in the law. The Supreme Court in Bounds did not define that. However, courts have occasionally 776 F.2d 851, 858 (9th Cir. 1985) (stating that library being open a minimum of eleven hours each day was “an adequate amount of total library access time”).

48. Shango v. Jurich, 965 F.2d 289, 292 (7th Cir. 1992) (quoting Caldwell v. Miller, 790 F.2d 589, 606 (7th Cir. 1986)).

49. See Straub v. Monge, 815 F.2d 1467, 1469 (11th Cir. 1987) (stating that “[r]egulations and practices that unjustifiably obstruct the availability of professional representation or other aspects of the right of access to the courts are invalid”) (quoting Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419 (1974)).

50. See, e.g., Knell v. Bensinger, 489 F.2d 1014, 1017 (7th Cir. 1973) (holding that, although an incarcerated person in isolation does not have unlimited rights to use the library, if an incarcerated person in solitary confinement is prevented from using the library or consulting an advisor to prepare a petition, the courts may find that the incarcerated person’s right of access was effectively denied); U.S. ex rel. Para-Prof. Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1104–1105 (E.D. Pa. 1987) (finding prison’s program of providing a small number of cases or books to segregated incarcerated people was unconstitutional, and prison had a “duty to insure that the ‘opportunity to do legal research [given to segregated prisoners] must be at least the equivalent of the opportunity that is available to an inmate who is permitted to go personally to the prison law library’”) (quoting Wojtczak v. Cuyler, 480 F. Supp. 1288, 1301 (E.D. Pa. 1979)); Johnson v. Anderson, 370 F. Supp. 1373, 1383–1385 (D. Del. 1974) (holding prison rules allowing an incarcerated person in solitary confinement access to only one law book of his choosing on two times during the week violated the incarcerated person’s due process right), modified on other grounds, 420 F. Supp. 845 (D. Del. 1976).

51. The runner system or paging system, “also known as an ‘exact-cite system’ because an inmate must request materials by exact cite,” has been deemed an inadequate legal access system for both segregated and non-segregated incarcerated people by some courts. Cannell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1389 (D. Or. 1993) (holding paging system alone does not provide adequate access to the courts); Griffin v. Coughlin, 743 F. Supp. 1006, 1023 (N.D.N.Y. 1990) (finding book request system deprived protective custody incarcerated people of meaningful access to the courts).

52. See, e.g., Cepulonis v. Fair, 732 F.2d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 1984) (finding requirement that incarcerated people identify specific volumes sought prior to entering library to be suspect); Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1339 (4th Cir. 1978) (“It is unrealistic to expect a prisoner to know in advance exactly what materials he needs to consult.”).

53. See, e.g., Lovell v. Brennan, 566 F. Supp. 672, 696–697 (D. Me. 1983) (stating that an adequate legal access plan would provide segregated incarcerated people with access to law books and an advocate, or other persons trained in the law, depending on the circumstances), aff’d, 728 F.2d 560 (1st Cir. 1984).

described what might qualify as adequate.⁵⁴ For example, if the state only provides people to assist you who are not trained in the law, such assistance does not satisfy your right of access to the courts.⁵⁵

Occasionally, the state may decide to fulfill its obligation to provide you with access to courts by allowing other incarcerated people to assist you.⁵⁶ Incarcerated people who provide other incarcerated people with legal assistance are called jailhouse lawyers or “writ writers.”⁵⁷ In Johnson v. Avery, the Supreme Court held that a state could not prevent one incarcerated person from assisting another incarcerated person in the preparation of his writ in the absence of reasonable alternatives to such assistance.⁵⁸ Therefore, if the state does not provide you with any sort of adequate legal access program, it cannot prohibit you from getting assistance from a jailhouse lawyer.⁵⁹ Although the state may not be able to prohibit you from getting assistance from a jailhouse lawyer, the state still has the power to regulate reasonably the activities of jailhouse lawyers.⁶⁰ For example, the state can require that a jailhouse lawyer get approval from the state prior to helping another incarcerated person.⁶¹ The state can also prohibit jailhouse lawyers from visiting the cells of the incarcerated people they are assisting⁶² and from receiving payment for their services.⁶³

54. In Gluth v. Kangas, the Ninth Circuit upheld the district court’s imposition of a training program for incarcerated person legal assistants. The Gluth Court stated that “Bounds requires, in the absence of adequate law libraries, some degree of professional or quasi-professional legal assistance to prisoners. Although legal training need not be extensive, Bounds does require that inmates be provided the legal assistance of persons with at least some training in the law.” Gluth v. Kangas, 951 F.2d 1504, 1511–1512 (9th Cir. 1991) (citations omitted); see also Darby v. Schmalenberger, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160858, at *19–20 (D.N.D. May 7, 2012) (holding that the incarcerated person has “neither a right to internet access nor a right to file electronically” because the State has a “legitimate penological interest in restricting inmates’ internet access”).

55. Valentine v. Beyer, 850 F.2d 951, 956 (3d Cir. 1988) (“An untrained legal research staff is insufficient to safeguard an inmate’s right of access to the courts.”) (quoting U.S. ex rel. Para-Professional Law Clinic v. Kane, 656 F. Supp. 1099, 1104 (E.D. Pa. 1987), aff’d, 835 F.2d 285 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 993 (1988)).

56. This has also been called “mutual assistance among inmates.” Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct 747, 751, 21 L. Ed. 2d 718, 724 (1969).

57. See Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 487–488, 89 S. Ct 747, 750–751 (1969) (discussing role of incarcerated people who provide legal assistance to other incarcerated people).

58. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct 747, 750–751 (1969) (striking down a prison regulation that forbade incarcerated people from providing each other with any sort of legal help or advice).

59. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct 747, 751 (1969) (“[U]nless and until the State provides some reasonable alternative to assist inmates in the preparation of petitions for post-conviction relief, it may not validly enforce a regulation . . . barring inmates from furnishing such assistance to other prisoners”). However, you have no right to demand the assistance of a specific jailhouse lawyer. See Storseth v. Spellman, 654 F.2d 1349, 1353 (9th Cir. 1981) (incarcerated person had no right to “services of a particular writ writer”); Prisoners’ Legal Ass’n v. Robertson, 822 F. Supp. 185, 190 (D.N.J. 1993) (holding an incarcerated person has no “right to the assistance of a particular prisoner”).

60. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct 747, 751 (1969) (“[T]he State may impose reasonable restrictions and restraints upon the acknowledged propensity of prisoners to abuse both the giving and the seeking of assistance . . . for example, by limitations on the time and location of such activities.”); Sizemore v. Lee, 20 F. Supp. 2d 956, 958 (W.D. Va. 1998) (holding the incarcerated person can be ordered not to engage in writ writing on an individual basis when the security of the prison requires the order, and holding that writ writers were not mandated where the prison provided incarcerated people with a law library and legal assistance).

61. Rivera v. Coughlin, 620 N.Y.S.2d 505, 506, 210 A.D.2d 543, 543 (3d Dept. 1994) (upholding determination of disciplinary violation by an incarcerated person who sent a letter to the FBI on behalf of another incarcerated person without receiving prior approval for providing such assistance pursuant to state directives).

62. Bellamy v. Bradley, 729 F.2d 416, 421 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding that an incarcerated person was not denied effective assistance of counsel where jailhouse lawyers were prohibited from visiting his cell because he could meet with them in the prison law library, which he did several times).

63. Johnson v. Avery, 393 U.S. 483, 490, 89 S. Ct 747, 751 (1969) (discussing the state’s power to regulate jailhouse lawyers in situations where they may be punished for receiving payment for legal assistance); Henderson v. Ricketts, 499 F. Supp. 1066, 1069 (D. Colo. 1980) (distinguishing that while reasonable access to the court cannot be denied, “[c]ompensation to jailhouse lawyers by other inmates may be prohibited”).

F. The State's Duty to Provide Materials

The right of access to the courts requires more than just being provided with a library and research tools. The Supreme Court has held that the right of access to the courts also includes providing incarcerated people “with paper and pen to draft legal documents, with notarial services to authenticate them, and with stamps to mail them.”⁶⁴ In other words, even if the state provides an adequate law library or assistance from persons trained in the law, if they fail to provide you with the materials necessary for drafting, notarizing, and mailing your legal documents, that may also violate your right to access the courts.

There are a few important things to consider before claiming that you have been denied access to the courts based on the state's failure to provide you with materials. First, you may not be entitled to all or any of the specific materials that you may request. For example, the courts have held that incarcerated people may be given pencils instead of the pens mentioned in Bounds,⁶⁵ that incarcerated people have no constitutional right to use or possess computers or typewriters,⁶⁶ that the state is not required in all cases to provide free photocopying,⁶⁷ that the state need not provide unlimited free postage,⁶⁸ and that a notary need not be available at all times.⁶⁹ Second, unlike its duty to provide 64. Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 824–825, 97 S. Ct 1491, 1496 (1977).

65. Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1391 (D. Or. 1993) (“Security considerations may . . . justify the issuance of two-inch ‘golf’ pencils.”) (citing Jeffries v. Reed, 631 F. Supp. 1212, 1215 (E.D. Wash. 1986)). However, the court also stated that if the incarcerated person in Canell had suffered from a medical condition preventing him from drafting legal documents longhand with a two-inch pencil, then “[u]nder those circumstances, a full-sized writing instrument or typewriter might become an indispensable tool for communicating with the court. If prison officials know of such a problem, then their denial of . . . [the prisoner's] request could constitute a deprivation of necessary legal supplies unless that action was justified by a sufficient penological interest.” Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1391 (D. Or. 1993).

66. See, e.g., Taylor v. Coughlin, 29 F.3d 39, 40 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding “no constitutional right to a typewriter as an incident to the right of access to the courts” and no “constitutional right to typewriters of a specific memory capacity” (citations omitted)); Sands v. Lewis, 886 F.2d 1166, 1169 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that incarcerated people have no constitutional right to a typewriter); Am. Inmate Paralegal Ass’n v. Cline, 859 F.2d 59, 61 (8th Cir. 1988) (“Prison inmates have no constitutional right of access to a typewriter and prison officials are not required to provide one as long as the prisoner is not denied access to the courts.”) (citation omitted); Walters v. Edgar, 900 F. Supp. 197, 229 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (“[P]risons are not required to provide inmates with typewriters.”); Howard v. Leonardo, 845 F. Supp. 943, 946 (N.D.N.Y. 1994) (“[I]nmates have no constitutional right to the possession and use of a typewriter . . . since prisoners are not prejudiced by filing hand written briefs.”) (citations omitted); Lehn v. Hartwig, 13 F. App’x 389, 392 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that “if prisoners have no constitutional right to a typewriter, they certainly do not have one to a computer”) (citations omitted). But see Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 38 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (holding jail must provide a sufficient number of usable typewriters in legal room unless they can be proven to be a security threat).

67. Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), aff’d, 848 F.2d 389 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding a provision of carbon paper to incarcerated people was “sufficient to provide proper access to the courts . . . The State should not be forced to provide free access to copier machines for prisoner use when there is an acceptable, less costly substitute.”); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (noting prisons may make incarcerated people pay for photocopies, as this is a “reasonable balance of the legitimate interests of both prisoners and the State”). But see Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1392 (D. Or. 1993) (holding that incarcerated people clearly have an established right to photocopying under certain limited circumstances).

68. Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (holding that a provision of $1.10 per week for stamps and an additional advance of $36 for legal mailings to indigent incarcerated person satisfied the constitutional minimum for access to the courts); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 853 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (upholding the directive providing that incarcerated people could mail five one-ounce letters per week free of charge but would have to pay for any mail weighing more than one ounce, or in excess of five one-ounce letters in one week, because “a prisoner’s constitutional right of access to the courts . . . does not require that prisoners be provided with unlimited free postage”); see also Pacheco v. Commissioner, 897 F. Supp. 671, 681 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (Department of Correctional Services’s refusal to advance postage to an incarcerated person for legal mail did not violate the incarcerated person’s right of access to courts because the incarcerated person could not show that the delay interfered with an upcoming legal action).

69. The courts have held that correctional facilities must provide incarcerated people with notaries public.

adequate law libraries or assistance from persons trained in the law, the state's duty to provide you with materials may only apply to indigent incarcerated people. You may need to research the laws and regulations in your state to determine what the accepted standard for indigence is in your correctional facility and in your state.⁷⁰ Third, your right of access to the courts is not unlimited: it may be lessened when balanced against the state's "legitimate interests, including budgetary concerns."⁷¹ For example, a court could determine that the state's duty to provide you with materials is limited by state budgetary or security concerns. Fourth, the state's duty to assist you may be limited to only habeas corpus petitions and civil rights actions involving constitutional claims.⁷²

Finally, and most importantly, when you sue on the basis of the state's refusal to provide necessary materials, you also need to show that you suffered an "actual injury" as a direct result of that refusal. Because standards vary depending on where you are, you will need to research this "actual injury" requirement in your state and circuit. Canell v. Bradshaw is an example of one state's particular requirements. In Canell, an incarcerated person claimed that he was denied access to the courts because the state would not make photocopies for him. The court stated that he could prove that the state had deprived him of meaningful access to the courts, but in order to do so, he needed to demonstrate: (1) that he wanted to copy specific documents that could not be duplicated longhand—in other words, that the documents were too long for the incarcerated person to copy them himself with pen and paper, (2) that those documents were to be filed with the court as part of a specific document, (3) that he had advised [prison] officials of this need, (4) that his request was denied in accordance with a policy promulgated by the defendants, (5) that those documents were relevant and necessary to his particular case, and (6) that the documents had to be left out of the filing as a consequence of the prison officials' refusal to provide photocopying services.⁷³

Remember, if you are going to pursue this type of action, you must bring a Section 1983 or a Bivens claim. Please refer to Chapter 16 of the JLM for more details on these claims.

Tuggle v. Barksdale, 641 F. Supp. 34, 39–40 (W.D. Tenn. 1985) (holding the prison "must continue to afford notary publics for all inmates at all times"). Correctional facilities, however, need not make the notary services available five days a week. Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (holding that incarcerated people do not have a constitutional right to notary services five days a week).

70. See, e.g., Gluth v. Kangas, 951 F.2d 1504, 1508–1509 (9th Cir. 1991) (holding that the Department of Correction's indigency policy, which only allowed an incarcerated person to apply for indigency classification if his prison account balance was less than $12 was unconstitutional because it forced incarcerated people to choose between purchasing the mandatory hygienic supplies and essential legal supplies, and that an indigency standard of $46 was more appropriate).

71. See Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("The State should not be forced to provide free access to copier machines for prisoner use when there is an acceptable, less costly substitute."); Dugar v. Coughlin, 613 F. Supp. 849, 853–854 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (holding that making incarcerated people pay for photocopies is a "reasonable balance of the legitimate interests of both prisoners and the State").

72. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 354–355, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2181–2182 (1996) (holding that Bounds only requires states to provide tools that "inmates need in order to attack their sentences, directly or collaterally, and in order to challenge the conditions of their confinement. Impairment of any other litigating capacity is simply one of the incidental (and perfectly constitutional) consequences of conviction and incarceration.").

73. Compare Canell v. Bradshaw, 840 F. Supp. 1382, 1392 (D. Or. 1993), aff'd, 97 F.3d 1458 (9th Cir. 1996), with Woodward v. Subia, CIV S-07-498 JAMKJMP, 2008 WL 4196692 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 11, 2008) (holding that the confiscation of the incarcerated person's computer that stored materials which the incarcerated person claimed would set him free was too vague to demonstrate actual injury).

G. The State's Duty in the Internet Age

Internet and database search technologies have revolutionized legal research in recent decades and dramatically increased the accessibility of court documents and legal knowledge. Despite this, courts have not recognized a right to use these tools.⁷⁴

H. Conclusion

In this Chapter, you have learned that if you (1) exhaust your prison's administrative remedies for getting your complaint heard, (2) are not able to go to court or are hindered in pursuit of your claim by state interference, and (3) suffer an injury as a result of the state's interference or denial of your right to access the courts, you may pursue a claim against the state. You can request that the state provide you with access to an adequate law library, adequate assistance from someone trained in the law, or some other legal access program. While a state can regulate its jails and prisons for the purpose of discipline and safety, it cannot completely deny an incarcerated person's right of access to the courts.

Pursuing a claim has several requirements. First, you must show that you suffered an actual injury from the state's failure to provide you with an adequate opportunity to litigate your claim.⁷⁵ Second, some state courts have held that the state only needs to provide you with an adequate law library or legal access program if you want to pursue federal habeas corpus petitions or state or federal civil rights actions. Third, while the state, not you, decides what type of legal access you will get, it must provide you with meaningful access to the courts.⁷⁶ Fourth, the state must adhere to the requirements laid out in this Chapter whether or not you are considered indigent. Finally, the state can place reasonable limits on your ability to use the library or other legal access programs.

74. See, e.g., Darby v. Schmalenberger, No. 1:12-CV-033, 2012 WL 5471881 (D.N.D. May 7, 2012) (holding that the incarcerated person has "neither a right to internet access nor a right to file electronically" because the state prison has a "legitimate penological interest in restricting inmates' internet access").

75. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 350–351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2179–2180 (1996) (explaining that there is no general right to a law library or legal assistance except as they relate to an incarcerated person's actual ability to access the courts).

76. Williams v. Leeke, 584 F.2d 1336, 1339 (4th Cir. 1978) ("Under Bounds, the state is duty bound to assure prisoners some form of meaningful access to the courts. But states remain free to satisfy that duty in a variety of ways.").

APPENDIX A

DIRECTORY OF SELECTED LAW LIBRARIES OFFERING SERVICES TO PRISONERS AND OF ONLINE LEGAL RESOURCES

This Appendix provides information about online resources you can use for your legal research. Section A covers national online resources. Section B covers circuit specific library and online resources. Lastly, Section C covers state specific library and online resources. Because the sections are divided by region, the new order should be helpful to your research. For example, if you are interested in state resources, you can refer to Section C.

A. General Online Resources

Cornell University Law School Legal Information Institute (LII): <http://www.law.cornell.edu>
LII is a great free online legal resource of federal and state statutes, summaries of laws, a legal encyclopedia, federal cases, and more. The LII is really good for finding statutes, the meaning of legal terms, and summaries of laws. You may have to register to access some of the site's information, but registration is free. To register, you will have to use an email for the system that will verify that you are a user (i.e. email confirmation).

FindLaw: <http://www.findlaw.com>

FindLaw is a good resource for learning about various areas of the law. There are over a dozen subjects, including criminal law, DUI, marriage/family and divorce law, civil rights, and more. The site provides a detailed and straightforward description of these areas of the law. FindLaw also has a legal forum, blog, a current events section, and a question and answer section.

Lexis Web: <http://www.lexisweb.com/>

Lexis Web provides a range of material on legal matters, but the majority of the content requires registration at a fee.

Wikipedia: <http://www.wikipedia.org>

Wikipedia is a general online resource that also has information about legal issues. Wikipedia offers a broad range of information, including case summaries, case citations, history about the case or legal topic, definitions of legal terms, and more. Wikipedia provides straightforward information about some issues that may be more complicated to understand. It is important to remember that some of the information on Wikipedia is provided by the general public, so the information on the website may not always be correct. It would be a good idea to double-check the information on Wikipedia with another source.

B. Federal Cases Online

PACER: <http://www.pacer.gov/>

pacer@psc.uscourts.gov

PACER Service Center Number: (800) 676-6856

Public Access to Court Electronic Records (PACER) is a centralized electronic service that provides public access to information about cases that have been filed in the federal courts. PACER allows public users, including incarcerated people, to obtain information about cases filed

 These are the libraries or facilities that provide materials in states where the most JLMs are sold. If you live in a different state than those listed, you should contact law school or governmental law libraries in your state.

in federal appellate, district, and bankruptcy courts. In addition to opinions, PACER includes case docket information and may provide briefs and other filings from the parties.

PACER is not a free service, and to use it, users must register online to receive a login and password. Fees for viewing cases online are $.10 per page.

The Supreme Court: <http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinions/opinions.aspx>

The Supreme Court Website is a limited resource. The website contains a searchable database that is limited to opinions rendered since 2007. For an entire list of cases, you can click on the “opinions” link. It also contains PDF versions of the complete volumes of cases dating back to 1991.

D.C. Circuit: <http://www.cadc.uscourts.gov/internet/opinions.nsf>

The D.C. Circuit’s official website provides all published D.C. Circuit opinions and summary orders and selected unpublished decisions since 1997 at no cost.

1st Circuit: <http://www.ca1.uscourts.gov/?content=opinions/main.php>

The First Circuit’s official website provides First Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1992 at no cost. Opinions and orders before 1999 are available in HTML form only. Later opinions may be downloaded in PDF or WordPerfect form.

2nd Circuit: <http://www.ca2.uscourts.gov/decisions.html>

The Second Circuit’s official website provides Second Circuit opinions and summary orders from 2002 at no cost.

3rd Circuit: <http://www.ca3.uscourts.gov/search-opinions>

The Third Circuit’s official website provides Third Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1994 at no cost.

4th Circuit: <http://pacer.ca4.uscourts.gov/opinions/opinion.htm>

The Fourth Circuit’s official website provides Fourth Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1996 at no cost.

5th Circuit: <http://www.ca5.uscourts.gov/Opinions.aspx>

The Fifth Circuit’s official website provides Fifth Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1992 at no cost. The opinions are also available in a searchable database and for bulk download.

Keyword Search: <http://www.ca5.uscourts.gov:8081>

Bulk Download Server: <ftp://opinions.ca5.uscourts.gov> (Note: Accessing download database requires accessing an FTP server. This may not be available due to restrictions on your internet access.)

6th Circuit: <http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/opinions/opinion.php>

The Sixth Circuit’s official website provides published Sixth Circuit opinions from 2000 and unpublished opinions from 2004 at no cost. The opinions are also available in a searchable database and for bulk download.

7th Circuit: <http://media.ca7.uscourts.gov/opinion.html>

The Seventh Circuit’s official website provides access to both published and unpublished opinions from 1999, as well as selected unpublished court orders, oral arguments, and other court documents from that period.

The court’s primary database must be searched by docket number. The court’s library provides a complete listing of all decisions dating from 2007, along with a series of relevant terms for each decision on a single webpage. (<http://www.lb7.uscourts.gov/ArchivedURLs.html>). The court recommends using a web browser’s “Find” function to perform a keyword search of these opinions. To use this function, press “Control” and the “F” button (when using a Windows computer) or “Command” and the “F” button (when using an Apple computer).

8th Circuit: <http://www.ca8.uscourts.gov/all-opinions>

The Eighth Circuit’s official website provides all published Eighth Circuit opinions and summary orders, and selected unpublished decisions from 1995 at no cost. The database is searchable by docket number, keyword, party name, and attorney name. The website also provides Mp3 audio recordings of all oral arguments from 2009. To find an oral argument, use the “One Stop Search” option.

9th Circuit: <http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov/opinions/>

The Ninth Circuit’s official website provides all published Ninth Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1995 and unpublished opinions from 2002 at no cost. For published opinions prior to January 3, 2005, you can contact the clerk’s office at (413) 355-8000.

Published Opinions (2005–Present): <http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov/opinions/>

Unpublished Opinions (November 10, 2009–Present): <http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov/memoranda/>

Unpublished Opinions (December 8, 2008–November 10, 2009):

http://www.ca9.uscourts.gov/memoranda_archive/

For unpublished opinions prior to December 8, 2008, you may call the clerk’s office at (413) 355-8000 or send a request via email to CA09Public_Information@ca9.uscourts.gov.

10th Circuit: <http://www.ca10.uscourts.gov/clerk/opinions.php>

The Tenth Circuit’s official website provides all published opinions from 1995 and all unpublished opinions from 1996 at no cost. The database is searchable by date, docket number, and keyword.

11th Circuit: <http://www.ca11.uscourts.gov/opinions>

The Eleventh Circuit’s official website provides all published Eleventh Circuit opinions and summary orders from 1995 and all unpublished decisions from 2005 at no cost.

Published Opinions: <http://www.ca11.uscourts.gov/published-opinions>

Unpublished Opinions: <http://www.ca11.uscourts.gov/unpublished-opinions>

D. Online and Library Resources By State

If your state is not listed you or someone you know should check the Southern Center for Human Rights' webpage (<http://www.schr.org>) for organizations providing other legal materials to incarcerated people.

CALIFORNIA

Internet Resources:

Many decisions (including all decisions published or ordered for publication) of California's appellate courts are available online. Some California Superior Court decisions are available online.

A note about the California court system:

- California's trial court is the California Superior Court.
- California's appellate courts are the California Supreme Court and the California Courts of Appeal. The California Courts of Appeal is California's second highest court and hears appeals from the California Superior Court. Appeals from any California Court of Appeal are heard by the California Supreme Court, California's highest court that makes binding decisions over all California lower courts.

(1) California Appellate Decisions

The California Official Reports: <http://www.lexisnexis.com/clients/CACourts/>

All published California state appellate court decisions are available online at no cost. LexisNexis, the official publisher of the California Reports, provides access to opinions from 1850 to the present. The California Official Reports website is updated monthly, and generally decisions are made available online within sixty days of filing.

Appellate Slip Opinions: <http://www.courts.ca.gov/opinions.htm>

Slip opinions, which are uncorrected California opinions as filed, are available for free online at the California Courts official website. Slip opinions are opinions that have not been officially published in the California Reports but have been ordered to be published. Slip opinions are only available for recent matters—specifically, opinions that have been filed within the last 120 days. Where the option is available, it is generally preferable to cite to California Reports, as these include corrections and other changes that will not be incorporated into the slip opinions.

Unpublished Appellate Opinions: <http://www.courts.ca.gov/opinions-nonpub.htm>

Unpublished California appellate opinions are available online for up to 60 days on the California Courts official website.

(2) California Trial Court Decisions

The Guide to California Court Records: <http://www.courtreference.com/California-Courts.htm>

Some California Superior Court opinions as well as docket information can be found online at the Guide to California Courts website.

Library Resources:

Oakland

Alameda County Law Library
125 Twelfth Street

Oakland, CA 94607
(510) 208-4832
<http://www.acgov.org/law/index.htm>

This library serves incarcerated people in Alameda County. Photocopies are $1/page plus a $10 handling fee, tax, postage and prepayment. Emailed materials are $15/citation. The library requires correct citations and will not conduct legal research. Additional details about document delivery: <http://www.acgov.org/law/feeservices/docdelivery.htm>

Los Angeles Los Angeles County Law Library
301 W. First Street
Los Angeles, CA 90012
(213) 785-2529
<http://www.lalawlibrary.org/>

This library serves incarcerated people and other institution residents in California. No material is loaned. Correct citations are required and limited reference work is done. Prepayment is required. A debit account is formed with the library, and the library charges the debit account. The library emails or faxes the requested material.

Photocopies: $12.00 transaction charge per document for the first 25 pages (includes postage and tax) and sales tax if applicable. $0.25 per page over first 25 pages. Ask to speak to Christine.

Payee: Los Angeles County Law Library

San Diego San Diego County Public Law Library
1105 Front Street
San Diego, CA 92101-3904
(619) 531-3900
<http://sandiegolawlibrary.org/>

This library serves incarcerated people and other institutional residents located at institutions in California. It lends materials to the incarcerated people of San Diego County Jail under procedures set up by the Sheriff under a federal court consent decree. Loan periods are 1, 3, or 7 days. Correct citations are required.

Photocopies: For mail, email, and local fax (i.e. San Diego area code) the price is $15 for a package of 20 pages or less. For every additional page over 20 pages, the rate is $1.25 per page. If the fax is long distance (an area code outside of San Diego) the price is $30 for a group of 20 pages or less, and for every additional page the price is $2.25. On the website, click on a link called "document request" that will provide a document delivery form on which you can make your document requests.

Payee: San Diego County Public Law Library

Santa Clara Heafey Law Library
Attn: Prisoner requests
Santa Clara University
500 El Camino Real
Santa Clara, CA 95053
(408) 554-4452
<http://law.scu.edu/library/>

The Heafey Law Library no longer provides services to individual incarcerated people. Interlibrary loan is the only way this library can offer material. The material is provided only to the prison libraries. However, the material that can be requested is limited. Heafey Law Library does not provide the following material: case reporters (including case law), statutes, journals, and treatises.

Ventura Ventura County Law Library
800 South Victoria Avenue
Ventura, CA 93009-2020
(805) 642-8982
<http://vencolawlib.org>

This library serves incarcerated people in California. Correct citations are required and only material that is available is provided. Available material may include cases, statutes, and journal articles.

Photocopies: First 3 pages are free. Afterward the fee is $0.25 per page, plus postage.
Prepayment by cash or check is required; limit of 20 pages per letter.

Payee: Ventura County Law Library

LOUISIANA

Internet Resources:

(1) Louisiana Appellate Decisions and Supreme Court Decisions

Published Appellate Opinions:

The Louisiana Court of Appeals is made up of five circuit courts. Appellate opinions from each of the five circuits are accessible through the links provided on the website. Additionally, access to Supreme Court materials is available through a hyperlink on the site.

Louisiana Supreme Court: <http://www.lasc.org/>

Louisiana First Circuit Court of Appeal: <http://www.la-fcca.org/>

Louisiana Second Circuit Court of Appeal: <http://www.la2nd.org/>

Louisiana Third Circuit Court of Appeal: <http://www.la3circuit.org/>

Louisiana Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal: <http://www.la4th.org/>

Louisiana Fifth Circuit Court of Appeal: <http://www.fifthcircuit.org/>

(2) Louisiana Trial Court Decisions:

Library Resources:

Statewide: State Library of Louisiana
P.O. Box 131
Baton Rouge, LA 70821-0131
(225) 342-4913
<http://www.state.lib.la.us/about-the-state-library/policies/interlibrary-loan-policy>

This library serves only in-state institutions. No material is loaned. Photocopies are made by request.

NEW JERSEY

Internet Resources:

(1) New Jersey Appellate Decisions and Supreme Court Decisions

Published Appellate Opinions: <http://njlaw.rutgers.edu/collections/courts/>

The Rutgers University Law Library maintains a free online database containing all of the New Jersey Supreme Court opinions and published appellate level opinions issued since 1995. Additionally, the database contains all unpublished appellate level opinions issued since 2005. Library staff may be contacted via email to assist users.

Library Contact: courtweb@camlaw.rutgers.edu

Recent Appellate Opinions: <http://www.judiciary.state.nj.us/opinions/index.htm>

All appellate opinions are available on the New Jersey Judiciary official website for ten business days after filing. After that period, the decisions will be available in the Rutgers University database.

Unpublished Appellate Opinions: <http://njlaw.rutgers.edu/collections/courts/>

Unpublished appellate decisions filed after September 20, 2005 are available in the Rutgers University database. Unpublished decisions filed before that date are maintained by the Appellate Division and cannot be accessed electronically.

Appellate Division Contact: (609) 984-5761

(2) New Jersey Trial Court Decisions

Recent Trial Court Decisions: <http://www.judiciary.state.nj.us/decisions/index.htm>

Certain trial court opinions are made available for six weeks on the New Jersey Judiciary official website. This service is provided for the convenience of parties involved in the cases.

Library Resources:

Newark

Seton Hall Law School, Rodino Law Library

One Newark Center
1109 Raymond Boulevard
Newark, N.J. 07102
(973) 642-8720
<http://law.shu.edu/library/>

This library only provides documents via email or fax. Specific citations are required. Note that there is no formal document delivery service at this library and the librarians that receive the request have the discretion to decide whether to fulfill the request. There are no fees.

Trenton

New Jersey State Library

185 West State Street
Trenton, N.J. 08608
(609) 278-2640
<http://www.njstatelib.org/>

For in-state service, the fees are as follows: $3 per citation plus $0.50 per page. The minimum fee is $5.00. For out of state requests, the fees are $3 per citation plus $1 per page. The minimum fee is $10. For both instate and out-of-state, the maximum pages per request are 100 pages. The material will be emailed to the appropriate prison administrator. There are no additional fees for emailing. The library does not work directly with inmates. Instead, incarcerated people must make their requests to the appropriate prison administrator, who will then make that request with the library on inmates' behalfs.

NEW YORK

Internet Resources:

Many decisions from New York State's trial and appellate courts are available online.

A note about the New York State court system:

- The New York State Unified Court System is, like other states, divided into three levels, but the terminology used for these three levels differs from other states.
- The New York Supreme Court is New York State's trial court (the lowest level court). It is the primary civil court in New York and it also hears criminal prosecutions of felonies. The New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division is New York's second highest court and hears appeals from the New York Supreme Court. The New York Court of Appeals is New York State's highest court and makes decisions that bind all of New York's lower Courts.

(1) New York Appellate Courts

New York Official Reports Decisions: <http://www.courts.state.ny.us/reporter/Decisions.htm>

Provides free access to New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division and New York Court of Appeals decisions and motions. Coverage begins from roughly 2003, depending on the type of filing being searched.

New York Official Reports Services: <http://government.westlaw.com/nyofficial/>

Provides free access to all decisions appellate decisions published in the New York Official Reports from 1980. Has select coverage of landmark and other notable decisions prior to 1980.

(2) New York Trial Courts

New York Supreme Court: <http://decisions.courts.state.ny.us/search/query3.asp>

Provides New York Supreme Court Civil and Criminal Cases, from select counties, from 2001.

Library Resources:

Albany

Prisoner Services Project—New York State Library
Cultural Education Center
222 Madison Av.
Albany, NY 12230
(518) 474-5355
<http://www.nysl.nysed.gov/index.html>

This library serves only incarcerated people located at institutions operated by New York State Department of Correctional Services. To access library services, you should send a letter to the library and the library will respond by sending you the proper forms. Some prison libraries already have these forms available, so it is best to check with your prison library first. No material is loaned and all material must be law-related. Correct citations are required and limited reference work is done, and no legal advice is given. If the requested material is covered by the project (e.g. case law, statutes, etc.), there is no charge for photocopies. But if the material is not covered, the following fees apply: $10 for every group of 10 pages (for example, if you requested 11 pages, the fee is $20.). Prepayment is required.

VIRGINIA

Internet Resources:

(1) Virginia Appellate Decisions and Supreme Court Decisions:

Opinions Search – Supreme Court of Virginia and Court of Appeals of Virginia:

<http://www.courts.state.va.us/search/textopinions.html>

Provides Supreme Court of Virginia decisions from 6/9/95, published Court of Appeals of Virginia opinions from 5/2/95, and unpublished Court of Appeals of Virginia opinions from 3/5/02.

(2) Virginia Trial Court Decisions:

District Court Decisions:

Provides free access to Virginia Trial Court decisions for both civil and criminal cases.

Library Resources:

Williamsburg

Wolf Law Library

William and Mary School of Law

P.O. Box 8795

Williamsburg, VA 23187-8795

(757) 221-3255

<http://law.wm.edu/library/home/index.php>

The library will provide cases if correct citations are given. No legal advice is given. In addition, incarcerated people may borrow certain materials that circulate (books and treatises, not statutes or case reporters) through inter-library loan if their prison library has an official ILL program. Alternatively, photocopies of documents can be used.

Photocopies: Prepayment is required. $10 per citation plus $.15 per page. $.30 per page for microforms. Payment is by check, money order, or cash.

Payee: Wolf Law Library

TEXASInternet Resources:*(1) Texas Appellate Decisions and Supreme Court Decisions:

<http://www.search.txcourts.gov/CaseSearch.aspx?coa=coa01>

Provides free access to Texas Supreme Court and Courts of Appeals decisions.

(2) Texas Trial Court Decisions:Library Resources:*Lubbock*Texas Tech University Law Library

1802 Hartford Avenue
Lubbock, Texas 79409-0004
(806) 742-3957

<http://www.law.ttu.edu/lawlibrary/>

Photocopies:

Specific citations only. $15 per citation plus $.50 per page. Prepayment is required. Only money orders are accepted. To submit a request, send a letter to the address above with the specific citations. The library will send an invoice with the total cost. After you send the money order, the documents will be delivered.

Payee:

Texas Tech University Law Library

CHAPTER 4

HOW TO FIND A LAWYER*

A. Introduction

Finding a lawyer can be difficult. It can be even more difficult if you do not have the money to pay a private lawyer. But finding a lawyer is not impossible. Before you try to find a lawyer, you must know the following information:

- (1) The type of correctional institution you are in (city, county, state, or federal);
- (2) The type of case for which you are seeking representation (civil, criminal, or criminal appeal);
- (3) If you are seeking a criminal appeal, the name of the county in which you allegedly committed the crime; and
- (4) Your county of residence.

The more specific information you know about your case, the easier it will be to find a lawyer and to help the lawyer prepare your case. There are generally two types of cases in which you may be involved:

- (1) Criminal: In a criminal case, the state charges you with a crime. If you have already been convicted and are in prison, you are probably not currently involved in a criminal trial. One exception is if the state thinks that you committed a crime while you were in prison. This chapter does not discuss how to find a lawyer for a criminal trial. But, you may want to try a “criminal appeal.” In a criminal appeal, you appeal the conviction or sentence that sent you to prison. If you have a right to a criminal appeal and you cannot afford a private lawyer, you have the right to a court-appointed lawyer.¹ Read Part B below if you would like to find a lawyer to help you in your criminal appeal.
- (2) Civil: In a civil case, either you bring a claim against someone (for example, an individual, a corporation, or the state), or someone brings a non-criminal claim against you. In a civil case, someone asks for a “remedy” (for example, money compensation for an injury, a statement by the court that someone has to stop doing something that violates your rights). You file a civil claim whenever you bring any of the suits explained in the JLM Chapters about federal and state habeas corpus, Section 1983, Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, or tort actions. You do not have the right to a lawyer when filing a civil case (unlike in criminal cases and appeals where you do). Read Part C if you would like to try to find a lawyer to help you in your civil case.

B. Lawyers for Criminal Appeals

If you have the right to bring a criminal appeal and you are unable to pay a private lawyer to represent you, then you have the right to get a lawyer assigned to your case.² If you cannot afford an attorney (lawyer) for your criminal appeal, you should petition the court to proceed as a person who cannot afford a lawyer (or what in legal terms is called “in forma pauperis”) and ask the court to assign an attorney to your case. Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” has sample in forma pauperis forms.

* This Chapter was written by Won Park based on a previous version by Angie Armer and members of the 1991–1992 Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d. 811, 814–15 (1963) (finding that a state must provide counsel for an indigent defendant in a first appeal from a criminal conviction).

2. Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–58, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–17, 9 L. Ed. 2d. 811, 814–15 (1963). There are some higher-level appeals that you do not necessarily have the right to bring, such as an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. In these cases, you may not have the right to a lawyer if you cannot afford one. See Ross v. Moffitt, 417 U.S. 600, 610, 94 S. Ct. 2437, 2443, 41 L. Ed.2d 341, 351 (1974) (holding that a state need not appoint counsel to aid a poor person pursuing a second-tier discretionary appeal).

One of the first places to contact when looking for a lawyer is the Public Defender or Indigent Defender office in any of the following places:

- (1) The county where the appellate court (the higher court) is located,
- (2) The county where your prison is located,
- (3) The county where your original trial took place, or
- (4) The county where you live.

If you have access to the Internet, the easiest way to find a Public Defender is by doing a simple Internet search. For example, you can try searching for “Public Defender” and the name of one of the four counties mentioned above on a research site like Google or Yahoo.³ These offices can provide you with more information about having a lawyer assigned to your criminal appeal.

If you would like to choose your lawyer instead of being assigned one, you have fewer options. Most Legal Aid offices do not handle criminal appeals. However, some organizations do handle criminal appeals. The Legal Aid Society of New York City is one such organization. See Appendix IV of the JLM for a list of other such groups. You might also contact local prisoners’ rights groups, which may refer you to organizations that handle criminal appeals free of charge.⁴ Keep in mind that lawyers are not allowed to arrange “contingency fees” with you for a criminal case. Read Part C for more information about contingency fees.

C. Lawyers for Civil Cases

If you are looking for a lawyer for a civil case in federal court (as opposed to state court), think about whether it is worth it to bring your case in light of what may happen under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). You must read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” to understand the requirements of the PLRA. Failure to follow the requirements in the PLRA can have negative consequences. For example, you can lose the good-time credit you have earned so far. Not all attorneys are familiar with the PLRA. So, you should make sure to know about it yourself so that you can tell your attorney about the requirements.

If you have a civil case and you are incarcerated in a New York state prison (as opposed to a city, county, or federal prison), you may be able to find a lawyer through the Prisoners’ Legal Services of New York (“PLS”). PLS is described in the very beginning of Appendix IV of the JLM (Part A(1)(a)). PLS helps incarcerated people in state institutions in cases involving habeas corpus, jail time and sentence problems, warrants, and detainers. They may also be able to forward your letter to a private attorney who could handle your Section 1983 case, Article 78 petition, or tort action. But, unlike the Legal Aid Society of New York mentioned above, PLS does not handle criminal cases or criminal appeals.

3. To find a list of Federal Public Defenders, visit the Office of Defender Services website, available at <http://www.fd.org>. Federal Public Defenders either work for the federal government directly, or are paid through federal government funds. Note that Federal Public Defenders take on fewer cases than state or local Public Defenders. For a partial list of Federal Public Defenders, New York State Public Defenders, and New York City Public Defenders, visit the New York State Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers website, available at <http://www.nysacdl.org>.

4. The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) publishes a Prisoners’ Assistance Directory with contact information for organizations helping incarcerated people around the U.S., available at <http://www.aclu.org/prisoners-rights/2012-prisoners-assistance-directory>. You may also buy a physical copy of the book for $35. If you would like to buy it, write to:

National Prison Project of the ACLU
Attn: Prisoners’ Assistance Directory
915 15th St. NW, 7th Floor
Washington, D.C. 20005

You may also find contact information for the New York State Bar Association’s Lawyer Referral Service and Information Service on its website, available at <http://www.nysba.org/>. Please bear in mind that these are private lawyers who may or may not charge a consultation fee. If you use the referral service, you should ask whether the lawyer charges a consultation fee before telling him about your case.

If you are in a city, county, or federal prison, check the other organizations listed in Appendix IV to see if special legal assistance programs serve prisons in your area. Check if a Legal Aid office exists in the county in which you are incarcerated. If none exist in your county, check for offices in the surrounding counties, since these organizations might still be able to help you. Note that Legal Aid organizations usually handle only civil cases, unless they have a special criminal appeals division.

You can also ask the court to appoint a lawyer for you. You should do this at the same time that you file your in forma pauperis forms.⁵ A New York court may assign an attorney to you in a civil case at the same time that it allows you to proceed as a person who cannot afford legal representation, but this is very rare.⁶ If you can establish your inability to pay a lawyer, then you may be able to get a lawyer assigned to your case if your claim is “substantial.” For example, you are much more likely to get a lawyer if there is a lot of factual investigation that must be done on your case that you cannot do because you do not have the money. You are also more likely to get a lawyer if the facts of your case depend on the credibility (believability) of people involved.⁷ If your case requires you to know complex legal issues that you may not be able to understand and handle on your own, the court may be more willing to assign you a lawyer to help with your case.⁸

For example, the Seventh Circuit, the court of appeals which covers Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin, has listed some factors (“Maclin factors”) that district courts consider when deciding whether or not to appoint counsel (a lawyer) for a civil claim.⁹ First, district courts will generally consider the merits (quality) of the claim and determine if it is frivolous (frivolous means that the claim is pointless) or substantive (substantive means the claim has value).¹⁰ The more likely a claim is to be successful (the stronger the legal argument being made), the more likely the district court will appoint counsel.¹¹ Next, district courts will generally consider the complexity of the facts and legal

5. Chapters 2–8 of the JLM discuss how to bring a lawsuit. Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” explains how to file poor person’s (also called in forma pauperis) papers in the context of an appeal. You should change the affidavit example shown in Appendix B-3 of JLM Chapter 9 to show that you are filing poor person’s papers in a civil case, not a criminal appeal. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101 (McKinney 2012). These papers establish that you do not have the money to pay for a lawyer. See also New York State Application for Poor Person Status and Assignment of Counsel in a Criminal Appeal, available at <http://www.courts.state.ny.us/ad3/Criminal/NEWFfinancialAffPoorPersonRelief.pdf> (last visited February 1, 2014).

6. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1102(a) (McKinney 2012). The court has the discretion to appoint you a lawyer for free if a lawyer is needed to reach a fair decision. But, you do not have a constitutional or statutory right to a lawyer. See In re Smiley, 36 N.Y.2d 433, 438, 330 N.E.2d 53, 55, 369 N.Y.S.2d 87, 91 (1975) (noting that there is no absolute right to assigned counsel and that the determination to assign an attorney lies within the discretion of the court).

7. See Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 888 (7th Cir. 1981) (quoting Manning v. Lockhart, 623 F.2d 536, 538–40) (8th Cir. 1980) for the proposition that courts should appoint counsel where the credibility of witnesses is an issue). For example, if you claim that your warden assaulted you, the facts of your case would depend on the credibility of you, your warden, witnesses, and maybe other incarcerated people or staff members who knew you and the warden. In such a case, a court might be more willing to assign you a lawyer. Note that Maclin was overturned within the Seventh Circuit by Farmer v. Haas. There, the court held that the real question was: “did the plaintiff appear to be competent to try it himself and, if not, would the presence of counsel have made a difference in the outcome?” Farmer v. Haas, 990 F.2d 319, 322 (7th Cir. 1983). However, the Maclin factors were adopted by and continue to be good law in other circuits. See Hodge v. Police Officers, 802 F.2d 58, 61–62 (2d Cir. 1986) (reaffirming that the Maclin factors apply to judicial determinations of appointment of counsel).

8. See Hodge v. Police Officers, 802 F.2d 58, 61–62 (2d Cir. 1986) (reaffirming that the Maclin factors apply to judicial determinations of appointment of counsel); Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887–889 (7th Cir. 1981) (setting forth the factors for a district court to consider in determining whether to appoint counsel). But see Stewart v. McMickens, 677 F. Supp. 226, 227–228 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (interpreting Hodge to require appointment of counsel “only where the individualized assessment suggests that an apparently legitimate case cannot proceed without the assistance of an attorney”).

9. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887–889 (7th Cir. 1981).

10. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887 (7th Cir. 1981).

11. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887 (7th Cir. 1981).

issues being raised.¹² For example, if the person suing is not able to properly investigate the crucial facts of a case, counsel will generally be appointed.¹³ A court is also more likely to appoint counsel in situations where there is conflicting testimony about relevant evidence, and the factual issues are complicated enough that trained attorneys would be more likely to uncover the truth.¹⁴ Additionally, district courts should appoint counsel in situations where the claimant is unable to present the case himself because of either physical or mental illness.¹⁵

If you are not assigned a lawyer but your case survives the defendant's motion for summary judgment (lets the case go to trial),¹⁶ then you should request a lawyer again (the court might be more likely to assign a lawyer at that stage).¹⁷ Remember, if the court assigns you a lawyer, you will have little or no say as to who your lawyer is. Thus, you may want to first try on your own to find a lawyer you trust and who is committed to helping you.

Keep in mind that many lawyers will be taking your case to earn a fee. Whether you pay a flat fee (fixed amount of money for the lawyer to represent you), an hourly fee, or a contingency fee (a slice of the winnings), you will still be expected to pay for the lawyer's litigation expenses, either before or after money is spent on your case.¹⁸ These expenses may include things like long-distance telephone calls, postage, photocopying, hiring an investigator, medical reports, etc. Unless you get poor person's status, you are also responsible for all court costs, such as filing fees.

If you cannot pay a lawyer's fees, a lawyer might take your case for a contingency fee.¹⁹ You will be asked to sign an agreement giving the lawyer a percentage (usually 33%) of whatever money the other side gives you if you win. If you do not win, your lawyer gets no money. Lawyers cannot ask you for a contingency fee in criminal or domestic relations (family law) cases.

D. Conclusion

Finding a lawyer you trust and who you can work with is an important part of your legal process. You should feel that you can be truthful with your lawyer, and that your lawyer is working in your best interest. Even if finding a good lawyer seems frustrating, keep on trying. When you write letters to ask for legal help, provide as much specific information about your case as possible so that a lawyer can see you have a good case.

If you cannot find a lawyer, or you choose not to hire a lawyer, you have the option of acting "pro se." This means that you represent yourself without the help of an attorney. While it will be more difficult, it is still possible to proceed pro se.

12. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887–889 (7th Cir. 1981).

13. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 887–888 (7th Cir. 1981). The court found that the claimant's status as a paraprofessional made it such that it would be hard for him to investigate the facts of his case.

14. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 888 (7th Cir. 1981).

15. Maclin v. Freake, 650 F.2d 885, 888 (7th Cir. 1981).

16. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. Summary judgment is when a court decides before a trial that no trial will be necessary because in applying the law to important undisputed facts, one party is clearly the winner.

17. You should request assignment of counsel again at this stage because if your case survives a summary judgment motion, then the court thinks that it is worthy of a trial or hearing. See Hendricks v. Coughlin, 114 F.3d 390, 393 (2d Cir. 1997) (invalidating lower court's application of a bright line rule of appointing counsel only after plaintiff's case survived a motion for summary judgment because, in some cases, an indigent plaintiff will have trouble developing even the basic facts necessary to survive summary judgment without assistance of counsel).

18. See N.Y. State Bar Assoc., The Courts of New York: A Guide to Court Procedures with a Glossary of Legal Terms, 66–68 (2001), available at <https://www.personalinjury317.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/05/courtsofny.pdf>.

19. You cannot be convinced to enter into a contingency fee arrangement by fraud, nor can your lawyer ask for so much money that the lawyer obviously took advantage of you. See Gair v. Peck, 6 N.Y.2d 97, 106, 160 N.E.2d 43, 48, 188 N.Y.S.2d 491, 497–498 (1959) (holding that contingency fees may be disallowed where "the amount of the fee, standing alone and unexplained, may be sufficient to show that an unfair advantage was taken of the client or, in other words, that a legal fraud was perpetrated on him"); see also King v. Fox, 7 N.Y.3d 181, 191, 851 N.E.2d 1184, 1191, 818 N.Y.S.2d 833, 840 (2006) (stating that a contingency fee may be unconscionable (excessive or unreasonable) if not proportional to the value of the services rendered).

CHAPTER 5

CHOOSING A COURT AND A LAWSUIT: AN OVERVIEW OF THE OPTIONS

A. Introduction

This Chapter will briefly explain the different lawsuits available to you, so that you can decide which type of lawsuit is best for you to bring. Each kind of lawsuit is described in more detail in later chapters of the JLM, so you should read those chapters for more specific information.

The first step you should take when determining what suit to bring is to ask yourself: “Do I want to challenge my conviction or sentence, do I want to challenge the conditions I am suffering in prison, or do I want to challenge both?” If you think something unlawful led to your imprisonment, read Part B of this Chapter. If you think something unlawful and harmful has happened to you while you have been in prison—for example, the prison refuses to give you your mail—read Part C. If you are not sure, read both Part B and Part C for more information.

For the best chance of winning your lawsuit, you must pay attention to the things the law requires you to do when bringing a specific type of lawsuit. Many lawsuits require you to do certain things before you even begin the lawsuit (such as pursue help within your prison). Some lawsuits also require you to do certain things when you begin the lawsuit (such as pay court fees, unless you can qualify for an exception).

Different types of lawsuits have different outcomes, or “remedies,” if you are successful. For example, some lawsuits allow you to demand that the opposing party pay you money, known as “money damages,” if you win. Other lawsuits do not result in money damages, but may require the opposing party to do something (such as give you your mail) or stop doing something that is causing you harm. Some types of lawsuits may lead to the reversal of your conviction or sentence, while other types do not provide for such remedies. Once you know what remedies each type of lawsuit can provide, you can decide which type of lawsuit, if any, is the right one for you to file.

B. Lawsuits to Challenge Your Conviction or Sentence

1. Criminal Appeal

If a New York trial court convicted you of a crime, you have the right to appeal your conviction or sentence to a higher New York court, unless your conviction ended in a death penalty sentence that was not harsh or excessive.¹ Incarcerated people who were convicted of crimes in other states, and incarcerated people who were convicted of a crime in federal court, have similar rights to appeal their convictions.² On appeal, the higher, or “appellate,” court will examine the record of your trial to determine whether the judge or prosecutor committed any legal errors³ in conducting your trial or sentencing. The appellate court may also consider whether the jury improperly weighed the evidence at your trial, or if your sentence was too harsh or longer than the maximum time allowed by law. Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” explains the process of appealing your conviction or sentence in detail.

2. Post-Conviction Remedies

New York also has three other procedures you can use to challenge your sentence or conviction. These additional procedures are often called “post-conviction remedies,” because they let you ask the court to help you after you have been convicted. These procedures are different from an appeal, because

1. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10 (McKinney 2009).

2. FED. R. APP. P. 4(b).

3. “Legal errors” are explained in different chapters of the JLM: Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence;” Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence;” Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus;” and Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus.”

during the appeal process, your conviction is not yet final. The three post-conviction remedies are: (1) an Article 440 motion, (2) a petition for state habeas corpus, and (3) a petition for federal habeas corpus.

These procedures do not exist only in New York. Chapter 20 of the JLM lists the procedures in other states that are similar to New York's Article 440 motion.⁴ Chapter 21 of the JLM covers state habeas corpus procedures for Florida and New York, and the habeas corpus procedures for other states are published in the JLM State Supplements. Finally, incarcerated people in every state have the same right to petition for federal habeas corpus. Federal habeas corpus is described in more detail in Chapter 13 of the JLM.

Although these three types of post-conviction remedies are available to you, keep in mind that filing an appeal is usually the best way to challenge your conviction or sentence. You should try to appeal your conviction or sentence before you pursue these post-conviction remedies.

(a) Article 440 Motion⁵

In an Article 440 motion, you ask the trial court to review circumstances that made your conviction or sentence unfair. Examples of these circumstances are a change in the law, discovery of new evidence, an unauthorized or illegal sentence, or misconduct by the prosecutor or judge that you did not and could not have known about at the time of your trial.⁶ You may also make an Article 440 motion if your conviction and sentence violate your rights under the U.S. Constitution or New York State Constitution.⁷ However, you cannot raise any claims in an Article 440 motion that you have already raised, or could have raised, in a criminal appeal. The remedy you get from winning an Article 440 motion is a new trial, appeal, or sentence. Keep in mind that, although there is no statute of limitations (time limit) for making an Article 440 motion, a court may choose not to grant your motion if you wait too long after your sentencing to file your motion.⁸ Chapter 20 of the JLM, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," discusses Article 440 in great detail, and you should read it before filing this motion.

(b) State Habeas Corpus⁹

In a state habeas corpus petition, you challenge the government's right to keep you in prison by asserting that your confinement is illegal. In general, however, New York courts require incarcerated people to file Article 440 motions instead of petitions for state habeas corpus unless they are challenging a parole or bail decision. New York habeas corpus petitions are often used to challenge bail determinations, revocations of your parole, extradition, arraignment and delay, misdemeanor complaint and delay, felony complaint and delay, and speedy trial issues. The remedy you get for filing a successful state habeas corpus petition is immediate release from custody. Chapter 21 of the JLM, "State Habeas Corpus," explains the New York habeas corpus process in detail, as well as Florida's habeas corpus procedures. State-specific habeas corpus procedures are published in the JLM State Supplements.

4. See JLM, Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence," Appendix A.

5. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 440.10–440.70 (McKinney 2009).

6. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(a)–(g) (McKinney 2009).

7. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(h) (McKinney 2009).

8. See People v. Byrdsong, 161 Misc. 2d 232, 236, 613 N.Y.S.2d 543, 545 (Sup. Ct. Queens County 1994) (stating that a post-conviction motion that was filed nine years after the trial and seven years after all appeals had been exhausted was not permitted because "in the interest of finality, there comes a time in any case when further litigation should come to an end.").

9. N.Y. C.PL.R. §§ 7001–7012 (McKinney 2009).

(c) Federal Habeas Corpus¹⁰

In a federal habeas corpus petition, you ask a federal judge to review your claim that your conviction or sentence violates your rights under the U.S. Constitution. This is different from an Article 440 motion or a petition for state habeas corpus. Recently, federal judges have been more cautious about disrupting state criminal proceedings, so it has become more difficult for incarcerated people convicted in state courts to get federal courts to review their federal habeas corpus claims.¹¹ Also, federal laws now require incarcerated people to exhaust all forms of state relief (such as filing an Article 440 motion or petitioning for state habeas corpus), before they seek relief in federal court.¹² You also have only one year to make a federal habeas corpus claim from the time you were sentenced or re-sentenced to prison.¹³ Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” explains federal habeas corpus in detail, and you should read it carefully if you are thinking about making a federal habeas corpus claim.

C. Lawsuits to Challenge the Conditions of Your Imprisonment¹⁴

Before you decide to bring a lawsuit challenging your prison conditions, it is very important that you read JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.” The PLRA, as it is known, makes it harder for incarcerated people to bring lawsuits about prison conditions in federal court. The PLRA also sets harsh consequences if you bring your claim incorrectly. Though the PLRA only applies to federal court cases, many states have passed similar laws to reduce the number of lawsuits from incarcerated people. Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” will help you learn how to research whether your state has laws like the PLRA.

In order to bring a lawsuit in federal court, the PLRA requires you to pay the full court filing fee even if you proceed in forma pauperis (as a poor person). If you file as a poor person, however, your fees will be taken in installments from your prison account. This means that instead of having to pay the full fee up front, you can pay a little bit at a time. However, if you file a federal lawsuit in forma pauperis, you risk receiving a “strike” under the “three strikes” provision of the PLRA. Under the “three strikes” provision, you get a strike if you file a lawsuit that gets dismissed for being frivolous, malicious, or for failing to make a valid legal claim. If you get three strikes, you will never be able to use the in forma pauperis procedure again in future lawsuits, so you will have to pay the full filing fee up front. Also, if the court finds that you filed a lawsuit for a malicious or harassing purpose, you may lose good-time credit you have earned in prison.¹⁵

The PLRA also requires you to “exhaust” (use up) or attempt to exhaust all of your administrative remedies before you bring a claim in court.¹⁶ To do this, you must pursue all of the administrative grievance procedures available to you before filing a federal lawsuit (this is described more in Part C(1) below). If you do not exhaust all your administrative remedies, your claim will be thrown out and you will not get your filing fee back. These are only a few of the restrictions imposed by the PLRA. You

10. 28 U.S.C. §§ 2241–2266.

11. Eve Brensike Primus, A Crisis in Federal Habeas Law, 110 MICH. L. REV. 887, 887 (2012) (noting “federal judges . . . dismiss the vast majority of [habeas petitions] . . . on procedural grounds”) ((reviewing NANCY J. KING & JOSEPH L. HOFMANN, HABEAS FOR THE TWENTY-FIRST CENTURY: USES, ABUSES, AND THE FUTURE OF THE GREAT WRIT (2011)). This concern will not apply to you if you are a federally incarcerated person in a federal institution.

12. The Prison Litigation Reform Act is explained briefly below in Part (C), and in further detail in JLM, Chapter 14.

13. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (“A 1-year period of limitation shall apply to an application for a writ of habeas corpus by a person in custody pursuant to the judgment of a State court.”).

14. You can also file a complaint with the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ), but this is not a lawsuit since the DOJ does not have to respond to your complaint. See Part C(7) below for more details on the DOJ process.

15. 28 U.S.C. § 1932 (codified below heading “Revocation of earned relief credit”).

16. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a).

should read Chapter 14 of the JLM before you file any federal lawsuit challenging your prison conditions to make sure you know all the rules created by the PLRA.

1. Exhausting Administrative Grievances

The PLRA requires you to use all administrative grievance programs available to you—both state and federal—before filing a lawsuit in federal court. Many states also have this requirement. In New York, you must first file a complaint in the New York State Inmate Grievance Program before bringing a lawsuit. Read Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures,” for more details about the New York program as well as some basic information about similar incarcerated person grievance programs in other states.

The New York State Inmate Grievance Program allows incarcerated people in any of the facilities of the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) to file a complaint with “grievances” (something you think is wrong) about their prison conditions. Grievances must be about a DOCCS policy, rule, or regulation, either as it is written or as correction officials or officers have applied it to you personally. Issues and problems that do not relate to a DOCCS policy, rule, or regulation, or that do not involve you personally cannot be resolved through this program. For example, if your complaint involves a policy, rule, or action of an outside agency DOCCS cannot help you.¹⁷ Therefore, the PLRA does not require that you exhaust the DOCCS grievance procedure before you file a federal lawsuit if your claim does not relate to a DOCCS policy, rule, or regulation. However, you should be sure before proceeding, and it may still be a good idea to file a grievance just to be sure.

2. Lawsuits under 42 U.S.C. § 1983

A federal law, 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (“Section 1983”), allows you to sue state and city prison or jail officials and guards if they deprive you of your rights under the U.S. Constitution or other federal laws (such as your rights to adequate medical care, to be free from assault, and to have access to the courts and to legal materials). You cannot use Section 1983 to attack your conviction or sentence.

When you file a Section 1983 lawsuit, you must give a detailed description of the incident or practice which you want resolved. If the problem affects many other people in your prison, you might also be able to bring your lawsuit as a “class action.” A class action is a lawsuit brought on behalf of you and others who experience the same problem or have the same complaint.¹⁸ You can also bring a state claim, together with your federal claim, if the state claim involves the same facts as your federal claim.¹⁹

Section 1983 has a statute of limitations, which prevents you from bringing a Section 1983 lawsuit if you do not file it quickly enough after you are harmed. Section 1983 lawsuits have the same statute of limitations as personal injury lawsuits in the state in which you file your Section 1983 lawsuit. The statute of limitations time period begins to run when you find out about (or should have found out about) the injury you suffered.

A federal judge who hears a Section 1983 claim may order any of the following remedies: (1) an “injunction” (an order to prison officials to stop denying you your rights or to take steps to allow you to exercise your rights); (2) money damages (to make up for your injuries); or (3) a “declaratory judgment” (a statement by the court about what your rights are, made before they have been violated).

After you decide which district court you will file your Section 1983 lawsuit in, you should write to the clerk of that court asking for the forms and information you need. You can complete the filing of your Section 1983 lawsuit simply by mailing the appropriate documents to the clerk. Chapter 16 of the 17. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040 § 701.3(f), Inmate Grievance Program (2016), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4040.pdf>.

18. But keep in mind that you need a lawyer to file a class action. You cannot file one by yourself.

19. See Part C(6)(b) of Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” for more information on supplementing your federal § 1983 case with state claims.

JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” discusses Section 1983 lawsuits in detail.

3. Bivens Actions²⁰ under 28 U.S.C. § 1331

There is no statute (law) similar to Section 1983 that allows you to sue federal officials who violate your federal rights. However, you can still sue federal officials who violate your constitutional rights by bringing a “Bivens action.”²¹ A Bivens action is similar to a Section 1983 claim. Much of the information about Section 1983 lawsuits also applies to Bivens actions. For example, like a Section 1983 lawsuit, you may use a Bivens action to complain about prison conditions or treatment violating your constitutional rights. The PLRA also requires that you exhaust all available administrative remedies before filing your Bivens action, like you need to do in a Section 1983 lawsuit.

A Bivens action allows you to sue a federal officer who violated your rights. However, you can only sue a federal officer as an individual, not as an official. This means that you can sue the officer as a person, but not as a government employee, and therefore your remedies are limited to what the individual can do to “make you whole” (make it up to you).²² Additionally, you cannot bring a Bivens action against a federal agency or a private corporation that operates a federal prison facility.²³ If you want to sue a private corporation that operates prison facilities, you might be able to bring a tort claim in state court (this is described in more detail below). Federal courts also may not listen to your complaint if it sounds like you are suing for a harm that is relatively less serious, such as your personal items being taken from you.

If you bring a Bivens action, you must serve a copy of the summons and complaint on (1) the named defendants, (2) the U.S. Attorney for the district in which you bring your lawsuit, and (3) the U.S. Attorney General in Washington, D.C.²⁴ If you seek injunctive or declaratory relief (meaning you are asking the court to stop something being done to you, but you are not asking for money), you may file your lawsuit in the federal district where any defendant resides, where the events complained of occurred or are occurring, or where you presently reside.²⁵ If you are filing a Bivens action for money damages, you must file in (1) the federal district in which any of the defendants resides, so long as all the defendants live in the same state, or (2) the district in which your claim arose (that is, where the events you are complaining about occurred).²⁶ You can only use registered or certified mail to serve the U.S. Attorney and Attorney General with your summons and complaint.²⁷ All service to the named defendants must be by personal service, unless the defendants waive personal service under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.²⁸

20. For more information on Bivens actions, see Part E of Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 & 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

21. The claim comes from the case Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 389, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 2001, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619, 622 (1971), which allowed a lawsuit against federal agents claiming a Fourth Amendment violation.

22. See Robinson v. Overseas Military Sales Corp., 21 F.3d 502, 510 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that a Bivens action “must be brought against the federal officers involved in their individual capacities”). This is because if you sue an officer in his “official capacity,” it is like suing the federal government. However, the federal government usually cannot be sued due to “sovereign immunity.” Sovereign immunity is the legal idea that a government may not be sued unless it specifically allows suits against it.

23. See Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 486, 114 S. Ct. 996, 1005–1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 308, 323–324 (1994) (holding that Bivens suits cannot be brought against a federal agency); see also Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 63, 122 S. Ct. 515, 517, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 461 (2001) (refusing to extend Bivens to allow recovery against a private company operating a halfway house under contract with the Federal Bureau of Prisons).

24. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(3).

25. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e).

26. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b).

27. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(1), (3).

28. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(3).

4. Tort Actions in State Courts

As noted above, if you were injured by a state official or employee, and as a result, your constitutional rights were violated, you may file a Section 1983 suit. This is a claim under federal law even though the person who injured you is a state official or employee. You may also file a tort action under state law in state court against anyone who deliberately or carelessly injured you, or damaged or destroyed your property. You can file a state tort action regardless of whether they violated any of your constitutional rights, and regardless of whether you are also filing a Section 1983 federal lawsuit.

In New York, if the person who injured you was a state official, state employee, or someone acting under the authority of the state (such as a private doctor the state hired), you may sue New York State. When suing the state in a tort action, you must do so in the Court of Claims.²⁹ The Court of Claims only hears such claims against the state and can only award money damages; it cannot issue an injunction. Also, before filing a lawsuit in the Court of Claims, you must exhaust administrative procedures, such as the Inmate Grievance Program, and you must pay the filing fee. Read Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more information about tort lawsuits.

5. Tort Actions in Federal Courts

If you are incarcerated in federal prison and want to file a tort lawsuit, you must sue using the Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”)³⁰ instead of a Bivens action. The FTCA creates the procedures to sue the federal government for harm federal employees may have caused you or your property while they were doing their jobs. You must first send in a completed Form 95, “Claim for Damage, Injury, or Death,” and ask for damages from the federal agency that employs the person who harmed you.³¹ Often, the agency settles FTCA claims. But if the agency refuses to resolve your claim, you may file suit in federal court. Remember, if you have not sought all of the possible administrative remedies before going to federal court, the judge will dismiss your case.

6. Article 78 Proceedings

Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law allows you to go to court to challenge decisions made by New York State administrative bodies or officers.³² Like the other lawsuits mentioned in Part C of this chapter, you cannot use Article 78 to challenge your conviction or sentence. Article 78 is useful to challenge decisions made by administrative bodies like the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, the Board of Parole, and the Temporary Release Committee, or decisions made by state employees such as prison guards and administrators. You may challenge these decisions when you think the people making the decision: (1) acted beyond their legal authority; (2) failed to do something required by law; (3) made an unreasonable or grossly unfair decision; or (4) made a decision at a hearing without enough evidence to warrant such a decision.³³ Even though you cannot challenge your sentence or conviction under Article 78, you may challenge the Board of Parole’s decision to revoke your parole, which, if successful, would lead to your release from prison. Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the N.Y. C.P.L.R.” discusses Article 78 proceedings in greater detail.

29. Although the name is similar, this is not the same as Small Claims Court.

30. Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(1).

31. 28 U.S.C. § 2675(a) (2012). You can get this form by writing to the clerk of the federal district court in which you plan to file your action. You may also download the form online via the General Services Administration Form Library. See Claim for Damage, Injury, or Death, GEN. SERVS. ADMIN., available at <https://www.gsa.gov/forms-library-claim-damage-injury-or-death> (last visited Sept. 12, 2018).

32. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801 et seq. (McKinney 2009).

33. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803 (McKinney 2009).

7. Challenging Unconstitutional Prison Conditions Through the Department of Justice

The Special Litigation Section of the U.S. Department of Justice (“DOJ”) has authority under the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act to investigate state and local jails and prisons for unconstitutional conditions.³⁴ This section of the DOJ does not investigate federal prisons; you must use another agency like the Bureau of Prisons if you want to file a complaint about a federal prison.³⁵ The DOJ will only investigate allegations of widespread abuse—problems experienced by many people incarcerated at a particular prison or jail. If you think your prison suffers from widespread constitutional abuses, you might consider writing to the DOJ. *The DOJ cannot provide individual relief, nor can it bring a claim regarding your criminal sentence. For these matters, you should contact an attorney.*³⁶

The Special Litigation Section of the DOJ protects the constitutional and federal statutory rights of people confined in certain institutions owned or operated by state and local governments. These institutions include facilities for individuals who are mentally ill or developmentally disabled, nursing homes, juvenile correctional facilities, and adult jails and prisons. Recently, the Special Litigation Section has focused on abuse in nursing homes, juvenile facilities, sexual victimization of women who are incarcerated, and the unmet medical needs of people serving criminal sentences and people detained before trial.

The Special Litigation Section enforces federal civil rights statutes in four major areas: (1) conditions of institutional confinement; (2) law enforcement misconduct; (3) access to reproductive health facilities and places of religious worship; and (4) protection of institutionalized people’s religious exercise rights. The DOJ receives a large number of claims every year and cannot investigate every claim. The DOJ also takes a long time to conduct an investigation, so it is important to be patient if you do bring a claim.

If you write to the DOJ, be as specific and clear as possible about the abuses you and other people in your prison or jail are experiencing. Your letter should include your name, prison ID number, race, the length of your sentence and how much of it you have served, and a description of what happened or the condition you believe to be unconstitutional. When you talk about what happened, be sure to include all relevant information, including how many times the abuse happened, the names and races of the people involved, and whether the abuse has happened to other people incarcerated at your facility. If you know of others who have had similar experiences, encourage them to write letters too. Send the letter to:

U.S. Department of Justice
Civil Rights Division
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Office of the Assistant Attorney General, Main
Washington, D.C. 20530
Telephone: (877) 218-5228; (202) 514-6255; Fax: (202) 514-0212; (202) 514-6273

If you are filing a complaint under the Americans with Disabilities Act, you must write to a different division of the DOJ. Chapter 28 of the JLM, “Rights of Incarcerated People with Disabilities,” will help

34. 42 U.S.C. § 1997a(a). Some federal courts in New York have held that, under the PLRA, incarcerated people must exhaust the DOJ’s disability complaint procedure, in addition to their prisons’ internal grievance procedures, before filing a disability-related complaint in federal court. Other courts have disagreed. For more information about whether your complaint would qualify as an “administrative remedy” under the PLRA, read Part E(1) of JLM, Chapter 14.

35. For more information, see FEDERAL BUREAU OF PRISONS, available at <https://www.bop.gov> (last visited Sept. 12, 2018).

36. See How to File a Complaint, DEP’T OF JUSTICE, available at <http://www.justice.gov/crt/complaint/> (last visited Sept. 12, 2018).

you file this complaint. A summary of the Special Litigation Section's work is also available on the DOJ website at <http://www.justice.gov/crt/about/spl/> (last visited November 15, 2020).

D. Conclusion

If you are thinking about bringing a lawsuit, you should start by determining the details of your problem. This will help you decide which laws or procedures are most appropriate for your situation. Then decide whether you are challenging your conviction or sentence, or whether you are challenging the conditions of your imprisonment. Read additional chapters of the JLM that relate to your issue to help you make a decision. Next, learn what you must do for different types of legal action. Review the different types of suits described above (and in the chart below) for each type of legal problem, and think about what is required to be successful. Finally, think back to what your problem is and who is responsible, and decide what your goals are for fixing that problem. Since different lawsuits provide different types of solutions (or “remedies”), you should decide what kind of legal action to take with your goal in mind. At that point, you will be in the best position to decide whether legal action is right for you, and if so, which type of lawsuit you should pursue.

APPENDIX A

LAWSUITS THAT CHALLENGE YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE

Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Where Do I Bring My Claim: State or Federal Court?	Important Things to Remember	JLM Chapters you should consult
Criminal Appeal	A higher court looks at your case to see if the lower court, judge, or prosecutor committed any legal errors during the trial or sentencing.	It depends on where you were first convicted. If you were convicted in a state trial court, you will appeal to a higher state court. If you were convicted in a federal court, you will appeal to a higher federal court.	The higher court can only look for legal errors, not factual ones.	Chapter 9: "Appealing Your Sentence or Conviction"
Article 440	A trial court reviews circumstances that may have made your conviction or sentence unfair.	You can bring this claim only in the New York State courts. See JLM , Chapter 20, Appendix A for similar laws in other states.	You cannot raise any claims you have already raised or could have raised in a criminal appeal.	Chapter 20: "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence"
Federal Habeas Corpus	A federal judge reviews your claim that your rights were violated under the U.S. Constitution.	You may bring a federal habeas corpus claim only in federal court.	You must have tried to use all the relief that your state provides before seeking federal habeas corpus. Remember that you have a one-year time limit to bring a federal habeas corpus action. Judges do not often grant habeas relief.	Chapter 13: "Federal Habeas Corpus"
State Habeas Corpus	In New York, state habeas corpus is used mainly to challenge bail determinations and revocations of parole.	You may bring a state habeas corpus claim only in state court.	In New York, try Article 440 before you bring a state habeas petition. Courts will generally make you use Article 440 unless you are challenging bail or a parole decision.	Chapter 21: "State Habeas Corpus"

APPENDIX B

LAWSUITS THAT CHALLENGE THE CONDITIONS OF YOUR IMPRISONMENT

Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Which Court- State or Federal?	Important Things to Know	JLM Chapters you must consult
Administrative Grievance	You may file a complaint to an administrative body. In prison, this means that you will first file a complaint with your prison.	An administrative grievance is not filed with a court, but rather with your prison.	Make sure you know about the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) and its requirements. See JLM , Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”	Chapter 15: “Inmate Grievance Procedures”
42 U.S.C. § 1983	You may sue state or city prison officials if they violate your federal constitutional rights and federal statutory rights “under color” of state law.	Section 1983 claims are usually filed in federal court.	You cannot use a Section 1983 claim to challenge your conviction or sentence. You must follow the state statute of limitations (time limit) for personal injury suits and file your complaint by this deadline. Consider whether you might also bring your suit as a class action. You cannot use a Section 1983 claim if you are complaining about a federal official.	Chapter 16: “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law”

28 U.S.C. § 1331 (Bivens Actions)	You use this type of lawsuit to complain about federal officials who violate your federal constitutional rights. This is the equivalent to a Section 1983 lawsuit, but applied to federal officials, so much of the information about Section 1983 suits also applies to Bivens actions.	You may only bring a Bivens action in federal court.	You can sue a federal official only in his individual capacity, not in his official capacity. You cannot sue federal agencies through a Bivens action. You cannot use a Bivens action to sue private corporations that work with the federal government to operate your prison facility (use a tort action instead).	Chapter 16: "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law"
Type of Suit	Characteristics of the Suit	Which Court- State or Federal?	Important Things to Know	JLM Chapters you must consult
Tort Actions	In addition to a Section 1983 suit or a Bivens action (above) you can file a tort action against anyone who deliberately or carelessly injured you or your property. You can also bring a tort claim by itself.	You may bring a tort action in federal or state court.	In New York, you can sue the State of New York in the Court of Claims if the person who injured you was a state official or employee. Remember, if you are a person incarcerated in a federal prison, you must first exhaust administrative remedies under the Federal Tort Claims Act and Prison Litigation Reform Act before bringing a claim in federal court.	Chapter 17: "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions"

Article 78	You may challenge decisions made by administrative bodies or officers in court (for example, the Board of Parole, or state-employed prison guards). You may challenge decisions that may be unlawful or actions that show the administrative bodies failed to follow the law.	You may bring an Article 78 suit only in New York State court.	You cannot use this type of lawsuit to challenge your conviction or sentence.	Chapter 22: “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules”
U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ)	The DOJ will investigate only allegations of systemic abuse (continued unconstitutional behavior that harms everyone) in state and local institutions.	This type of action is initiated by writing to the DOJ.	The DOJ cannot provide individual relief—it will only look into problems that are experienced by many people incarcerated at a particular prison or jail. Also, the DOJ will not look into problems in federal institutions. If you decide to write to the DOJ Special Litigation Unit, make sure your letter is as clear and specific as possible.	There are no JLM Chapters on this subject. For more information, go to: http://www.justice.gov/crt/complaint

CHAPTER 6

AN INTRODUCTION TO LEGAL DOCUMENTS*

A. Introduction: The Right and Responsibilities of Self-Representation

If you want to represent yourself in court without the aid of an attorney, you have the right to bring the lawsuit “pro se.” This means that you must bring the lawsuit yourself and take on all legal responsibilities.¹ Although it is always helpful to have a lawyer, it can be difficult to get legal assistance, especially at the beginning of a lawsuit. If you plan to bring a lawsuit, it is important that you learn what documents you will need to submit to the court. Courts require that you prepare and file certain documents at specific times in order to begin and continue a lawsuit. The purpose of this Chapter is to introduce you to some of these legal documents and explain how to use them.

Each type of lawsuit described in the JLM has at least one “plaintiff” or “petitioner” (the person bringing lawsuit) and at least one “defendant” or “respondent” (the person being sued).² In some lawsuits, there may be more than one plaintiff. For example, if several incarcerated people were all mistreated in the same way, they could bring a lawsuit together, and every incarcerated person would be a separate plaintiff. Your lawsuit may be stronger if you can show that several people suffered the same mistreatment. You may even be able to bring a lawsuit for a group of people without having to ask all of them to join your lawsuit as plaintiffs. Such a lawsuit is called a “class action.”³

A class action can be very powerful, especially because it may help the case stay in court. For example, let us say you are bringing a lawsuit against prison officials for mistreating you and several other incarcerated people, but you are the only named plaintiff. In this case, the prison officials can have the case thrown out by simply treating you better and no one else. This is because the court only has power over those people named in the lawsuit—whoever is a plaintiff/petitioner or defendant/respondent. Once the prison officials have improved conditions for you, your problem is solved and your case will be dismissed. If this happens, the court cannot do anything about the conditions or mistreatment of the other incarcerated people unless they bring a lawsuit for themselves. On the other hand, if you bring a class action lawsuit on behalf of all affected incarcerated people, prison officials may have to improve conditions for everyone before the court can dismiss the case. You should try to find a lawyer if you want to bring a class action case.

Whether you bring a class action or not, you may sue more than one defendant. Under the rule of employer liability (“respondeat superior”), an employer may sometimes be liable for the illegal acts of his employees. Therefore, you should not only name the individual who injured you as a defendant, but also that individual’s bosses or superiors, up to the Commissioner of Corrections.

If you are a plaintiff, you begin your lawsuit by telling the court and the person you are suing (the defendant) that you plan to bring suit. You do this by filing papers with the court (discussed in more detail below). In these papers, you explain the problem you are having and what you would like the

* This Chapter was revised by Sohan Manek based on previous versions written by Taryn A. Merkl, Colleen Romaka, and other former members of the Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. New York Prisoners’ Legal Services publishes a newsletter entitled Pro Se, which discusses how to proceed pro se in various contexts. Many libraries have it. The newsletter is also available from Prisoners’ Legal Services. To subscribe, send in a request with your name, DIN number, and facility to: Pro Se, 114 Prospect Street, Ithaca, NY 14850. For questions about the newsletter, send a letter to: Pro Se, 41 State Street, Suite M112, Albany, NY 12207.

2. The terms “plaintiff” and “petitioner” are both used to refer to the person who brings a lawsuit (the person who sues). Similarly, the terms “defendant” and “respondent” are both used to refer to the person who is being sued. Which terms are used will change depending on the court in which the case is brought.

3. A “class action” is a lawsuit in which the court authorizes a single person or a small group of people to represent the interests of a larger group. See FED. R. CIV. P. 23 (the Federal Rule of Civil Procedure laying out the procedures for class actions); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 901–909 (McKinney 2009) (the rule laying out the procedures for class actions in New York State courts).

court to do about it. Once the court receives these papers, the person you are suing is allowed to defend himself by filing papers with the court that respond to your claims. At this point, you are usually given another opportunity to file more papers, in which you respond to what your opponent has stated in his papers. In most cases, this exchange of claims and responses to the charges occurs before the court makes any decisions on the content (also called the “merits”) of the lawsuit itself.

B. The Legal Documents

All lawsuits, regardless of type, require the same basic legal documents. These documents usually fall into five categories: (1) papers you need to start the lawsuit, (2) papers supporting your claims, (3) miscellaneous papers, (4) the answer from the defendants, and (5) your reply to the defendant’s answer. The names of these documents may differ depending on the particular lawsuit you choose to file, even though they serve the same purposes. For example, in a federal habeas corpus action, the paper needed to start a lawsuit is called a “petition,” while, in a criminal appeal, it is called a “notice of appeal.”

JLM Chapters 2–5 describe in detail the various types of lawsuits that you may bring and provide you with instructions on how to prepare the forms that you need for each type of lawsuit. A summary of different types of lawsuits, based on New York procedure, is also given in JLM Chapter 5.

This Part provides an overview of the legal documents you will need to prepare if you decide to bring one of the lawsuits discussed in the JLM. The chart at the end of this Chapter matches the various names given to the five basic categories of papers to each type of lawsuit that you may bring.

When people think about a lawsuit, they usually think about arguing in a courtroom in front of a judge and jury. However, before any case actually gets into court, certain legal documents must be prepared and filed with the court. If you are bringing a lawsuit pro se (without a lawyer), you are responsible for preparing the necessary documents. Therefore, it is important that you read Chapters 2–5 of the JLM and carefully follow the directions on how to prepare the necessary documents. This Part discusses the functions of the five basic types of legal documents that you need to start and continue the different types of lawsuits.

1. Papers Needed to Start a Lawsuit (Starting Papers)

Once you have figured out what type of lawsuit you would like to bring, you must file papers (called “pleadings”) with the court that explain why you are seeking help (or “relief”) from the court. In these documents, you will usually state what the defendant has done to you and what you want the court to do about it. For example, if the defendant has injured you, you will tell the court how the injury occurred and tell them that you want money to pay for your medical bills. You will also explain why the court has the jurisdiction (power) to decide your case. Depending on what type of lawsuit you bring, the names of the papers may differ. The chart in Appendix A of this Chapter provides the names of these papers for each lawsuit. You should refer to the chapter of the JLM describing your legal problem in detail to determine how these documents should be prepared.

2. Supporting Papers

In the papers that you file to start a lawsuit, you will make claims about what the defendant did to you and why you are seeking help from the court. At this point in most lawsuits, the court will need some sort of evidence that supports your claims. Two types of supporting evidence are discussed below, called affidavits and memorandums:

(a) Affidavits

A supporting document often takes the form of an affidavit. An affidavit is a sworn written statement, by you or by a witness, supporting the claims you made in your starting papers. An affidavit must be notarized. This means that it must be signed by a notary public, or “friend of the court,” a person who has been authorized to “notarize” official documents. An affidavit’s purpose is to provide the court with some factual evidence that supports your claims. Therefore, it should contain specific facts.⁴ It may consist of your own testimony or that of someone else who witnessed or knows about the facts of your claim. You must make sure that all claims in an affidavit are true. If you lie in an affidavit, you may be prosecuted for perjury.

(b) Memorandum of Law

In some suits, a legal memorandum is required. A legal memorandum (also called a “brief”) is a statement of the law on a particular legal issue (as opposed to the facts, which would be in an affidavit). A memorandum discusses the legal arguments upon which your claim is based. In your memorandum, you compare your case to cases with similar facts. The memorandum of law serves a purpose similar to that of the affidavit—it supports the claims that you made in your starting papers, but it uses the law to make the argument instead of only facts. The legal memorandum should begin with a statement of the facts of your case. An example appears in Appendix B of this Chapter. The rest of the memorandum should deal with all of the legal issues that you think arise from the facts of your case. When trying to figure out what legal issues are important, you will need to research your legal rights and responsibilities. You should research these questions of law and explain to the court how other cases have dealt with issues similar to yours. Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” explains how to research an issue in the law library.

3. Miscellaneous Papers

You may also file miscellaneous papers, which usually deal with questions of legal procedure (the process by which your case is decided). These questions of law differ from “substantive questions of law” (the legal rights that you claim the defendants have violated). However, procedural questions can still affect your chances of success in the lawsuit. For example, miscellaneous papers may include a request for a lawyer, whose expertise could make the difference between whether you win or lose your case. They may also include a request to file as a “poor person,” known as in forma pauperis. This would free you from having to pay the normal fees and filing costs necessary to bring a lawsuit.⁵ The miscellaneous papers that you will need to file will be different depending on the type of lawsuit you are bringing. You should refer to the chart at Appendix A of this Chapter to determine what papers are necessary and appropriate for your particular lawsuit. You should also refer to the specific section of the JLM that discusses your legal problem in detail in order to determine how to prepare these documents.

4. Answering Papers from the Defendant

The defendant that you sue is required to answer your starting papers. There are several ways the defendant might answer. The defendant may simply admit or deny the claims in your papers. The defendant may also state that he does not know if your statements are true. This is the same as a denial.⁶ If the person you have sued answers without replying to one of your factual allegations, the court will conclude that he has admitted that your allegation is true.⁷

4. Include as many details as you can and make them as specific as you can. For example, describe specific injuries (where on your body, what did the injury look like, did it receive a medical diagnosis, etc.); mention specifically what was done to you, who did it, what time of day, and what day of the week; describe what you were doing before the other person wronged you and what they were doing before and after. Try to think of the event like a movie, and explain it with the detail that you would see if the event was being played on a movie screen in front of you.

5. Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”), incarcerated people filing claims in court are required to pay full court filing fees. The full fee will gradually be deducted from your prison account. For a full discussion of the PLRA and how it affects your rights, see JLM Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

6. See FED. R. CIV. P. 8(b) (rule on defenses and forms of denials for actions in federal court); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(a) (McKinney 2009) (rule for denials and defenses in New York State courts).

7. See FED. R. CIV. P. 8(b)(6) (federal rule regarding the effect of a party’s failure to deny allegations); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(a) (McKinney 2009) (rule regarding the effect of a party’s failure to deny allegations in New York State courts).

Another option that the defendant has is to attack your starting papers by raising certain defenses.⁸ The defendant will usually raise these types of defenses in a “motion to dismiss” your complaint. If the defendant wins such a motion to dismiss your complaint, the court has the option of either dismissing your case or granting you the opportunity to amend (change) your complaint to fix your argument. If you are given a chance to amend your complaint, you should think of the amended complaint as new starting papers, which your opponent needs to answer again.

(a) Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim

An example of a defendant’s answer that would attack your starting papers is a “motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.” By filing this motion, your opponent argues that you have no legal claim.⁹ For example, you might want to sue a prison official because you feel you do not get to spend enough time outside. But if no law says prison officials must let you outside for a certain amount of time, your claim could be dismissed. This is because, no matter what the facts were, you could not show that the official violated a law. In this example, the judge would look at the pleadings (the papers you filed to start the case and your opponent’s motion to dismiss), and would dismiss your case because there would be no law that requires the prison official to give you a certain amount of time outside.

(b) Motion for Summary Judgment

Another type of answer that your opponent can submit is a “motion for summary judgment.” Note that you (the plaintiff) or a defendant may file a motion for summary judgment, but it is very rare that plaintiffs are successful. That is why we describe the motion for summary judgment as the defendant’s motion, but keep in mind that the same standards apply to plaintiffs. In a motion for summary judgment, the defendant argues that, even if your facts are true, he has not violated a law. Therefore, he is entitled to “judgment as a matter of law.”¹⁰ This means that a judge may decide the case without the case ever going before a jury.

For example, you might bring a Section 1983 action¹¹ claiming that a prison guard hit you and therefore violated your constitutional right under the Eighth Amendment to be protected against “cruel and unusual punishment.” The defendant might file a summary judgment motion arguing that one violent incident does not establish “cruel and unusual punishment” within the meaning of the Eighth Amendment.¹² The judge will read the legal papers and will assume that the facts you claimed are true. This means that the judge will give you the benefit of the doubt. If the judge believes that there is no way you can demonstrate that the single incident amounted to a violation of the Eighth Amendment, he will grant the guard’s motion for summary judgment. If the judge thinks that the officer may have violated the Eighth Amendment, then he will deny summary judgment and your case will move forward to trial.

Summary judgment is different from a “motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.” In a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the judge only relies on your pleadings (allegations submitted to the court) to make a decision. However, when the defendant files a motion for summary judgment, the judge decides the motion based on affidavits submitted by both sides. This means that, if the defendant submits an affidavit in support of a summary judgment motion, you have the right to introduce

8. For a list of the seven defenses that may be made by motion under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, see FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b). For a list of comparable grounds on which a motion may be made in New York courts, see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(a) (McKinney 2009). You must check the court rules for your particular state or federal court for a complete list of defenses.

9. See FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(a)(7) (McKinney 2009).

10. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56 (the federal rule for summary judgment); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3212 (McKinney 2009) (the New York rule for summary judgment).

11. See Chapter 16 of the JLM for a discussion of 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

12. See Chapter 24 of the JLM for an explanation of Eighth Amendment protections in assault cases.

affidavits to support your claim and oppose the defendant's motion.¹³ When you are opposing a motion for summary judgment, you should demonstrate in an affidavit that there are disputed facts that support your claim. You should also demonstrate that a reasonable person could believe your version of the story. For example, if you claim that a prison guard hit you, a reasonable person could not believe you if the prison guard shows that he was not at the prison when you claim that he hit you. If possible, you should seek to amend your complaint (or other introductory papers) to correct any possible errors.

(c) Motion for a More Definite Statement

In addition to attempting to have your case dismissed, the defendant may choose to file answering papers that require you to file more papers. These types of answers may include a "motion for a more definite statement" because your complaint was not specific enough.¹⁴ This type of motion may be granted in order to give the defendant a chance to understand and answer your claims. It may also be a delaying device used by your opponent to buy more time. If the judge grants this motion, you will have to amend your complaint to explain your claims in more detail.

(d) Counterclaim

A defendant may also file a "counterclaim" against you.¹⁵ This means that the defendant claims that you harmed him. For example, if you sue a prison guard for assaulting you, the prison guard may answer in turn with a claim that you injured him instead. If a defendant files a counterclaim, you must file a reply stating your version of the events.¹⁶

(e) Request for Extension

Finally, some issues may prevent the defendant from being able to respond to your charges within the time limits given to answer. If this happens, the defendant will probably request an extension from the court, which requires a showing of "good cause" (having a good reason).¹⁷ Courts usually grant these requests.

If the defendant does not file (1) an answer to your charges, (2) a motion attacking the validity of your charges, or (3) a motion for an extension of time, you have the right to request that the judge enter a "default judgment," which is a judgment in your favor.¹⁸ A default judgment assumes that your charges are true because the defendant did not respond to them. To get a default judgment, you must file a request that a default judgment be entered with the clerk of the court. You will later request the same court to order the relief (the help) you requested in your starting papers.

13. If you would like to introduce any documents to support your opposition to the motion, these must be "authenticated" by an affidavit unless they are already in the court's record. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56(c); Martinez v. Am.'s Wholesale Lender, 446 F. App'x 940, 943–944 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding that photocopies of deeds were not "self-authenticating," and therefore could not be considered for summary judgment); Canada v. Blain's Helicopters, Inc., 831 F.2d 920, 925 (9th Cir. 1987) (finding that unauthenticated documents in a report cannot be used when deciding a summary judgment motion). This means you should have someone who has knowledge of the documents swear that the documents are genuine and reliable. A person has the required knowledge to authenticate a document in an affidavit if he could authenticate a document during trial under the evidence rules. See, e.g., FED. R. EVID. 901 (requiring that all evidence be authenticated). Also note that some documents, such as public records and newspapers, are "self-authenticating," which means that they are considered so trustworthy that they do not need to be sworn to in an affidavit. See FED. R. EVID. 902 (listing some documents that do not require additional evidence to be authenticated).

14. See FED. R. CIV. P. 12(e); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3024(a) (McKinney 2009).

15. See FED. R. CIV. P. 13; N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3019(a) (McKinney 2009).

16. See FED. R. CIV. P. 7(a); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3011 (McKinney 2009).

17. See FED. R. CIV. P. 6(b); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2004 (McKinney 2009).

18. See FED. R. CIV. P. 55; N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3215 (McKinney 2009).

5. Your Reply to the Defendant's Answer

Once you receive the defendant's answer, you should read it closely. Carefully reading the defendant's answering papers will help you determine the arguments he will make as the case progresses. For example, a defendant might raise affirmative defenses in his answer, in which he agrees that an injury occurred, but claims that he has no legal responsibility. One example of an affirmative defense is a claim of contributory negligence, where the defendant claims that your carelessness somehow helped cause the injury, and therefore, that he is not fully responsible.¹⁹ Importantly, an affirmative defense can only be used at trial if the defendant raised it in the answer to the complaint. By carefully reviewing the answer and understanding the defendant's facts and arguments, you will be able to counter them effectively.

In some instances, such as when the defendant files a counterclaim in his answer, you may be required to respond to the charges. If the court requires a reply to the counterclaim and you do not file one, everything in the answer will be accepted as true by the judge and you will lose your lawsuit. Even if you are not required to reply to the defendant's answer, but the court allows you to do so, you should go ahead and prepare a well-thought-out reply to the defendant's statements. It is in your best interest to file and serve a written reply whenever it is possible to do so, because the clearer you make your argument to the court, the better chance you have of winning your lawsuit.

JLM Chapters 9–13, 15–17, and 20–22 explain in detail the types of claims you can bring and the kinds of documents you will need to maintain such actions. In each Chapter, there are examples of the papers you need to file. The table in Appendix A will help you become familiar with the names of the papers each suit requires.

C. Conclusion

If you are thinking about taking legal action, you should take the following steps:

- (1) identify the law that has been broken;
- (2) determine the type of lawsuit you need to file; and
- (3) prepare the necessary documents.

Appendix A of this Chapter lists types of lawsuits and forms the court requires for each type of suit. If you file a lawsuit, you will need:

- (1) papers to start a lawsuit;
- (2) papers supporting your lawsuit; and
- (3) other important papers required by the court.

After you have filed your lawsuit, the defendant should respond to your claim. If the defendant responds, you should reply. If the defendant does not respond, you should file papers with the court requesting a default judgment in your favor.

19. See FED. R. CIV. P. 8(c); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(b) (McKinney 2009) (providing a partial list of affirmative defenses).

APPENDIX A

LEGAL DOCUMENTS TABLE

Type of Suit	Papers to Start Suit	Supporting Papers	Miscellaneous Papers	Answers	Replies
Criminal Appeal ²⁰	• Notice of Appeal ²¹	• Papers to Perfect Appeal ²²	• Poor Person's Papers ²³ • Bail Request Papers • Papers for Requesting Extension of Time	• Opposing Brief	• Reply Brief
Article 440 ²⁴	• Notice of Motion to Vacate Judgment ²⁵ • Notice of Motion to Set Aside Sentence ²⁶	• Affidavits	• Poor Person's Papers	• Answer
Federal Habeas Corpus ²⁷	• Petition	• Affidavits	• Motion for Appointment of Counsel	• Answer	• Traverse ²⁸

20. See FED. R. APP. P. 3(a). This type of suit is brought by a criminal defendant who was found guilty in the lower court. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for information about criminal appeals.

21. See FED. R. APP. P. 3(a). The notice of appeal must be filed with the court within the time allowed by statute. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for information about criminal appeals.

22. See FED. R. APP. P. 10(a). In order to perfect the appeal, the court must have all the relevant documents that might play a role in the final determination, including the original papers and exhibits filed in the trial, a transcript of the proceedings, and a certified copy of the docket entries. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for information about criminal appeals.

23. See 28 U.S.C. § 1915. Upon filing these papers, the court may authorize a suit or appeal to be brought without prepayment of fees. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for information about criminal appeals.

24. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30 (McKinney 2009). This type of suit is brought as a motion by the losing party after the court has ruled. See Chapter 20 of the JLM, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," for information on using Article 440.

25. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 (McKinney 2009). This motion can be filed to ask the court to vacate (or remove) the judgment (decision) just entered at trial. See Chapter 20 of the JLM, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," for information on using Article 440.

26. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20 (McKinney 2009). This motion does not set aside the entire judgment, but asks the court to begin a new sentencing proceeding. See Chapter 20 of the JLM, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence," for information on using Article 440.

27. See 28 U.S.C. § 2255. A person incarcerated in federal custody can file a federal habeas corpus petition in order to get a court to review the validity of his imprisonment. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for information on federal habeas corpus.

28. See 28 U.S.C. § 2243. A traverse can be filed if the incarcerated person wants to deny any of the facts claimed in the opposing party's answer. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for information on federal habeas corpus.

State Habeas Corpus ²⁹	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Petition 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Check requirements of your state 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Notice of Time and Place of Hearing • Poor Person's Papers 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Return 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Reply
42 U.S.C. § 1983 ³⁰	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Summons • Complaint • Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Affidavit 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Poor Person's Papers 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Answer • Motion to Dismiss 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Reply
Tort Action ³¹	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Notice of Intention to File Claim³² • Notice for Permission to File Late Claim³³ • Verified Tort Claim³⁴ 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Affidavits 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Affidavit to Request Reduction of Filing Fees³⁵ • Notice of Appeal 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Demand for Bill of Particulars³⁶ 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Bill of Particulars³⁷

29. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254. This petition provides the same type of remedy for state incarcerated people as the federal petition for federal incarcerated people, but the state habeas process must be exhausted before an incarcerated person can appeal to the federal courts. See Chapter 21 of the JLM, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan,” for information on state habeas corpus.

30. See 42 U.S.C. § 1983. This type of action provides federal relief from state action that deprives an individual of his or her civil rights. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” for information on using Section 1983 to obtain relief from violations of federal law.

31. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 103 (McKinney 2009). A tort action is a civil action where a plaintiff brings suit against a defendant for damages. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

32. See N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10 (McKinney 2009). A Notice of Intention to File a Claim may be necessary depending on state law. You should carefully read the relevant sections in the applicable state code. In New York, this notice is necessary if a claim is brought against the state or state actors. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

33. See N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10 (McKinney 2009). A Court has the jurisdiction to accept late claims if the claimant files this motion with the court and presents strong arguments concerning why the claim was not filed on time. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

34. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3020 (McKinney 2009). This is a statement under oath that the pleading is true to your best knowledge. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

35. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) (McKinney 2009). An affidavit showing that the filing fees cannot be paid must be prepared for the court if you wish to avoid significant court costs. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

36. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3042 (McKinney 2009). A demand for a bill of particulars may be made and must be complied with within thirty days. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

37. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3043 (McKinney 2009). A bill of particulars is a list of questions that must be answered in a personal injury action, such as the time of the incident and its location. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on tort actions.

Article 78³⁸	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Order to Show Cause³⁹ • Notice of Petition • Verified Petition • Request for Judicial Intervention • Application for an Index Number 	• Affidavits	• Affidavit to Request Reduction or Waiver of Filing Fees	• Answer	• Reply
--------------------------------	---	--------------	---	----------	---------

38. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7801 (McKinney 2009). This type of suit is used to challenge the action or inaction of state and local government officers and agencies, and goes by different names in different states. See Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice and Laws,” for information on how to challenge administrative decisions using Article 78.

39. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804 (McKinney 2009) for more specifics regarding these forms. See Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice and Laws,” for information on how to challenge administrative decisions using Article 78.

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE MEMORANDUM OF LAW⁴⁰

This Appendix contains an example of a memorandum of law, or a brief. This particular memorandum was submitted to a federal district court in response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. The plaintiff had filed a Section 1983 claim for excessive force in violation of the Eighth Amendment.⁴¹ We are including this in the JLM so that you may study the form and style of a brief. The names of all parties, witnesses, and facts have been changed. The footnotes have been added to clarify and explain things to you but should not go in your memorandum. In addition, you should not use the cases cited in this sample without verifying that they are still good law.⁴²

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

	X
Robert K. Simms,	:
	:
Petitioner, ⁴³	:
	:
	:
- against -	:	97 Civ No. _____
	:
Corrections Officer William D. Bennett,	:
New York State Penitentiary, and Sergeant	:
Paul J. Wright,	:
	:
Respondents. ⁴⁴	:
	X

PLAINTIFF'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Plaintiff Robert K. Simms ("Simms") respectfully submits this Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment.⁴⁵

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

40. This memorandum of law is based on a submission drafted by Daniel M. Abuhoff and Nicole A. Ortsman-Dauer at Debevoise & Plimpton LLP.

41. For more information on how to bring a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law." Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right To Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners," discusses the law that applies to your right to be free from assault in prison.

42. See JLM, Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," for information on legal research.

43. A "petitioner" is a party who presents a petition to a court. Here, that person is Robert K. Simms.

44. A "respondent" is the party against whom an appeal is taken. Here, those persons are William D. Bennett and Paul J. Wright.

45. "Summary Judgment" is granted on a claim or defense about which there is no genuine issue of material fact and upon which the party asking for summary judgment is entitled to win as a matter of law. Here, Simms is arguing against Bennett and Wright's Motion for Summary Judgment. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56 for more information.

On January 17, 1990, defendant William D. Bennett (“Bennett”), a corrections officer at the New York State Penitentiary (“Penitentiary”), physically assaulted and threatened to beat and kill Robert Simms, an incarcerated person awaiting processing. Defendant Paul J. Wright (“Wright”), Bennett’s supervisor, knew of the attack and death threats, yet did nothing to intervene and protect Simms. Simms brings this lawsuit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 against Officer Bennett for his malicious and sadistic use of excessive force, and against Sergeant Wright for his deliberate indifference to the attack and threats of beating and death.

Defendants have moved for summary judgment, arguing (i) Simms suffered de minimis physical injuries and unactionable psychological pain; (ii) the force used by Bennett, if any, was reasonable and necessary; and (iii) Wright did not act with deliberate indifference because he did not witness the physical attack and threats of beating and death. Defendants are wrong on both the law and the facts.

First, the use of force here was more than de minimis.⁴⁶ Bennett shoved Simms, pushed him into a wall, swung him around the search room, and punched him in the arms, legs, and face, while simultaneously screaming that he should shoot, stab, and beat him. As a result of the attack, Simms suffered more than de minimis physical and mental pain, sustaining not only bruises to his arms, legs, and face, but also serious and extensive mental pain lasting to the present. The Eighth Amendment’s prohibition on unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain encompasses both physical and mental pain.

Second, the evidence demonstrates that there was no need for force. Simms provoked no attack. He was not violent. He did not refuse to follow Officer Bennett’s instructions. As indicated by the content of Bennett’s threats, the attack—fueled by Bennett’s personal feelings of hatred and disgust—was malicious, sadistic, and for the very purpose of causing Simms harm.

Finally, the supervising officer, Sergeant Wright, was deliberately indifferent to Simms’ plight.⁴⁷ Wright admits to hearing noise from the search room. Indeed, Wright was told by Simms what was going on. Yet, Wright chose to do nothing to stop the attack.

Defendants’ motion for summary judgment should be denied.

1. STATEMENT OF FACTS

(a) Robert Simms’ Child Pornography Convictions

Plaintiff Robert Simms, a black male in his late forties, is a convicted child pornographer. The last conviction took place on January 10, 1990. As a result of that conviction, Simms was sentenced to five years of imprisonment, which he served at the New York State Penitentiary from January 17, 1990, to January 16, 1995. (Simms Aff. ¶ 3).⁴⁸

(b) Officer Bennett Attacks Robert Simms and Sergeant Wright Does Nothing

Simms arrived at the Penitentiary at approximately 9:30 a.m. on January 17, 1990. He was led into the bullpen holding cell and sat on a bench as he waited to be processed. In addition to Simms, there was only one other person in the bullpen. (Simms Aff. ¶ 5; Simms Dep. 20:12–13).

On the morning of January 17, 1990, defendant Officer Bennett and Officer Howard Lewis (“Lewis”) worked the 8:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. shift in the search area of the Penitentiary. (Bennett Dep. 35:25–27; Lewis Dep. 24:8–10). Sergeant Wright, working the same shift, was the supervisor on duty. (Wright Dep. 22:36–24:5).

Corrections officers at the Penitentiary all have the opportunity to learn incoming incarcerated people’s charges. Not only do corrections officers discuss, on occasion, incarcerated people’s charges, but officers working in the booking and search areas also have access to that information. (Bennett Dep. 43:15–19, 52:9–55:12, 62:24–

46. De minimis means so insignificant that a court may overlook it in deciding an issue. Here, Simms is arguing that the use of force used on him was not de minimis, or in other words, that it was significant.

47. “Deliberate indifference” means awareness and disregard for the risk of harm. Here, Simms is claiming that one of the defendants knew of the mistreatment and did nothing to stop it.

48. Citations to “Simms Aff. ¶ ___” refer to the Affidavit of Robert K. Simms, dated August 15, 1998. Citations to “___ Dep.” refer to the transcript of the deposition for the individual specified. Citations to “Compl.” refer to Simms’ Complaint. Citations to “Def. Mem.” refer to the Defendants’ Memorandum of Law. The symbol “¶” refers to a particular paragraph in that document. A citation that reads 20:12-13 indicates that the cited information can be found on page 20, lines 12 through 13 of the referenced document.

64:14; Lewis Dep. 27:7–15, 36:24–37:5). Simms sat on the bullpen bench for approximately one hour when he heard Officer Bennett shouting from inside the search room, located a few yards from the bullpen: “He’s pond scum. That low-life piece of trash kiddie porn lover deserves to be killed. Someone should kill him.” (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Simms Dep. 21:15–24:7; Compl. Pt. II at 1).

In order to determine the source of and reason for the threats, Simms stood up from the bullpen bench and approached the bullpen bars. Bennett approached the bullpen, stood very close to Simms, and screamed: “You revolting cradle robber. Get the hell out of my face, you pedophile. You nauseate me! Get the hell away from the bars before I beat you senseless.” Simms was terrified and did not know how to respond. He had done nothing to provoke the threats. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Compl. Pt. II at 1).

Officer Bennett, becoming even more aggressive, continued his verbal attack for the next half hour. He screamed: “If I had a knife, I’d stab you in your chest right now. Get away from the bars you disgusting pond scum pervert!” Simms became very anxious. He thought he was going to be killed by Officer Bennett or by other incarcerated people to whom Bennett would reveal his charges. (Simms Aff. ¶ 13; Simms Dep. 24:7–13; Compl. Pt. II at 1–2).

A few minutes later, Simms was retrieved from the bullpen and escorted to the search room where Officer Bennett stood, glaring at him. (Simms Aff. ¶ 14; Simms Dep. 26:14–25; Compl. Pt. II at 6). Officer Lewis and approximately four to six other corrections officers—including Officer Felding, who booked Simms that morning and prepared his booking sheet containing his child pornography charges—also stood in the room, all staring at Simms and Bennett with expressions of expectation. (Simms Aff. ¶ 15; Compl. Pt. II at 4).

Officer Bennett slammed shut the search room door and pushed Simms from behind with two hands, towards the wall where the other officers stood. He pushed Simms approximately ten times and swung him around the room. Bennett slapped Simms’ face and body and again began to scream threats of beating and death at Simms. Bennett next shoved Simms into the wall next to the corrections officers while screaming: “You vile scumbag. I should kill you. If I had my knife, I’d carve you up. If I had my revolver, I’d blow you to shreds. You are a sick maggot.” Simms was terrified and kept still. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 28:12–30:25; Compl. Pt. II at 3–4).

Officer Bennett continued to push Simms into the wall while yelling that he could not stand the sight of Simms. Simms finally asked Bennett what he had done to deserve this attack and reminded Bennett he did not know the details of Simms’ case. Bennett responded by yelling that he did not give “two hoots” about the circumstances of Simms’ case; he was going to carve him up anyway. Bennett pushed Simms. Simms ricocheted off the wall, and Bennett continued to scream obscenities and threats of beating and death. Officer Lewis and the others in the search room looked on with amusement. (Simms Aff. ¶ 17; Simms Dep. 29:15–30:10; Compl. Pt. II at 6–7).

At some point, Officer Bennett demanded that Simms stand in a particular spot in the search room. Each time Simms moved to the requested spot, Bennett taunted him and screamed, “No, this way!,” pointing to a different spot. He then swung Simms around the room, grabbing his arm and launching him off. Bennett repeated this several times. (Simms Aff. ¶ 18; Simms Dep. 28:7–29:6).

Eventually, Bennett screamed that Simms should strip. Simms complied and removed his shirt. He never refused or questioned Bennett’s order. When Simms put his shirt on an empty chair in the room, however, Bennett flew into a rage. He whipped Simms’ shirt around in the air above his head, screaming that Simms was a repulsive child pornographer. Bennett prepared to punch Simms again. Simms turned his body to avoid being hit and called out for the sergeant. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 28:9–30:12, 33:14–20, 35:8–29).

Sergeant Wright heard “loud screaming” coming from the search room and went to investigate. (Wright Dep. 28:7–9, 30:22–25, 50:7–25). As Wright appeared at the door, Bennett acted as if nothing was wrong. Simms told Wright that he was glad Wright had arrived and that he needed Wright’s help. Wright cut Simms off and told him to “shut the hell up and take off your clothes,” to which Simms replied, “You’re in this too? This is unbelievable!” Simms did not question Wright’s order to strip. Rather, he took off his pants. Bennett strip-searched him. (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 30:21–32:12, 39:8–40:2; Compl. Pt. II at 8; Wright Dep. 32:20–23, 52:19–21; Bennett Dep. 49:4–20).

Once the strip search was completed, Simms told Wright that Bennett had physically assaulted him and threatened to beat, stab, and kill him. Wright responded, “Well, this is jail!” and walked out of the search room, leaving Simms alone with Bennett and the other officers. (Simms Aff. ¶ 4; Davis Dep. 28:7–29:15; Wright Dep. 15:02–16:20 (testifying that Davis had a complaint about the officers)).

Once Sergeant Wright left the search room, Simms dressed and Bennett resumed threatening him. Bennett again shoved Simms, sending him flying across the search room. Bennett screamed, “You are a piece of crap! You are a disgusting kiddie porn loving animal who deserves to die. I am going to make sure someone’s going to kill you. Your days are numbered.” (Simms Aff. ¶ 18; Simms Dep. 40:15–42:30; Compl. Pt. II at 8). Bennett then led Simms out of the search room and screamed, “Send him to protective custody and get him out of my face. He gets off on little girls!” (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 41:18–22; Compl. Pt. II at 9). After spending approximately forty-five minutes in the search room, Simms was taken to a cell in protective custody where incarcerated people are kept alone in separate cells that are kept locked for most of the day. Simms did not want to be housed in protective custody after the assault. He feared he would be more vulnerable to attack by defendants or others because there would be no witnesses. (Simms Aff. ¶ 22; Simms Dep. 35:3–23, 40:21–42:3, 56:15–58:4; Compl. Pt. II at 10).

(b) Robert Simms’ Physical and Mental Pain Resulting from the Attack

As a result of the attack, Simms sustained bruises on his arms, legs, and face. He requested medical attention the day after the incident. By the time Simms saw a doctor—a week later—these injuries were no longer visible. (Simms Aff. ¶ 24; Simms Dep. 44:12–18, 48:23–50:2; Compl. Pt. II at 5).

In addition to the physical injuries, Simms suffered extreme and extensive mental pain. Not only was he humiliated and shocked by the search, but for the entire time he was housed at the Penitentiary, he was anxious and terrified that Bennett, Lewis, and Wright were going to beat or kill him—either by themselves or by encouraging other incarcerated people—and cover it up. Simms felt hopeless. He became depressed and contemplated suicide. To this day, Simms suffers from nightmares about the attack. (Simms Aff. ¶ 29; Simms Dep. 49:15–51:12, 52:14–15; Compl. Pt. II at 5).

On January 18 and 19, Simms made several visits to the Mental Health Clinic. He was depressed, aggravated, and in despair. He did not want to be housed in protective custody where no one could witness any possible further attack. (Mental Health Evaluation Sheet, dated January 18, 1990). One nurse specifically noted that the “problem” was that Simms was harassed by corrections officers because of his charge. (Mental Health Evaluation Sheet, dated January 18, 1990). Simms also received help for his psychological pain from Mark Denby, a Muslim mullah (religious leader) in Simms’ community, and Dr. Margaret Phillips, Simms’ therapist. These individuals visited Simms on numerous occasions while he was at the Penitentiary. After Simms finished serving his sentence in 1995, he continued to meet with Dr. Phillips, with whom he often spoke about the assault. (Simms Aff. ¶ 26; Simms Dep. 44:16–17, 53:18–19, 57:14–28; Compl. Pt. II at 5–7).

(c) Robert Simms’ Complaint and the “Investigation”

On January 19, two days after the attack, Simms wrote a letter to Warden Frank Boston detailing the physical abuse and death threats prompted by his child pornography charges. He also noted Sergeant Wright’s unconcerned reaction. (Simms Aff. ¶ 28). Captain Sharon Grant conducted an investigation, then wrote a report to Warden Boston on January 26. Of course, Grant concluded that there was no merit to Simms’ Claim. (Grant Report).

2. ARGUMENT

The standards for summary judgment⁴⁹ are well settled. The moving party⁵⁰ bears the burden of establishing that there are no genuine issues of material fact in dispute.⁵¹ See, e.g., Consarc Corp. v. Marine Midland Bank, N.A., 996 F.2d 568, 572 (2d Cir. 1993). This standard bars the court from resolving disputed issues of fact. If there are material factual issues, the court must deny summary judgment. See, e.g., Knight v. U.S. Fire Ins. Co., 804 F.2d 9, 11 (2d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 480 U.S. 932 (1987). In evaluating whether there are factual issues, the court is to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the non-moving party⁵² and draw all permissible inferences⁵³ in the non-moving party's favor. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247 (1986). However, assessments of credibility, conflicting versions of events, and the weight to be assigned to evidence are for the jury, not the court. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 255 (1986).

A. Officer Bennett's Attack On Robert Simms Violated The Eighth Amendment

The Eighth Amendment prohibits the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain"⁵⁴ and is the source of claims for excessive force under Section 1983. Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 319 (1986). Analysis of an excessive force claim contains both objective and subjective inquiries.⁵⁵ An official's conduct violates the Eighth Amendment when (i) the conduct is "objectively, sufficiently serious," and (ii) the prison official acts with a "sufficiently culpable [guilty] state of mind." Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 (1994) (internal quotation marks omitted).

(a) Officer Bennett's Conduct Was Sufficiently Serious

Defendants argue that summary judgment should be granted because (i) Simms' physical injuries, if any, were de minimis,⁵⁶ and (ii) Simms' psychological injuries are not serious enough to justify continuing this Section 1983 case. As demonstrated below, however, the physical injuries and psychological pain suffered by Robert Simms were sufficiently serious to satisfy the Eighth Amendment standard.

(i) The Use of Force Was More Than De Minimis

The objective component of a claim for excessive force under the Eighth Amendment is satisfied if the injury suffered results from something more than a de minimis use of force. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9–10 (1992); Davidson v. Flynn, 32 F.3d 27, 29 (2d Cir. 1994). Significant injury, that is, "injury that requires medical

49. "Summary judgment" is a legal term that means that a judge can decide the case in one party's favor without the case ever going to a jury because the facts are not in dispute and the judge can make a ruling on the law.

50. The "moving party" is the person who made the motion to the court asking the court to do something. In this case, the moving party is Officer Bennett, who is asking the court to decide the case in his favor at the summary judgment stage instead of going forward to a trial.

51. When a party claims that there are "no genuine issues of material fact in dispute," that means that all the parties agree about the facts, or that the facts are so clearly in one party's favor that a neutral third party would have to say that the facts seem to heavily favor one party's story over the other's as the real version of events.

52. The "non-moving party" is the person who did not make the motion to the court. Here, the non-moving party is Simms, who is opposing Officer Bennett's motion for summary judgment. Simms wants the case to go forward to a trial, instead of being decided in Officer Bennett's favor by a judge.

53. To "draw all permissible inferences" means that the court should take the facts and make any and all assumptions that the facts can support in a way that would favor the non-moving party, Simms. Essentially, because a judge ruling on summary judgment is ending the case before it goes to trial, the judge must give "the benefit of the doubt" to the party opposing summary judgment.

54. "Wanton infliction of pain" means excessive, cruel, or immoral infliction of pain.

55. "Objective" means as viewed by an independent outsider, sometimes referred to as the ordinary "reasonable person." "Subjective" means how a specific person felt, believed, or viewed the incident.

56. De minimis is a legal term that means something has occurred in such a small quantity that it is not significant, and there is therefore no legal remedy. Here, Officer Bennett is arguing that Simms' physical injuries were de minimis. This means Officer Bennett is trying to claim that Simms was not hurt badly enough for the law to take notice of his injuries.

attention or leaves permanent marks,” is not required. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7–8, 13 (1992) (“The absence of serious injury is . . . relevant to the Eighth Amendment inquiry but does not end it.”).

As an initial matter, defendants contend that Officer Bennett never used force against Robert Simms or even had any physical contact with him. (Def. Mem. 7). This argument, however, is hotly disputed and thus summary judgment must be denied. See, e.g., Allah v. Cox, No. 96-CV-1225, 1998 WL 725939, at *2 n.2 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 9, 1998) (summary judgment denied where corrections officer’s version of events is expressly contradicted by incarcerated person).

Alternatively, defendants contend that the force used by Bennett—which defendants dismiss as mere grabbing and pulling—was de minimis. (Def. Mem. 5–7). But the evidence shows that Simms was shoved, pushed into a wall, swung around the search room, and punched—all while being threatened with further beatings and death for approximately forty-five minutes in the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12–13; Simms Dep. 25:24–26:16, 32:2–3; Simms Stmt., dated January 19, 1990).

Defendants cite a number of cases to support their argument that the use of force against Simms was de minimis as a matter of law. None of these cases is on point. They are either decided on grounds other than the use of force or involve momentary uses of force dramatically different from the repeated and continuous physical assault and death threats inflicted on Robert Simms. See Reyes v. Koehler, 815 F. Supp. 109, 114 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (summary judgment granted for defendant where incarcerated person did not allege malice or intent to cause harm and where defendant’s pushing plaintiff against wall was “a momentary act, of such limited duration as to belie any inference of malicious or sadistic intent to cause harm”) (internal quotation marks omitted); Harris v. Keane, 962 F. Supp. 397, 408 n.12 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (squeezing incarcerated person’s finger once is de minimis) (emphasis added); Candelaria v. Coughlin, 787 F. Supp. 368, 374–75 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (use of force was de minimis where incarcerated person did not allege any “repeated or continuous grabbing” or any physical injury), aff’d, 979 F.2d 845 (2d Cir. 1992).

Simms suffered bruises to his arms, legs, and face. (Simms Aff. ¶ 20; Simms Dep. 54:10–24). Such visible injuries are more than sufficient to sustain an Eighth Amendment action. See, e.g., Griffin v. Crippen, 193 F.3d 89, 91–92 (2d Cir. 1999) (reversing district court’s determination that incarcerated person’s bruised shin and swelling over left knee were de minimis as a matter of law); Smith v. Marcellus, 917 F. Supp. 168, 171–73 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) (abrasion under left eye, small laceration near right ear, four superficial skin tears on upper calf, and slightly swollen wrist, resulting from attack by corrections officers, constitutes sufficient injury).

Defendants make much of the fact that plaintiff was not given medical treatment for his bruises. (Def. Mem. 7–8). However, Simms asked for treatment. (Simms Aff. ¶ 1). Defendants cannot be relieved of responsibility for the physical abuse of Robert Simms because they refused him medical treatment for at least a week after abusing him. The provision of medical treatment, in any event, is merely one factor to be weighed by the jury in assessing whether the physical force was more than de minimis. See Robison v. Via, 821 F.2d 913, 924 (2d Cir. 1987) (plaintiff’s failure to seek medical treatment for injuries not fatal to Section 1983 claim).

(ii) Simms Can Recover for His Psychological Pain

Were there any question as to Bennett’s use of more than de minimis physical force on Simms—and there should be none—Simms’ psychological pain provides a separate basis for recovery. The intentional infliction of psychological pain can form the basis of a Section 1983 claim where the pain suffered is more than de minimis. The Supreme Court has stated:

[T]he Eighth Amendment prohibits the unnecessary and wanton infliction of “pain,” rather than “injury.” “Pain” in its ordinary meaning surely includes a notion of psychological harm. I am unaware of any precedent of this Court to the effect that psychological pain is not cognizable⁵⁷ for constitutional purposes. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 16 (1992) (Blackmun, J., concurring) (internal citation omitted); see also St. Germain v. Goord, No. 96-CV-1560 (RSP/DRH), 1997 WL 627552, at *3–4 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 8, 1997) (incarcerated person’s misery, anguish, psychological pain, and fear found actionable).

57. “Cognizable” means that a court can recognize or identify something. Here, the Court declares that psychological pain is cognizable for constitutional purposes, meaning that psychological pain is something that the Court can take into account when considering a case alleging that a constitutional violation has taken place.

Defendants argue that verbal threats alone are not enough to bring a claim under Section 1983. But this is not a case about a verbal argument. Simms was threatened while he was being assaulted. Verbal threats, accompanied by some physical force or injury, can violate the Eighth Amendment. As the case law makes clear, when threats are accompanied by conduct that increases the credibility of the threats, an incarcerated person's constitutional rights are violated. See Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1522–24 (10th Cir. 1992) (alleged psychological injury resulting from sheriff's placement of revolver to incarcerated person's head, accompanied by threats to shoot, held to be more than de minimis); Burton v. Livingston, 791 F.2d 97, 100–01 (8th Cir. 1986) (guard drawing weapon and threatening to shoot while using racially offensive language held to be more than de minimis use of force); Douglas v. Marino, 684 F. Supp. 395, 397–98 (D.N.J. 1988) (allegation that prison employee brandished knife while threatening to stab incarcerated person stated Section 1983 claim).

It is clear even from the cases on which defendants rely that threats accompanied by physical conduct violate the Eighth Amendment. In Jermosen v. Coughlin, for example, the court held that verbal threats do not amount to a constitutional violation “unless accompanied by physical force or the present ability to effectuate the threat.” 878 F. Supp. 444, 449 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (emphasis added). Similarly, in McFadden v. Lucas, the court stated, “mere threatening language” is not a constitutional violation where the “plaintiff has nowhere alleged that he was physically assaulted [or that] any touching of his person occurred at all.” 713 F.2d 143, 146 (5th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 998 (1983) (emphasis added); see also Harris v. Keane, 962 F. Supp. 397, 406 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (“Allegations of threats, verbal harassment or profanity, without any injury or damage, do not state a claim under Section 1983.”) (emphasis added).

Unlike the cases cited by defendants—where the threats were unaccompanied by other conduct or the plaintiff was not physically abused—Robert Simms was threatened with beatings and death even as he was physically attacked. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12–13). The lack of any justification for these threats indicates that their purpose was to inflict psychological harm. See infra Part B. Simms' placement in protective custody, where he might be assaulted without witnesses, only bolstered the threats' credibility. See Hudspeth v. Figgins, 584 F.2d 1345, 1347–48 (4th Cir. 1978) (guard's threat that incarcerated person would be shot supported by subsequent transfer to work detail supervised by armed guards).

Simms' psychological pain was not de minimis. During the search process, he experienced humiliation, anxiety, and the terror of death or severe injury. Afterwards, fearing that Bennett, Lewis, and Wright were going to beat or kill him, Simms sank into a deep depression and contemplated suicide. Defendants' argument that Simms' suicidal thoughts should be disregarded because he could not actually kill himself misses the point that he suffered psychological pain. (Def. Mem. 6 n.1). He received psychological treatment from the Mental Health Clinic, which specifically noted that Simms had been harassed by corrections officers and that he was “depressed.” (Mental Health Evaluation Sheets). Simms also received counseling from Mullah Mark Denby and Dr. Margaret Phillips. To date, he suffers from nightmares of the incident. (Simms Aff. ¶ 22; Simms Dep. 43:15–44:2, 49:18–51:18; Simms letter, dated January 24, 1990). Thus, Simms' mental pain is actionable.

Defendants characterize Simms' psychological pain as not “rational” because (i) the threats were conditional; (ii) an investigation was conducted; and (iii) the threats of beatings and killing were never effectuated. (Def. Mem. 11–13). None of these arguments withstands close examination. First, defendants' suggestion that Simms' fear of beating and death would only be justifiable had Bennett phrased his threats in the present tense—“I'm going to kill you now”—and that Simms should have taken comfort from the use of the conditional perfect in Bennett's actual statement—“I should kill you”—assumes that Simms has a high-level understanding of grammar and an ability to identify different verb tenses under those circumstances.

Defendants' second point, that Simms' fear and terror during the assault on January 17, 1990, should have been made better by defendants' investigation taking place on January 26, 1990, is similarly far-fetched. Even after the attack, Simms could have derived little comfort from an internal investigation, given his previous experience with Penitentiary personnel. As to the merits of the investigation, the quality of internal reports rests on credibility—a jury issue. See Payne v. Coughlin, No. 82 Civ. 2284 (CSH), 1987 WL 10739, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. May 6, 1987).

Finally, as discussed above, verbal threats are indeed actionable when accompanied by physical force. It is not necessary for Simms to have actually been beaten, shot, stabbed, or killed to maintain this lawsuit. See St. Germain

v. Goord, No. 96-CV-1560 (RSP/DRH), 1997 WL 627552, at *3–4 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 8, 1997) (holding actionable incarcerated person's mental pain and fear resulting from corrections officers' threats to "beat the hell out of plaintiff" which never materialized). Defendants rely on Doe v. Welborn, 110 F.3d 520 (7th Cir. 1997), in arguing that Simms' fear of beating and death are not compensable since the threats never materialized. That reliance is inappropriate. Doe is a conditions-of-confinement case; this is a case about excessive use of force. As Doe itself states: "What is necessary to show sufficient harm for purposes of the Cruel and Unusual Punishments Clause depends on the claim at issue." Doe v. Welborn, 110 F.3d 520, 524 (7th Cir. 1997). Thus, while the psychological harm of the plaintiff in Doe did not rise to "the extreme deprivations" required to make out a conditions-of-confinement claim, Simms' psychological injury is actionable because "a plaintiff in an excessive force case need not allege significant injury in order to survive dismissal." Doe v. Welborn, 110 F.3d 520, 524 (7th Cir. 1997) (internal citations and quotation marks omitted). Under the circumstances, the fear and other mental pain, which Simms suffered due to Bennett's threats of beating and death, accompanied by Bennett's aggressive physical actions, were clearly rational.

(b) Officer Bennett Acted Maliciously and Sadistically to Cause Harm

For claims of excessive force, the state of mind requirement turns on whether the prison official applied the force "maliciously and sadistically to cause harm." Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6 (1992) (quoting Johnson v. Glick, 481 F.2d 1028, 1033 (2d Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1033 (1973)). In making that determination, the trier of fact is to consider the following factors: (i) "the extent of the plaintiff's injuries;" (ii) "the need for the application of force;" (iii) "the correlation [relationship] between that need and amount of force used;" (iv) "the threat reasonably perceived by the defendants;" and (v) "any efforts made by the defendants to temper [decrease] the severity of a forceful response." Romano v. Howarth, 998 F.2d 101, 105 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7 (1992)).

(i) Plaintiff Simms Suffered Physical and Mental Harm

As a result of Bennett's use of excessive force and threats of beating and death, Simms suffered physical and mental injury. See supra Sections 1(b) and (c).

(ii) There Was No Need for Force or Death Threats

Where, as here, there is evidence that an attack by a corrections officer is unprovoked or without sufficient justification, courts generally will deny summary judgment. See, e.g., Corselli v. Coughlin, 842 F.2d 23, 27 (2d Cir. 1988) (reversing summary judgment where jury could find defendant initiated argument and struck incarcerated person without justification); Moore v. Agosto, No. 93 Civ. 4835, 1996 WL 125660, at *2 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 20, 1996) (summary judgment denied where plaintiff maintained defendants initiated the confrontation), aff'd, 164 F.3d 618 (2d Cir. 1998).

Defendants claim Bennett was justified in using force because of Simms' "admitted" refusal to follow defendants' instructions to submit to a strip-search, stand away from the bullpen bars, stand where directed in the search room, and place his clothing in the designated place. (Def. Mem. 6–8).

Defendants' arguments are undermined by the simple fact that Bennett attacked Simms prior to the issuance of any of these instructions. The threats of violence began as Simms sat in the bullpen, and the physical attack began as soon as Simms entered the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 8, 11; Simms Dep. 19:20–20:3, 24:25–25:9, 25:14). Moreover, when Simms was ordered to strip, he complied. (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 15, 18; Simms Dep. 32:15–21; Simms letter dated January 24, 1990).

The other so-called "instructions" illustrate the malice and sadism motivating Bennett's attack. For example, Bennett's alleged "instruction" to stand away from the bullpen bars was in fact stated as follows:

You revolting cradle robber. Get the hell out of my face, you pedophile. You nauseate me! Get the hell away from the bars before I beat you senseless.

(Simms Aff. ¶ 9; Simms Dep. 21:2–15). In addition, the purported "instruction" to stand in a particular spot was nothing but a malicious taunt. Bennett indeed told Simms to stand in a particular spot. However, each time Simms moved to the place indicated, Bennett screamed, pointed to a different spot, grabbed Simms' arm, and swung him to the new location. (Simms Aff. ¶ 14; Simms Dep. 27:22–27:2).

The expressions of disgust and hatred, which continued throughout the beating and accompanied the death threats, were a product of Bennett's personal feelings, not a good faith effort to maintain discipline. The evidence is clear that Bennett knew Simms' charges prior to the attack:

- (1) Felding, the booking officer who prepared the booking sheet stating Simms' charges, stood in the search room while Simms was assaulted and searched (Booking Sheet; Bennett Dep. 31:10–25, 41:20–42:3, 49:3–7, 52:8–53:8; Def. Interrog. Resp. No. 7);
- (2) Bennett, Lewis, and Wright admitted to talking about incarcerated people's charges (Bennett Dep. 56:17–25; Lewis Dep. 26:2–18; Wright Dep. 41:16–19);
- (3) Bennett admitted that he had access to incarcerated people's charges (Bennett Dep. 53:2–54:8; see also Lewis Dep. 26:2–18); and
- (4) The threats are replete with references of Simms being a child pornographer (Simms Aff. ¶¶ 7, 8, 9, 11, 14, 18; Simms Dep. 19:14–25, 25:6–7).

The fact that malice motivated Bennett's acts against Simms are explained, in part, by Bennett's testimony that he finds sex offenses committed against minors more disgusting than other crimes committed by incarcerated people. (Bennett Dep. 58:3–10). Moreover, Bennett was emboldened by his "amused" audience of corrections officers in the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶ 12; Simms Dep. 27:23–28:2; Def. Interrog. Resp. No. 7).

Defendants contend that the force used was necessary to avoid the "potential" security risks associated with a backlog of detainees waiting to be processed. (Def. Mem. 8). However, the "potential" risk could never have been a reality here. The morning of January 17, 1990, only Simms and one other detainee were waiting to be processed. (Simms Aff. ¶ 6).

(iii) The Amount and Type of Force Used Were Disproportionate to the Need

There is no correlation here between the need for force and the amount of force used. Given that Simms offered no physical or verbal resistance nor refused any orders, Bennett's pushing, shoving, swinging, punching, and simultaneous threatening with death and severe injury were clearly excessive.

Even assuming arguendo (for the sake of argument) that Simms did refuse to strip, the circumstances would not require the amount of physical force that Bennett used. Bennett himself admitted that Simms was not violent during the strip-search. (Bennett Dep. 48:14). See Martinez v. Rosado, 614 F.2d 829, 831–32 (2d Cir. 1980) (violation of prison rule and refusal to obey direct order do not alone justify physical assault without evidence of physical resistance by incarcerated person or other indication that amount of force was proper); see also Corselli v. Coughlin, 842 F.2d 23, 27 (2d Cir. 1988) (even where there is evidence that incarcerated person may have failed to follow an order, officer can still be found to have used excessive or gratuitous force). Moreover, it is hard to see how threatening to shoot, beat, and stab Simms would get Simms to perform the desired action of stripping. At a minimum, this is a question for the jury. See, e.g., Trice v. Strack, No. 94 Civ. 4470 (BSJ), 1998 WL 633807, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 14, 1998) (whether force was applied maliciously and sadistically is left for jury to decide where defendants struck, tackled, and kicked plaintiff who may have precipitated conduct by waving underwear in one defendant's face).

(iv) Bennett Could Not Reasonably Have Perceived Simms as a Threat

It is clear that Bennett could not reasonably have seen Simms as a threat. On January 17, 1990, Simms was 5'4" and approximately 135 pounds, as compared to the taller, more muscular defendant Bennett. (Simms Aff. ¶ 8; Simms Dep. 19:6–9; Booking Sheet). In addition, while Bennett was accompanied by Lewis and four to six other corrections officers in the search room, Simms was the only incarcerated person present. (Bennett Dep. 39:9–14, 48:3–11; Def. Interrog. Resp. Nos. 2, 7).

(v) Bennett Has Demonstrated No Effort to Temper His Response

Finally, defendants have suggested no efforts by Bennett to temper the severity of the response. As noted above, Bennett assaulted and threatened Robert Simms prior to any peaceful request that Simms strip, and continued to do so for another 45 minutes.

B. Defendant Wright Evinced Deliberate Indifference When He Failed To Protect Robert Simms From Bennett's Physical Assault And Accompanying Death Threats

Defendants argue summary judgment should be granted for Sergeant Wright because (i) Wright did not participate in or witness the physical attack and death threats directed toward Simms, and (ii) Wright took adequate steps to ensure that Simms' constitutional rights were not violated. (Def. Mem. 5–6). However, summary judgment is not appropriate because Wright acted with deliberate indifference when he failed to protect Simms from Bennett's physical assault and death threats.

The legal standard is that a supervisor may be liable under Section 1983 for the actions of his supervisees where, as here, the supervisor exhibits "deliberate indifference" to an incarcerated person's safety. There is no requirement of direct participation in the constitutional violation. See, e.g., Wright v. Smith, 21 F.3d 496, 501 (2d Cir. 1994). Deliberate indifference exists where (1) there is a substantial risk of serious harm to an incarcerated person, and (2) the prison official knows of the risk and disregards it by failing to take steps to prevent harm to the incarcerated person. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 (1994); see also Hayes v. New York City Dep't of Corr., 84 F.3d 614, 620 (2d Cir. 1996).

(a) Robert Simms Was at a Substantial Risk of Serious Harm

Here, the first requirement for a finding of deliberate indifference, "substantial risk of serious harm," is clearly met. A violent assault perpetrated without justification and solely for the purpose of causing harm creates a substantial risk of serious harm. See supra I.B.

(b) Wright Knew of and Disregarded the Harm to Simms by Not Acting to Prevent It

The second requirement of deliberate indifference, culpable intent, is also met. The evidence establishes that Wright had knowledge that Robert Simms faced a substantial risk of serious harm on the morning of January 17, 1990, regardless of whether Wright actually witnessed the physical abuse and death threats. Specifically:

- (1) Wright admitted in his deposition that he proceeded into the search room after hearing "loud screaming" coming from that room. (Wright Dep. 26:23–28:23, 48:23–25, 54:4–6). Wright's Incident Report, stating that Wright "heard noise" coming from the search room, confirms this. (Incident Report of Sgt. Wright).
- (2) Once the strip-search was completed, Simms told Wright that Bennett physically assaulted him and threatened him with his life. (Simms Aff. ¶ 16; Simms Dep. 37:13–22).
- (3) Wright admitted in his deposition that Simms had filed a complaint about Officer Bennett. (Wright Dep. 13:02–16:20).

The evidence further establishes that Wright disregarded the substantial risk of serious harm that he knew Simms faced. Even after hearing suspicious noises coming from the search room and being told that Bennett had attacked Simms, Wright did not immediately investigate the situation, reprimand (warn or punish) Bennett, or even stay in the search room until the booking and search process was complete. After Simms told Wright he needed Wright's help, Wright told Simms to "shut the hell up and take off your clothes." (Simms Dep. 38:18–20). Then, after specifically being informed of the abuse, Sergeant Wright merely told Simms, "Well, this is jail!" and walked out of the search room. (Simms Aff. ¶ 17; Simms Dep. 39:12–14; Simms letter, dated January 24, 1990). Given the evidence indicating that Wright had knowledge of the risk Simms faced, this indifferent response cannot be held reasonable as a matter of law.

That Wright failed to prevent any further harm to Simms is proven by the fact that Wright left Simms in the room with Bennett to suffer further abuse. Simms was indeed subjected to more abuse when Wright left the search room. Once Wright exited, Bennett shoved Simms, sending him reeling across the search room. Bennett screamed, "You are a piece of crap! You are a disgusting kiddie porn loving animal who deserves to die. I am going to make sure someone's going to kill you. Your days are numbered." (Simms Aff. ¶ 19; Simms Dep. 34:9–15; Compl. Pt. III at 6).

The failure to intervene to prevent harm to an incarcerated person constitutes deliberate indifference, subjecting the supervisor to liability. See, e.g., Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1442 (9th Cir. 1995) (summary judgment denied where defendants were present but failed to intervene to prevent another prison official from firing a shotgun at incarcerated person); Buckner v. Hollins, 983 F.2d 119, 122–23 (8th Cir. 1993) (where defendant failed to prevent prison official from beating plaintiff, jury could find deliberate indifference for defendant's failure to intervene); see also Hayes v. New York City Dep't of Corr., 84 F.3d 614, 621 (2d Cir. 1996) (reversing summary judgment for corrections officers where plaintiff advised officer he was in danger prior to attack, and record revealed no protective measures taken); Livingston v. Rivera, No. 94-CV-5319, 1999 WL 26902, at *3 (E.D.N.Y. Jan. 20, 1999) (officer's statement and other circumstances, suggesting defendant had knowledge that incarcerated person was exposed to imminent serious harm, precluded summary judgment). Here, there is substantial evidence that Wright disregarded a clear and obvious risk of harm to Simms. As a result, Simms suffered further physical assault and threats of beating and death. Wright's failure to take any steps—much less any reasonable ones—to prevent this abuse makes him liable, and at minimum, precludes summary judgment in his favor.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment should be denied.

Dated: _____
<<date submitted>> <<City, State>>

Respectfully submitted,
<<Attorney Firm Name>>⁵⁸
By: _____
Rachel A. Felder (RF-XXXX)⁵⁹
<<Attorney's Address>>
<<City, State>>
<<Phone number>>
Attorney for Plaintiff
Robert K. Simms

58. If you are submitting your memorandum of law pro se, you should put your name here.

59. If you are submitting your memorandum of law pro se, you should put your name, address, and contact information (including your "inmate number," if applicable,) here.

CHAPTER 7

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION*

A. Introduction

This Chapter describes laws that allow you to request copies of government documents and files. There are several reasons why these documents might be useful to you: you may want to review copies of your files and rap sheets to make sure they are accurate and complete; you may want to get copies of internal memoranda and manuals that explain procedures prison officials must follow; and, if you are preparing to sue the government, you can use a Freedom of Information Request to gather support for your case.

All fifty states and the District of Columbia have passed some sort of state open records laws.¹ Many of these laws are modeled on the federal Freedom of Information Act, but this Act does not apply to state or municipal agencies, including state prison systems. Only state freedom of information laws grant access to state and local government records.

There are specific procedures that you must follow depending on the type of information you are requesting. Each agency has a different procedure for accessing information. It would be impossible in this Chapter to outline the procedures for every agency. Instead, this Chapter will give you an overview as to the law itself and what rights you have under the Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”), the Privacy Act (“PA”), and the New York Freedom of Information Law (“FOIL”). Be sure to check the specific procedures for your particular request before filing an information request.

Part B of this Chapter outlines the laws that allow you to get documents from the federal government under FOIA. Part C discusses FOIL. Incarcerated people in other states should still read Part C to get an idea of the types of documents incarcerated people most often request and look carefully at the provisions of their state’s freedom of information statute. Part D contains an address for the Federal Citizen Information Center—if you need help figuring out which federal agency to contact, write or call the Federal Citizen Information Center for help. Appendix A contains a list of state freedom of information laws. Appendix B of this Chapter contains a form to use to request information from the Department of Justice (“DOJ”) and other federal agencies. Appendix C contains sample letters for filing a FOIA or PA request and/or appeal. Appendix D lists addresses of organizations and federal government agencies that can provide more help.

B. The Federal Freedom of Information Act

1. Overview & History

Your right to access the files of the United States government is established by two federal laws: the Freedom of Information Act² and the Privacy Act.³ These laws have been tremendously successful in enabling public access to government files. The Freedom of Information Act (“FOIA”) allows you to request all public documents, including records that relate to you. The Privacy Act (“PA”) deals only with personal files. It gives you the right not only to look at your own records, but to correct, change, or remove records that contain incorrect, irrelevant, or incomplete information about you. If your request is incorrectly denied or ignored, you can sue under both laws in federal court.

FOIA and the PA implement one of the basic principles of democracy—the public’s right to know what its government is doing. As written, FOIA gives access to all government records unless they fall

* This Chapter was written by Benjamin Van Houten based in part on previous versions by Laura Burdick, Geraldine R. Eure, Susan Widule, and Saleemah Ahamed.

1. See Appendix A.
2. 5 U.S.C. § 552.
3. 5 U.S.C. § 552a.

into one of nine categories of materials that agencies are allowed, but not required, to withhold.⁴ In practice, however, there are often administrative obstacles to getting records, and you will probably not get immediate access to everything you think you are entitled to.

2. What Agencies Are Covered & What Records Are Available

FOIA applies to documents held by agencies in the executive branch of the federal government. These agencies include:

- (1) Military departments;
- (2) Cabinet departments, including the Department of Justice (which controls both the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”) and federal prisons);
- (3) Departments of the Executive Branch (such as the Department of Defense);
- (4) Independent federal agencies (such as the Environmental Protection Agency (“EPA”));
- (5) Government-controlled corporations (such as the United States Postal Service (“USPS”)).

FOIA does not apply to documents held by federal courts or by Congress.⁵ FOIA also does not apply to documents held by “the President’s immediate personal staff or units within the Executive Office whose sole function is to advise and assist the President.”⁶ FOIA does not apply to state or local governments, including state prison systems; these are usually covered by separate laws.⁷

FOIA allows you to look at almost all records under a federal agency’s control.⁸ The Supreme Court has defined an “agency record” as a document that is (1) either created or obtained by the agency, and (2) under control of the agency at the time of the FOIA request.⁹ Agency records may include many different types of information, such as papers, reports, letters, films, computer tapes, photographs, and sound recordings in the possession, custody, or control of an agency. In 1996, Congress made clear that electronically stored information meets the definition of a “record” under FOIA.¹⁰ In addition, the agency must provide you records in any form or format you request, as long as the document is “readily reproducible” by it in that form or format, and the agency must make reasonable efforts to meet your request.¹¹

4. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b). These exemptions are discussed in Part B(3) of this Chapter.

5. 5 U.S.C. §§ 551(1)(A)–(B).

6. Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 156, 100 S. Ct. 960, 971, 63 L. Ed. 2d 267, 285 (1980), (quoting H.R. Rep. No. 93-1380, at 15 (1974) (Conf. Rep.) (finding that telephone notes taken by Secretary of State Kissinger in his capacity as presidential advisor did not constitute “agency records” under FOIA)); see also Judicial Watch, Inc. v. U.S. Secret Service, 726 F.3d 208, 228–229, 406 U.S. App. D.C. 440, 460–461 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (holding that logs of visitors to the Office of the President are not agency records covered by FOIA); Sweetland v. Walters, 60 F.3d 852, 855 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that the Executive Residence is not an agency under FOIA as it does not exercise independent authority); Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1293 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (holding that the determination of whether an entity is an “agency” depends on how closely it operates with the President, the nature of its delegation from the President, and whether it has a self-contained structure).

7. State government records can be obtained using state freedom of information laws. The New York Freedom of Information Law is discussed in Part C of this Chapter. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a list of the freedom of information laws of all 50 states and the District of Columbia.

8. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A).

9. U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Tax Analysts, 492 U.S. 136, 144–145, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 2848, 106 L. Ed. 2d 112, 125 (1989) (holding that court opinions that were a part of the agency files are “agency records”) and should be made available under FOIA); see also Judicial Watch, Inc. v. U.S. Secret Service, 726 F.3d 208, 216–217, 406 U.S. App. D.C. 440, 448–449 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (explaining when files in control of an agency become “agency records”).

10. 5 U.S.C. § 552(f) reads: “For purposes of this section, the term ... ‘record’ and any other term used in this section in reference to information includes ... any information that would be an agency record subject to the requirements of this section when maintained by an agency in any format, including an electronic format.” This language includes computer disks, CD-ROMs, microfiche, microfilm, and all other digital or electronic media.

11. See Ancient Coin Collectors Guild v. U.S. Dept. of State, 641 F.3d 504, 514, 395 U.S. App. D.C. 138, 148 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (holding that an agency “fulfills its obligations under FOIA ‘if it can demonstrate beyond material doubt that its search was reasonably calculated to uncover all relevant documents’”); Miller v. U.S. Dept. of State,

FOIA does not allow you to demand answers to questions. The information must already be contained in an existing agency record. An agency is not obligated to create a new record, collect information it does not have, or research or analyze data to meet your request. Your requests for records must “reasonably describe” the material you want.¹² This does not mean you need to know a specific document or file number, but your request should be specific enough that a government agency employee familiar with the subject area of your request can locate the records with a reasonable amount of effort. Also, a records request under FOIA and the PA must be in writing and must include proper identification as listed.

The PA grants you the power to look at any record within an agency’s files that applies to you.¹³ Under the PA, as long as you are either a U.S. citizen or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (“LPR”), you may apply to look at any records about yourself that are kept in the executive branch of the federal government.¹⁴ In other words, a U.S. citizen or LPR can look at any records that are filed according to his or her name, social security number, or some other personal identifier. Detailed information about how to access agency records can be found in Part B(4) of this Chapter, “How to Make Your Request.”

3. Exemptions to Record Availability Under FOIA and the PA

FOIA exempts nine categories of materials; in other words, the government does not need to disclose material fitting into any one of these nine categories. However, an agency may not withhold an entire file or document just because part of it is exempt. The agency can only withhold those parts of the record falling within the exemption.¹⁵ In addition, FOIA exemptions are not mandatory. Agency officials can choose to waive the exemptions and release the materials even if they fall within one of the nine categories, unless another statute specifically limits or prohibits disclosure of that kind of information.

Relevant FOIA exemptions include:¹⁶

- (1) Records that should be kept confidential in the interests of national defense or foreign policy;
- (2) Documents “related solely to the internal personnel rules and practices of an agency.” In practice, this is a very limited exemption because if a person outside the agency can show a legitimate interest in the records, the material cannot be of “solely” agency interest;¹⁷

779 F.2d 1378, 1383 (8th Cir. 1985) (noting that a department must only make reasonable, but not exhaustive, efforts to respond to a FOIA request); Maynard v. CIA, 986 F.2d 547, 559 (1st Cir. 1993) (holding that the agency should issue an affidavit that describes how the search was conducted and how the agency’s filing system would make further search difficult when the adequacy of an agency’s attempt to respond to a FOIA request is at issue.). The new statute rejects Dismukes v. Dept. of the Interior, where the court held that an agency has no obligation under FOIA to accommodate the plaintiff’s preference for a specific form or format of the records. Dismukes v. Dept. of the Interior, 603 F. Supp. 760, 763 (D.D.C. 1984).

12. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3)(A).

13. For exemptions, see 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(j)–(k).

14. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(a)(2); 5 U.S.C. § 552a(d)(1). This is different from FOIA, which gives access rights to “any person” regardless of citizenship status. 5 U.S.C. § 552(a)(3).

15. 5 U.S.C. § 552(b).

16. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(1)–(7). The other two rarely used exceptions to FOIA concern government regulation of financial institutions and geological/geophysical information. Please refer to the statute, 5 U.S.C. §§ 552(b)(8)–(9), for more information.

17. See Milner v. Dept. of Navy, 562 U.S. 562, 581, 131 S. Ct. 1259, 1271, 179 L. Ed. 2d 268, 284–285 (2011) (holding that Exemption 2 “encompasses only records relating to issues of employee relations and human resources”); Dept. of Air Force v. Rose, 425 U.S. 352, 369–370, 96 S. Ct. 1592, 1603, 48 L. Ed. 2d 11, 26 (1976) (holding that Exemption 2 does not apply to matters of “genuine and significant public interest” and observing that Congress’ purpose in enacting Exemption 2 was “to relieve agencies of the burden of assembling and maintaining for public inspection matter in which the public could not reasonably be expected to have an interest”).

- (3) Matters “specifically exempted from disclosure” by other federal statutes. There are two ways that an agency can claim this exemption. First, they can say that a federal statute requires that the agency withholds this type of information. Second, the agency could also argue that a federal statute created requirements for withholding information, and that the agency has met those requirements. The agency must also show that the statute applies the material they are trying to withhold.¹⁸ Unfortunately, there is not a list of every statute that lets agencies withhold certain information. Additionally, some of these statutes have separate requirements for agencies’ disclosure of information. But, even if the statute has different procedures for disclosing documents, you should always make your request for records under FOIA.
- (4) “Trade secrets and commercial or financial information” given to the government with the expectation that they would be kept secret;
- (5) “Inter-agency or intra-agency memorandum or letters.” This exemption protects communications that are meant to be distributed only within the government and that contain advice, opinions, and recommendations that officials offer to each other. This exemption may not be used to withhold facts, agency decisions, or policies;
- (6) “Personnel and medical files and similar files” which could not be released to someone other than the subject of the file without resulting in an “unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.” The files must contain information about someone so intimate that the person could claim an invasion of privacy. Such information includes marital status, legitimacy of children, welfare payments, family fights and reputation,¹⁹ medical details and conditions,²⁰ “rap sheets,”²¹ and the incarceration of United States citizens in foreign prisons.²²
- (7) All “records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes.” In addition to federal law enforcement, this exemption may also apply to records compiled to enforce state law.

18. See McDonnell v. United States, 4 F.3d 1227, 1249 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting that the burden of showing that a document falls within the scope of a statute and is exempt rests on the government); see generally ACLU of New Jersey v. F.B.I., 733 F.3d 526, 531 (3d Cir. 2013) (noting that the agency bears the burden of justifying the withholding of information under a FOIA exemption); Church of Scientology of California v. U.S. Dept. of Army, 611 F.2d 738, 742 (9th Cir. 1979) (explaining that the burden of showing a document is exempt from disclosure falls on the agency that is refusing to disclose).

19. See Rural Hous. Alliance v. U.S. Dept. of Agric., 498 F.2d 73, 76–77 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (holding that an investigation report containing detailed personal and medical information of persons allegedly discriminated against by the Department of Agriculture were “within the class of similar files” and its disclosure depended on whether it would result in a “clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy”); but see Long v. Office of Pers. Mgmt., 692 F.3d 185, 194 (2d Cir. 2012) (holding that “[w]here public interest favoring disclosure is no more than minimal, a lesser privacy interest suffices to outweigh it”).

20. See Yonemoto v. Dept. of Veterans Affairs, 686 F.3d 681, 696 (9th Cir. 2012) (finding that excluding information about the type of medical illness causing an employee to be absent from work was proper under Exemption 6); McDonnell v. United States, 4 F.3d 1227, 1254 (3d Cir. 1993) (noting that a “living individual” may have a “strong privacy interest in withholding his medical records” that outweighs a public request); Rural Hous. Alliance v. U.S. Dept. of Agric., 498 F.2d 73, 77 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (holding that Exemption 6 of FOIA covered a USDA report that included, among other things, individual’s medical condition and history); Brown v. FBI, 658 F.2d 71, 74–76 (2d Cir. 1981) (upholding denial of plaintiff’s request for FBI files that included an individual’s possible involvement with illegal drugs because that information falls within Exemption 6).

21. See U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 780, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1485, 103 L.Ed.2d 774, 800 (1989) (holding that a third-party request for an individual’s rap sheet when the request does not seek official information about a government agency is an unwarranted invasion of privacy).

22. See Harbolt v. Dept. of State, 616 F.2d 772, 774 (5th Cir. 1980) (holding disclosure of names and addresses of U.S. citizens imprisoned in foreign countries on narcotics offenses would be an unwarranted invasion of their privacy).

Exemption 7 covers many records.²³ For example, law enforcement manuals satisfy the requirements of Exemption 7 and may not be subject to disclosure. Other materials will fall under Exemption 7²⁴ if they:

- (1) Might “interfere with [law] enforcement proceedings.” This includes federal and state court proceedings. If release of records could, for example, reveal the government’s evidence or strategy in a criminal case, then that release can be properly excluded;²⁵
- (2) “Would deprive a person [other than yourself] a right to a fair trial”;
- (3) Might “constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.” The majority of courts have held the identities of law enforcement personnel are exempt unless you can show proven, significant misconduct on the part of the investigators.²⁶ In other words, the names of law enforcement personnel will usually not be revealed;
- (1) Might “disclose the identity of a confidential source, including a state, local, or foreign agency or authority or any private institution which furnished information on a confidential basis.” Confidential sources may include persons with a close relationship to you or the victim, or persons who have a reasonable fear of retribution.²⁷ If the information is confidential, given to the agency by one source only, and collected in the course of a criminal investigation, agencies are permitted to withhold all of the information provided by that source;
- (2) Would disclose investigative techniques, procedures, or guidelines for law enforcement investigations or prosecution that would create a risk of people circumventing the law. This exemption is limited to techniques, procedures, or guidelines not generally known to the public, or not generally known by the public to be useful, and applies even when the government only expects that disclosure would create a risk of people evading the law;²⁸

23. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7); see also U.S. Dept. of Justice v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 489 U.S. 749, 756 n.9, 109 S. Ct. 1468, 1473 n.9, 103 L.Ed.2d 774, 785 n.9 (1989) (noting the shift “from ‘the would constitute’ standard to ‘the could reasonably be expected to constitute’ standard represents a considered congressional effort ‘to ease considerably a federal law enforcement agency’s burden in invoking [Exemption 7]’”) (citation omitted) (alterations in original).

24. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(7) (listing instances where production of law enforcement records would be exempt).

25. See Lynch v. Dept. of the Treasury, No. 98-56358, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 1392, at *9–13 (9th Cir. Jan. 8, 2000) (stating that even though the agency that was party to the trial had closed its investigation, an ongoing interagency task force was sufficient reason for the Department of the Treasury to deny access to the information); Manna v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 51 F.3d 1158, 1164–1165 (3d Cir. 1995) (affirming a district court’s finding that government records were properly denied under Exemption (b)(7)(A) because disclosure of such information would interfere with future prosecutions and deny sources confidentiality that they were assured).

26. See, e.g., Long v. Office of Pers. Mgmt., 692 F.3d 185, 194 (2d Cir. 2012) (holding that “[w]here public interest favoring disclosure is no more than minimal, a lesser privacy interest suffices to outweigh it,” such as when the identities of federal employees may invade personal privacy); Sutton v. IRS, No. 05 C 7177, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 299, at *18, 99 A.F.T.R.2d (RIA) 387 (N.D. Ill. Jan. 4, 2007) (holding that the court should balance the public’s interest in disclosure against the interest in non-disclosure of personal information); Massey v. FBI, 3 F.3d 620, 624 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that government employees have a privacy interest in concealing their identities but that that interest must be balanced against the public interest in disclosure); Anderson v. US Dept. of Justice, No. 95-1888 (TFH), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4731, at *8–9 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1999) (finding that the names of government witnesses clearly constitute information compiled for law enforcement purposes.)

27. See Hale v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 226 F.3d 1200, 1202, 1204–1205 (10th Cir. 2000) (reaffirming test for confidentiality required case by case analysis, and holding that identity of witnesses properly withheld because they otherwise wouldn’t have spoken to the FBI); see also Hodge v. F.B.I., 703 F.3d 575, 581–582, 403 U.S. App. (D.C. 255, 261–262 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (holding that names of witnesses were properly withheld where they had been assured that they would remain confidential).

28. See Blackwell v. F.B.I., 646 F.3d 37, 42, 396 U.S. App. D.C. 164, 169 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (noting Exemption 7(E) sets a relatively low bar, and holding that documents containing information on FBI forensic examination procedures were properly excluded from FOIA request); see also Mayer Brown LLP v. IRS, 562 F.3d 1190, 1193–1194, 385 U.S. App. D.C. 250, 254, 103 A.F.T.R.2d (RIA) 1799 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (affirming that the IRS did not have to disclose documents if revealing them could reasonably be expected to risk helping or training a person to break the law, especially because tax crimes involve a cost-benefit analysis).

- (3) Might “endanger the life or physical safety of any individual.” This is a frequently claimed exemption, because while it is similar to (7)(c), it does not require the court to consider the public interest in its decision.²⁹

While FOIA requesters are generally sent copies of the information they have requested, there may be instances when the agency may only allow you to see the documents. In Tax Analysts v. United States Department of Justice, one court noted that an agency does not need to respond to a FOIA request for copies of documents when the agency has provided another way of accessing the same information.³⁰ For example, if an agency makes the requested information available in a public reading room, this is enough to satisfy that agency’s obligation under FOIA.³¹ Therefore, if an agency itself declines to send you copies of the requested information, it must provide you with another form of access.³²

The Privacy Act (PA) also has exemptions to releasing documents. These exemptions are much broader than the FOIA exemptions. The nine PA exemptions are:³³

- (1) Material maintained by the Central Intelligence Agency (“CIA”);³⁴
- (2) Material maintained by a law enforcement agency. This includes police, corrections, and prosecutors’ offices;³⁵
- (3) Material that is “properly” secret in the interests of national defense or foreign policy;³⁶
- (4) Material gathered for criminal investigative law enforcement purposes by agencies whose principal function is not law enforcement;³⁷
- (5) Material contained in Secret Service record systems, relating to protection of the President and others whom the Secret Service protects;³⁸
- (6) Material required by statute to be maintained and used only as statistical records;³⁹

28. Anderson v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, No. 95-1888 (TFH), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4731, at *10–11 (D.D.C. Mar. 31, 1999) (finding the incarcerated person could not obtain witness names from a police lineup because it could have subjected them to harassment and threats); Ferreira v. Drug Enf’t Admin., 874 F. Supp. 15, 17 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (holding that the DEA properly withheld the names and identities of agents when the disclosure could reasonably be expected to endanger their life or physical safety).

30. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067, 269 U.S. App. D.C. 315, 322 (D.C. Cir. 1988), aff’d, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 106 L.Ed.2d 112 (1989) (holding an agency may satisfy its FOIA obligations by simply making extra copies of documents available in its public reading room; it does not have to mail copies of records).

31. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067, 269 U.S. App. D.C. 315, 322 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may satisfy its FOIA obligations by simply making extra copies of documents available in its public reading room; it does not have to mail copies of records), aff’d, 492 U.S. 136, 109 S. Ct. 2841, 106 L.Ed.2d 112 (1989); see also Oglesby v. U.S. Dept. of the Army, 920 F.2d 57, 70, 287 U.S. App. D.C. 126, 139 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (finding an agency is not required to mail information in response to a FOIA request when that information has been made available to the public in another format); Grunfeld & Harrick v. U.S. Customs Serv., 709 F.2d 41, 42–43 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding an agency was not required to mail documents in response to a FOIA request when the documents were available for viewing and copying at the customhouse in Puerto Rico).

32. Tax Analysts v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 845 F.2d 1060, 1067, 269 U.S. App. D.C. 315, 322 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (holding an agency may not avoid producing its records in response to a FOIA request by directing the requester to a public source outside the agency that has the same information).

33. 5 U.S.C. §§ 552a(j)–(k). See, e.g., Bassiouni v. FBI, 436 F.3d 712, 724–725 (7th Cir. 2006) (where the FBI refused to amend a person’s file, which contained 25 to 30-year-old memoranda pertaining to his activities concerning the Middle East, the district court properly granted the FBI summary judgment on the person’s action under the Privacy Act because the memos were pertinent to the FBI’s law enforcement activity.)

34. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(j)(1).

35. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(j)(2). To be exempt, the record by an agency under this section must consist of information compiled to identify individual criminal offenders and alleged offenders; information compiled for criminal investigation, including reports of informants and investigators; or reports identifiable to an individual that were compiled at any stage of the process of enforcement of the criminal laws.

36. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(1).

36. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(2).

37. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(3).

38. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(4).

- (7) Material that identifies individuals who were promised that their identity would be kept secret when they provided information to the government as part of a background check for a job application;⁴⁰
- (8) Material related to testing or examination used only to determine individual qualifications for appointment or promotion in the federal service;⁴¹ or
- (9) Material that would identify individuals who were promised that their identity would be kept secret when they provided information used in promotion decisions for members of the armed forces.⁴²

You should always request information under both FOIA and the PA. Agencies may not hide the information from you when it is exempt under one statute, but not exempt under the other.⁴³ In other words, “[i]f a FOIA exemption covers the documents, but a Privacy Act exemption does not, the documents must be released under the Privacy Act; if a Privacy Act exemption but not a FOIA exemption applies, the documents must be released under FOIA.”⁴⁴

Do not let the exemptions stop you from making requests, as the records may be available under an agency or court interpretation. In addition, agencies are not required to keep the information from you just because a particular exemption could be applied. Agency officials can choose to not follow the exemptions and give you the materials you requested. If information is withheld, you can challenge that decision by writing an administrative appeal letter or filing a lawsuit.

4. How to Make Your Request for Information from the Department of Justice

As noted above, every agency has a very specific procedure that you must follow in order for your FOIA or PA request to be granted. This Subsection will only describe the procedures that you must follow if you are seeking to request information from the DOJ. To get information from other agencies, or if you do not know which agency holds the information you want, you can check up on any government directory or the “United States Government Manual.”

To order a $33 copy of the “United States Government Manual,” send requests to:

Superintendent of Documents
P.O. Box 371954
Pittsburgh, PA 15250-7954,

Your mail order must include a check, money order, GPO Deposit Account, VISA, Master Card, or Discover payment. Cash is not accepted.

You can also call the Government Publishing Office at (202) 512-1800 or access <http://www.usgovernmentmanual.gov/> on the Internet to buy or download the manual.

In general, if you request information from the DOJ, you should try to send your request to the specific division that has the records you want.⁴⁵ If you are uncertain about which division to write to, you can send your request to the DOJ's FOIA/PA Mail Referral Unit, and someone in that division will forward your letter to the division they think most likely to have the information you want. All requests should be in writing.

Send requests to:

FOIA/PA Mail Referral Unit, Justice Management Division
Attn: FOIA Request

39. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(5).

40. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(6).

41. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(k)(7).

43. 5 U.S.C. § 552a(t)(1)–(2).

44. Martin v. Office of Special Counsel, Merit Sys. Prot. Bd., 819 F.2d 1181, 1184 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (denying disclosure of information requested by Appellee as such disclosure was exempted by both the PA and the FOIA).

45. See Organizational Chart, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/agencies/chart> (last visited Jan. 27, 2019), for more information about each division. For a list of FOIA contacts at the DOJ, see Find A FOIA Contact at DOJ, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/find-foia-contact-doj/list> (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

Department of Justice
Room 115
LOC Building
Washington, DC 20530-0001
(301) 583-7354
Fax (301) 341-0772

The rest of this section addresses how to make a request for information from two divisions of the DOJ: the Federal Bureau of Prisons (“BOP”) and the FBI. It discusses the fees that you will be charged for making such requests, the types of responses you may receive from either the FBI or the BOP, and the appeals process, which may be useful if your request is denied.

(a) Requesting Information from the Federal Bureau of Prisons

The BOP maintains records on current and former prisoners of the federal penal and correctional institutions, as well as records relating to the administration of the agency. Part (i) of this Subsection describes how to request information from your institution and Part (ii) describes how to request information from the BOP under FOIA and the PA.

(i) Requesting Information from Your Institution⁴⁶

If you would like access to your Inmate Central File, the BOP encourages you to request this information from your institution. Many records within the Inmate Central File can be disclosed without you having to file a FOIA request. These include records relating to your sentence, detainer, participation in programs, classification data, parole information, mail, visits, property, conduct, work, release processing, and general correspondence. You can also request access to some medical records from your institution.

The Warden of your institution should have selected a staff member to receive requests for access to these records. In order to request access to your Inmate Central File or medical records, you should submit a request to this person, who must promptly schedule a time for you to review your file.

Staff members must tell you if there are documents in your Inmate Central File or medical records withheld from you. If you would like access to these withheld documents, you will need to make a FOIA and PA request.

(ii) Requesting information from the BOP under the FOIA and the PA

To file a request for information from the BOP under FOIA, including any information withheld from your review of your Inmate Central File or your medical records, or any other records, your request should:⁴⁷

- (1) Be in writing;
- (2) Be clearly marked “Freedom of Information Act/Privacy Act Request” on the front of the letter and the envelope;
- (3) Clearly describe the records you seek, including the approximate dates covered by the records; you do not need to know the name of the records, but being as specific as possible helps the DOJ to locate your records.

46. Information regarding making requests from your institution can be found in BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT NO. 1351.05, RELEASE OF INFORMATION (Sept. 19, 2002, revised Mar. 9, 2016), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1351_005_CN-2.pdf (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

47. See BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT NO. 1351.05, RELEASE OF INFORMATION (Sept. 19, 2002, revised Mar. 9, 2016), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1351_005_CN-2.pdf (last visited Jan. 27, 2019); IV. How to Make a FOIA Request, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

- (4) Include your full name, current address, date of birth, place of birth, and social security number (if you have one); and
- (5) Include your federal register number and institution where last housed.

You must also verify your identity in one of the following ways:

- (1) Complete and sign Form DOJ-361 (See Appendix B);
- (2) Have the signature on the request witnessed by a notary; or
- (3) Include the following statement before the signature on the requested letter: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on [date]."

The DOJ has stated that "[i]f you request information about yourself and do not follow one of the procedures [described above], your request cannot be processed."⁴⁸ If you are seeking personal information, make sure that you provide the necessary identification information.

If you are requesting information about someone other than yourself, the information will not be given to you unless:

- (1) You provide a statement by the other person specifically authorizing the release of information; the statement must be signed by that person and either witnessed by a notary or include a declaration made under penalty of perjury; or
- (2) You provide evidence that the subject of the request is deceased, such as a death certificate, or some comparable proof of death such as a newspaper obituary.

Having completed these steps, you may mail your request to⁴⁹:

FOIA/PA Section
Office of General Counsel, Room 924
Federal Bureau of Prisons
320 First Street, N.W.
Washington, DC 20534

If you have access to the internet, you may also submit a request online through the BOP website. The website can be accessed at <https://www.bop.gov/foia/#tabs-5> The FOIA Requester Service Center can be reached by telephone at (202) 616-7750, and the FOIA Public Liaison can be reached at (202) 616-7750.

(b) Requesting Information from the FBI

The FBI collects evidence in legal cases in which the United States is, or may be, an interested party and investigates violations of certain federal statutes.⁵⁰ Requests for information under FOIA and/or under the PA from the FBI should be addressed to:

Record/Information Dissemination Section
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Department of Justice
170 Marcel Drive
Winchester, VA 22602-4843

To request any information from the FBI, under either FOIA or the PA, your request must:

- (1) Be in writing;

48. IV. How to Make a FOIA Request, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

49. Freedom of Information Act, BUREAU OF PRISONS, available at <https://www.bop.gov/foia/#tabs-5> (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

50. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 535, 540–540b (describing various crimes that the FBI is authorized to investigate, for example, crimes involving government officers and employees and killing of state or local law enforcement officers).

- (2) Provide your full name;
- (3) Provide your date and place of birth; and
- (4) Either be notarized by a notary public, or include the following statement before the signature on the letter: "I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed on [date]."

Call FOIA Requester Service Center at (540) 868-1535 to access recorded information on how to submit a new FOIA/PA request to the FBI. Call (540) 868-4593 about the status of an existing FOIA/PA request to the FBI.

If you are requesting information about someone else and that person is alive, your request must include a waiver signed by that person and verified by a notary public. You must also include the person's full name as well as his or her date and place of birth. If you are requesting information about someone who is deceased, you must provide that person's name and proof of death, either in the form of an obituary, death certificate, or published record that indicates the person is actually dead.⁵¹

(c) Fees

Within a reasonable amount of time after your request, staff should provide you with copies of the disclosable documents from your Inmate Central File and/or medical records. Copies cost ten cents per page. In addition, you will be charged a fee for the search time required to process your request. The cost of search time is $2.25 per fifteen minutes for clerical staff, $4.50 per fifteen minutes for professional staff, and $7.50 per fifteen minutes for managerial staff. You will not be charged for the first 100 pages of copies or the first two hours of search time, and you will only be charged for fees that total above $8.00.⁵²

When you file either a FOIA or PA request with the DOJ, the Department assumes that you are willing to pay fees up to $25. Most of the time, no fees are ever charged.⁵³ However, if you cannot, or do not want, to pay $25, you should state how much you can pay in your request letter. If the DOJ estimates that your fees will be more than $25, they will let you make a cheaper request or ask you to agree to pay the estimated amount before they process your request. According to the DOJ website, "[y]ou ordinarily will not be required to actually pay the fees until the records have been processed and are ready to be sent to you."⁵⁴

You can also request a fee waiver. To get a fee waiver, you must show you are requesting the information to benefit the public, not your own interests. Because you are requesting records about yourself, you will probably not meet this standard.⁵⁵ You cannot get a fee waiver just because you cannot pay for it.⁵⁶ If you are entirely without a way to pay, you can ask for a fee waiver for that reason, but the DOJ usually denies such requests.

51. Requesting FBI Records, FBI, available at <https://www.fbi.gov/services/information-management/foipa/requesting-fbi-records> (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

52. See BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT NO. 1351.05, RELEASE OF INFORMATION 21-22 (Sept. 19, 2002, revised Mar. 9, 2016), available at https://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/1351_005_CN-2.pdf (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

53. VII. Fees, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

54. VII. Fees, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

55. VIII. Fee Waivers, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019) (stating that requests for fee waivers from individuals who are seeking records pertaining to themselves usually do not meet this standard).

56. VIII. Fee Waivers, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

(d) Initial Response to Requests

Once a division of the DOJ has processed your request and any fee issues have been resolved, the division will send you a response. This response may either be (1) the information you requested, (2) some of the information you requested and a letter explaining why part of your request was denied, or (3) a letter explaining why your entire request was denied. If information is being withheld, the letter will tell you whether the information is being withheld because of one of the exemptions to the PA or FOIA. Also, note that in some cases you may receive the documents a short time after you receive this response.

The BOP should respond to your request within twenty business days, not counting Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays. The twenty-day period begins when the BOP's FOIA office receives your request. The BOP may extend the initial response time an additional ten business days when one of the following applies:

- (1) Records must be collected from field offices;
- (2) A "voluminous" (large) quantity of records must be located, compiled, and reviewed in response to the request; or
- (3) The request requires that the BOP consult with another agency that has a substantial interest in the information, or among two or more other DOJ Divisions.

When the BOP needs more time to process your request, they will inform you in writing and give you the opportunity to modify your request.⁵⁷

5. What to Do if Your Request is Denied

If your initial request is denied, you should first file an administrative appeal with the agency from which you are requesting information. If your administrative appeal is also denied, you can file a lawsuit.

(a) Filing an Appeal

You should file an appeal if you are not satisfied with the response you have received to your FOIA request. Your appeal should be:

- (1) In writing;
- (2) Marked "Freedom of Information Act Appeal"—both on the front of the envelope and on the appeal itself;
- (3) Received within sixty days of the date on the DOJ's initial letter; and
- (4) Addressed to:

Office of Information Policy
United States Department of Justice
Attn: Freedom of Information Act Appeal
Suite 11050
1425 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, DC 20530-0001

Your appeal should include the name of the Component (office within the agency) that denied your request, the initial request number the Component assigned to the request, and the date of the BOP's action. If no request number has been assigned, you should try to enclose a copy of the BOP's determination letter with your appeal. You should also explain your reasons for disagreeing with the BOP's denial of your request. Do not attach specific documents unless they are directly related to a point you are making in the appeal.⁵⁸ Once your appeal has been received, it will be reviewed by an attorney in the Office of Information Policy (“OIP”). At that point, the OIP will either (1) affirm the BOP’s decision, (2) affirm part of the BOP’s decision and release other information requested, or (3) reverse or modify the original decision and send the request to the BOP to reprocess the request.⁵⁹

57. IV. How to Make a FOIA Request, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/departments-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

(b) Filing a Lawsuit

If the appeal does not get you the information you requested, you can file a lawsuit to force the agency to release the documents. You have up to six years after the date on which your administrative appeal was denied to file a lawsuit,⁶⁰ but you should try to file as soon as possible to show the court that you need the information.

Filing a FOIA complaint should be relatively cheap and simple.⁶¹ Sometimes, as soon as the complaint is filed, the government will release the documents without further litigation. If you are denied documents that you think are clearly covered by FOIA, you may wish to draft and file your own short-form complaint. In addition, you should consider filing a “Motion for a Vaughn Index” using the sample Vaughn motion reproduced in Appendix C-5 at the end of this Chapter.⁶² This is a routine motion under which the government agency will be required to give you an detailed list describing the documents it is withholding and the reason it claims for withholding each.

After you file your complaint, the burden is on the government to come forward and justify why it is withholding the information.

C. Conclusion

While FOIA can be a great tool to get documents related to your case or your life, it is important to follow the procedural rules. Of note, many states have passed their own Freedom of Information laws, with their own procedures for requesting documents. If you are considering filing a Freedom of Information request to a state agency under a state law, make sure you read the relevant state laws—some states do not have a fee waiver provision like the federal Freedom of Information Act. Also, know that it can take many months to receive a final response to your FOIA request. However, if you believe that FOIA information will be helpful for you or your case, it never hurts to file one just in case.

58. X. Administrative Appeals, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/department-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

59. See 28 C.F.R. § 16.8(c) (2018); X. Administrative Appeals, in Dept. of Justice Freedom of Information Act Reference Guide, DEPT. OF JUSTICE, available at <https://www.justice.gov/oip/department-justice-freedom-information-act-reference-guide> (last updated Dec. 13, 2018) (last visited Jan. 27, 2019).

60. 28 U.S.C. § 2401(a).

61. Various resources are available to help jailhouse lawyers filing FOIA lawsuits. The names of several organizations that will advise, though usually not represent, FOIA litigants can be found in Appendix D-1 of this Chapter.

62. This procedure was adopted in Vaughn v. Rosen, 484 F.2d 820 (D.C. Cir. 1973) (instructing trial court to provide itemized index of disclosable and exempt documents, with justifications for exemptions).

CHAPTER 8

OBTAINING INFORMATION TO PREPARE YOUR CASE: THE PROCESS OF DISCOVERY*

A. Introduction

This Chapter is an overview of the general rules of discovery. Discovery is the process that allows you to ask your opponent for information he may have that you think you should present in your case. Your opponent can also use the discovery process to get information from you. Discovery also allows you to get information from other sources, like co-defendants or potential witnesses. Discovery usually takes place before the trial begins. In a civil action¹, the process starts after the “complaint” (document that begins a suit) has been filed. In a criminal action, it generally starts after the defendant has been “arraigned” (brought before the court to plead to the charge brought against him).

Discovery is governed by a fairly complicated set of rules.² It is important for you to know the rules for two reasons. First, you need discovery to get the information you need to fully prepare your case for trial. Second, you must know how to respond to your opponent’s requests for information. Discovery is a privilege and a responsibility; when you file a suit, you have the right to obtain information from your opponent, but you also must respond to your opponent’s requests for discovery. If you refuse to comply with proper discovery requests from the other side, your lawsuit may be dismissed.

Discovery rules differ depending on the type of case (civil or criminal) and the type of court in which you are appearing (state or federal). Civil discovery is very broad and has relatively few restrictions. Criminal discovery, on the other hand, is quite different and limited. Regardless of the information given in this Chapter, you must always check the appropriate rule yourself, in addition to any cases interpreting the rule. You should also “Shepardize” (or check that they are still valid) the rules and the cases, since the rules change quite frequently. Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” explains Shepardizing and other methods of legal research.

Discovery is intended to:

- (1) narrow and clarify the issues that will be presented to the court;
- (2) find out the claims of each party;
- (3) find out the important facts and details of your case and your opponent’s case;
- (4) get testimony from witnesses while their memories are fresh, because they might forget details or become otherwise unable to testify later; and

* This Chapter was revised by Paula M. McManus and Roslyn R. Morrison based in part on previous versions by Colleen Romaka, David Lamoreaux, and members of the 1977–78 Columbia Human Rights Law Review.

1. A civil action is a private dispute between two or more individuals or parties. For example, a lawsuit about a car accident could be a civil action. In a criminal action, a person is charged with a crime by the government.

2. In federal court, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (FED. R. CIV. P.) are used in civil cases, and the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure (FED. R. CRIM. P.) are used in criminal cases. New York state courts use the Civil Practice Law and Rules (N.Y. CIV. PRAC. LAW & R. or N.Y. C.P.L.R.) in civil cases and the Criminal Procedure Law (N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW) in criminal cases. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW is also commonly referred to as C.P.L. Each set of rules contains discovery procedures for the appropriate type of case. For other states, you can find rules of civil and criminal procedure in the state’s Annotated Code or Annotated General Statutes. Also, for most states, West and LexisNexis publish a yearly volume for the state that contains current rules of civil and criminal procedure. West’s publication is Rules of Court–State. (For example, if you are looking for information on Connecticut, look to West’s 2014 Rules of Court–Connecticut.) LexisNexis’ publication is called Court Rules Annotated. (For example, if you are looking for information on New Hampshire, look to LexisNexis’ 2014 New Hampshire Court Rules Annotated.) You can often request the volume you need through inter-library loan if your library does not carry it.

- (5) prevent the surprise and delay that would occur if each party knew nothing about the other side's case until the trial happened.

You will know much more about what you will have to prove and disprove to win your case once you have completed the discovery process. You will also know what information you still need in order to be successful.

This Chapter gives you an overview of the discovery rules. Part B addresses the discovery rules for civil lawsuits, while Part C focuses on the discovery rules for criminal cases. Each of these Parts is further divided into two sections: discovery in federal cases and discovery in New York state cases.

B. Civil Discovery

1. Introduction

In a civil case, the defendant (sometimes called “respondent”) is the party being sued. The plaintiff (sometimes called “petitioner”) is the party who filed the suit. Specific rules of civil procedure govern the various ways discovery is conducted in civil cases.³ They vary depending on whether you bring your case in federal or state court.⁴ The federal rules governing civil discovery are discussed in Part B(2) of this Chapter; the New York State rules are discussed in Part B(3). Although the basic ideas are the same, it is important to know the specific rules of the court where you bring your claim. Otherwise, your case may be dismissed early. Also, individual courts and judges can set their own special procedural rules, so you should try to find out if your judge has a special system that you are expected to follow. You can do this by writing to the clerk of the court. The addresses of the federal and state courts in New York are listed in Appendices I and II at the end of the JLM.

There is no required form for filing a discovery request, but you should clearly state the information you are seeking and the rule under which you are making your request. Many legal form books contain examples of the many different types of discovery requests.⁵ Selected federal forms are provided in the Appendix at the end of this Chapter. Do not tear them out of the book; you must copy them onto your own paper and then fill them out yourself.

2. Federal Discovery Procedures

(a) Introduction

In a civil action in federal court, discovery is governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rules 26–37.⁶ The rules are fairly straightforward and should be relatively easy to follow. There is one basic rule you should keep in mind: you should always explain how the material you seek is relevant

3. See FED. R. CIV. P. 26–37 (Depositions and Discovery) (Federal Courts); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 31 (McKinney 2009) (Disclosure) (New York State Courts). Different rules apply depending on whether you are bringing your case federally or at the state level. Although the federal and state rules have different titles, they deal with the same issues. These rules of civil procedure also apply to attacks on a conviction after it is appealed, such as federal or state habeas corpus petitions, and Article 440 motions in New York. See JLM Chapters 13, 20, and 21 for information on habeas corpus and Article 440. Note that discovery in a habeas proceeding is only available for a reason the court feels is adequate (“good cause”) and is not automatic. See R. Governing Sec. 2254 Cases in the U.S. Dist. Courts 6(a), available at <http://www.uscourts.gov/file/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings> (last visited Nov. 28, 2020) (allowing the judge to authorize discovery “for good cause” where the incarcerated person is in state custody); R. Governing Sec. 2255 Proceedings for the U.S. Dist. Courts 6(a), available at <http://www.uscourts.gov/file/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings> (last visited Nov. 28, 2020) (allowing the judge to authorize discovery “for good cause” where the incarcerated person is in federal custody).

4. Useful summaries of the law governing discovery in federal courts include CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT & MARY KAY KANE, LAW OF FEDERAL COURTS 577–637 (7th ed. 2011) and 6, 7 JAMES WILLIAM MOORE ET. AL., MOORE’S FEDERAL PRACTICE Ch. 26–37A (3d ed. 2015).

5. See, e.g., 6, 7 JAMES WILLIAM MOORE, MOORE’S FEDERAL PRACTICE Ch. 26–37A (3d ed. 2015).

6. Note that habeas corpus rules differ slightly from discovery rules. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” and 28 U.S.C. §§ 2246, 2247 (discussing rules about obtaining discovery through depositions and affidavits and admissibility of other documentary evidence).

to your case. Courts will not look kindly on you if you deliberately harass your opponent with irrelevant requests that require a great deal of time or money to respond to. The judge may impose penalties on anyone who abuses the discovery process in this way.⁷ At the same time, the discovery rules are usually applied generously so that each side can get relevant information necessary to pursue his case.

(b) Scope of Discovery

In a civil action, information must be relevant to your case for it to be discoverable.⁸ Furthermore, certain types of information are “privileged,” which means that the information is not subject to discovery and may be kept secret even if it is relevant.

One category of privileged information is communication between people in specific relationships that the law protects and keeps private.⁹ Examples of privileged relationships include those between lawyer and client, doctor and patient, priest and confessor, and spouses (such as husband and wife).¹⁰ Information shared within these relationships is generally privileged. However, the court will balance your privacy interest against the strong public interest in pursuing the truth (because the court will be deprived of the information that could have been provided by the privileged evidence).¹¹ Generally, though, if your opponent requests copies of your personal correspondence, you will not have to give him letters that you wrote to your spouse, lawyer, etc. Of course, this also means that your opponent can withhold such privileged material from you.

Another category of privileged material is trial preparation material, also called “attorney work product.”¹² The work product rule is complicated and not discussed at length in this Chapter. Generally, the rule covers information, analysis, arguments, and opinions prepared by attorneys for trial. You may be able to get access to some factual information if you can show you have a “substantial need”¹³ for it—that is, if you cannot get the information anywhere else and it would be unfair if you did not have it—but the opposing lawyer’s opinions and analyses related to the case will still be protected.¹⁴

If you feel that your opponent has requested privileged material from you, you are responsible for showing the court that the requested material is privileged. If you refuse to respond to a discovery request because you think the information is privileged, you must explain why you think that information is privileged. During this process, however, you should also try to avoid “giving away” the information by describing it in too much detail. This could allow your adversary to gain an advantage over you. Even if you think one discovery request involves privileged material, you must still respond to other discovery requests that do not ask for privileged material. The court may order you to turn over the material if it decides it is not privileged.

7. FED. R. CIV. P. 37(a)(5)(B). Sanctions (penalties) are discussed in FED. R. CIV. P. 37(b)(2).

8. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(1).

9. 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 272 (2015).

10. See 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 318 (2015) (describing attorney-client privilege); 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 398 (2015) (describing doctor-patient privilege); 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 466 (2015) (describing priest-confessor privilege); 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 281 (2015) (describing marital privilege).

11. See 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 276 (2015) (describing the scope of the confidentiality privilege and the court’s ability to balance privacy interest against public interest in disclosure of truth); 81 AM. JUR. 2D Witnesses § 274 (2015) (explaining the limitations of the court in expanding or narrowing the confidentiality privileges accepted by the legislature).

12. The rule protecting attorney work product is also called the “Hickman-Taylor rule” because it is based upon the Supreme Court case Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500–514, 67, S. Ct. 385, 388–397, 91 L. Ed. 451, 456–466 (1947).

13. See, e.g., In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated July 6, 2005, 510 F.3d 180, 188 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding “substantial need” for the documents requested because they were unique evidence that could not be obtained through other means).

14. You cannot, for example, ask your opponent to tell you in advance the argument that he will make at trial. Work product privilege is covered in FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(3), which you should read if work product protection becomes an issue in your case.

A second requirement for discovery is that the material requested be “relevant” to the case. Information is relevant when it supports or undermines a fact that either side is trying to prove. Imagine, for example, that you have filed a civil lawsuit for police misconduct at the time of your arrest.¹⁵ In order to prove misconduct, you must identify the officer who you believe was abusive during your arrest. The arrest record will directly support your case on this point because it will state the officer’s name. Therefore, it is fair to say that the arrest record is relevant to your case, and you can ask for it in discovery. However, the officer’s high school report card is probably irrelevant to your case. If you ask for it and the other side objects, the judge will probably rule that the report card cannot be obtained in discovery.

Information is also relevant when it may lead to other relevant information. You may request information if there is any reasonable possibility that it will lead you to admissible evidence that you can present at trial.¹⁶ Still using the police misconduct example above, assume that you have found out the officer’s name and are suing the officer personally. You might request the names and addresses of other members of the police department, because these other officers might know whether the officer has a violent personality or a history of abusive work practices. You should be able to find out these other officers’ names and possibly ask them questions in a formal setting, which is called “deposing” them (depositions are discussed in Part B(2)(d)(i) of this Chapter). Even though you might not find any useful or admissible information, the discovery rules allow you to try to build your case by obtaining information that may uncover relevant information.

(c) Mandatory Discovery: Rule 26

Rule 26 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is designed to make it easy for you and your opponent to exchange basic information. The rule requires you to meet with your opponent early on and exchange certain information. Below is a brief overview of the rule’s requirements. Since the rule is fairly detailed, you should read the complete text of Rule 26 if you are involved in a federal civil suit. Local courts may suspend some Rule 26 requirements, so you should always check with the court clerk to determine what your exact responsibilities are.

Under Rule 26(f), you and your adversary must meet “as soon as practicable” to discuss your case. The goal of this meeting is to see if you can settle the case without a trial. In addition, the Rule requires the parties to create a “discovery plan.” This means you and your opponent need to set deadlines for discovery.

Within fourteen days after the Rule 26(f) meeting, Rule 26(a)(1)(A) requires you and your adversary to exchange certain basic information such as the names, addresses, and phone numbers of any people who might have discoverable information. (Remember, except for privileged information, any information that is relevant to your case is discoverable.) Your adversary is automatically entitled to Rule 26(a)(1) information, which means you are required to send this information and he does not have to request it. Therefore, you should read this Rule carefully to know what information you are required to send and to determine if your adversary has given you all the information to which you are entitled. For example, Rule 26(a)(2) requires any party who plans to call an expert witness to turn over basic information about the expert’s opinions, experience, and qualifications.¹⁷ In addition, Rule

15. Files from a police officer’s personnel file may be helpful to proving police misconduct. But many states have laws that make it hard to obtain records from a police officer’s personnel file. Even if you bring your lawsuit in federal court, the judge might consider the state police-privacy law in deciding whether to release records from an officer personnel file in discovery. For example, in Cody v. N.Y. State Div. of State Police, 2008 WL 3252081, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. 2008), the court held that while N.Y. CIV. RIGHTS L. § 50-a (which says a police officer’s personnel files may only be turned over if the officer consents or if a judge issues an order requiring the release of these records) does not apply in federal court, it does not mean files will always be turned over if requested. The court said that federal judges must balance the interests for and against keeping the records confidential during the discovery phase of a trial.

16. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b) advisory committee’s note to 1970 amendment.

17. This includes: (1) the expert’s name and qualifications, (2) the opinions the expert will express along with any facts, data, or exhibits that support those opinions, (3) how much the expert is being paid to testify, and 26(a)(3) requires you and your opponent to exchange your list of trial witnesses and summaries of any evidence that you plan to introduce. The exchange of information under Rule 26(a)(3) must take place at least thirty days before trial.

Lastly, Rule 26(e) requires each party to provide additional information or correct any information already exchanged if the party later realizes that the initial information is incomplete or inaccurate. Under Rule 26(g), you must sign and write your address on all information that you supply to your adversary. By doing so, you indicate that to the best of your knowledge, the information is complete and true.

(d) Additional Methods of Obtaining Information

(i) Depositions: Rules 27, 28, 30, 31, and 32

In a “deposition,” someone who may have useful information is asked a series of questions, usually by the attorney for the party seeking the information. An oral deposition is similar to a witness examination at trial. Basically, a meeting is set up with the person you want to depose,¹⁸ the opposing lawyer, and a stenographer.¹⁹ Under Rule 26(d), depositions (as well as any other forms of discovery) may be sought only after the initial mandatory meeting with your opponent, unless the court gives permission to do so before the meeting.²⁰ Rule 30(a)(2)(A) limits the number of depositions, so each side may only take up to ten depositions. Nevertheless, if you feel that you need to take more than ten depositions, you may ask for the court’s permission to do so. In deciding whether to grant your request for more depositions, the court will consider several factors, including (1) whether the information you are seeking is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative,²¹ or if it can be obtained more conveniently from another source; (2) whether you have already had the opportunity to get the information you are seeking; and (3) whether the burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit.²² Overall, the court wants to make sure that requests for extra depositions are reasonable and worth the inconvenience they cause the other party.

At the deposition, you may ask a broad range of questions. Depositions are particularly useful because they give you the opportunity to obtain an unplanned, honest response from the “deponent”²³ and to have face-to-face contact, unlike with other discovery methods.

The problem with depositions, however, is that they tend to be time-consuming and expensive. If you depose someone, you usually have to hire a stenographer and pay to have the stenographer’s notes typed out. Both parties, their attorneys, and the witness must arrange a suitable time and place for the deposition. Rule 29 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure offers some relief by providing for the use of “stipulations” (a “stipulation” is a document signed by both parties stating that they agree to a certain fact, rule, or way of proceeding). If you and your opponent agree to a stipulation, you can hold the deposition in a place convenient for you (such as the jail or prison), and you can tape-record the deposition instead of hiring a stenographer.

(4) how many other cases he has testified in over the past four years. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a)(2).

18. The person questioned in a deposition is called the “deponent.”

19. The “stenographer” (sometimes called the “court reporter”) is a professional secretary who types in shorthand everything said during the deposition.

20. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(d)(1).

21. A “cumulative” request is a request that is overly broad and includes so much material that it is difficult or impossible to meet within a reasonable time period. An example of such a request may be requesting the records of all policyholders from an insurance company for the last 40 years. A “duplicative” request is one that asks for the same records asked for in an earlier discovery request, without any good reason to request those records again. An example may be requesting many paper copies of files which you already received electronic copies of. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(i).

22. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(2)(C)(iii).

23. As noted above, the “deponent” is the person who is questioned in the deposition. The deponent may not be as well prepared by his attorney as he will be at the trial, and his attorney will not have an opportunity to review the deponent’s responses before you receive them.

If your opponent is unwilling to sign a stipulation allowing alternative methods of taking a deposition, you can make a motion to the court to order him to cooperate. You should be prepared to show specific reasons for your request (for example, that you cannot afford a stenographer). Another option is to obtain written depositions. If you choose to use written depositions, you should refer to Rule 31 for the exact procedure.²⁴ However, you should keep in mind that the use of written depositions does not allow you to get the un-coached answers that you can get with oral depositions.

(ii) Interrogatories: Rule 33

“Interrogatories” are written questions that must be answered in writing under oath. Unlike depositions, interrogatories are not performed in person. Only parties to the lawsuit must respond to interrogatories. Outside witnesses do not need to respond to interrogatories. Putting aside this important limitation, interrogatories are very useful because they are inexpensive. Rule 33(a) limits the number of questions you may ask each party to twenty-five questions.²⁵ Nonetheless, if you feel you need to ask more than twenty-five questions, you may ask the court for special permission.²⁶ To determine whether to grant your request, the court will consider (1) whether the information you are seeking is unreasonably repetitive, (2) whether you have already had the opportunity to obtain the information, and (3) whether the burden or expense of the additional interrogatories would outweigh their likely benefit.²⁷ You may send interrogatories as soon as you and your opponent have attended the mandatory meeting under Rule 26(f).²⁸ You should note that many local courts and individual judges have their own special rules for handling interrogatories, so you should check with the clerk of the court to find out if any special rules apply to you.

After you send the interrogatories, your opponent must answer within thirty days. One exception is if the court has ordered a shorter or longer period of time or you and the other party have agreed to a shorter or longer time.²⁹ As with depositions, your questions must be relevant to the case, cannot ask for privileged material, and cannot be unreasonably burdensome to the other side. If you are suing a prison official for assault, for example, you might ask the following questions in your interrogatory:

- (1) Were you on Block 8 at or around 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 2019?
- (2) Why were you on Block 8 at 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 2019?
- (3) At 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 2019, did you hear any noise coming from the east dayroom?
- (4) Did you go inside the east dayroom shortly after 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 2019?

In order to obtain specific answers, you must ask specific questions. If you want to get as much information as possible from these interrogatories, do not phrase your questions in a manner that allows only a “yes” or “no” answer. Questions (1), (3) and (4) above are types of questions that would be answered with only a “yes” or “no.” Question (2), because it asks ‘why,’ cannot be answered with a “yes” or “no,” and may therefore elicit more information.

If you have trouble getting answers to your interrogatories and there is no legitimate reason for your opponent’s failure to respond, then you can submit a motion for an order “compelling” (forcing) discovery under Rule 37(a)(3)(B). However, a court will grant your motion only if you can show that you made every possible effort to get the answers from your opponent yourself before asking the court for help. If the judge does grant your motion, the court will penalize your opponent if he does not respond to your interrogatories. Some judges are very careful about issuing orders compelling discovery, so you should read the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure closely and prepare an argument to show why you need the requested information and why you have a right to receive it.

24. FED. R. CIV. P. 31.

25. FED. R. CIV. P. 33(a).

26. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(2)(A).

27. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(b)(2)(C).

28. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(f). See Part B(2)(c) of this Chapter for more detail.

29. FED. R. CIV. P. 33(b)(2).

(iii) Production of Documents: Rule 34

Rule 34 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure enables you to obtain documents and other physical objects in your opponent's possession. Once again, you may only get materials that are relevant to your case and that are not privileged. Like other forms of discovery, the court's permission is not generally required, and it is assumed that the parties will cooperate in exchanging the necessary material. Remember that requests to produce documents are also subject to the limits of Rule 26(b). This means that requests cannot be cumulative or duplicative, they cannot have been available to you by other means, and the burden on the other party cannot outweigh the benefit of the information.

You can request materials after you have met with your opponent under Rule 26(f), or you can ask the court for permission to request materials sooner. As with interrogatories, there is a thirty-day period in which to respond. If your opponent refuses to cooperate with a reasonable request, you can file an order to compel (force) discovery under Rule 37(a)(3)(B). If your opponent does not comply with the order, you can make a motion asking the court to sanction your opponent under Rule 37(b). A "sanction" is a penalty or coercive measure that results from failing to comply with a law, rule, or order (usually, sanctions are monetary fines, but they can also lead to imprisonment or dismissal of the lawsuit).³⁰

A request for production must describe the name and date of each document or object as specifically as possible. You should try to find out as much as you can about the documents or objects your opponent has that might be useful to you. Note that when prison officials provide documents in discovery, they often "redact," or remove, information they think is secret or sensitive. If you think your opponent is hiding information that you need and are entitled to see, you can move for an order compelling discovery under Rule 37(a)(3)(B).

Rule 34 does not limit you to requesting documents that might be found in an official file; you can ask for books, accounts, memoranda, letters, photographs, charts, physical evidence, or any other object you can describe specifically.³¹ If you request material that your opponent must send you copies of, you should be prepared to pay copying costs or ask the court to pay them under a "poor person's order." A "poor person's order" is a statement signed under oath and submitted to the court that requests a waiver of court costs and states that the applicant is financially unable to pay.³²

(iv) Subpoenas: Rule 45

Subpoenas under Rule 45 allow you to compel (force) witnesses who are not parties to attend a deposition or trial. With a subpoena, you can also ask the witness to bring documents or other discoverable materials that fall under Rule 34. A subpoena to a third party requesting such documents is often called a "subpoena duces tecum." If you serve a subpoena on a third party—either to testify or to produce documents—and the party refuses to comply, the court may hold that party in contempt for failure to comply. In order to file a subpoena, you may write to the clerk with your request.³³

30. See Part B(2)(f) of this Chapter for more detail.

31. FED. R. CIV. P. 34(a).

32. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101 (McKinney 2009) (stating that the motion for poor person's relief may be filed through a form affidavit available in the clerk's office. This affidavit should be filed with the summons and complaint. If you are an inmate, the affidavit should include "the name and mailing address of the facility at which [you are] confined along with the name and mailing address of any other federal, state or local facility at which [you were] confined during the preceding six month period." Your case will be given an index or case number. After a judge receives your case, the court will receive your trust fund account statement from the institution holding you. § f(1). When filing as an inmate, poor person's relief only entitles you to a reduced filing fee rather than a complete exemption. § f(2)).

33. FED. R. CIV. P. 45(a). An attorney may also issue and sign a subpoena in some instances. FED. R. CIV. P. 45(a)(3).

(v) Admissions: Rule 36

Rule 36 allows you to serve a written “request for admission” to your opponent. A request for admission is similar to an interrogatory, except that you must prepare a list of statements for your opponent to either admit or deny. Requests for admission are primarily intended to resolve issues that are not central to the lawsuit. Some examples are issues related to the facts of your case, how the law applies, and whether any documents that have been provided are genuine. If you ask your opponent to admit a fact that presents a “genuine issue for trial,” he must respond by admitting or denying the fact, or saying the fact is either true or false. Your opponent may deny that the admission is true until evidence is presented. A “genuine issue for trial” is a fact which your claim relies on to succeed. If you and your opponent disagree about a fact that can determine the success of your case, it will need to be decided by the court. For example, if you ask your opponent to admit that you were not carrying anything when you were arrested, there would be a genuine issue for trial if your opponent has evidence or witnesses stating that you were carrying something.

You do not need the court’s permission to serve this request, but you must wait until after you attend the Rule 26(f) meeting with your opponent. Your opponent must submit a written denial within thirty days or the court will consider the statements admitted.³⁴

Here are some statements that you might include in a request for admission, using the prison assault example presented above in Part B(2) of this Chapter:

- (1) Admit that you were in Block 8 at 8:00 P.M. on January 30, 2019.
- (2) Admit that you heard noises coming from the east dayroom at 8:00 P.M. on that evening.
- (3) Admit that you went inside the east dayroom shortly after 8:00 P.M. on that evening.
- (4) Admit that the attached copy of the incident report is a true and accurate copy of the original on file.

Note that in requests for admission, you cannot make open-ended information requests like those in question (2) of the interrogatory examples in Part B(2)(d)(ii) above. If you make a request for admission of a fact and your opponent refused to admit it, but you later prove it was true, your opponent may be required to pay some of your attorney’s fees under Rule 37(c)(2).

(e) Protective Orders

Both parties have the right to discover important information from the other side, and both parties must help make discoverable material available. However, if you believe that your opponent has made an unreasonable request—for example, he or she asks for privileged information or seeks information to intimidate you or waste your time and money—you can move for a protective order under Rule 26(c)(1) instead of preparing a response to the request.

In a motion for a protective order, you must give the judge a good reason why your opponent’s request for information was improper or unreasonable. You must also show that you made every effort to resolve the issue with your opponent before you sought help from the court (for example, you told your opponent that you thought his request was unreasonable and he refused to make any changes). If the judge grants a protective order, your opponent’s request will either be thrown out (in which case you will not have to respond) or be limited (in which case you will only have to respond to part of the request).

(f) Sanctions: Rule 37

Rule 37 allows the court to issue sanctions (monetary fines) against any person who fails to comply with the rules of discovery. This provides a way for the court to enforce discovery rules.

If your opponent has not responded to your request for discovery and you have made every effort to get him to respond, you can move for an order demanding your opponent to comply with your request. If your motion is granted but your opponent still does not comply, the court may hold your opponent in contempt of court, and your opponent may face fines or even imprisonment. On the other hand, if you refuse to comply with discovery requests, the court may dismiss the lawsuit. All of these punishments are available under Rule 37. Often, parties will be encouraged to comply with discovery requests if they find out that their opponent has moved for sanctions.

34. FED. R. CIV. P. 36(a)(3).

3. New York Discovery Procedure

(a) Introduction

For the most part, the rules governing discovery procedures in civil suits brought in New York state courts are similar to the federal rules discussed above. The following is a brief description of the New York statutes, noting some differences between federal and New York state rules. If you have a case in a New York state court, you will need to carefully examine these rules and the cases that apply them. This Section should help you get started.³⁵

New York statutes use the term “disclosure” instead of “discovery,” but the procedures are basically the same. The statutes governing disclosure are contained in Article 31 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules (“N.Y. C.P.L.R.”).

A major difference between New York disclosure and federal discovery is that under the New York rules, parties are not required to meet or give out information voluntarily.³⁶ As a result, you must request any information that you want from your opponent, and your opponent must request any information he wants from you. Also, you and your opponent do not need to wait until after you meet to begin making requests for information. Generally, information can be requested after a complaint is filed and the defendant has responded (or after the time period for the defendant’s response has expired, whichever comes sooner).

The New York and federal discovery processes also differ in how they deal with difficulties that arise during the discovery process. Under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3104, you may request that the court appoint a referee to oversee the process and make recommendations to the judge. This may be helpful if you have difficulty getting your opponent to cooperate. However, if you make this request, the court can make you pay the referee’s expenses. If you are thinking about this option, you may wish to write to the clerk of the court to see how your particular judge generally handles situations like yours. Keep in mind, under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3114, you may need to provide language translations for all questions and answers if a witness does not understand English. The party seeking the information must pay for this translation and the associated costs. Therefore, if you need information from a person who needs a translator and you cannot afford one, you should check with the court to see if you have other options.

(b) Methods of Obtaining Information

(i) Depositions

Depositions in New York state court require twenty days’ notice unless the court orders otherwise.³⁷ Unlike in federal courts, if you want to depose someone who is not a party to the proceeding, New York courts require that you get a subpoena.³⁸ As with the federal rules, any material that you request through disclosure in New York courts must be relevant and not privileged. If you think information that you want to request or information requested from you may be privileged, refer to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101, which details what types of information are privileged and what information may be requested through discovery.

35. Jack B. Weinstein et al., NEW YORK CIVIL PRACTICE LAW AND RULES MANUAL (3d ed. 2010) (“Weinstein/Korn/Miller Manual”), provides a great deal of information on New York civil procedure and disclosure. Its organization follows the structure of the N.Y. C.P.L.R., so you can simply consult the section of the Weinstein/Korn/Miller Manual that corresponds to the N.Y. C.P.L.R. section you want to research.

36. This is different from the federal system. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a).

37. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3107 (McKinney 2019).

38. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3106(b) (McKinney 2019). Note that the subpoena must be served 20 days before the examination.

Section 3106(c) of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. requires the court's permission before a deposition can be taken from a person in prison. This rule affects both parties: it applies if you need to depose a fellow incarcerated person and it also applies to your opponent if he wishes to depose you. If your opponent does depose you, section 3116(a) requires you to read and sign your statement after the deposition to confirm that everything in the deposition is true and correct to the best of your knowledge. If you feel that a change needs to be made, you may write in the change at the end of the deposition. You must also state the reasons for making the change.³⁹ Once your deposition is finished, you are allowed to keep a copy under section 3101(e). It is always a good idea to request a copy so that you have a record of your testimony.

(ii) Interrogatories

The practice and form for interrogatories are similar to those used in the federal courts. However, there are some differences. Under New York law, without a court order, a plaintiff may not serve a defendant with an interrogatory until after the time limit for the defendant to answer the plaintiff's complaint has expired. A defendant can serve interrogatories on any other party, whether or not he has answered the plaintiff's complaint. In other words, after receiving the complaint, the defendant may immediately serve an interrogatory.⁴⁰ In New York, the answering party has only twenty days to answer the interrogatory or to object to the questions.⁴¹

(iii) Requests for Production

In New York, requests for production of documents and other materials are similar to requests in federal court under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. New York also allows you to obtain discovery of materials in the custody and control of non-parties with the court's permission.⁴²

New York courts require requests for production to be reasonable and not overly burdensome. This means that you must know what you are seeking and it must be relevant to the case. Requests for discovery should not be overbroad.⁴³ An example of an overbroad discovery request would be what courts often refer to as a "fishing expedition." A "fishing expedition" is when a party requests a huge range of information in the hopes that something will turn out to be useful, without any specific reason to believe that it will be. An example of a "fishing expedition" would be a discovery request for the entire file of every police officer who worked in the precinct where you were arrested. This kind of discovery request is consistently rejected. Your requests must be relevant and described with "reasonable particularity." In the context of a request for production, "reasonable particularity" means that your request must be sufficiently specific to enable the other party to identify what documents you are requesting without having to turn over all of their files.⁴⁴ Your request must not impose an undue burden on the opposing party. Your request must also be specific enough that the court can determine if the documents you are requesting are appropriate to the case.⁴⁵ As a result, when writing a request for production, you should avoid terms like "all," "all other," or "any and all" unless you are requesting all documents within a small, specific, and identifiable set.⁴⁶

39. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3116(a) (McKinney 2019).

40. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3132 (McKinney 2001).

41. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3133(a) (McKinney 2019).

42. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3111, 3120(1) (McKinney 2001).

43. Konrad v. 136 East 64th Street Corp., 209 A.D.2d 228, 228, 618 N.Y.S.2d 632, 633 (1st Dept. 1994) (finding that an overbroad discovery request constituted an undue burden).

44. State v. De Groot, 35 A.D.2d 240, 241, 315 N.Y.S.2d 310, 311 (3d Dept. 1970); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3120(2) (McKinney 2019).

45. Anello v. Turner Constr. Co., 96 Misc. 2d 208, 210, 408 N.Y.S.2d 845, 846 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1978).

46. Agric. & Indus. Corp. v. Chem. Bank, 94 A.D.2d 671, 672, 462 N.Y.S.2d 667, 668 (1st Dept. 1983).

(iv) Subpoenas

New York rules regarding subpoenas are very similar to the federal rules. New York also allows the “subpoena duces tecum”. A “subpoena duces tecum” is an order for a witness to appear and bring specified documents. In certain proceedings, a judge must issue a subpoena duces tecum.⁴⁷

(v) Admissions

New York rules regarding admission are very similar to the federal rules.⁴⁸ A request for admission is similar to an interrogatory. But, an admission must include a list of statements for your opponent to either admit or deny. The plaintiff may serve a request for an admission after the defendant has answered the complaint or twenty days after service of the summons. The plaintiff may not serve a request for an admission within twenty days before trial. The person receiving a request for an admission has twenty days to deny the allegation or give a detailed explanation of why he cannot admit or deny the allegation.⁴⁹

(vi) Motions to Compel Disclosure and Sanctions

If you are having difficulty obtaining information to which you are entitled, you may move the court to compel disclosure under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3124. If the court grants your motion and your opponent still does not provide you with the information, the court may impose penalties under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3126. You should also keep in mind that N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101(h) requires all persons to amend or supplement information they have submitted if, at any time, they obtain or remember new information that makes their original statements incomplete or wrong. If this requirement is not followed, the court is authorized under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3101(h) to make “whatever order may be just.” This may mean that the court will not allow into the trial any evidence concerning the topic that should have been supplemented.

N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3103 allows the court to issue orders “designed to prevent unreasonable annoyance, expense, embarrassment, disadvantage, or other prejudice to any person or the courts.” If you feel your opponent obtained information improperly,⁵⁰ you may make a motion to the court under N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3103(c). In response, the court may prevent that information from being used as evidence at trial.

This is only a brief overview of the New York Rules. Although they are generally similar to the Federal Rules, be sure to study the relevant sections of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. noted above before bringing a lawsuit in New York state court.

4. Electronic Discovery (“eDiscovery”)

(a) Introduction

The government now electronically stores many of the documents and much of the information that will be useful to your case. For example, many Departments of Corrections maintain useful statistics on their websites. Your own records might be kept in electronic form as well, including medical records, intake forms, and disciplinary hearing records. Finally, if prison officials communicate with one another via email, some of those communications could be relevant to your case. They could show, for example, that prison officials were aware of unsafe conditions in the prison that harmed you.

47. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2301–2308 (McKinney 2019).

48. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3123 (McKinney 2019); Fed. R. Civ. P. 36.

49. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3123 (McKinney 2019). For a more detailed explanation of an admission, see Part B(2)(d)(v) of this Chapter.

50. For an example of information obtained in an “improper manner,” see Levy v. Grandone, 8 A.D.3d 630, 631, 779 N.Y.S.2d 558, 558 (2d. Dept. 2004), where the plaintiff obtained documents without notifying the defendant’s attorney. The court held that the documents were improperly obtained, but because the defendant was not prejudiced by the plaintiff’s action, decided that suppression of the evidence was not warranted.

The process of requesting electronic documents is called “eDiscovery.” You can use the same set of discovery tools to request all sorts of electronic documents, including emails, internet browsing history, and even electronic documents that have been deleted but still exist on backup disks.⁵¹ Mandatory disclosure rules apply to eDiscovery. Your opponent must hand over copies or descriptions of relevant electronic information before you even submit a discovery request.⁵² eDiscovery is subject to the same limitations as paper discovery. Privileged communications are still private, even if they took place over email or another electronic medium of communication.⁵³

(b) Tools and Strategies

If you think you will want to seek digital evidence, you should come up with a clear plan even before meeting with your opponent. Take steps to preserve what evidence you can, such as useful statistics and information on websites. Download, save, and print the content whenever possible so that even if the content is removed, you will have copies in your possession.

The next step is to send a “preservation letter.” A “preservation letter” is a way of telling your opponent to save evidence and prevent your opponent from deleting or tampering with electronic evidence. The letter should describe the data you seek and demand that all digital evidence be separated and preserved. The letter should state that your opponent must not take steps to destroy the digital evidence. The letter should tell your opponent to stop any routine processes that result in the destruction of the specified digital files. You should send a preservation letter before your suit begins, if possible, and well before any voluntary disclosures by you or your opponent.

(c) Federal eDiscovery Rules⁵⁴

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure apply to digital documents in the same way they apply to paper-based records.⁵⁵ If the parties disagree about the scope of eDiscovery, the court will determine whether an eDiscovery request should be granted. The court must consider whether the potential benefits of the proposed eDiscovery will outweigh its costs.⁵⁶ If the court determines that the expense of eDiscovery outweighs its likely benefit, it may make the party requesting the eDiscovery material pay for its production.⁵⁷

51. For cases declaring electronically stored information discoverable, see Aguilar v. Immigration & Customs Enforcement, 255 F.R.D. 350, 354–355 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (discussing metadata); Sec. Exch. Comm’n v. Beacon Hill Asset Mgmt LLC, 231 F.R.D. 134, 145 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (discussing email attachments); Rowe Entm’t, Inc. v. The William Morris Agency, No. 98 Civ. 8272(RPP), 205 F.R.D. 421, 428 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (discussing electronically stored information); Delta Fin. Corp. v. Morrison, 13 Misc. 3d 604, 609, 819 N.Y.S.2d 908, 912 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 2006) (discussing backup tape data).

52. FED. R. CIV. P. 26(a); In re Bristol Myers-Squibb Securities Litigation, 205 F.R.D. 437, 441 (D.N.J. 2002) (noting that the Advisory Committee for the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires mandatory disclosure of relevant electronic evidence but holding that it only applies to evidence in electronic form at the time mandatory disclosure is to be made); 1 JAY E. GRENIG & WILLIAM C. GLEISNER, EDISCOVERY & DIGITAL EVIDENCE § 2:1 (2013) (stating that courts generally treat electronic evidence the same as non-electronic evidence).

53. Baptiste v. Cushman & Wakefield, Inc., No. 03Civ.2102(RCC)(THK), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2579, at *5–9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 20, 2004).

54. Fed. R. Civ. P. 33, 34.

55. FED. R. CIV. P. 33, 34 (see Advisory Committee’s Note to 2006 amendment for additional details regarding electronic documents).

56. Jones v. Goord, No. 95 CIV. 8026(GEL), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8707, at *16–19 (S.D.N.Y. May 16, 2002) (finding that the court should decide costs and benefits of forcing a party to produce eDiscovery on a case by case basis).

57. Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC, 217 F.R.D. 309, 318, 323–324 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (In order to decide which party should pay for the cost of producing the full eDiscovery, the court found that a sample of the eDiscovery materials should be produced so the court can more effectively weigh the costs against the benefits).

(d) New York eDiscovery Rules⁵⁸

New York has adopted the Uniform State Laws addressing eDiscovery.⁵⁹ These rules are similar to the Federal Rules and deal mainly with electronic information during the early stages of discovery. The main rule relating to eDiscovery is Uniform Rule section 202.12. Section 202.12 requires parties to address eDiscovery during all preliminary conferences.⁶⁰ At preliminary conferences, the parties may discuss where key electronic data is preserved and in what form it will be turned over to the requesting party.⁶¹

In New York, the requesting party often bears the costs of producing electronically stored information, although this varies.⁶² As with the Federal Rules, New York courts will balance the parties' competing interests. The courts weigh the need for requested eDiscovery against the burden it imposes upon the producing party.⁶³ As with other discovery requests, the court will reject overly broad requests.⁶⁴

C. Criminal Discovery

The rules governing discovery in a criminal prosecution differ from those that govern a civil proceeding. In general, discovery in criminal cases is more limited.

Part C(1) below discusses criminal discovery in federal cases. It explains that in all criminal cases, the Due Process Clause of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution requires the prosecutor to turn over certain materials to the defendant. Part C(2) reviews the discovery rules that apply in New York criminal cases. Finally, there is a brief note about federal discovery procedures, which are similar to New York's procedures because the New York rules were modeled on them. Remember that this Part does not cover the criminal discovery rules in detail. If you are involved in a criminal case, you should refer to the applicable rules and research any cases that apply those rules.

1. Federal Constitutional Requirements

Under Brady v. Maryland, a prosecutor may not refuse your request for evidence that is "exculpatory"⁶⁵ and "material"⁶⁶ to either guilt or punishment.⁶⁷ You may be entitled to a new trial if the prosecutor withholds such evidence, even by mistake.⁶⁸

58. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.12 (2018); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3120, 3111 (McKinney 2019).

59. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.7 App. A (2018).

60. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.12 (2018).

61. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.12(c)(3) (2018).

62. MBIA Ins. Corp. v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 27 Misc. 3d 1061, 1074–1076, 895 N.Y.S.2d 643, 653–654 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 2010).

63. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.7 App. A; Moore v. Publicis Groupe, 287 F.R.D. 182, 192–193 (S.D.N.Y. 2012).

64. MBIA Ins. Corp. v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 27 Misc. 3d 1061, 1069, 1077, 895 N.Y.S.2d 643, 649, 655 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 2010).

64. "Exculpatory" evidence tends to prove the defendant is not guilty.

66. Evidence is "material" where there is a reasonable probability that its disclosure would have produced a different result at trial. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1565, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 505 (1995); see also United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 674–675, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3379, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 488–489 (1985); United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 104, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2398, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 350 (1976) (holding that "a fair analysis of the holding in Brady indicates that implicit in the requirement of materiality is a concern that the suppressed evidence might have affected the outcome of the trial.").

67. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963). For specific examples of various applications of the Brady rule, see 2 BARRY KAMINS, GORDON MEHLER, ROBERT HILL SCHWARTZ, & JAY SHAPIRO, NEW YORK CRIMINAL PRACTICE § 17.03[8] (Matthew Bender ed., 2d ed. 2020).

68. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 421–422, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1560, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 498 (1995) (awarding a new trial after finding Brady violation); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 153, 92 S. Ct. 763, 766, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104, 108 (1972) (noting that "suppression of material evidence justifies a new trial 'irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution.'"). Note that when the police lose evidence that is potentially exculpatory and therefore cannot comply with Brady, the defendant must show that they acted in bad faith in order to win a new

Brady applies to evidence that supports your claim of innocence and also evidence that weakens the prosecution's case.⁶⁹ One example is any evidence that undermines the credibility of a government witness. This evidence is called "impeachment evidence." The prosecution may also be required to turn over the statements made by a witness before trial if the statements are inconsistent with the testimony that witness plans to give at trial.⁷⁰

In general, Brady requires a prosecutor to disclose all evidence that might be favorable to you. Federal courts have created several limitations to the Brady rule. The prosecutor is required to turn over evidence only if it is "material." The Supreme Court considers evidence to be "material" if there is a "reasonable probability" that this evidence will affect whether you will be found guilty or not guilty at trial.⁷¹ This means that evidence that would probably not affect the final verdict does not have to be disclosed. The court will likely not order a new trial if the prosecutors withheld evidence that was not material.

Second, Brady does not require the prosecution to turn over evidence if you knew it existed or if you should have been able to take advantage of it without the prosecution's help.⁷² In one case, the prosecution told the defense attorney to interview a witness instead of handing over the witness's pretrial statement. The federal court held that even though the prosecution withheld the statement, it had not "suppressed" the evidence under Brady.⁷³

Third, even though Brady requires prosecutors to turn over evidence that might help to show the your innocence, it does not give you "unsupervised authority to search through the [state's] files" in search of exculpatory material.⁷⁴ "[T]he state decides which information must be disclosed. Unless defense counsel becomes aware that other exculpatory evidence was withheld and brings it to the court's attention, the prosecutor's decision" not to disclose cannot be challenged.⁷⁵

Brady represents the standard of discovery guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution in all criminal cases in the United States. Thus, the states are required to provide a criminal defendant with this material as well. However, Brady is only the minimum constitutional requirement guaranteed to criminal defendants. State discovery rules may give you a right to more discovery than this basic constitutional standard.

trial. Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988).

69. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1565, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 505 (1995) (citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1985)) (noting that there is no difference between exculpatory and impeachment evidence for Brady purposes); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154, 92 S. Ct. 763, 766, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104, 108 (1972) (holding that "evidence affecting credibility" falls within the Brady disclosure rule).

70. Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 433, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1565, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 505 (1995); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154, 92 S. Ct. 763, 766, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104, 108 (1972).

71. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 57, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1001, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 57 (1987) (noting that "the government has the obligation to turn over evidence in its possession that is both favorable to the accused and material to guilt or punishment" and defining "material" as a "reasonable probability" that the result of the proceeding would have been different if the evidence had been disclosed) (citing United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3383, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 494 (1985)).

72. See, e.g., United States v. Grossman, 843 F.2d 78, 85 (2d Cir. 1988) (holding that the government was not required to provide allegedly exculpatory grand jury testimony when the defendant knew or should have known the essential facts); United States v. Gaggi, 811 F.2d 47, 59 (2d Cir. 1987) (holding that "no Brady violation occurs if the defendant knew or should have known the essential facts permitting him to take advantage of any exculpatory evidence").

73. See United States v. Salerno, 868 F.2d 524, 542 (2d Cir. 1989) (rejecting defendant's argument that the government should have turned over the grand jury testimony of a potential witness when the defendant could have interviewed the witness himself). Note that in New York, witnesses' pretrial statements must be disclosed even if they are not Brady material. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §240.45(1)(a) (McKinney 2012); see also People v. Rosario, 9 N.Y.2d 286, 289, 173 N.E.2d 881, 883, 213 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450 (1961) (finding that justice entitles the defendant to see a witness' prior statement "as long as the statement relates to the subject matter of the witness' testimony and contains nothing that must be kept confidential").

74. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 58 (1987).

75. Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 59 (1987).

2. New York Procedures

(a) Introduction

New York leads a movement to give criminal defendants more access to information. Though there are still limits on the information that criminal defendants can obtain before trial, New York has broadened discovery under Article 240 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law (“N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law”).⁷⁶ Article 240 is based on Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. So, if you run into a discovery problem and find a federal case interpreting Rule 16 in your favor, the New York state courts usually will consider the case as persuasive (that is, supportive of your case) for interpreting Article 240.⁷⁷

Below is a general overview of discovery rules found in Article 240 of the N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law. If you run into specific problems, you should refer to the statutory provisions themselves and any accompanying notes.⁷⁸

(b) Scope of Discovery

(i) Discovery Between the Accused and the Prosecutor

Article 240 allows you to inspect, photograph, copy, or test certain types of property⁷⁹ that are material⁸⁰ to your case.

Any written, recorded, or oral statement you made to the police (or to a person acting under police direction) that was not made during “the criminal transaction” is discoverable material.⁸¹ You can request this material, as well as similar statements made by a co-defendant who will be tried jointly with you.⁸² This generally applies if you or a co-defendant made a statement following arrest, such as a statement made at the police station. Notice that this does not cover statements made during “the criminal transaction.”⁸³ For example, the prosecution usually does not have to give you a copy of conversations between you and an undercover officer if the conversation occurred during a drug transaction. An exception exists where the statement is recorded electronically. If a statement made during the criminal transaction is recorded on tape, you are entitled to it through discovery.⁸⁴ This can be very helpful in setting up certain defenses, such as entrapment. In an entrapment defense, you need to show that the police got you to commit a crime you would not have committed if they had left you alone.⁸⁵

Any statement made to the police or to a person acting under police direction before the criminal transaction took place is also discoverable. Such evidence might be used to establish a motive or intent to commit the crime. For instance, if you made a statement before a homicide indicating that you hated

76. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 240.10–240.90 (McKinney 2019).

77. People v. Copicotto, 50 N.Y.2d 222, 226, 406 N.E.2d 465, 468, 428 N.Y.S.2d 649, 652 (1980) (stating that the criminal discovery procedure in Article 240 was adopted from FED. R. CRIM. P. 16).

78. Chapter 17 of Waxner’s New York Criminal Practice also provides helpful information about New York criminal discovery. See also 2 BARRY KAMINS, GORDON MEHLER, ROBERT HILL SCHWARTZ, & JAY SHAPIRO, NEW YORK CRIMINAL PRACTICE § 17 (Matthew Bender ed., 2d ed. 2020).

79. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1) (McKinney 2009). Property is defined as “any existing tangible personal or real property, including, but not limited to, books, records, reports, memoranda, papers, photographs, tapes or other electronic recordings, articles of clothing, fingerprints, blood samples, fingernail scrapings or handwriting specimens, but excluding attorneys’ work product.” N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.10(3) (McKinney 2009).

80. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(1)(c) (McKinney 2009).

81. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

82. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009); People v. Arthur, 175 Misc. 2d 742, 768, 673 N.Y.S.2d 486, 506 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1997) (holding that statements of a codefendant are subject to discovery and must be turned over).

83. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

84. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(g) (McKinney 2009).

85. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 40.05 (McKinney 2009).

the victim, it could be used to prove motive to kill them. Therefore, it is important that you discover if any material of this sort exists.

Another type of discoverable material is a transcript of testimony that you or a co-defendant made before a grand jury.⁸⁶ A transcript of your testimony could reveal weaknesses in your case because it could show whether you gave any damaging testimony. It might also help you maintain a consistent version of your story. If, for instance, you make a statement at trial inconsistent with the testimony you gave before the grand jury, the prosecution could point this out and weaken your credibility with the judge or jury. You will want to anticipate and, if possible, prevent this.

Article 240 also allows you to discover scientific evidence.⁸⁷ This evidence might include a written report based on a physical or mental examination or a scientific test or experiment related to the crime for which you are charged.⁸⁸

Tapes or electronic recordings are yet another type of discoverable property.⁸⁹ The prosecutor must disclose any tape or electronic recording that he intends to introduce at trial if you request such material, even if that “recording was made during the course of the criminal transaction.” You are also entitled to reports that reveal “[t]he approximate date, time, and place of the” crime and of the arrest.⁹⁰ This information may be useful to help you establish an alibi. You also may discover “any other property obtained” from you or from a co-defendant.⁹¹ This might include weapons, clothing, drugs, tools, cars, or other items. Discovery of this type of property can help you prepare your case by giving you insight into what the prosecutor will present at trial to link you to the crime.

(ii) Discovery Between the Accused and Third Parties: Subpoena Duces Tecum

The “subpoena duces tecum” is a process where the court orders a witness to bring documents relevant to the court proceedings with him when he comes to testify.⁹² It is frequently used when information is in the hands of third parties (meaning, someone who is not the prosecution and is not the defendant).⁹³ The subpoena duces tecum is the only method prosecutors and defendants can use to discover third party materials. Under Article 240, they cannot use a “demand to produce” or “motion for discovery” (as demands to produce are also called) to obtain information from third parties.⁹⁴

In order to obtain a subpoena duces tecum for pretrial discovery purposes under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law §610.20(3) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2014), you must show the following in your motion:⁹⁵

- (1) The materials are relevant and evidentiary;
- (2) The request is specific;
- (3) The materials are not otherwise reasonably obtainable before trial by the exercise of due diligence;

86. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(b) (McKinney 2009).

87. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(c) (McKinney 2009).

88. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(c) (McKinney 2009).

89. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(g) (McKinney 2009).

90. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(i) (McKinney 2009).

91. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(f) (McKinney 2009).

92. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 610.10(2), (3) (McKinney 2009).

93. See State ex rel. Everglades Cypress Co. v. Smith, 139 So. 794, 795, 104 Fla. 91, 93 (Fla. 1932) (stating that “the process of subpoena duces [t]ecum is applicable to witnesses other than the adverse party to the case”).

94. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.10(1) (McKinney 2009) (only allowing a “demand to produce” to be used on a party to a criminal case).

95. The requirements for a duces tecum in New York are explained in People v. Price, 100 Misc. 2d 372, 379, 419 N.Y.S.2d 415, 420–421 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1979) and People v. Morrison, 148 Misc. 2d 61, 67–68, 559 N.Y.S.2d 1013, 1018 (Crim Ct. N.Y. County 1990). Federal Courts use the same standard. See United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 698–700 (1974) (adopting Judge Weinfeld’s formulation in United States v. Iozia, 13 F.R.D. 335, 338 (S.D.N.Y. 1952) as the appropriate standard for federal judges to use in evaluating a subpoena duces tecum).

(4) You cannot properly prepare for trial without inspecting the material before trial, and not having the information might unreasonably delay the trial; and

(5) The application is made in good faith and is not intended to be a general “fishing expedition.” In addition, your motion for a subpoena duces tecum should indicate a specific time and place for inspection of the desired materials.

(c) Non-discoverable Material

The two types of material that are generally not discoverable under Article 240 are (1) attorney’s work product, and (2) records of any statement made during the criminal transaction, with the exception of any electronic recordings that the prosecutor intends to introduce at trial.⁹⁶ “Attorney’s work product” is defined in the statute as “property to the extent that it contains the opinions, theories, or conclusions of the prosecutor, defense counsel or members of their legal staffs.”⁹⁷ The prosecutor is not required to turn over memoranda or other documents containing his legal theories or opinions. Similarly, you are not required to produce such documents of your own if a prosecutor demands them. For example, you do not need to give the prosecutor a copy of notes that you took about a defense you plan to raise at trial. This rule is very similar to the work product rule found in civil discovery.

(d) Procedures to Obtain Information

Under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.20(1), you may obtain access to any discoverable material before the trial begins by serving a “demand to produce” on the prosecutor.⁹⁸ A demand to produce is a written notice that you may serve on your adversary without having to first get permission from the court. It should include information on what property you want to inspect, and provide reasonable notice of the time at which you hope to conduct the inspection. Be specific in your demands. You are not permitted to go on a “fishing expedition” by requesting to inspect property in very general terms. For example, it would be improper for you to demand inspection of any and all information in the prosecutor’s files that might be material to the case.

You must file a demand to produce within thirty days of your arraignment.⁹⁹ However, if you are unrepresented (that is, you have no lawyer), the thirty-day period does not start until a lawyer first appears in court on your behalf. You must have requested an adjournment to obtain a lawyer’s assistance.

Discovery is not limited to the defendant. The prosecutor, too, may take advantage of reciprocal discovery under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.30.¹⁰⁰ In addition to discovery, you may also be ordered to provide non-testimonial evidence, such as appearing in a lineup, providing a handwriting sample, fingerprinting, posing for photographs (so long as they are not a re-enactment of the crime), or submitting to a reasonable physical or medical inspection.¹⁰¹ As a defendant, you must respond to the 96. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.10(2), (3) (McKinney 2009) (excluding “Attorneys’ work product”); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2009) (excluding statements made during the “criminal transaction”).

97. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.10(2) (McKinney 2009). Police reports, notes and memoranda created for internal use are generally not made available for discovery, unless they contain exculpatory material or material that the D.A. intends to use at trial. See People v. Finkle, 103 Misc. 2d 985, 986, 427 N.Y.S.2d 374, 375 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1980). However, routine police records containing information that must be filed in the normal course of business may be discovered. Such determinations are to be made by the court on an ad hoc basis. People v. Simone, 92 Misc. 2d 306, 312–313, 401 N.Y.S.2d 130, 134 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1977).

98. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 240.80, 240.90, 255.20 (McKinney 2009) for information on filing a motion for an order of discovery.

99. For an example of a demand form, see 2 BARRY KAMINS, GORDON MEHLER, ROBERT HILL SCHWARTZ & JAY SHAPIRO, NEW YORK CRIMINAL PRACTICE, Form No. 17:1 (Matthew Bender ed., 2d ed. 2020).

100. However, unless the court orders otherwise, the prosecutor may only ask for material that is similar in kind and character to the material you are asking for from him. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(2)(b) (McKinney 2009); People v. Copicotto, 50 N.Y.2d 222, 227–228, 428 N.Y.S.2d 649, 653–654, 406 N.E.2d 465, 469–470 (1980).

101. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(2)(b) (McKinney 2009); see also People v. Sirmons, 242 A.D.2d 883, 884–885, 662 N.Y.S.2d 645, 646–647 (4th Dept. 1997).

prosecutor's demands by either providing the desired information or filing a written refusal of demand under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.35.

Discovery does not end once the trial begins. Under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.45, certain materials can still be discovered at the beginning of a trial. These materials can be very important to your case. After the jury has been sworn and before the prosecutor's opening address,¹⁰² the prosecutor must turn over to you the following documents or information:

- (1) Any statement (including testimony before a grand jury or a videotaped examination) made by a person the prosecutor plans to call as a witness that relates to the subject matter of the witness' testimony;¹⁰³
- (2) Any conviction record of a witness to be called at trial if the prosecutor is aware of the record; and
- (3) Information about any pending criminal action against any witness the prosecution intends to call, if the prosecutor is aware of such action.

Note that you have the same duty to give this information to the prosecutor before presenting your case.¹⁰⁴

This information may help you attack the credibility of prosecution witnesses. For example, if you find out that a potential witness for the prosecution has been previously convicted of perjury (lying under oath), you may be able to use this information during cross-examination of the witness to try to "impeach" him (attack his credibility). Revealing this fact during cross-examination may make jurors doubt the truth of what the witness says in his testimony. By attacking the credibility of the witness, you may help your case.

(e) Duty to Disclose

Throughout the entire discovery process, there is a duty to disclose properly requested information. This means that both the prosecutor and the defendant must give the other side any important documents or information that the other side has requested. Do not ignore the prosecutor's demands for discoverable material, because you could face sanctions (penalties) by the court.¹⁰⁵

Despite the general duty to disclose, a prosecutor or defendant may refuse to reveal requested information in some situations. The main requirement for refusing to disclose is that you must have a reasonable belief that the requested material is not discoverable. For example, material may not be discoverable where it is irrelevant, privileged, or subject to a protective order (explained further below).¹⁰⁶ When refusing to comply with a demand, you must do so in writing and explain the reasons for your refusal.¹⁰⁷ This must be done within fifteen days from the time you are served with the demand unless you can show good cause for why you need more time.¹⁰⁸ Your refusal must be served upon the demanding party and a copy of it must be filed with the court.¹⁰⁹

If the prosecutor demands information from you and you refuse, the court may order you to disclose the material anyway.¹¹⁰ Similarly, if the prosecutor refuses to provide information that you demand, but the court finds the prosecutor's refusal unjustified, it will order the prosecutor to give you the

102. In the case of a non-jury trial (or "bench trial"), the information must be turned over before the offering of evidence. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §240.45(1) (McKinney 2009).

103. This is commonly called Rosario material. See People v. Rosario, 9 N.Y.2d 286, 289–290, 173 N.E.2d 881, 882–883, 213 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450–451 (1961) (codified at N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.45(1)(a)). In federal practice, these documents are governed by the Jencks Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3500.

104. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.45(2) (McKinney 2009).

105. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.70 (McKinney 2009).

106. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.35 (McKinney 2009). For examples of privileged material, see Part B(2)(b) of this Chapter.

107. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.35 (McKinney 2009).

108. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.80(2) (McKinney 2009).

109. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.35 (McKinney 2009).

110. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

material you requested.¹¹¹ The court may also order discovery of any other materials the prosecutor intends to use at trial if you show that such property is material to your case and that the request is reasonable.¹¹²

If you feel there is good reason for refusing to turn over some of your material, you can apply for a protective order, which will deny or limit discovery. The prosecutor can apply for a protective order as well, and the court can even issue one on its own initiative (without anyone asking for one).¹¹³ Even other “affected person[s]” impacted by your case can apply for a protective order if they think there is a good reason not to turn over information.¹¹⁴

The court will grant you a protective order if you show good cause for requesting the order. Good cause may be (1) constitutional limitations; (2) the danger that physical evidence may be destroyed or damaged; (3) substantial risk of physical harm to someone; (4) the possibility of intimidation, economic harm, or bribery to someone; (5) a risk of unjustified annoyance or embarrassment to any person; (6) any potential negative effects on the legitimate needs of law enforcement, such as protection of informants; or (7) any other factor that outweighs the usefulness of discovery.¹¹⁵ When filed, a motion for a protective order suspends discovery of the particular matter.¹¹⁶ Suspension means that you or (the prosecutor) won’t be forced to hand over the disputed material until the judge makes a decision on your request for the protective order.

If you refuse to disclose information requested by the prosecutor, you must be sure that you have good cause. If you do not, the court may order sanctions or “take any other appropriate action.”¹¹⁷ Sanctions might include prohibiting you from using specific evidence or witnesses at your trial. The court can also take any other appropriate action that it thinks is reasonable to sanction you. Therefore, it is important that you pay special attention to the procedures involved, particularly to the time limits (deadlines for filing certain motions and requests) found throughout N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 240.

It is also important to remember that there is a continuing duty to disclose any additional information subject to discovery.¹¹⁸ This means that if you requested certain material and the prosecutor later receives information that is covered by your original request, the prosecutor must turn over that information to you. Similarly, you must give the prosecutor material you later become aware of if it is covered by the prosecutor’s earlier discovery request.

(f) Summary

This description of discoverable materials and information is meant to give you only a very general picture of the tools available to you in a criminal proceeding. To use these tools in your case, you should read Article 240 of the N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law carefully. Pay close attention to the sections of the statute that relate to types of discoverable material. You should also look at the case law interpreting the statute, particularly if you are looking for the answer to a very specific question. You can find a lot of the case law by looking in the annotations to the New York statutes, which are listed directly after the statute provisions. Supplemental treatises may also be helpful.

3. Federal Discovery

If your criminal case is in federal court, you should refer to Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure instead for the discovery rules. Since Article 240 of N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law is based on Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the rules are very similar. Federal Rule 16 provides for

111. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(1)(a) (McKinney 2009).

112. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.40(1)(c) (McKinney 2009).

113. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.50(1) (McKinney 2009).

114. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.50(1) (McKinney 2009); see People v. Mileto, 290 A.D.2d 877, 878–879, 737 N.Y.S.2d 170, 173 (3d Dept. 2002).

115. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.50(1) (McKinney 2009).

116. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.50(3) (McKinney 2009).

117. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.70(1) (McKinney 2009).

118. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.60 (McKinney 2009).

basically the same types of discoverable material¹¹⁹ and has similar rules for limiting the discovery process by protective orders.¹²⁰ There are also provisions for sanctions if a party does not follow the Rule¹²¹ or violates the continuing duty to disclose.¹²²

Note, however, that Federal Rule 16 and Article 240 of the N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law are applied differently in practice, even though they are very similar in form. Discovery is harder to get in federal courts than in New York state courts, which makes it more difficult for you to get information from the prosecutor. This is because federal courts allow the prosecutor to make more decisions about what to disclose to you and will generally support those decisions.

When you make a specific request or motion in federal court, be sure to cite the relevant subsections of Rule 16 to support your specific request or motion. If you need to subpoena a third party to produce documents or evidence (subpoena duces tecum), refer to Rule 17(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

D. Conclusion

Discovery allows you and your opponent to find out important information from each other about the case. The rules of discovery govern what information to request or disclose, as well as when to request or disclose it. These rules differ depending on whether your case is civil or criminal and whether you are in state or federal court. It is important to know the rules of discovery that apply to your case because failure to comply may result in penalties, including having your case thrown out of court.

119. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 16(a)–(b).

120. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 16(d)(1).

121. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 16(d)(2).

122. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 16(c).

APPENDIX A

SAMPLE DISCOVERY DOCUMENTS

A-1	Sample Request For Production of Documents
A-2	Sample Request For Admission
A-3	Sample Notice of Interrogatory
A-4	Sample Notice of Motion for Order Compelling Discovery

Selected legal forms for conducting discovery in federal court follow. Do not tear these forms out of the book. You must copy them onto your own paper, filling in appropriate information that applies to you. You may be able to adapt these forms to state procedure if your state's discovery law is similar to that contained in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. In that case, you should replace the federal rule cited with the applicable state law or rule. But you should always consult a legal form book for your state if you are not sure that these forms match your state's procedure.

A-1. SAMPLE REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS¹²³

[proper case caption]¹²⁴

Plaintiff [your name] requests defendant [defendant's name] to respond within [number] days to the following requests, namely that:

Defendant produce and permit plaintiff to inspect and to copy each of the following documents: [You should list the documents either individually (for example, minutes of a prison disciplinary hearing) or by category (for example, personnel files of one of the defendants) and describe each of them.].

[You should also state the time, place, and manner of making the inspection and of making the photocopies. You may wish to request that the defendants send copies of the documents to you at your prison facility. You should also request that the defendants send a list of all of the documents they are sending so that you can make sure that none of the documents were lost in transit.]

Defendant produce and permit plaintiff to inspect and to photograph, test, or sample each of the following objects: [list the objects either individually (baton used by guard) or by category (blood and hair samples of the guard or the samples obtained from you during a medical examination)].

[Again, you should ask the defendants to send the evidence to you, unless you are concerned that the objects will be interfered with before they reach you at the prison. You may wish to request specifically that the objects are sent in sealed containers so that you can see if they are tampered with before they reach you. However, if they are tampered with before they reach you, you may have no remedy.]

Defendant permit plaintiff [or name someone who will get the information for you] to enter [describe property to be entered] and to inspect, photograph, test or sample [describe the portion of property and the objects to be inspected. Since you will not be able to leave your facility to visit a property, you should ask someone else to visit the cell block or other area where the incident that you are complaining about occurred.].

[You should also state the time, place, and manner of making the inspection and performance of any related acts.]

123. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-26 (5th ed. 2009) (Form D-1).

124. Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents," includes examples of what case captions look like.

Dated:
[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

A-2. SAMPLE REQUEST FOR ADMISSION¹²⁵

[proper case caption]

Plaintiff [your name] requests defendant [defendant's name], within [number] days after service of this request, to make the following admissions for the purpose of this action only and subject to all pertinent objections to admissibility which may be interposed at the trial:

That each of the following documents, exhibited with this request, is genuine:

[Here list the documents and describe each document that you have so that the defendant will be able to verify that it is the actual document and not something that has been changed.].

That each of the following statements is true:

[Here list the statements that you would like the defendant to admit. If you believe that the defendant may not want to admit certain things, you may not want to include those things in a request for admission, but in an interrogatory.].

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

A-3. SAMPLE NOTICE OF INTERROGATORY¹²⁶

[proper case caption]

To: [Each party and the attorney for each party]

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that pursuant to Rule 31, Fed. R. Civ. P., the following interrogatories are to be propounded on behalf of [party seeking answers] to [name and address of deponent] by [name and title of deposition officer] pursuant to notice served herewith.

[Set out interrogatories in numerical order.]

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

125. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-30 (5th ed. 2009) (Form F-1).

126. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-23 (5th ed. 2009) (Form B-9).

A-4. SAMPLE NOTICE OF MOTION FOR ORDER COMPELLING DISCOVERY¹²⁷

Note: This motion seeks to compel production of documents. This form may also be used if your opponent has refused to comply with a different discovery request (for example, failing to respond to interrogatories). Simply change the language referring to a request for production of documents to indicate the type of discovery you are seeking.

[proper caption]

[Plaintiff/defendant] moves this court for an order pursuant to Rule 37 of Fed. R. Civ. P. [describe relief sought]. A copy of a proposed order is attached to this motion. The reasons supporting this motion include [explain reasons such as the defendant's failure to answer your interrogatories, to produce records, or to allow you to perform discovery in a way that was practical for you].

[Plaintiff/defendant] further moves the court for an order seeking reasonable attorney's fees and costs and expenses incurred in this proceeding. There exists substantial justification for seeking fees, costs and expenses, because [explain reasons, such as defendant's ignoring your requests or defendant's telling you that your case was worthless because you are an incarcerated person].

This motion is based upon the notice, pleadings, records, and files in this action, and the attached supporting affidavits [or declarations] of [party, witness, attorney—persons who can state that they know that the defendant did not produce the documents or that you did not receive them] and the attached memorandum of law [if necessary or appropriate], and oral and documentary evidence to be presented at the hearing on the motion [if you think a hearing will be necessary].

Dated:

[date] [city, state]

Signed,
[your name & address]
Plaintiff, pro se.

127. Adapted from Roger S. Haydock & David F. Herr, Discovery Practice app. B-34 (5th ed. 2009) (Form G-1).

CHAPTER 9

APPEALING YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains how you can get your conviction undone or your sentence reduced if something was done incorrectly at your trial or hearing. To do so, you “appeal” to an “appellate court,” which has the power to overrule a lower court’s decision. You, as the “appellant,” get the chance to argue that the trial court’s judgment against you was wrong because of harmful legal errors that occurred in deciding your case.¹

This Chapter deals specifically with the laws of New York State. If you have been convicted or sentenced in a federal court or in another state’s court, your appeal will be governed by federal law or by the law of that other state and so you should use your prison’s law library to find information about the law that applies to your appeal. Even if New York law does not apply to your appeal, however, you may find it useful to read this Chapter for important background information about appeals in general.

For your appeal, you should get a lawyer to assist you as soon as possible. The Constitution guarantees that you can have a lawyer for your appeal, even if you can’t pay for one.² You must act quickly because there are time limits for filing an appeal. These time limits are strictly enforced, and are therefore very important. Once they expire, it may be impossible for an appellate court to consider your appeal, even if your appeal would otherwise have been successful. See Part B(1) for information about time limits.

You should make sure you have a lawyer because, among other reasons, many issues that could win your appeal are difficult to recognize by yourself. Because of the time limits, appealing by yourself is risky: you may lose the chance to raise an issue before you learn enough to even notice it. See Part C(1) for information on how you can get a lawyer.

Part A of this Chapter (the part you are reading now) is the introduction. Part B discusses limitations on your right to appeal, including time limits and restrictions that apply if you pleaded guilty. Part C describes what you can do before you appeal or while your appeal is pending, including how to get a lawyer and how to request release on bail. Part D explains what an appellate court can do when it considers your appeal. Part E explains how to actually file papers for your appeal. Part F discusses the possibility of continuing your appeal if the first appellate court decides against you.³ Part G explains what you can do if your appellate lawyer is not providing “effective assistance of appellate counsel.” Part H is a brief conclusion.

At the end of this Chapter, Appendix A helps you figure out where you should file your appeal. Appendix B provides sample papers for appeals, including papers needed to get a lawyer without cost, to get released on bail pending appeal, and to get an extension of time to file your appeal. These forms

* This Chapter was revised by Gregory K. Johnson based on previous versions by Douglas Shively, Sydney Bird, Miranda Berge, Peggy Cross, Joy Fuyuno, Deidra D. Dixon, Janet Ellis, and Amy Metzler. Special thanks to Lorca Morello of The Legal Aid Society of New York for her valuable comments.

1. A judgment means your conviction (the entry of a guilty plea or a guilty verdict) and your sentence. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 1.20(13)–(15) (McKinney 2009).

2. See Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 356–358, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–817, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 815–817 (1963) (establishing that the Constitution requires the state to pay for a lawyer for a defendant who cannot afford one for his first appeal). See also Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 605, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 2583, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552, 556 (2005) (explaining that, assuming state law allows for any criminal appeal at all, the Douglas right applies to a first appeal even if the appeal requires permission under state law, but does not apply to second appeals that require permission).

3. See Melvin Bressler et al., Appeals in Criminal Cases, in New York Criminal Practice Handbook 651, 651 (Lawrence N. Gray ed., 2d ed. 1998 & Supp. 2007). Bressler has been an important resource in the writing of this Chapter of the JLM. We strongly recommend it for a detailed, chronological discussion of the criminal appellate process in New York State.

are only samples: you or your lawyer must write your own versions of these papers. Ideally, you should read the entire Chapter before you file any papers. If you file papers incorrectly or just tear these papers out of the book and send them to a court, the court may ignore them and you may lose your chance to appeal.

Finally, before starting your appeal, you should be realistic about your chances of winning an appeal. Very few criminal appeals are granted in the end. However, if you think a mistake was made in your case, or something else went wrong, you should always do what you can. It is possible you may succeed.

B. Limits on Your Right to Appeal

When deciding whether you should appeal, you should first determine whether there are any limits on your right to do so. This is an important first step because you may have already lost all or part of your right to appeal. You could have waived (given up) or forfeited (lost) your right to appeal in several ways. For example, if you pleaded guilty, you might have agreed to waive your right to appeal as part of a plea bargain. A plea bargain takes place when the prosecutor and the accused negotiate a resolution of the case subject to court approval, without a trial.⁴ Even if you did not waive your right to appeal, your right to appeal may be limited if you missed certain deadlines or failed to raise certain objections in the trial court. Also, based on which court convicted or sentenced you, and what specifically your conviction or sentence was, you may only be able to file your appeal with certain courts.

This Part will help you to identify if there are any potential limits on your right to appeal. If limits on your right to appeal exist, this Part will also help you determine whether it is possible for you to get your right to appeal reinstated (to get it back).

If you're unsure whether an appeal is possible for you, you should promptly go ahead and file your notice of appeal and get a lawyer anyway. Your appeal may be denied in the end, or you or your appellate lawyer may choose not to continue the appeal, but you'll be no worse off—and if you are eligible to appeal, waiting may cause you to lose your chance.

1. Time Limits

The general rule is that you will lose your right to appeal if you wait too long after your sentencing to file a notice of appeal. To preserve your right to appeal, you must file two copies of a notice of appeal with the clerk of your trial court within thirty days of the date you were sentenced.⁵ You must count thirty days from your original sentencing, even if you were re-sentenced later. However, if you were re-sentenced after the deadline to appeal passes, then you may count from the date of the new sentence, but only if you want to appeal that new sentence.⁶ Within the same thirty-day period, you must also serve a copy of the notice of appeal on the District Attorney of the county in which your trial was held.⁷ See Part E for information on preparing and filing your papers. This thirty-day period is a critical period, and you have a constitutional right to counsel during this time.⁸ THESE TIME LIMITS ARE EXTREMELY IMPORTANT.

If you don't file a notice of appeal within thirty days, you usually lose your right to appeal entirely. However, you may be able to recover your right to appeal by filing a motion for a time extension.⁹ Your

4. For more information on waiving your right to an appeal as a result of entering into a plea bargain, see Chapter 40 of the JLM.

5. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

6. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.30(3) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

7. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(1)(b) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

8. See People v. Montgomery, 24 N.Y.2d 130, 133, 247 N.E.2d 130, 133, 299 N.Y.S.2d 156, 160 (1969) ("It is apparent that the 30-day period in which an appeal must be docketed is a critical time for the defendant. It cannot be successfully argued that an indigent defendant does not have the right to counsel at this stage of his proceedings.").

9. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012). The extension may be for no more than 30 days, counting from the date of the decision to grant the extension.

motion for a time extension must be within one year of the original deadline for filing a notice of appeal.¹⁰ In addition, you must show that there was “excusable neglect or good cause” as to why you missed your deadline.¹¹ Exactly what “excusable neglect or good cause” actually means is different depending on what state you are in.

Here are some examples of what some courts around the country have decided are “excusable neglect or good cause”:

- (1) Your lawyer abandoned you and failed to tell both you and the court that he is no longer your lawyer;¹²
- (2) Your lawyer cannot find you because you’ve been moved around different prisons;¹³
- (3) You tell your lawyer you want to appeal, but your lawyer does not file the right papers and appeal on your behalf;¹⁴
- (4) Your lawyer fails to communicate with you at all during the window when you are supposed to file your appeal.¹⁵

Under New York State law, the following exceptions have been recognized to allow filing an appeal after the deadline:¹⁶

- (1) A public servant behaved improperly (for example, if a prosecutor intentionally acted to prevent your good-faith efforts to file on time from succeeding¹⁷);
- (2) Your lawyer behaved improperly, died, or became disabled (examples of improper conduct include your lawyer’s failure to inform you in writing of your right to appeal,¹⁸

10. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012). Although this one-year time limit for making a motion for an extension of time cannot be extended, an appellate court might decide not to enforce the one-year time limit in extremely rare circumstances. See People v. Thomas, 47 N.Y.2d 37, 42–43, 389 N.E.2d 1094, 1096, 416 N.Y.S.2d 573, 575–576 (1979) (holding that, in the interest of justice, the district attorney could not enforce the one-year time limit to file a 460.30 motion when the defendant had made an honest effort to appeal within the appropriate time limit, and action by the district attorney had contributed to the failure of the defendant’s timely attempt to appeal).

11. FED. R. APP. P. 4(b)(4). But see Espinal v. State, 159 Misc. 2d 1051, 1054–1057, 607 N.Y.S.2d 1008, 1010–1012 (Ct. Cl. 1993) (Court of Claims held that in New York, the statutes governing filing and service of the papers initiating Court of Claims actions “do not approximate” FED. R. APP. P. 4, because the New York legislature had enacted enough procedures to protect incarcerated pro se litigants. The “mailbox” filing rule, in which a filing is deemed timely if deposited if the inmate deposits the filing in institution’s internal mailing system on time, was rejected.).

12. See Maples v. Thomas, 565 U.S. 266, 283, 132 S. Ct. 912, 924, 181 L. Ed. 2d 807 (2012) (granting defendant habeas corpus relief where defense counsels had both quit the law firm representing the defendant and forgot to inform the court and the defendant that they were no longer able to represent him).

13. See United States v. Smith, 60 F.3d 595, 596 (9th Cir. 1995) (granting an extension of time where the defendant and his lawyer “attempted to contact each other regarding whether to file a notice of appeal, but that it was difficult . . . [because the defendant] was moved to prisons in different states three times during the period immediately following entry of the judgment.”).

14. See Kent v. United States, 423 F.2d 1050, 1051 (5th Cir. 1970) (granting an extension of time where the defendant “desired an appeal and made this desire known to counsel and counsel declined to take and prosecute the appeal”).

15. See Corral v. United States, 498 F.3d 470, 475 (7th Cir. 2007) (granting an extension of time where even though defendant did not want to appeal at first but counsel had not been discharged, court never gave counsel permission to withdraw, counsel did not return phone calls made by defendant’s wife during appeal period requesting assistance, and defendant’s phone calls to counsel made during the appeal period from prison were blocked).

16. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

17. See, e.g., People v. Johnson, 69 N.Y.2d 339, 341, 506 N.E.2d 1177, 1178, 514 N.Y.S.2d 324, 325 (1987) (allowing an appeal after the deadline because defendant’s prior, timely attempts to appeal had been prevented by actions of the state).

18. See People v. Nunez, 178 A.D.2d 1029, 1029, 578 N.Y.S.2d 780, 781 (4th Dept. 1991) (granting extension of time to appeal because defense counsel failed to provide defendant with written notice of right to appeal).

- failure to inform you of your right to apply for leave to appeal as a poor person,¹⁹ and failure to start your appeal after being informed of your desire to appeal²⁰); or
- (3) You were unable to communicate with your lawyer about whether to appeal before the filing deadline had passed. To win an extension based on an inability to communicate with your lawyer, the inability to communicate must have been (a) because you were in prison and (b) through no fault of your attorney's or of your own (meaning that this was not because you or your attorney made a mistake).²¹

Unless you can satisfy both of these requirements—specifically, (1) making your motion for an extension within one year after your original thirty days to appeal has passed and (2) showing you missed your original deadline to appeal due to one or more of the three allowable factors—then you will not be granted a time extension. However, if more than a year and 30 days have passed, and your claim involves your attorney's unreasonable failure to file an appeal, you can file a “writ of error coram nobis”²² with the Appellate Division to claim ineffective assistance of counsel, as described in Part G(3) of this Chapter.²³ This is different from a 460.30 motion for a time extension, which is discussed below.

If you think that you may satisfy these requirements, then you should send your motion for a time extension to the appropriate appellate court.²⁴ See Form B-5 in Appendix B of this Chapter for an example of a motion for time extension, and see Appendix A of this Chapter to figure out which court you should send your motion to. The motion must be in writing and must contain a sworn statement of the facts that make you eligible for a time extension. Additionally, you must also notify the District Attorney in your jurisdiction of your motion so that the District Attorney can file papers opposing your motion.²⁵

If there are questions about the facts underlying your request for an extension—for example, whether you were really unable to communicate with your lawyer or simply did not do so—the appellate court may order the trial court to hold a hearing on these issues.²⁶ Once the facts are clarified and resolved, or if there were no factual questions to begin with, the appellate court will rule on your motion for an extension, and either grant or deny it.

If the appellate court grants you a time extension, it will give you no more than thirty days from the day of its decision to file your appeal.²⁷ If an intermediate appellate court denies your motion for an extension, you may appeal that denial only if both (1) the intermediate appellate court states that it based its decision solely on the law without finding facts, and (2) a judge on the Court of Appeals gives you permission to appeal.²⁸ Additionally, you may not appeal a decision denying an extension if your appeal would always have required permission of the same court that denied the extension (that is, if the appeal was not of right but rather required permission of the court. In short, if you cannot get

19. See People v. Lord, 181 A.D.2d 1076, 1076, 582 N.Y.S.2d 305, 305 (4th Dep't. 1992) (granting extension of time to appeal where defense counsel, among other mistakes, gave defendant “improper advice concerning the manner of applying for leave to appeal as a poor person”).

20. See People v. Lord, 181 A.D.2d 1076, 1076, 582 N.Y.S.2d 305, 306 (4th Dep't. 1992) (granting extension of time to appeal where defense counsel, among other mistakes, had failed to carry out defendant's request to appeal).

21. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

22. A writ of error coram nobis is an order by an appeals court demanding that the lower court consider facts which might have changed the outcome of the lower court case if known at the time of trial. Coram nobis is a Latin term meaning the “error before us.” See Error Coram Nobis, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014).

23. See People v. Watson, 49 A.D.3d 570, 570, 853 N.Y.S.2d 581, 581 (2008) (stating that “the proper procedure for addressing” a claim of ineffective counsel “is an application of a writ of error coram nobis addressed to this Court”).

24. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012). See Form B-5 in Appendix B of this Chapter for a sample notice of a motion for extension of time.

25. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(2) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

26. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(5) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

27. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.30(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

28. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 460.30(6) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

an extension without the approval of the court that denied your motion, you cannot appeal them denying your motion for extension of time.).²⁹

2. Plea Agreements³⁰

If you pleaded guilty, your right to appeal is limited in certain ways. If you pleaded guilty as part of a plea bargain or negotiated sentence, you automatically forfeited (lost) your right to appeal certain matters. This is true even if your plea agreement does not say so. Moreover, many plea agreements contain terms in which you waive (give up) the right to appeal even more matters, which would be listed in the agreement. The next two subsections explain these limits on your right to appeal.

Be aware that if you successfully appeal from a guilty plea, you will still have to face all the original charges against you. If you then negotiate a new plea agreement, or if you go to trial and are convicted, your new sentence could actually be worse than the sentence you received under your earlier plea. Thus, unless you have already received the worst possible sentence, there is some risk involved in appealing a guilty plea.

(a) Rights Automatically Forfeited by Your Guilty Plea

If you pleaded guilty, you automatically forfeited the right to appeal many types of errors, even if your plea agreement does not specify them.³¹ You can plead guilty to many different things. You may plead guilty to the entire charge/indictment. If you have been charged with only one crime, you may plead guilty only to a lesser included offense (defined in glossary). This requires the consent of the court and the District Attorney. If you have been charged with two or more offenses, you may: (1) plead guilty to one or more but not all of the offenses charged, or (2) plead guilty to a lesser included offense corresponding to any of the offenses charged, or (3) plead guilty for any combination of the offenses charged and their corresponding lesser included offenses.³² In general, by pleading guilty, you give up 29. See People v. Nealy, 82 N.Y.2d 773, 773, 624 N.E.2d 175, 176, 603 N.Y.S.2d 991 (1993) (holding that defendant may not appeal the appellate division's denial of an extension of time to request permission to appeal to that appellate division).

30. For more information on entering into plea bargains, see Chapter 40 of the JLM.

31. See generally N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012); People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 231 n.3, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776 n.3, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 n.3 (2000) (listing claims that are forfeited by guilty plea); People v. Gerber, 182 A.D.2d 252, 259–260, 589 N.Y.S.2d 171, 174–175 (2d Dept. 1992) (listing claims that are forfeited by guilty plea).

32. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10(4)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012.).

the right to argue the factual issue of guilt.³³ Additionally, you give up the right to raise problems with discovery or other pretrial matters.³⁴ You may not appeal the following issues if you pleaded guilty:

- (1) The insufficiency of the evidence before the grand jury;³⁵
- (2) The insufficiency of instructions given to the grand jury;³⁶
- (3) The refusal of the trial court to try you separately from a co-defendant;³⁷
- (4) The denial of your right to a jury trial;³⁸
- (5) The denial of your right of confrontation;³⁹
- (6) The suppression of evidence, if you pleaded without obtaining an explicit ruling on this;⁴⁰
- (7) The limits on your privilege against self-incrimination;⁴¹
- (8) The expiration of a statute of limitation (a time limit for bringing charges);⁴²
- (9) The lack of a factual basis for a plea to a lesser charge;⁴³
- (10) The absence of counsel during certain proceedings; and⁴⁴
- (11) Your statutory (as opposed to constitutional) right to a speedy trial.⁴⁵

By pleading guilty, however, you did not forfeit your entire right to appeal. Generally, you still have the right to appeal about the following errors (and others⁴⁶):

- (1) You were denied your constitutional right to a speedy trial,⁴⁷
- (2) You were charged in violation of your constitutional right against double jeopardy,⁴⁸
- (3) You were not competent to stand trial,⁴⁹
- (4) The statute under which you were convicted is unconstitutional,⁵⁰
- (5) Your sentence was illegal,⁵¹
- (6) Your plea was not voluntary or knowing,⁵²
- (7) Jurisdiction was not proper in the trial court,⁵³
- (8) Your conviction was based entirely upon evidence the prosecutor knew was false,⁵⁴
- (9) You were improperly denied a motion to suppress evidence,⁵⁵ or
- (10) The trial court based your sentence on an improper determination of your prior-felon status.⁵⁶

Even though you did not automatically give up your right to appeal the issues listed above by pleading guilty, you may have given up the right to appeal these issues by other means. You could 33. See People v. Garcia, 216 A.D.2d 36, 36–37, 627 N.Y.S.2d 666, 667 (1st Dept. 1995) (“By pleading guilty, the defendant has waived his right to litigate the issue of his guilt.”).

34. See People v. Berezansky, 229 A.D.2d 768, 771, 646 N.Y.S.2d 574, 577 (3d Dep’t. 1996) (holding that a defendant who waives indictment and pleads guilty “waives all discovery and all other pretrial and trial matters.”).

35. See People v. Caleca, 273 A.D.2d 476, 476, 711 N.Y.S.2d 743, 744 (2d Dept. 2000) (“By pleading guilty, the defendant waived his claim that the evidence submitted to the Grand Jury was not sufficient to support the indictment.”).

36. See People v. Palo, 299 A.D.2d 871, 871, 749 N.Y.S.2d 452, 452 (4th Dept. 2002) (“The contention of defendant that the prosecutor improperly instructed the grand jury does not survive his plea of guilty.”).

37. See People v. Shepphard, 177 A.D.2d 668, 668, 576 N.Y.S.2d 368, 368 (2d Dept. 1991) (“The defendant’s plea of guilty constituted a waiver of the right to seek appellate review of the denial of his severance motion”).

38. See People v. Walls, 129 A.D.2d 751, 751, 514 N.Y.S.2d 513, 513 (2d Dept. 1987) (holding that a guilty plea waives the right to appeal issues relating to both the right to a jury trial and the right to confront witnesses); see also People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) (“[A] guilty plea signals defendant’s ‘intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including . . . the right to trial by jury.’” (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–202, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78) (1971))).

39. See People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) (“[A] guilty plea signals defendant’s ‘intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including the right to confrontation.’” (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–202, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78) (1971))); see also People v. Pacherille, 25 N.Y.3d 1021, 1023, 32 N.E.3d 393, 394, 10 N.Y.S.3d 178, 179 (2015).

40. See People v. Smith, 304 A.D.2d 677, 677, 757 N.Y.S.2d 491, 491 (2d Dep’t. 2003) (“By pleading guilty before making a motion to suppress evidence . . . the defendant waived her claim”).

41. See People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) (“[A] guilty plea signals defendant’s ‘intention not to litigate the question of his guilt, and necessarily involves the surrender of certain constitutional rights, including ... the privilege against self-incrimination.’” (quoting People v. Lynn, 28 N.Y.2d 196, 201–202, 269 N.E.2d 794, 797, 321 N.Y.S.2d 74, 78) (1971))).

42. See People v. Parilla, 8 N.Y.3d 654, 659, 870 N.E.2d 142, 145, 838 N.Y.S.2d 824, 827 (2007) (holding that a guilty plea waives the right to a statute of limitations defense).

43. See People v. Clairborne, 29 N.Y.2d 950, 951, 280 N.E.2d 366, 367, 329 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581 (1972) (“A bargained guilty plea to a lesser crime makes unnecessary a factual basis for the particular crime confessed.”).

44. See People v. Reiblein, 200 A.D.2d 281, 283, 613 N.Y.S.2d 789, 790 (3d Dept. 1994), appeal denied, 84 N.Y.2d 831, 641 N.E.2d 172, 617 N.Y.S.2d 151 (3d Dep’t. 1994) (holding that, by pleading guilty, defendant waived right to appeal on the grounds that defense counsel was not present at psychiatric interview).

45. See People v. Smith, 272 A.D.2d 679, 681, 708 N.Y.S.2d 485, 487 (3d Dept. 2000) (“By pleading guilty, defendant waived appellate review of his statutory right to a speedy trial.”); see generally N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012). A statutory right is a right created by an ordinary law passed by the legislature. A constitutional right is a right guaranteed by the state or federal constitution. Courts are usually less willing to decide that constitutional rights—which are often more fundamental and important—have been waived.

46. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10 nn.241–97 (McKinney 2009) (notes of decision discussing waivers resulting from guilty plea); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15 n.18 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015) (note of decision discussing preservation of issues on appeal); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 710.70 n.69 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015) (note of decision discussing waiver of right to appeal following a guilty plea). See also People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 230–31, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 (2000) (describing the issues that survive a guilty plea, such as jurisdictional matters).

47. See People v. Campbell, 97 N.Y.2d 532, 535, 769 N.E.2d 1288, 1289, 743 N.Y.S.2d 396, 397–398 (2002) (noting that the constitutionally protected right to a speedy trial is required for a fundamentally fair trial and to protect the integrity of criminal proceedings, and therefore cannot be waived); People v. Smith, 272 A.D.2d 679, 681, 708 N.Y.S.2d 485, 487 (3d Dept. 2000) (“[D]efendant’s right to raise his constitutional right to a speedy trial survives both his guilty plea and the waiver of his right to appeal.”) (citations omitted); People v. Hansen, 95 N.Y.2d 227, 230–31 n.2, 738 N.E.2d 773, 776 n.2, 715 N.Y.S.2d 369, 372 n.2 (2000) (listing speedy trial right among constitutional claims that survive a guilty plea).

48. See Menna v. New York, 423 U.S. 61, 62–63, 96 S. Ct. 241, 242, 46 L. Ed. 195, 197–98 (1975) (holding that a guilty plea does not waive a claim that the charges amounted to unconstitutional double jeopardy); People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 218, 220–221, 486 N.E.2d 813, 814–816, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 956–958 (1985) (holding that a defendant’s constitutional double jeopardy claim survives a guilty plea and may be raised for the first time on appeal). But note that you may not raise your statutory right against double jeopardy under § 40.20 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law if you have pleaded guilty. See People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 219–220, 486 N.E.2d 813, 815, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 957 (1985) (holding that a guilty plea results in forfeiture of statutory double jeopardy claim, even if presented to the court prior to the plea); see also People v. Gray, 300 A.D.2d 696, 697, 752 N.Y.S.2d 731, 733 (2d Dep’t. 2002) (holding that a constitutional double jeopardy claim survives a guilty plea but that a statutory claim does not).

49. See People v. Lopez, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 255, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1148, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (2006) (noting that a “challenge to a defendant’s competency . . .” is not waived by pleading guilty and waiving the right to appeal); People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S. 46, 50 (1992) (noting the same); People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 332 N.E.2d 870, 874, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 697 (1975) (holding that a guilty plea does not waive right to a mandated competency hearing); People v. Bennefield, 306 A.D.2d 911, 911, 761 N.Y.S.2d 906, 907 (4th Dept. 2003) (noting that “issues relating to defendant’s competency survive” a guilty plea and a waiver of a right to appeal).

“Competency to stand trial” is a technical phrase that means the defendant is able to stand trial because he understands the charges against him, the severity of the charges, the potential punishments that he can be sentenced to if found guilty, the proceedings that are occurring, and is capable of assisting in his own defense. See Competency, Black’s Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014).

50. See Gesicki v. Oswald, 336 F. Supp. 371, 374 n.3 (S.D.N.Y. 1971), aff’d, 406 U.S. 913, 92 S. Ct. 1773, 32 L. Ed. 2d 113 (1972) (holding that a guilty plea does not waive the right to contest the constitutionality of the statute under which a defendant was convicted); see also People v. Lee, 58 N.Y.2d 491, 493, 448 N.E.2d 1328, 1329, 462 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1983) (“A defendant by a plea of guilty does not forfeit the right on appeal from the conviction to challenge the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted.”).

51. See People v. Lopez, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 255–56, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1148–1149, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626–627 (2006) (noting that, while a claim challenging the legality of a sentence cannot be waived by a guilty plea, explicit have specifically given up (waived) your right to appeal in your plea agreement or you may have given up your right to appeal by failing to preserve the issues at trial (that is, failing to object when the mistakes were first made). Waiver and preservation are discussed in Part B(2)(b) and Part B(3) of this Chapter, respectively.

(b) Rights You Waive by Agreement

In addition to pleading guilty, you may also have agreed to waive your right to appeal as part of a plea bargain or negotiated sentence.⁵⁷ If your plea included an agreement to waive your right to appeal, waiver of the right to appeal does waive the right to appeal on the basis of the severity of the agreed-upon sentence); People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 9, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1025, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972 (1989) (finding that a claim challenging the legality of the sentence cannot be waived by a guilty plea). For an example of a clearly illegal sentence, see People v. Williams, 14 N.Y.3d 198, 212–13, 925 N.E.2d 878, 886–887, 899 N.Y.S.2d 76, 84–85 (2010) (holding that a determinate sentence that did not include mandatory post-release supervision, as was required by applicable statutory law, was illegal).

52. See People v. Catu, 4 N.Y.3d 242, 244–245, 825 N.E.2d 1081, 1082, 792 N.Y.S.2d 887, 888 (2005) (reversing conviction on the basis that guilty plea was not “voluntary and intelligent” since defendant was not told he would be subject to post-release supervision); People v. Gerber, 182 A.D.2d 252, 261, 589 N.Y.S.2d 171, 176 (2d Dept. 1992) (“[A] defendant who pleads guilty is entitled to raise appellate contentions regarding ... the voluntary and knowing nature of his plea . . .”). See also JLM, Chapter 9, Part D(1)–(2) for guilty pleas or plea agreements that do not meet constitutional requirements of “knowing, voluntary, and intelligent.” You can argue involuntariness on direct appeal if the involuntariness is apparent on the record and you moved to withdraw your plea before sentencing. See People v. Brown, 14 N.Y.3d 113, 897 N.Y.S.2d 674 (2010) (withdrawing a guilty plea for involuntariness where the defendant made the plea under duress because the plea bargain granted him a furlough to see his seriously ill child and his previous requests to visit his child had been previously denied). If you did not move to withdraw, courts may refuse to consider the issue as “unpreserved.” See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more on the preservation requirement. There is an important exception to this requirement: if something in the plea allocution shows that you did not understand what you were pleading guilty to, and the court did not ask any questions to make sure, you can argue on appeal that the plea was not knowing and voluntary, even though you did not move to withdraw it. People v. McNair, 13 N.Y.3d 821, 822–823, 920 N.E.2d 929, 930, 892 N.Y.S.2d 822, 823 (2009) (holding that trial court must ask further questions where defendant’s remarks “cast significant doubt” on guilt). If the involuntariness has to do with matters outside the record, such as ineffectiveness of trial counsel, file a 440.10 motion instead of an appeal. For information on Article 440 appeals, see JLM, Chapter 20.

53. See People v. Konieczny, 2 N.Y.3d 569, 573, 813 N.E.2d 626, 628, 780 N.Y.S.2d 546, 548 (2004) (recognizing that jurisdictional issues survive a guilty plea and are exceptions to the forfeiture rule); People v. Taylor, 65 N.Y.2d 1, 5, 478 N.E.2d 755, 757, 489 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (1985) (“A guilty plea does not forfeit the right to raise a jurisdictional defect . . .”).

54. See People v. Pelchat, 62 N.Y.2d 97, 108, 464 N.E.2d 447, 453, 476 N.Y.S.2d 79, 85 (1984) (finding that a defendant who pleaded guilty was allowed to challenge a conviction when the prosecutor knowingly based the charges on false evidence); People v. Whitehurst, 291 A.D.2d 83, 88, 737 N.Y.S.2d 152, 156 (3d Dept. 2002) (recognizing that a defendant does not waive right to bring “a challenge based upon a guilty plea to an accusatory instrument which is void because of the prosecutor’s knowledge that the only evidence to support it is false” (quoting People v. Pelchat, 62 N.Y.2d 97, 108, 464 N.E.2d 447, 453, 476 N.Y.S.2d 79, 85 (1984))).

55. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 710.70(2) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 710.70 nn. 14, 69 (McKinney 2009.) A motion to suppress is “a request that the court prohibit the introduction of illegally obtained evidence at a criminal trial.” Motion to Suppress, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

56. See People v. Lacend, 140 A.D.2d 243, 244, 528 N.Y.S.2d 832, 833 (1st Dep’t. 1988) (modifying status of defendant, who had pleaded guilty, from predicate violent felon to predicate felon and remanding for re-sentencing).

57. A waiver generally covers any aspect of a case that does not fall within certain exceptions. For example, you may have waived and given up the right to appeal your conviction on the grounds that your lawyer failed to raise certain defenses. See People v. Parilla, 8 N.Y.3d 654, 659–660, 870 N.E.2d 142, 145–146, 838 N.Y.S.2d 824, 827–828 (2007) (holding that a waiver of the right to appeal as part of a plea agreement prevented the defendant from raising the issue of a statute of limitations defense on appeal). For information on how other states address the issue of waivers by agreement, see Robert K. Calhoun, Waiver of the Right to Appeal, 23 Hastings Const. L. Q. 127, 135–46 (1995).

you still have several options. First, you may claim your waiver was invalid. A waiver is considered invalid if you did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily agree to waive your right to appeal.⁵⁸

Second, there are some claims that can never be waived by plea agreement because they are considered very important to society. This means that even if you waived your right to appeal in a plea

58. See People v. Seaberg, 74 N.Y.2d 1, 11, 541 N.E.2d 1022, 1026–1027, 543 N.Y.S.2d 968, 972–973 (1989) (“A waiver, to be enforceable, must not only be voluntary but also knowing and intelligent.”). A waiver is not voluntary, knowing, and intelligent (and therefore is not valid) if the trial record does not demonstrate that the trial court made certain that the defendant understood the meaning of the waiver before agreeing to it. See People v. Billingslea, 6 N.Y.3d 248, 257, 844 N.E.2d 1145, 1149–1150, 811 N.Y.S.2d 623, 627–628 (2006) (holding that trial court’s statement that “when you plead guilty you waive your right of appeal” was not sufficient for the waiver to be knowing since the court did not explain that the defendant was agreeing to waive rights beyond those that are automatically forfeited by any guilty plea). However, a waiver that is adequately explained in writing and signed by the defendant may be valid even if the trial court does not fully explain the terms of the waiver to the defendant. See People v. Ramos, 7 N.Y.3d 737, 738, 853 N.E.2d 222, 222, 819 N.Y.S.2d 853, 853 (2006) (holding that the trial record established that the “defendant knowingly, intelligently and voluntarily waived his right to appeal” based on a written waiver agreement, even if the trial court’s explanation to the defendant was unclear). See also JLM, Chapter 9, Part D(1)–(2) for guilty pleas or plea agreements that do not meet constitutional requirements of “knowing, voluntary, and intelligent.”

agreement or as part of a negotiated sentence, you still have a right to appeal certain types of claims.⁵⁹ These claims include:

- (1) a challenge to a death sentence,⁶⁰
- (2) a claim that you were denied your constitutional right to a speedy trial,⁶¹
- (3) a challenge to the legality of court-imposed sentences,⁶²
- (4) a challenge to the constitutionality of the statute outlawing the conduct to which you pleaded guilty,⁶³
- (5) a claim regarding your competency to stand trial,⁶⁴ or
- (6) a claim that ineffective assistance of counsel affected the voluntariness of your guilty plea.⁶⁵

Please note that there may be other claims that society has a strong interest in, including double jeopardy as you were informed of the potential maximum sentence.⁶⁶ Finally, while you cannot waive

59. See People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (noting that there are “several categories of appellate claims that may not be waived because of a larger societal interest in their correct resolution.”). See generally Preiser, McKinney Practice Commentary, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10 at 160–164 (2005); Donnino, Preiser, McKinney Supplemental Practice Commentaries, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10 at 80–83 (2015) (Supplemental Practice Commentaries).

60. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.30(2) (McKinney 2009) (“Whenever a sentence of death is imposed, the judgment and sentence shall be reviewed on the record by the court of appeals.”).

61. See People v. Wright, 119 A.D.3d 972, 974, 989 N.Y.S.2d 180, 182 (2014) (concluding that the practice of conditioning a plea on a waiver of the constitutional right to a speedy trial was “inherently coercive”); People v. Blakley, 34 N.Y.2d 311, 313, 313 N.E.2d 763, 764, 357 N.Y.S.2d 459, 461 (1974) (holding where a plea is attempted based on a waiver of the constitutional right to a speedy trial, the plea must be vacated); People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (holding that a waiver of right to appeal does not prevent appeals based on denial of a defendant’s constitutional right to a speedy trial).

62. See People v. Francabandera, 33 N.Y.2d 429, 434 n.2, 310 N.E.2d 292, 294 n.2, 354 N.Y.S.2d 609, 612 n.2 (1974) (noting that the legality of a sentence is always appealable after a guilty plea); see also People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (listing the legality of a sentence as among the issues that remain appealable even where a defendant attempts waiver). The right to appeal the legality of a sentence includes the right to appeal an unreasonable delay in sentencing. People v. Campbell, 97 N.Y.2d 532, 533, 769 N.E.2d 1288, 1288, 743 N.Y.S.2d 396, 396 (2002) (holding that a general waiver of the right to appeal does not waive a claim of “unreasonable delay in sentencing” as the claim challenges the legality of the sentence).

63. See People v. Lee, 58 N.Y.2d 491, 493–494, 448 N.E.2d 1328, 1329, 462 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418–419 (1983) (holding defendant’s guilty plea did not forfeit his ability to challenge the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted); People v. Beaumont, 299 A.D.2d 657, 659, 749 N.Y.S.2d 612, 614 (3d Dept. 2002) (noting that the defendant’s right to appeal the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted survived his valid waiver of his right to appeal but finding that the defendant did not preserve the issue by raising it at trial).

64. See People v. Armlin, 37 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 332 N.E.2d 870, 874, 371 N.Y.S.2d 691, 697 (1975) (holding that defendant’s guilty plea did not waive rights to competency proceedings, and that the issue can be raised on appeal). See People v. Armstrong, 49 A.D.3d 960, 960, 853 N.Y.S.2d 219, 220 (3d Dept. 2008) (holding that a guilty plea does not provide a ground to waive the requirement for a competency examination as required by statute by two psychiatric examiners once ordered by court.) See People v. Green, 75 N.Y.2d 902, 908–909, 554 N.Y.S.2d 821, 825, 553 N.E.2d 1331, 1335 (1990) (holding that a defendant may not waive the right to challenge his competency to stand trial because these rights are recognized as a matter of fairness to the accused).

65. See People v. Johnson, 288 A.D.2d 501, 502, 732 N.Y.S.2d 137, 138 (3d Dept. 2001) (stating that “to the extent that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel impacts on the voluntariness of a defendant’s guilty plea, the claim survives a waiver of the right to appeal ...” but noting that the “claim must ordinarily be preserved by a motion to withdraw the plea or a motion to vacate the judgment of conviction”) (citations omitted).

66. For example, in People v. Allen, the Court of Appeals held that a defendant may expressly waive the right to appeal a constitutional double jeopardy ruling in a plea bargain. The defendant in that case pleaded guilty just before the start of a second trial after a mistrial had been declared during the first trial. When he later attempted to appeal his conviction, the Court of Appeals ruled that he had validly waived the right to a double jeopardy defense in his plea bargain. The court determined that society’s interest in the right to a double jeopardy defense was not as strong as, for example, its interest in the right to a speedy trial. Therefore, while you cannot your right to challenge an illegal sentence, you can waive your right to challenge your sentence as too harsh or excessive.⁶⁷ This applies as long as you were informed of the potential maximum sentence and even if your plea agreement did not contain the promise of a specific sentence.⁶⁸

3. Failure to Protest (the “Preservation Requirement”)

Appellate courts generally are not willing to decide questions that the trial court had no chance to consider. Therefore, an error usually must be “preserved” by pointing it out to the trial court at a time when the trial court had the opportunity to fix it. This applies whether you pleaded guilty or not.

To preserve a legal error for appellate review, you (or more likely your lawyer) generally must have objected to the mistake when it occurred or at a later time when the trial court still had the chance to correct the error.⁶⁹ In other words, you usually are not allowed to raise an issue for the first time on appeal. Instead, you must have raised the issue at your trial so that the trial court could have addressed it before it became a problem. By doing so, you have “saved” this objection in the record, notifying the appellate court that you pointed out the error when it occurred.

In general, you must have identified the specific legal basis for your objection at trial in order to preserve the error for appellate review.⁷⁰ In other words, it is not enough to have objected without explaining at the time of the objection why you were objecting. However, an appellate court will also review an error on legal grounds that you did not specify at trial if the trial court expressly decided the particular issue in response to an objection by a party.⁷¹ You may also have preserved errors for waive the right to a speedy trial, you can waive the right to a double jeopardy defense if you agree to do so in your plea bargain. People v. Allen, 86 N.Y.2d 599, 603, 658 N.E.2d 1012, 1015, 635 N.Y.S.2d 139, 142 (1995); see also Preiser, McKinney Practice Commentaries, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 220.10 (2009). The Court of Appeals later held that the right to appeal a constitutional double jeopardy ruling may be waived as part of a general waiver of the right to appeal even if the waiver agreement does not specifically state that the right to appeal on the basis of double jeopardy is being waived. People v. Muniz, 91 N.Y.2d 570, 575, 696 N.E.2d 182, 186, 673 N.Y.S.2d 358, 362 (1998) (finding that there is “no principled basis upon which to conclude that a defendant cannot impliedly waive a claim of double jeopardy . . .” when the waiver agreement allows the defendant to appeal from all non-waivable aspects of the case).

67. See People v. Espino, 279 A.D.2d 798, 799, 718 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730 (3d Dept. 2001) (noting a defendant may waive the right to appeal a sentence as harsh and excessive but never the right to appeal the legality of a sentence).

68. See People v. Hidalgo, 91 N.Y.2d 733, 737, 698 N.E.2d 46, 48, 675 N.Y.S.2d 327, 329 (1998) (finding that a defendant’s general waiver of the right to appeal prevented her from appealing her sentence as harsh and excessive).

69. If you make no protest, the intermediate appellate court cannot review the error as a “question of law.” N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2009). But, an appellate court nonetheless may decide to review the error “in the interest of justice.” N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(6)(a) (McKinney 2009). The “in the interest of justice” exception to the preservation requirement is discussed in Part (b) of this Section.

70. See People v. Hawkins, 11 N.Y.3d 484, 492, 900 N.E.2d 946, 950, 872 N.Y.S.2d 395, 399 (2008) (holding that a motion must be “specifically directed” at the error to preserve it); People v. Dien, 77 N.Y.2d 885, 886, 571 N.E.2d 69, 70, 568 N.Y.S.2d 899, 900 (1991) (holding that because the defendant made only a general objection, he failed to preserve his argument for appellate review); People v. Rivera, 73 N.Y.2d 941, 942, 537 N.E.2d 618, 618, 540 N.Y.S.2d 233, 233 (1989) (holding that defendant’s general objection did not preserve his argument for appellate review). But see People v. Vidal, 26 N.Y.2d 249, 254, 257 N.E.2d 886, 889, 309 N.Y.S.2d 336, 340 (1970) (finding an exception to the rule that a general objection is insufficient to preserve an argument for appellate review and holding that “[i]f the proffered evidence is inherently incompetent, that is, there appears, without more, no purpose whatever for which it could have been admissible, then a general objection, though overruled, will be deemed to be sufficient.”).

71. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2009) (a question is preserved “if in response [sic] to a protest by a party, the [trial] court expressly decided the question raised on appeal”). See People v. Johnson, 144 A.D.2d 490, 491, 534 N.Y.S.2d 207, 209 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding that an issue was preserved even without objection because the trial court expressly decided the question raised by the appeal); see generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, Book 11A, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05 (McKinney 2009) (summarizing New York Criminal Procedure Law § 470.05, which explains when an appeal will be allowed).

review on appeal through a request, rather than an objection.⁷² This means that if you asked the judge for a particular ruling or instruction but he refused, you may challenge the trial court's refusal even if you did not formally object.⁷³ However, if you want to challenge an error in the ruling or instruction that the trial court chose to give instead of your instruction, you must have objected.⁷⁴ In any event, the issue must have been brought to the trial court's attention.⁷⁵

(a) Errors Not Subject to the Preservation Requirement

If you did not object to an error at your trial and the court did not consider the specific issue, an appellate court will usually refuse to consider the error on appeal. But, you may still be able to appeal if the error deals with a fundamental aspect of the fairness of your trial. Errors like this fall into two categories: errors reviewed “in the interest of justice” and errors that disrupt the “mode of proceedings.”

Any unpreserved error may be reviewed in the interest of justice by New York's Appellate Division courts (the intermediate appellate courts).⁷⁶ Thus, if something happened that was so unfair that it may have affected your conviction, but it was not objected to or otherwise preserved, you can still argue that the Appellate Division should consider it in the interest of justice. That is, even if the error you wish to appeal is generally subject to the preservation requirement, you may ask an Appellate Division

72. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2009). See also People v. Leisner, 73 N.Y.2d 140, 147, 535 N.E.2d 647, 650, 538 N.Y.S.2d 517, 520 (1989) (holding that a trial court's failure to give the jury the requested jury instruction was an error preserved for appellate review since there was no “clear intent” by the defense to abandon the request).

73. “Instruction” refers to what the judge tells the jury it should or should not consider as well as what questions the jury must answer when it is deciding the verdict in your case.

74. See People v. Narayan, 54 N.Y.2d 106, 112–113, 429 N.E.2d 123, 125, 444 N.Y.S.2d 604, 606 (1981) (holding that where the defense requested to speak to his client on the second day of an order that prohibited such conversation, but had not made the same request on the first day, only the refusal on the second day is preserved for appeal because of that request, not the order itself or its application to the first day). If the trial court grants the instruction that you (or your lawyer) requested but makes a mistake or otherwise gives an instruction different than the instruction that you requested, this error is not preserved for appeal unless you objected to it. See People v. Whalen, 59 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 451 N.E.2d 212, 215, 464 N.Y.S.2d 454, 457 (1983) (“Inasmuch as defendant's request was initially granted and his comments after the charge did not alert the [t]rial [j]udge to the error so as to afford an opportunity to correct himself, defendant must be deemed to have waived any objection to the alibi instruction.”).

75. See Gary Muldoon, Handling a Criminal Case in New York § 18:188 (2015). This requirement applies to appeals brought by the prosecution too. See People v. Santiago, 80 N.Y.2d 916, 917, 602 N.E.2d 1118, 1118, 589 N.Y.S.2d 302, 303 (1992).

76. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(3)(c), (6)(a) (McKinney 2009). See, e.g., People v. Jones, 81 A.D.2d 22, 42, 440 N.Y.S.2d 248, 261 (2d Dept. 1981) (saying “the failure to adequately preserve an issue in this manner would not, however, preclude our court from reviewing the matter in a proper case ‘[a]s a matter of discretion in the interest of justice’”) (internal citation omitted), People v. DeRennzio, 25 A.D.2d 652, 653, 268 N.Y.S.2d 542, 543 (1st Dept. 1966) (saying “[w]e recognize our right to reverse in the interests of justice.”). But see People v. Morris, 111 A.D.2d 414, 414, 489 N.Y.S.2d 610, 611 (2d Dept. 1985) (saying “our interests of justice powers do not authorize review of issues waived by a plea of guilty”) (internal quotations and citations omitted).

court to consider your appeal.⁷⁷ Note that if you did not preserve an issue, an appellate court may review it, but is not required to do so.⁷⁸

The Court of Appeals (the highest court), by contrast, is limited by the New York State Constitution and can only review “questions of law.”⁷⁹ This means that an issue must have been preserved by objection.⁸⁰ But errors that disrupt the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings are treated as questions of law even without preservation by objection. So, if the error you wish to appeal falls into the limited class of errors that affect the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings, you can appeal even if you did not preserve the error or agreed at trial to accept the 77. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(3)(c), (6)(a) (McKinney 2009).

78. Compare People v. Benton, 196 A.D.2d 755, 756, 601 N.Y.S.2d 918, 919 (1st Dept. 1993) (exercising court’s judgment to review an incorrect decision that classified the defendant as a second violent felony offender), with People v. Walton, 309 A.D.2d 956, 957, 766 N.Y.S.2d 93, 94 (2d Dept. 2003) (declining to review defendant’s unpreserved claim that he had been wrongly deemed a second violent felony offender). See also People v. Gray, 86 N.Y.2d 10, 19–20, 22, 652 N.E.2d 919, 921–923, 629 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175–177 (1995) (holding that a claim of legal insufficiency of the evidence must be preserved for review as a “question of law,” but noting that an intermediate appellate court may decide to review such a claim “in the interest of justice” even if it was not preserved). See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, Book 11A, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05 (McKinney 2009).

If a court declines to hear your non-preserved claims, one strategy is to include them in an ineffective assistance claim. For guidance on how to make this type of claim, see Chapter 12, Part B of the JLM.

79. N.Y. CONST. art. VI, § 3(a) (“The jurisdiction of the court of appeals shall be limited to the review of questions of law [subject to certain exceptions].”).

80. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2009) (“For purposes of appeal, a question of law with respect to a ruling or instruction of a criminal court during a trial or proceeding is presented when a protest thereto was registered.”).

error.⁸¹ These errors are considered so fundamental that they are not subject to the preservation requirement at all.

In either situation, successful appeals are generally based on a violation of trial procedure rules or a violation of your “fundamental constitutional rights.”⁸² Errors that can be raised for the first time on appeal include the following scenarios:

- (1) You were tried twice for the same offense in violation of your rights against double jeopardy guaranteed by the New York State or U.S. Constitutions⁸³ (this protection does not apply to rights against double jeopardy provided by statute rather than a constitution);⁸⁴
- (2) You were deprived of your right to a lawyer;⁸⁵
- (3) You were deprived of your right to be present at an important stage of the trial⁸⁶ or other important court proceedings;⁸⁷
- (4) Your lawyer was not told of the contents of a note the judge received from the jury before the judge answered the jury’s questions;⁸⁸
- (5) You were deprived of your right to have your trial supervised by a judge;⁸⁹ or
- (6) Your sentence, or the way in which it was determined, was illegal.⁹⁰

(b) Errors Subject to the Preservation Requirement

Errors that do not fall into the categories that were presented in Section (a) above will not be reviewed by the appellate court unless it was preserved in the trial court.⁹¹ Errors that will only be reviewed when preserved at the trial court include:

- (1) You want to withdraw a guilty plea or want the judgment of conviction vacated;⁹²
- (2) A challenge to the constitutionality of a statute;⁹³
- (3) Deprivation of your right to confront a witness;⁹⁴
- (4) Admissibility of evidence;⁹⁵
- (5) Comments or conduct of counsel, or of the court;⁹⁶
- (6) Severance or joint trials. A joint trial occurs when only one trial is held but the case involves more than one defendant. A severance allows a defendant to be tried separately from the other defendants in the case on one or more counts;⁹⁷
- (7) Jurisdiction and venue. Jurisdiction is the state and court that the case is in, while venue is the county;⁹⁸
- (8) Jury selection;⁹⁹ or
- (9) Excessive or harsh sentences.¹⁰⁰

Note that because most errors are not preserved for appeal, this is an incomplete and partial list. You should assume that an error will be subject to the preservation requirement, and needs to be raised at trial in order to be argued on appeal.

4. Which Courts Will Consider Your Appeal

If you decide to appeal, you must submit your appeal to the correct court in order for it to be considered. There are two types of courts to which appeals can be made: (1) an intermediate appellate 81. See People v. Mehmedi, 69 N.Y.2d 759, 760, 505 N.E.2d 610, 611, 513 N.Y.S.2d 100, 101 (1987) (holding that a violation of defendant’s right to be present at all material stages of the trial was automatically preserved for appeal even though defendant did not make an objection at trial and “even though counsel may have consented to the procedure”); People v. Patterson, 39 N.Y.2d 288, 295, 347 N.E.2d 898, 902, 383 N.Y.S.2d 573, 577 (1976), aff’d, 432 U.S. 197, 97 S. Ct. 2319, 53 L. Ed. 2d 281 (1977) (“A defendant in a criminal case cannot waive, or even consent to, error that would affect the organization of the court or the mode of proceedings proscribed by law.”).

82. The general rule is that even violations of constitutional rights must be preserved. See People v. Kelly, 5 N.Y.3d 116, 119–120, 832 N.E.2d 1179, 1181, 799 N.Y.S.2d 763, 765 (2005) (“[I]n a very narrow category of cases, we have recognized so-called ‘mode of proceedings’ errors that go to the essential validity of the process and are so fundamental that the entire trial is irreparably tainted.”); People v. Gray, 86 N.Y.2d 10, 19–22, 652 N.E.2d 919, 921–923, 629 N.Y.S.2d 173, 175–177 (1995) (holding that an objection is necessary for a constitutional error to be reviewed as a matter of law unless the error is among the very narrow class of “mode of proceedings” errors); People v. Voliton, 83 N.Y.2d 192, 195–196, 630 N.E.2d 641, 643, 608 N.Y.S.2d 945, 947 (1994) (declining to review on appeal a defendant's constitutional challenge to a seizure by the police because the issue was not preserved and did not "impair the essential validity of the criminal proceedings"); Ulster County Court v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140, 151 n.10, 99 S. Ct. 2213, 2221, n.10, 60 L. Ed. 2d 777, 788 n.10 (1979) (quoting People v. McLucas, 15 N.Y.2d 167, 172, 204 N.E.2d 846, 848, 256 N.Y.S.2d 799, 802 (1965)) ("[T]he New York Court of Appeals has developed an exception to the State's contemporaneous-objection policy that allows review of unobjected-to errors that affect 'a fundamental constitutional right.'").

83. U.S. CONST. amend. V; N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 6; see People v. Prescott, 66 N.Y.2d 216, 219, 486 N.E.2d 813, 814, 495 N.Y.S.2d 955, 956 (1985) (holding that a claim of double jeopardy can be raised for the first time on appeal because it is a "fundamental principle of our legal system that a defendant may not be twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense"); People v. Michael, 48 N.Y.2d 1, 7, 394 N.E.2d 1134, 1137, 420 N.Y.S.2d 371, 374 (1979) (per curiam) (holding that a defendant's constitutional double jeopardy claim presents a question of law reviewable on appeal despite the defendant's failure to raise the claim in the trial court). However, a claim of double jeopardy cannot be raised on appeal if the circumstances surrounding the defendant's failure to object amounted to a waiver of the right to appeal on double jeopardy grounds, or if the defendant has waived the right to appeal by a waiver agreement. See People v. Muniz, 91 N.Y.2d 570, 574, 696 N.E.2d 182, 185, 673 N.Y.S.2d 358, 361 (1998) (holding that a claim of constitutional double jeopardy may validly be waived by a defendant); People v. Michallow, 201 A.D.2d 915, 916, 607 N.Y.S.2d 781, 783 (4th Dept. 1994) (noting that constitutional double jeopardy protections are "so fundamental that they are preserved despite the failure to raise them" by objecting, but holding that defendant's active participation in discussions relating to the court's declaration of a mistrial was implied consent to the mistrial and thus a waiver of her right against double jeopardy). For a discussion on waiver of the right to appeal, including waiver of the right to appeal a claim of double jeopardy, see Part (B)(2) of this Chapter.

84. See People v. Biggs, 1 N.Y.3d 225, 231, 803 N.E.2d 370, 374, 771 N.Y.S.2d 49, 53 (2003) (stating that unlike state and federal constitutional double jeopardy claims, which are reviewable even if not preserved at the trial court level, an unpreserved statutory double jeopardy claim is not reviewable).

85. For you to raise this claim for the first time on appeal, you have to show that your trial court record on its own makes it clear that you were deprived of your right to a lawyer. See People v. McLean, 15 N.Y.3d 117, 121, 931 N.E.2d 520, 522, 905 N.Y.S.2d 536, 538 (2010) (holding that a defendant may make a deprivation-of-counsel claim for the first time on appeal only where the trial court record makes it completely clear that the defendant was deprived of a lawyer); People v. Arthur, 22 N.Y.2d 325, 329, 239 N.E.2d 537, 539, 292 N.Y.S.2d 663, 666 (1968) (finding a valid deprivation-of-counsel claim when police questioned the defendant, without counsel present, the morning after a lawyer had visited him in prison).

86. See People v. Mehmedi, 69 N.Y.2d 759, 760, 505 N.E.2d 610, 611, 513 N.Y.S.2d 100, 101 (1987) (affirming reversal of defendant's conviction on the basis that instructions were given to the jury in defendant's absence, even though defendant's trial counsel did not object to defendant's being absent); see also People v. Kelly, 11 A.D.3d 133, 142–143, 781 N.Y.S.2d 75, 84 (1st Dept. 2004), aff'd, 5 N.Y.3d 116, 832 N.E.2d 1179, 799 N.Y.S.2d 763 (2005) (acknowledging that a violation of the right of a defendant to be present at the material stages of the trial is preserved for appellate review even without an objection, but finding that defendant's right to be present had not been violated).

87. See People v. McAdams, 22 A.D.3d 885, 885–886, 802 N.Y.S.2d 531, 532 (3d Dept. 2005) (finding that a denial of defendant's right to be present at sidebar conferences with potential jurors, including one conference about possible juror bias, constitutes a denial of defendant's right to be present at a material stage of the proceeding and is a reversible error on appeal even though defendant did not object at trial). You may, however, waive your right to be present if you knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently make the waiver. See People v. Keen, 94 N.Y.2d 533, 538–539, 728 N.E.2d 979, 982, 707 N.Y.S.2d 380, 383 (2000) (holding that defendant's waiver of his right to be present for certain court proceedings was effective); People v. Williams, 92 N.Y.2d 993, 996, 706 N.E.2d 1187, 1189, 684 N.Y.S.2d 163, 165 (1998) ("The right to be present during sidebar questioning of prospective jurors on matters of bias or prejudice may be waived by a voluntary, knowing, and intelligent choice.") (citation omitted); People v. Antommarchi, 80 N.Y.2d 247, 250, 604 N.E.2d 95, 97, 590 N.Y.S.2d 33, 35 (1992) (holding that a defendant has a right to be present at sidebar questioning of jurors when the questioning explores prospective jurors' backgrounds and relates to their ability to weigh the evidence objectively, but not when questioning relates to physical impairment, family obligations, or work commitment); People v. Dokes, 659, 595 N.E.2d 836, 838, 584 N.Y.S.2d 761, 763 (1992) (finding that a defendant's statutory right to be present at trial includes the right to be present during the selection of the jury, the introduction of evidence, the closing argument of counsel, and the court's charge to the jury).

88. See People v. Tabb, 13 N.Y.3d 852, 853, 920 N.E.2d 90, 90, 891 N.Y.S.2d 686, 686 (2009) (reversing conviction because the absence of any record that the judge showed a jury note to the defense was a mode of proceedings error); People v. O'Rama, 78 N.Y.2d 270, 276–280, 579 N.E.2d 189, 192–194, 574 N.Y.S.2d 159, 162–164 (1991) (holding that court's failure to read a jury note to defense counsel before giving the jury a charge was reviewable by Court of Appeals “notwithstanding that defense counsel did not object to the court’s procedure until after the supplementary charge had been given”); People v. Kisoan, 23 A.D.3d 18, 22–23, 801 N.Y.S.2d 69, 72 (2d Dept. 2005) (holding court’s failure to give defendant’s attorney a complete reading of jury’s question was preserved for appellate review even without an objection at trial); but see People v. Williams, 38 A.D.3d 429, 430–431, 833 N.Y.S.2d 29, 30–31 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that where judge talked to jury foreperson to tell her he would address her question when defendant, counsel, and jury were all present, this conversation was not significant and would not have required input from the defense attorney, and thus that error was not preserved since it was not objected to by the defense).

89. See People v. Ahmed, 66 N.Y.2d 307, 311–312, 487 N.E.2d 894, 896–897, 496 N.Y.S.2d 984, 986–987 (1985) (reversing defendant’s conviction where the trial judge had, with defendant’s consent, been absent for part of the jury deliberations, leaving a law clerk to answer two questions from jurors). Cf. People v. Hernandez, 94 N.Y.2d 552, 556, 729 N.E.2d 691, 693–694, 708 N.Y.S.2d 34, 36–37 (2000) (holding that the fact that the judge was not in the courtroom during a mechanical readback of trial testimony does not constitute a violation of the defendant’s right to judge supervision of trial).

90. See People v. Samms, 95 N.Y.2d 52, 55–56, 731 N.E.2d 1118, 1120–1121, 710 N.Y.S.2d 310, 312–313 (2000) (discussing which illegal sentence claims can be raised for the first time on appeal); People v. Callahan, 80 N.Y.2d 273, 280, 604 N.E.2d 108, 112, 590 N.Y.S.2d 46, 50 (1992) (noting that among the “appellate claims that may not be waived” are “challenges to the legality of court-imposed sentences”); note, however, that this applies to sentences that are illegal (that is, not allowed by law) and not merely harsh or excessive, which are within the legal sentence that the trial court was allowed to impose). See Part D(2) of this Chapter for a discussion of the difference between illegal and excessive sentences. Also, note that a claim that the verdict is against the “weight of the evidence” is a question of law that does not need to be preserved in order to be raised on appeal. See People v. Roman, 217 A.D.2d 431, 431, 629 N.Y.S.2d 744, 745 (1st Dept. 1995) (finding that an appellate claim that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence need not have been raised before the trial court because a trial court has no authority to make a decision on this type of claim); People v. Bleakley, 69 N.Y.2d 490, 493–495, 508 N.E.2d 672, 674–675, 515 N.Y.S.2d 761, 762–763 (1987) (describing “weight of the evidence” analysis).

91. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.05(2) (McKinney 2009).

92. See People v. Douglas, 38 A.D.3d 1063, 1063, 831 N.Y.S.2d 585, 586 (3d Dept. 2007) (holding that defendant could not challenge the validity or voluntariness of his guilty plea because the issues were unpreserved for review since he did not move to withdraw the plea or vacate the judgment); People v. Tuper, 256 A.D.2d 636, 636, 681 N.Y.S.2d 808, 809 (3d Dept. 1998) (holding that defendant could not contend his guilty plea should not have been accepted because he had neither moved to withdraw the plea before sentencing nor moved to vacate the judgment after conviction).

93. See People v. Davidson, 98 N.Y.2d 738, 739, 780 N.E.2d 972, 972–973, 751 N.Y.S.2d 161, 161–162 (2002) (holding that defendant’s constitutional challenge to loitering statute was not properly preserved because it was raised for the first time on motion to set aside verdict); People v. Navas, 114 A.D.2d 425, 426, 494 N.Y.S.2d 141, 142 (2d Dept. 1985) (holding that the defendant’s constitutional challenge to the second violent felony offender statute was not preserved for appellate review because it was not raised prior to sentencing).

94. See People v. Hickman, 60 A.D.3d 865, 866, 875 N.Y.S.2d 530, 531–532 (2d Dept. 2009) (finding that defendant could not raise the issue of Sixth Amendment right of confrontation on appeal when he failed to move to strike witness’ testimony at trial); People v. Mack, 14 A.D.3d 517, 517, 787 N.Y.S.2d 397, 398 (2d Dept. 2005) (holding that issue of right to confrontation could not be raised on appeal because defendant did not specify confrontation rights as the grounds for objecting to witness testimony and motion for a mistrial).

95. See People v. Meeks, 56 A.D.3d 800, 801, 868 N.Y.S.2d 287, 288 (2d Dept. 2008) (“The defendant’s contention that the Supreme Court erred in admitting into evidence three photographs of the victim’s injuries is partially unpreserved for appellate review, as the defendant did not object to the admission of the first and third photographs.”); People v. Metellus, 54 A.D.3d 601, 602, 864 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (1st Dept. 2008) (holding that defendant could not raise claim of constitutional right to introduction of extrinsic evidence because such a right was never raised at trial).

96. See People v. West, 86 A.D.3d 583, 584, 926 N.Y.S.2d 659, 661 (2d Dept. 2011) (holding that defendant could not make argument on appeal that prosecutor’s remarks during summation were improper and deprived him of a fair trial because defendant did not object during trial or made unspecified, general objections); People v. Bey, 71 A.D.3d 1156, 1157, 898 N.Y.S.2d 189, 190 (2d Dept. 2010) (same); People v. Davenport, 38 A.D.3d 1064, 1066, 831 N.Y.S.2d 587, 589 (3d Dept. 2007) (ruling that objection to trial judge’s caustic remarks as showing bias was not preserved because objection was not made at trial); People v. Maxam, court¹⁰¹ or (2) the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, which is the highest state court.¹⁰² In most cases, you will need to file an appeal with an intermediate appellate court before the Court of Appeals will consider hearing your case. If you have been sentenced to death, however, you have the right to appeal directly to the Court of Appeals without having to go through an intermediate appellate court.¹⁰³

Note that there are many intermediate appellate courts, so unless you are appealing directly to the Court of Appeals, you need to figure out appellate court is the right one for your case. This will depend on where you were convicted.¹⁰⁴ For example, if you were convicted of a felony in a New York Supreme Court, you must appeal to the appellate division of the department in which you were convicted.¹⁰⁵ Appendix A at the end of this Chapter can help you figure out where to file your appeal.

You will also need to figure out if you need permission to file your appeal. In general, you do not need permission if you are appealing: (1) the trial court's judgment against you,¹⁰⁶ (2) your sentence,¹⁰⁷

301 A.D.2d 791, 793, 753 N.Y.S.2d 599, 601 (3d Dept. 2003) (finding that defendant's argument that court was biased and should have recused itself was unpreserved for review because never raised at trial).

97. See People v. Walker, 71 N.Y.2d 1018, 1020, 525 N.E.2d 748, 749, 530 N.Y.S.2d 103, 103 (1988) (holding that defendant's request for severance was not preserved for appeal when made before first trial that resulted in a mistrial, but not the second, subsequent trial); People v. Ahmr, 22 A.D.3d 593, 594, 804 N.Y.S.2d 331, 333 (2d Dept. 2005) ("The defendant failed to preserve for appellate review his contention that the Supreme Court erroneously denied the severance motion of a codefendant, since he did not join in the codefendant's motion nor did he made any such motion on his own behalf.").

98. See People v. Rote, 28 A.D.3d 868, 869, 812 N.Y.S.2d 191, 192 (3d Dept. 2006) (finding that defendant had not preserved for review the argument that his failure to enter a plea deprived the court of personal jurisdiction); People v. Cornell, 17 A.D.3d 1010, 1011, 794 N.Y.S.2d 226, 227 (4th Dept. 2005) (holding that, by not moving to dismiss or get a jury charge for improper venue on the count of rape that occurred in a different county, defendant did not preserve the issue for review).

99. See People v. Hicks, 6 N.Y.3d 737, 739, 843 N.E.2d 1136, 1138, 810 N.Y.S.2d 396, 398 (2005) (holding that defendant could not challenge juror's qualification to serve nor the adequacy of the court's questioning because no objection was made at trial); People v. Jones, 11 A.D.3d 902, 903, 782 N.Y.S. 2d 322, 323 (4th Dept. 2004) (finding that defendant's argument of prosecutorial misconduct from comments during voir dire was unpreserved for appellate review).

100. See People v. Stokes, 28 A.D.3d 592, 592, 813 N.Y.S.2d 503, 503 (2d Dept. 2006) ("The defendant's contention that the sentencing court should have adjudicated him a youthful offender is unpreserved for appellate review, since he failed to object or to move to withdraw his plea on this ground."); People v. Jones, 136 A.D.2d 740, 740–41, 524 N.Y.S.2d 79, 81 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding that defendant failed to preserve the argument that he was entitled to receive the benefit of the lesser sentence of sexual misconduct instead of rape in the first degree by not raising it at trial).

101. See generally N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.60 (McKinney 2009). An intermediate appellate court is any court that hears appeals other than the Court of Appeals. There are two kinds of intermediate appellate courts: the appellate division and the appellate term. The appellate terms are created by the appellate divisions to also hear appeals and ease the workloads of the appellate division. Appellate terms are located in the First and Second Departments only. For a diagram of New York's courts, see the inside back cover of the JLM.

102. See generally N.Y. CONST. art. VI. New York is somewhat unusual in that its highest court is not called the "Supreme Court." (In fact, a "supreme court" is a type of trial court in New York.) For a diagram of New York's courts, see the inside back cover of the JLM.

103. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.70(1) (McKinney 2009).

104. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.60 (McKinney 2009).

105. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.60(1) (McKinney 2009).

106. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10(1) (McKinney 2009). Though a trial court may make many orders and rulings during your trial, you generally cannot appeal these rulings until there is a final judgment. See, e.g., People v. Boyd, 91 A.D.2d 1045, 1046, 458 N.Y.S.2d 643, 644 (2d Dept. 1983) (holding that any objection to an intermediate order denying a motion to suppress evidence is reviewable only on an appeal from judgment); People v. Pollock, 67 A.D.2d 608, 608, 412 N.Y.S.2d 12, 12 (1st Dept. 1979), aff'd, 50 N.Y.2d 547, 550, 407 N.E.2d 472, 473, 429 N.Y.S.2d 628, 629 (1980) (stating no separate appeal is available for an order denying a motion to set aside a verdict).

107. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10(2) (McKinney 2009). Note that the statute says it excludes appeals of or (3) an order granting the District Attorney's motion under Section 440.40 of the Criminal Procedure Law to set aside your sentence to impose a longer sentence.¹⁰⁸ This is because New York law grants everyone the right to appeal these decisions to an intermediate appellate court.

For other challenges, however, you may need to get permission before you file an appeal. For example, if you have already made a motion to vacate your judgment under Section 440.10 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law or a motion to set aside your sentence under Section 440.20, and the court has denied your motion, you will need to ask the court for permission to appeal the court's denial.¹⁰⁹ Note that if you need to ask for permission to appeal, this means that a court may decline to consider your appeal, whereas a court must consider your appeal if you have the right to appeal on that issue.

If an intermediate appellate court reviews your case and makes a decision, and you are unsatisfied with the decision, you may ask for permission to appeal the decision to the Court of Appeals. However, you do not have a right to appeal an appellate court's decision to the Court of Appeals. Note that the Court of Appeals will only consider one application for permission to appeal per case, including applications addressed to a justice of the appellate division.¹¹⁰ If the Court of Appeals decides to hear your case, it will issue a certificate of leave to appeal.¹¹¹ Part F explains this process in more detail.

Finally, keep in mind that filing an appeal is not the only way to challenge your conviction or your sentence. You may be able to file a motion to vacate the judgment against you¹¹² or to set aside your sentence.¹¹³ Such a motion, called an Article 440 motion, can be filed before, after, or at the same time as an appeal. A motion differs from an appeal in that an appeal must be based only on matters already on the record (things that were said in trial court or in papers previously given to the trial court). A motion, on the other hand, involves matters not on the record, such as advice your attorney gave you or evidence that was never brought up in court. Thus, when the record from your trial does not contain the necessary facts for a court to decide the issue that you want to raise, you should file an Article 440 allegedly excessive sentences if you agreed to the sentence as part of a plea bargain. But the Court of Appeals decided that this part of the statute is unconstitutional because the legislature does not have the power to prevent the appellate division from hearing these appeals. See People v. Pollenz, 67 N.Y.2d 264, 270, 493 N.E.2d 541, 543, 502 N.Y.S.2d 417, 419 (1986) (holding that the legislature could not prohibit the appellate division from hearing appeals based on excessive sentences). § 450.10(2) of the New York Criminal Procedure Law may still be applicable in cases where the intermediate appellate court is an appellate term. See Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10 (McKinney 2009). Note also that, though the statute itself may not prevent an appeal of an allegedly excessive sentence, you may have voluntarily waived your right to appeal your sentence or conviction as part of a plea or negotiated sentence. For more information, see Part B(2) of this Chapter.

108. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

109. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.15 (McKinney 2009). If you obtain permission, you can appeal a sentence that you could not otherwise appeal under § 450.10(1) and (2) of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. You can also appeal the denial of your § 440 motion to vacate a judgment or set aside a sentence. See Form B-2 in Appendix B at the end of this Chapter for a sample application for permission to appeal. You may make only one such application, so do so carefully. The procedure for requesting leave to appeal under § 460.15 varies depending on which intermediate court you are applying to. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.15(2) (McKinney 2009). See generally N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 640.1(c) (2020), N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 731.1(c), 732.1 (2020) (describing these procedures).

110. See People v. Liner, 70 N.Y.2d 945, 945, 519 N.E.2d 619, 619, 524 N.Y.S.2d 673, 673 (1988) (dismissing appeal made by defendant's lawyer on ground that court could not hear appeal after defendant had already made pro se application for appeal to the appellate division); People v. Nelson, 55 N.Y.2d 743, 743, 431 N.E.2d 640, 640–41, 447 N.Y.S.2d 155, 155–56 (1981) (dismissing appellate division's grant of permission to appeal while prior application was pending in Court of Appeals).

111. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.20 (McKinney 2009); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.90 (McKinney 2009) (providing for taking an appeal after a certificate granting leave to appeal has been issued). If you are appealing an appellate division's order, a judge from the same department of the appellate division may grant you a certificate of leave to appeal before the Court of Appeals. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.20(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

112. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 (McKinney 2009).

113. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20 (McKinney 2009).

motion.¹¹⁴ For a more detailed description of when you can file an Article 440 motion and which claims you may raise in an Article 440 motion, see Chapter 20 of the JLM.

C. What You Can Ask the Courts to Do Before Your Appeal is Heard

Before an appellate court hears your appeal, you can ask the court system to help you with several things, including finding a lawyer and getting a transcript of your trial. You can also ask the appellate court to stay your judgment and release you on bail. This part discusses each of these things in more detail.

1. Getting a Lawyer

You have a constitutional right to a lawyer on direct appeal.¹¹⁵ This means if you cannot afford a lawyer, upon request, the appellate court will appoint a lawyer to represent you at no cost.¹¹⁶ Your right to a lawyer applies when you or the government appeals a trial court's final judgment. When you were sentenced, your lawyer was supposed to advise you of the following: that you can appeal, how to appeal, and how to get a new lawyer for your appeal. Your lawyer should also have asked you if you wanted to appeal. If you said yes, he also should have filed the initial paperwork for you.¹¹⁷ To get a lawyer for your appeal, you will need to show proof that you do not have enough money to hire an attorney and pay the expenses of your appeal.¹¹⁸ Appendix B provides samples of the papers you should file to make this request.

If you decide that you do not want a lawyer to represent you on appeal, you may be able to prepare your appeal and appear in court on your own. This is called appearing "pro se." Note, however, that you do not have a constitutional right to represent yourself on appeal—the court may choose not to allow you to represent yourself.¹¹⁹

2. Requesting a Transcript

You can ask the trial court to provide you with a free transcript of your trial. In addition, you may ask for permission to appeal on "the original record." You should do this if your appeal will be based 114. See People v. Harris, 109 A.D.2d 351, 353, 491 N.Y.S.2d 678, 682 (2d Dept. 1985) (explaining that an Article 440 motion is designed to "inform a court of facts not reflected in the record and not known at the time of judgment that would, as a matter of law, undermine the judgment.").

115. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 741–744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1398–1400; 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 496–497 (1967) (holding that an indigent person has the right to appellate representation); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–358, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–817; 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 814–815 (1963) (holding that the 14th Amendment requires states to provide indigent persons representation on their appeals as of right); People v. Garcia, 93 N.Y.2d 42, 46, 710 N.E.2d 247, 249, 687 N.Y.S.2d 601, 603 (1999) ("[O]n a People's appeal, a defendant has the right to appellate counsel of defendant's choice and the right to seek appointment of counsel upon proof of indigency.").

116. Usually the court will appoint a new lawyer on appeal. See, e.g., People v. Rhodes, 245 A.D.2d 844, 845, 666 N.Y.S.2d 355, 356–357 (3d Dept. 1997) ("Concluding that it is necessary that independent counsel take a fresh look at this proceeding so as to assess whether any non-frivolous issues, including a claim of ineffective assistance in connection with the representation of defendant before the sentencing court, should be raised, we hereby relieve defense counsel of this assignment.").

117. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 606.5(b), 671.3(a), 821.2(a) (2020).

118. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 671.5 (2020); see generally People v. West, 100 N.Y.2d 23, 28, 789 N.E.2d 615, 619, 759 N.Y.S.2d 437, 441 (2003) (holding that "[r]equiring a defendant to apply for legal representation and providing instructions on how to do so" is constitutionally acceptable without providing counsel to assist in that application).

119. See Martinez v. Court of Appeal of California, 528 U.S. 152, 163, 120 S. Ct. 684, 692, 145 L. Ed. 2d 597, 607 (2000) ("Courts, of course, may still exercise their discretion to allow a lay person to proceed pro se").

on something that happened at trial or a hearing. If the trial court grants this request, the appellate court and the prosecution will be given copies of the record.¹²⁰

3. Requesting a Stay

After filing and serving notice of your appeal, you can request a judge to “stay” your judgment. A stay delays or interrupts the carrying out of your sentence until after your appeal. If you are appealing a death sentence, or a judgment including a death sentence, filing a notice of appeal automatically stays the carrying out of your sentence.¹²¹ Note that you may file only one stay application after filing a notice of appeal, so prepare your application carefully.¹²²

If you decide to apply for a stay, you will need to figure out which court to ask for the stay. This will depend on which court tried and sentenced you and which court will hear your appeal. For example, if you are appealing to an appellate division from the judgment of a supreme court, you may apply for a stay from any appellate division or supreme court judge in the county where the judgment was entered.¹²³ See Appendix A at the end of this Chapter for help selecting the right court.

4. Requesting Release from Jail

While you are waiting for your appeal to be heard, you can request for a judge to release you on bail or on your own “recognizance.” To be released on your own recognizance means that a court will permit you to leave jail on the condition that you will appear in court whenever your attendance is required, and that you will comply with the orders and processes of the court.¹²⁴

You do not have a right to bail or recognizance while waiting for appeal.¹²⁵ But, depending on your offense, a judge may be able to grant your request for bail or recognizance. In many cases, a judge has discretion to determine whether to release you. This means that the law does not require that the judge keep you in custody or release you, and you may not appeal the judge’s decision on this matter.¹²⁶ However, there are some cases where the judge does not have this discretion and the law alone determines whether you must be held in custody.¹²⁷ For example, if you were convicted of a Class A

120. See Appendix B-3 of this Chapter for sample papers to request free trial transcripts and copies of the record.

121. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.40(1) (McKinney 2009).

122. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50(3) (McKinney 2009).

123. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

124. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.40(2) (McKinney 2009). To determine which court can grant your application for a stay, see N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50(2) (McKinney 2009).

125. Numerous cases have indicated that you do not have a right to bail or recognizance after having been convicted. See, e.g., Gold v. Shapiro, 62 A.D.2d 62, 65, 403 N.Y.S.2d 906, 907 (2d Dep’t. 1978), aff’d, 45 N.Y.2d 849, 850 382 N.E.2d 767, 410 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1978) (“[T]here is no constitutional right to bail after conviction.”); see also People v. Hinspeter, 190 Misc.2d 614, 617, 740 N.Y.S.2d 591, 593, (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2002). You do have the constitutional right to ensure that the court does not exercise its discretion unreasonably or arbitrarily and that bail is not excessive. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII; N.Y. Const. art. 1, § 5; see also Finetti v. Harris, 609 F.2d 594, 595 (2d Cir. 1979) (“Only if there is no rational basis in the record to support the denial of bail [pending appeal] may there be a violation of a state prisoner’s constitutional rights.”).

126. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50 (McKinney 2009); see also United States ex rel. Siegal v. Follette, 290 F. Supp. 636, 638 (S.D.N.Y. 1968) (stating that New York law “permits [a judge] to grant or deny bail in his discretion after weighing the facts he considers significant”). Although an order denying bail is not appealable, it may be reviewed on habeas corpus grounds. For more information, see Chapter 21 of the JLM, “State Habeas Corpus.”

127. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 510.30(1), 530.10 (McKinney 2009) (explaining when a court is required to order bail or recognizance and when it may do so at its discretion). Bail must not violate the New York state constitution’s restriction on excessive bail. See People ex rel. Calloway v. Skinner, 33 N.Y.2d 23, 33, 300 N.E.2d 716, 720, 347 N.Y.S.2d 178, 184 (1973) (citing N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 5); People ex rel. Shapiro v. Keeper of City Prison, 290 N.Y. 393, 398, 49 N.E.2d 498, 500 (1943) (“Our State Constitution does not decree a right to bail, but merely proscribes ‘excessive bail.’”).

felony, a judge could not release you because the law requires you to be held in custody for that type of offense.¹²⁸

If your offense does not automatically require you to be held in custody, a judge will consider the following factors, among others, to decide whether to grant your request for release:¹²⁹

- (1) Your character, reputation, habits, and mental condition;
- (2) Your employment and financial resources;
- (3) Your family ties and length of residence in the community;
- (4) Your criminal record, if any;
- (5) Your previous record as a juvenile delinquent or youth offender, if any;
- (6) Your previous record of responding to court appearances when required; and, above all,
- (7) The likelihood that the judgment against you will be reversed on appeal.

A judge may refuse to release you on bail if he thinks an appellate court is unlikely to reverse the judgment against you.¹³⁰ Therefore, when you submit a request for bail, you should include a brief statement that explains your appellate claims and demonstrates that there is a reasonable possibility of reversal.

In general, you should petition for bail if there is any chance it will be granted. If you are released on bail, it will be easier to prepare your appeal than if you are held in jail. Keep in mind, though, that the amount of bail may be more than you can afford. Additionally, note that you will not receive credit for time served during the time that you are out on bail.

Note also that if you are released on bail while your appeal is pending, the order releasing you will expire if your appeal is not “perfected” within 120 days after the order is given.¹³¹ Generally, to perfect an appeal you must deliver a specified number of copies of the trial record and your brief to the appellate court and the opposing party.¹³² If your appeal is not perfected within 120 days, you should request a time extension to file an appeal, explicitly asking the court to extend the 120-day period.¹³³

D. What You Can Ask the Court to Do in Your Appeal

In an appeal, you ask the appellate court to correct the trial court’s judgment. The appellate court will make one of three decisions. First, it might “reverse” the trial court’s judgment, which means it declares the entire judgment invalid. Second, it might “affirm” the trial court’s judgment, which means it upholds the entire judgment. Finally, it might “modify” the trial court’s judgment, which means it reverses part of the judgment and affirms another part of the judgment.¹³⁴ If the appellate court reverses or modifies the judgment, it will also take some action to correct the judgment, such as reducing your sentence or dismissing your indictment.¹³⁵

Sometimes the appellate court might determine that it does not have enough information to decide your appeal right away. If this happens, the appellate court may suspend your appeal and send the matter to a lower court for additional proceedings.¹³⁶ This means that the appellate court will not

128. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 530.50 (McKinney 2009).

129. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(2) (McKinney 2009).

130. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(2)(b) (McKinney 2009).

131. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50(4) (McKinney 2009). Under this statute, an order granting release will expire if your appeal has “not been brought to argument in or submitted to the intermediate appellate court” within 120 days. Courts have interpreted this statute to mean that such an order will expire if your appeal is not perfected within 120 days. See, e.g., People v. Higgins, 177 A.D.2d 1052, 1052, 578 N.Y.S.2d 70, 71 (4th Dept. 1991) (stating that defendant “bore the burden of surrendering himself after the 120-day stay expired before his appeal was perfected”).

132. See Part E(3) of this Chapter for information on perfecting your appeal.

133. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50(4) (McKinney 2009). The intermediate appellate court itself must grant the extension, regardless of who issued the order. See Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.50 (McKinney 2009).

134. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(2) (McKinney 2009).

135. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20 (McKinney 2009).

136. This process is called “remitting.” See, e.g., People v. Hasenflue, 24 A.D.3d 1017, 1018, 806 N.Y.S.2d decide whether to affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment until the lower court has held another hearing.

An intermediate appellate court must base its decision to reverse or modify the trial court's judgment on one of three things (or some combination of them): the law, the facts, or the "interest of justice."¹³⁷

1. Appealing Your Conviction

If you appeal your conviction "on the law," you will argue that legal errors in the trial deprived you of a fair trial or that the evidence used to convict you was legally insufficient. If you appeal your conviction "on the facts," you will argue that your conviction was against the weight of the evidence.

(a) "On the Law"

You can ask an appellate court to reverse the judgment "on the law" on the basis of: (1) legal errors that deprived you of a fair trial, or (2) legally insufficient evidence to support your conviction.¹³⁸

You may seek reversal on the law on grounds of legal errors that deprived you of a fair trial. In order to seek a reversal on the law due to legal errors, you must have properly preserved these errors for review, unless the error you are appealing is one that is not subject to the preservation requirement, as explained above in Section B(3). Some categories of legal errors that may support reversal include: (1) erroneous evidentiary rulings,¹³⁹ (2) prosecutor's misconduct,¹⁴⁰ (3) improper jury instructions,¹⁴¹ or (4) improper influence on the jury.¹⁴² For example, in People v. Brown, the court's judgment was reversed because a juror conducted an experiment outside of court to evaluate testimony, which was an improper influence on the jury.¹⁴³ The witness claimed to have viewed the incident through the driver's van window, so the juror tested the visibility of her own (similar) van and told the jury she "could see that [the crime] was plausible."¹⁴⁴ Note that there are many other potential legal errors, and spotting them requires thorough familiarity with relevant bodies of law, including evidence law, 766, 768 (3d Dept. 2005) (withholding decision and sending matter back to trial court to look at the defendant's competency to stand trial); People v. Britt, 231 A.D.2d 581, 583, 647 N.Y.S.2d 527, 529 (2d Dept. 1996) (sending matter back for trial court to make clear whether trial court followed the proper three-step procedure to make sure preemptory strikes, which are used to keep certain people off of a jury, were not used to keep people off the jury because of their race).

137. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(3) (McKinney 2009).

138. Note, however, that "on the law" reversals are not limited to these two instances. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(4) (McKinney 2009) (noting "upon the law" determinations "include, but are not limited to," these bases).

139. See, e.g., People v. Boughton, 70 N.Y.2d 854, 855, 517 N.E.2d 1340, 1341, 523 N.Y.S.2d 454, 455 (1987) (reversing conviction because trial judge wrongly allowed prosecutor to introduce confession without giving sufficient notice); People v. Reilly, 19 A.D.3d 736, 737–738, 796 N.Y.S.2d 726, 727–728 (3d Dept. 2005) (ordering new trial because judge allowed evidence that was very prejudicial but not very probative, meaning the evidence was not useful for deciding the verdict fairly).

140. See, e.g., People v. Collins, 12 A.D.3d 33, 42, 784 N.Y.S.2d 489, 496 (1st Dept. 2004) (ordering new trial because prosecutor's concluding remarks deprived defendant of a fair trial).

141. See, e.g., Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 615, 85 S. Ct. 1229, 1233, 14 L. Ed. 2d 106, 110 (1965) (reversing conviction because judge improperly commented during jury instructions on defendant's decision not to testify); People v. Goldblatt, 98 A.D. 3d 817, 822, 950 N.Y.S.2d 210, 215–216, (3d Dept. 2012) (reversing conviction because court did not properly instruct the jury "as to what was required to find that defendant was recklessly driving his automobile."); People v. Richardson, 234 A.D.2d 952, 952, 652 N.Y.S.2d 173, 174 (4th Dept. 1996) (reversing conviction because court did not give proper instructions as required by statute.).

142. See, e.g., Parker v. Gladden, 385 U.S. 363, 363–365, 87 S. Ct. 468, 470, 17 L. Ed. 2d 420, 422 (1966) (reversing conviction where bailiff made statements to jurors that defendant was a wicked and guilty person, because this behavior violated the 6th Amendment); People v. Stanley, 87 N.Y.2d 1000, 1001, 665 N.E.2d 190, 191, 642 N.Y.S.2d 620, 621 (1996) (reversing conviction because jurors visited crime scene and conducted an experiment in order to evaluate a witness' credibility and so became "unsworn witnesses" themselves).

143. People v. Brown, 48 N.Y.2d 388, 394–395, 399 N.E.2d 51, 54, 423 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1979).

144. People v. Brown, 48 N.Y.2d 388, 394–395, 399 N.E.2d 51, 54, 423 N.Y.S.2d 461, 464 (1979).

criminal procedure, and state and federal constitutional law. It is not possible for this Chapter or the JLM to discuss every possible error. This is a big reason that you should get a lawyer for your appeal: even if you do legal research beyond the JLM, you will likely not be able to learn enough law in time to notice errors and present them to the court as effectively as an appellate lawyer could. See Section C(1) above for how to get a lawyer.

If the appellate court does reverse your judgment because of legal errors, the court must order a new trial on the counts of the original indictment.¹⁴⁵ You cannot be retried, however, on (1) counts dismissed on appeal or in a post-judgment order, or (2) counts or offenses of which you were effectively acquitted. For example, if you were charged with first-degree murder, but convicted only of second-degree murder, you would be considered acquitted of first-degree murder. This means that you could be retried only for second-degree murder.¹⁴⁶

You may also seek reversal on the law on grounds of legal insufficiency. Legal insufficiency means that the evidence presented by the prosecution was not enough (not sufficient) to prove all the necessary elements of the crime for which you were convicted.¹⁴⁷ For example, in order to convict a defendant of driving while intoxicated, the prosecution must prove both that the defendant was drunk and that he was driving a car. If the prosecution did not introduce any evidence that the defendant was driving a car, the evidence would be insufficient. In determining whether the evidence presented is legally sufficient, the appellate court will weigh whether any valid reasoning or inferences could lead a rational person to the conclusion that the jury reached, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution.¹⁴⁸ Note that showing that evidence is legally insufficient is different from showing a verdict to be against the weight of the evidence, which is discussed in Subsection (b) below.

Like any legal error, a claim of legal insufficiency must be preserved for it to be reviewed on appeal¹⁴⁹ or else it may only be reviewed “in the interest of justice” by the Appellate Division.¹⁵⁰ (See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more on the preservation requirement.) If a court grants your appeal by finding legal insufficiency, the court must dismiss those counts of your indictment that the court determines to be supported by legally insufficient evidence.¹⁵¹ The Double Jeopardy Clause of the Fifth Amendment¹⁵² prohibits the prosecution from retrying any count that has been dismissed for legal insufficiency.¹⁵³ Thus, if the appellate court reverses every count in your indictment for legal

145. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(1) (McKinney 2009).

146. See, e.g., People v. Graham, 36 N.Y.2d 633, 639, 331 N.E.2d 673, 677, 370 N.Y.S.2d 888, 894 (1975) (holding that defendant could not be retried for murder in the second degree after the appellate division reduced the conviction to manslaughter in the first degree).

147. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.15(4) (2009).

148. See People v. Taylor, 94 N.Y.2d 910, 911–912, 729 N.E.2d 337, 337–338, 707 N.Y.S.2d 618, 618–619 (2000) (stating that “whether inferences of guilt could be rationally drawn” from the evidence is the standard for evaluating sufficiency of the evidence).

149. When the prosecution rested, the defense should have moved for a dismissal and stated exactly why the prosecution’s case was legally insufficient. See People v. Hawkins, 11 N.Y.3d 484, 493, 900 N.E.2d 946, 951, 872 N.Y.S.2d 395, 400 (2008) (holding that a general objection that prosecution failed to prove its case does not preserve the issue of whether evidence was legally sufficient to support a particular element).

150. In fact, some courts have said that evaluating legal insufficiency is “necessarily” part of weighing evidence, which Appellate Division courts routinely do. Thus, a claim of legal insufficiency may succeed even if the issue was not preserved, if the claim is presented as the verdict being against the weight of the evidence. See, e.g., People v. Scott, 67 A.D.3d 1052, 1054, 889 N.Y.S.2d 279, 281 (3d Dept. 2009) (“[W]e will necessarily consider [legal insufficiency] in reviewing the weight of the evidence[.]”); People v. Loomis, 56 A.D.3d 1046, 1046–1047, 867 N.Y.S.2d 772, 773 (3d Dept. 2008) (considering sufficiency of evidence, although not preserved, while considering weight of evidence). Furthermore, if a defendant requests, “the Appellate Division must conduct a weight of the evidence review.” People v. Danielson, 9 N.Y.3d 342, 348, 880 N.E.2d 1, 4, 849 N.Y.S.2d 480, 484 (2007).

151. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 470.20(2), (3) (McKinney 2009).

152. U.S. CONST. amend. V (“nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb”).

153. See McDaniel v. Brown, 558 U.S. 120, 131, 130 S. Ct. 665, 672, 175 L. Ed. 2d 582, 589 (2010); Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 18, 98 S. Ct. 2141, 2150–2151, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1, 14 (1978) (finding that if a court finds insufficiency, you will be set free. By contrast, if the reversal is due to an error in the trial, and not because of legal insufficiency, double jeopardy will not apply and you may be retried for the same crime.¹⁵⁴

An appellate court may modify a judgment by dismissing one or more counts based on legal insufficiency, but affirming other counts for which there was legally sufficient evidence. In this situation, the appellate court has two options: (1) it can either affirm the sentence that the trial court imposed for the counts that were not dismissed¹⁵⁵ or, (2) it can “remand” (send the case back to the trial court) for re-sentencing.¹⁵⁶

An appellate court may also modify the judgment to change your conviction to a “lesser included offense.”¹⁵⁷ A lesser included offense exists when no one could possibly commit the greater crime without, by the same conduct, committing the lesser offense.¹⁵⁸ Petit larceny, for example, is a lesser included offense of third-degree robbery because petit larceny is stealing property¹⁵⁹ and third-degree robbery is stealing property through the use of force¹⁶⁰ or threat of force.¹⁶¹ Since both offenses require you to steal property, you cannot commit third-degree robbery without also committing petit larceny. Thus, if an appellate court concludes that the prosecutor failed to prove that you used force, your robbery conviction is legally insufficient. However, if the prosecutor did prove that you stole property, the appellate court may change your conviction to petit larceny without holding a new trial. If the appellate court determines that the evidence proved a lesser included offense, the court will send you back to the trial court for re-sentencing,¹⁶² unless you have already served the maximum sentence possible for the lesser crime.¹⁶³

(b) “On the Facts”

You can ask an appellate court for reversal “on the facts” by arguing that your guilty verdict was against the weight of the evidence.¹⁶⁴ In other words, the appellate court can reverse a case if it finds that the evidence was not strong enough to convict the person originally. In evaluating the weight of the evidence, an intermediate appellate court must determine whether a jury could reasonably have acquitted you based on the information it had. If the appellate court concludes that a jury could reasonably have acquitted you, the court must weigh the evidence used at trial to be sure the jury gave the evidence the weight it deserved. If the appellate court then decides that the jury did not give the evidence proper weight, the court may set aside the jury’s guilty verdict.¹⁶⁵ For instance, as you recall evidence legally insufficient, there must be a judgment of acquittal under the Double Jeopardy Clause).

154. See Lockhart v. Nelson, 488 U.S. 33, 40–42, 109 S. Ct. 285, 291, 10 L. Ed. 2d 265, 273–274 (1988) (holding that the Double Jeopardy Clause does not prohibit retrying a case overturned for improper sentencing unless the sum of the evidence was insufficient to sustain a guilty verdict); see generally Preiser, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.20(1) (McKinney 2009).

155. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(3) (McKinney 2009).

156. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(3) (McKinney 2009).

157. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

158. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 1.20(37) (McKinney 2009).

159. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 155.25 (McKinney 2009).

160. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 160.05 (McKinney 2009).

161. See People v. Rychel, 284 A.D.2d 662, 663, 728 N.Y.S.2d 211, 213 (3d Dept. 2001) (holding evidence legally sufficient for third-degree robbery where evidence established that force was threatened); People v. Smith, 278 A.D. 2d 75, 75, 718 N.Y.S.2d 305, 305 (1st Dep’t. 2000) (holding evidence legally sufficient for third-degree robbery where evidence established that force was threatened through “relatively polite behavior”).

162. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(4) (McKinney 2009).

163. See People v. McBride, 248 A.D.2d 641, 642, 669 N.Y.S.2d 952, 952 (2d Dept. 1998) (holding that there is no need to remand for re-sentencing since defendant had already served the maximum sentence for the reduced offense).

164. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(5) (McKinney 2009).

165. See People v. Bailey, 94 A.D.3d 904, 904–905, 942 N.Y.S.2d 165, 167–168 (2d Dept. 2012) (holding that the attempted murder in the second degree conviction must be set aside because it was against the weight of the evidence).

from the example above, evidence of drunk driving is not enough if the prosecution did not introduce any evidence that the defendant was driving a car. If a prosecution witness had said that she saw the defendant driving a car, but this was the only evidence and there were strong reasons to not believe the witness, then the verdict would likely be against the weight of the evidence—there is some evidence, but the jury weighed it incorrectly.

Only the Appellate Division can review a weight of the evidence claim. In doing so, it sits as “a thirteenth juror.”¹⁶⁶ In contrast, neither the trial court nor the Court of Appeals can review weight of the evidence or make its own decision about whether a witness was credible.¹⁶⁷ A “weight of the evidence” claim does not need to have been preserved at trial,¹⁶⁸ but you should raise it clearly on appeal to be sure that the Appellate Division will consider it.

If the appellate court sets aside your verdict as “against the weight of the trial evidence,” the appellate court must dismiss the charge against you.¹⁶⁹ According to New York law, you cannot be prosecuted again on the same charge.¹⁷⁰ Thus, if the court sets aside all of the charges against you as “against the weight of the evidence,” the court will order your release from custody. If one or more, but not all, of the charges against you are dismissed as against the weight of the evidence, the court may modify the judgment as described above in Part D(1)(a).

2. Appealing Your Sentence

You can appeal your sentence on the ground that the sentence is either: (1) unlawful or (2) unduly harsh or excessive.¹⁷¹

(a) Unlawful Sentence

A sentence is invalid as a matter of law when its terms are not authorized by statute or when the sentencing court considers inappropriate factors, like whether you decided to exercise certain rights.

166. People v. Danielson, 9 N.Y.3d 342, 348–349, 880 N.E.2d 1, 5, 849 N.Y.S.2d 480, 484 (2007) (noting that weight of the evidence review essentially requires the court to sit as a thirteenth juror and decide which facts were proven at trial).

167. There are very rare exceptions to this rule. One is that if the witness is so unreliable that it would not be fair for the jury to believe what he is saying. In this case, the court says the witness is “incredible as a matter of law.” People v. Heath, 214 A.D.2d 519, 520–521, 625 N.Y.S.2d 540, 541 (1st Dept. 1995) (“The arresting officer’s testimony that he observed defendant exchanging a 2-inch glass vial with a dark top, from a distance of approximately 74 feet, from a moving patrol car, after dark, is, in our view, contrary to common experience and, as such, was incredible as a matter of law and did not support the verdict.”); see, e.g., People v. Foster, 64 N.Y.2d 1144, 1147–1148, 480 N.E.2d 340, 342, 490 N.Y.S.2d 726, 728 (1985) (finding the evidence insufficient to establish one defendant’s guilt beyond a reasonable doubt by testimony from a witness who is either morally or mentally irresponsible); People v. Quinones, 61 A.D.2d 765, 766, 402 N.Y.S.2d 196, 197 (1st Dept. 1978) (rejecting as a matter of law police officer testimony that strongly appeared to have been fabricated to conceal constitutional violations). Another exception is if the witness himself might be credible, but he is the only witness, and his testimony contradicts itself. See People v. Delamota 18 N.Y.3d 107, 114–115, 960 N.E.2d 383, 387–389, 936 N.Y.S.2d 614, 618–619, 2011 N.Y. Slip Op. 08225, 4–5 (2011) (discussing how courts have treated this standard since the 1970s).

168. See People v. Danielson, 9 N.Y.3d 342, 349–350, 880 N.E.2d 1, 5–6, 849 N.Y.S.2d 480, 484–485 (2007) (noting that a court must consider whether there is evidence that the elements of a crime have been satisfied when weighing the sufficiency of the evidence, even without the issue having been preserved at trial).

169. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(5) (McKinney 2009).

170. The prosecution cannot retry any count that was reversed because it was against the weight of the evidence. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW. § 470.20(5) (McKinney 2009). This is based solely upon New York statute and not on constitutional protection from double jeopardy. See Tibbs v. Florida, 457 U.S. 31, 32, 102 S. Ct. 2211, 2213, 72 L. Ed. 2d 652, 655 (1982) (holding that the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Constitution does not bar the retrial of an accused when an earlier conviction was reversed based on the weight, as opposed to the sufficiency, of the evidence); People v. Romero, 7 N.Y.3d 633, 644 n.2, 859 N.E.2d 902, 909 n.2, 826 N.Y.S.2d 163, 170 (2006) (explaining that, in New York, “our Legislature has erected a statutory bar preventing a defendant from being retried after a conviction is reversed based on the weight of the evidence”).

171. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.30(1) (McKinney 2009). You may be able to appeal your sentence on the ground that the sentence is unduly harsh or excessive even if you negotiated your sentence in exchange for a

For example, a sentence of thirty years for first-degree assault, a class B violent felony, is unlawful, since the maximum penalty allowed for a class B violent felony is twenty-five years.¹⁷² A sentence may also be unlawful if it is based on an incorrect determination that you had a prior conviction,¹⁷³ or if your sentences were improperly ordered to run consecutively (one after the other), instead of concurrently (at the same time).¹⁷⁴ A sentence is also illegal if it constitutes “cruel and unusual” punishment.¹⁷⁵

(b) Unduly Harsh or Excessive Sentence

A sentence is excessive if the law allows the sentence, but is unfair based on the facts of your case.¹⁷⁶ An appellate court may take into account, for example, the circumstances of your crime, the probability of your rehabilitation, your background, and your criminal record.¹⁷⁷ You may appeal your sentence as unduly harsh if anything over the minimum legal sentence was imposed. A court may also consider whether the sentences you received are to run consecutively (one after the other) or concurrently (at the same time). Even if the appellate court rejects all of your arguments regarding guilty plea. See People v. Pollenz, 67 N.Y.2d 264, 267–268, 493 N.E.2d 541, 542, 502 N.Y.S.2d 417, 418 (1986) (holding that Art. Six, § 4(k) of the New York Constitution prohibits the legislature from limiting the appellate division’s jurisdiction by prohibiting appeals on the issue of excessive sentences); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2009) (providing that an appellate court may use its discretion to reverse or modify a sentence as unduly harsh or severe). See Part D(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of possible waiver of your right to appeal the issue of whether your sentence was unduly harsh or excessive.

172. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02(3)(a) (McKinney 2009).

173. See People v. Cabassa, 186 Misc. 2d 200, 213, 717 N.Y.S.2d 487, 496–497 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2000) (holding that there must be a resentencing proceeding where a previous federal conviction that was voided under constitutional grounds was considered in the sentencing, although the underlying facts of the federal case may be considered); People ex rel. Furia v. Zelker, 70 Misc. 2d 167, 169, 332 N.Y.S.2d 310, 311 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1971) (finding that where defendant’s 1959 conviction had been set aside before he was convicted on this offense in 1966, the fact that he was convicted again in 1970 for the 1959 crime did not make him a “multiple felony offender” in 1966); People v. Foster, 57 N.Y.S.2d 737, 738 (Sup. Ct. Cayuga County 1945) (finding a sentence unlawful because it had been increased to reflect a prior felony, although no prior felony had been included in the indictment).

174. See, e.g., N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.25(2)(g) (McKinney 2009) (requiring that certain sentences run concurrently). The Constitution does not prevent a trial judge (instead of a jury) from deciding whether facts exist that require a consecutive sentence. Oregon v. Ice, 555 U.S. 160, 163–165, 129 S. Ct. 711, 714–715, 172 L. Ed. 2d 517, 522 (2009) (holding that Oregon’s system—which, like New York’s, generally requires concurrent sentences for multiple convictions at the same time unless certain factors exist—is constitutional even though judges rather than juries decide whether those factors exist).

175. See U.S. CONST. amend. VIII; People v. Diaz, 179 Misc. 2d 946, 956–957, 686 N.Y.S.2d 595, 601–602 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1999) (holding that defendant’s sentence of 15 years to life was “grossly disproportionate” as applied to him and therefore constituted “cruel and unusual punishment,” and re-sentencing defendant to 10 years to life).

176. When an appellate court decides whether a sentence is excessive or unduly harsh, it is said to be exercising its “in the interest of justice” jurisdiction. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2009). See Part B(3)(a) of this Chapter for a discussion of “in the interest of justice” jurisdiction.

177. See, e.g., People v. Yanus, 13 A.D.3d 804, 805, 786 N.Y.S.2d 264, 265 (stating the court considered the nature of the crime, the investigation report, and defendant’s following arrests and found no abuse of discretion in sentencing); People v. Sieber, 26 A.D.3d 535, 536, 809 N.Y.S.2d 613, 614 (3d Dept 2006) (upholding a sentence as well within the discretion given the defendants failure to accept responsibility for the offense); People v. Bankowski, 204 A.D.2d 802, 803, 611 N.Y.S.2d 712, 713–714 (3d Dept. 1994) (holding that the harshest available sentence for manslaughter and drunk driving was not excessive where the defendant had a prior conviction for drunk driving); People v. Pugh, 194 A.D.2d 863, 865, 599 N.Y.S.2d 317, 319 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that the defendant’s full and intentional participation in brutally violent crimes made the sentence appropriate, even though the defendant was young and did not have any previous criminal record).

errors that occurred during your trial, it may use its “in the interest of justice” discretion to order your sentences to run concurrently instead of consecutively.¹⁷⁸

An intermediate appellate court may substitute its own discretion for that of the trial court in reviewing and modifying your sentence.¹⁷⁹ If an intermediate appellate court decides to change your sentence because it is unduly harsh or excessive, then the court itself must impose some lawful lesser sentence.¹⁸⁰ If this happens, the court changes only your sentence and the rest of the judgment (your conviction) is otherwise affirmed.¹⁸¹

In a death sentence appeal, the Court of Appeals must focus upon the individual circumstances of your case in determining whether your sentence is unjust.¹⁸² Under New York law, the Court of Appeals is required to consider the potential influence of the jury’s passion or prejudice (including race-based prejudice) upon your sentence, the penalty imposed in similar cases, and the weight of the evidence in support of your sentence.¹⁸³ An appellate court has three options when it reviews a death penalty sentence: (1) it can affirm the death sentence, (2) it can remand the case for re-sentencing with the possibility of the death sentence, or (3) it can remand the case for re-sentencing without the possibility of a death sentence.¹⁸⁴

Although these appellate procedures for death penalty cases are still valid, there is currently no constitutionally valid death penalty statute on the books in New York.¹⁸⁵ This means that there will not be any death penalty appeals in New York in the near future.

3. Types of Errors

When appealing your conviction (see Part D(1)) or your sentence (see Part D(2)), you argue that the trial court allowed errors to take place. Some errors are considered so serious that they are always enough to justify the reversal of your judgment without the need to prove how they harmed you. Other errors have the potential to be serious enough to warrant reversal, but they do not necessarily justify reversal. The court analyzes these errors under the “harmless error test.” This means that the court will not reverse or modify a judgment if the error is harmless. The court will decide that an error is 178. See, e.g., People v. Evans, 212 A.D.2d 626, 627, 623 N.Y.S.2d 4, 6 (2d Dept. 1995) (modifying a sentence in which the defendant would serve four terms of “25 years to life” consecutively to a sentence in which the defendant could serve the four terms concurrently); People v. Quinitchett, 210 A.D.2d 438, 439, 620 N.Y.S.2d 430, 431 (2d Dep’t. 1994) (modifying a sentence in which the defendant would serve three terms of “25 years to life” consecutively to a sentence in which the defendant could serve the three terms concurrently).

179. See People v. Wiggins, 24 A.D.3d 263, 263, 806 N.Y.S.2d 496, 497 (1st Dept. 2005) (reducing sentence on appeal as a matter of discretion in the interest of justice); People v. Delgado, 80 N.Y.2d 780, 783, 599 N.E.2d 675, 676, 587 N.Y.S.2d 271, 272 (1992) (noting that “[a]n intermediate appellate court has broad, plenary power to modify a sentence that is unduly harsh or severe” and that the court could exercise this power “if the interest of justice warrants, without deference to the sentencing court”); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW. § 470.15(6)(b) (McKinney 2009). But see People v. Hoyle, 211 A.D.2d 973, 975, 621 N.Y.S.2d 756, 759 (3d Dept. 1995) (refusing to modify the sentence because the lower court did not abuse its discretion in sentencing defendant).

180. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.20(6) (McKinney 2009).

181. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.15(2)(c) (McKinney 20109).

182. See Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 155, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2935, 49 L. Ed. 859, 887 (1976) (observing that concerns that a court might impose the death penalty in an “arbitrary and capricious manner” are “best met by a system . . . [in] which the sentencing authority is apprised of the information relevant to the imposition of sentence and provided with standards to guide its use of the information”).

183. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.30(3) (McKinney 20109).

184. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.30(5) (McKinney 20109).

185. See People v. LaValle, 3 N.Y.3d 88, 99, 817 N.E.2d 341, 344, 783 N.Y.S.2d, 485, 488 (2004) (holding that the current New York death penalty statute is unconstitutional); see also People v. Taylor, 9 N.Y.3d 129, 155–156, 878 N.E.2d 969, 984, 848 N.Y.S.2d 554, 568 (2007) (vacating the sentence of the last incarcerated person on death row in New York); Alan Feuer, Death Penalty Is Thrown Out in Wendy’s Killings, N.Y. TIMES (Oct. 23, 2007), available at <https://www.nytimes.com/2007/10/23/nyregion/23cnd-death.html> (last visited Feb. 22, 2019) (noting that John Taylor, the defendant in the last cited case, “was the last remaining inmate on New York State’s death row”).

harmless if the court believes you would have received the same conviction and/or sentence even if the error had not occurred.

Note that to appeal on the basis of most of these errors, even those that are always considered harmful when your appeal is evaluated, you must have “preserved” the error by objecting at trial. Some errors are not subject to this requirement, however. For information about the preservation requirement, see Part B(3).

(a) Errors That Are Always “Harmful”

Some errors are considered so harmful that their occurrence always means that you were denied a fair trial and are entitled to a new one. These errors have such a significant effect that they are themselves enough to justify reversal of your conviction.¹⁸⁶ For example, errors in which the court misstates the prosecution's burden of proof on an issue should result in reversal.¹⁸⁷ Other examples of errors justifying reversal include:

186. See generally Preiser, Practice Commentary, McKinney’s Cons Laws of NY, Book 11A, N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 470.05 (2009).

- (1) You were deprived of your right to counsel,¹⁸⁸ which includes a denial of your right to a lawyer of your choosing,¹⁸⁹ or if you were represented only by a person pretending to be a lawyer;¹⁹⁰
- (2) You chose to represent yourself at trial but the court failed to inform you of the dangers of proceeding without a lawyer;¹⁹¹
- (3) You were denied your right to represent yourself;¹⁹²
- (4) Your judge was biased;¹⁹³
- (5) Your judge gave an incorrect instruction about reasonable doubt to the jury, in violation of your Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights;¹⁹⁴
- (6) Your judge gave an instruction to the jury that defined two alternative reasons for conviction, one of which was legally erroneous, and the appellate court now cannot say with absolute certainty that the jury based its verdict on legally correct reasoning;¹⁹⁵
- (7) You were denied your right to be present at certain stages of the trial;¹⁹⁶
- (8) The prosecutor wrongly excluded potential jurors on the basis of their race or sex;¹⁹⁷
- (9) A juror was improperly removed from the jury;¹⁹⁸
- (10) Your judge was absent during part of your trial;¹⁹⁹
- (11) During the selection of jurors, your judge improperly denied your claim that a juror should not be included in the jury, and this refusal was based on the judge's incorrect conclusion that you or your lawyer were discriminating on the basis of race or gender;²⁰⁰ or
- (12) During the selection of jurors, your judge improperly denied your claim that a juror should not be included because the juror expressed doubt about his or her ability to decide the 187. See People v. McLaughlin, 80 N.Y.2d 466, 471–472, 606 N.E.2d 1357, 1359–1360, 591 N.Y.S.2d 966, 968–9969 (1992) (reversing convictions on counts for which the judge gave an erroneous charge to the jury).

188. See Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 339–343, 83 S. Ct. 792, 794–796, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 802–804, (1963) (reversing conviction because defendant was not appointed counsel); People v. Hilliard, 73 N.Y.2d 584, 586–587, 540 N.E.2d 702, 702–703, 542 N.Y.S.2d 507, 507–508 (1989) (reversing conviction because trial court did not allow defendant to contact his attorney for thirty days following his arraignment, and stating that it does not matter whether this affected the outcome). In contrast to denial of effective assistance of counsel at trial, harmless error analysis is applicable to denial of effective counsel at a pre-indictment preliminary hearing. See People v. Wicks, 76 N.Y.2d 128, 133, 556 N.E.2d 409, 411, 556 N.Y.S.2d 970, 972 (1990) (holding that the deprivation of a defendant's right to counsel at a hearing to determine whether the defendant could be held over for action by the grand jury is subject to harmless error analysis); People v. Wardlaw, 18 A.D.3d 106, 112, 794 N.Y.S.2d 524, 529 (4th Dept. 2005) (holding that the deprivation of a defendant's right to counsel at a pretrial suppression hearing is subject to constitutional harmless error analysis).

189. See Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 52–53, 53 S. Ct. 55, 58, 77 L. Ed. 158, 162 (1932) (reversing conviction because, among other reasons, defendants were appointed lawyers before being given an opportunity to hire their own); People v. Knowles, 88 N.Y.2d 763, 768–769, 673 N.E.2d 902, 905–906, 650 N.Y.S.2d 617, 620–621 (1996) (overturning conviction because retained lawyer was not permitted to take part in defense trial); People v. Arroyave, 49 N.Y.2d 264, 270–273, 401 N.E.2d 393, 396–398, 425 N.Y.S.2d 282, 285–288 (1980) (remanding to the trial court for a hearing regarding whether the department of corrections unconstitutionally prevented the defendant from retaining the counsel of his choice by failing to deliver the lawyer's letter in a timely manner).

190. See People v. Felder, 47 N.Y.2d 287, 291, 391 N.E.2d 1274, 1275, 418 N.Y.S.2d 295, 296 (1979) (holding that the conviction of a defendant who had been represented by a non-lawyer pretending to be a lawyer “must be set aside without regard to whether [defendant] was individually prejudiced by such representation”). However, not every instance in which a person who is not licensed to practice law participates as a lawyer for the defendant will require automatic reversal. See People v. Jacobs, 6 N.Y.3d 188, 190, 844 N.E.2d 1126, 1127, 811 N.Y.S.2d 604, 605 (2005) (holding that where one of defendant's two-person defense team was a non-lawyer pretending to be a lawyer, reversal was not appropriate unless defendant was actually harmed); People v. Kieser, 79 N.Y.2d 936, 937–938, 591 N.E.2d 1174, 1175, 582 N.Y.S.2d 988, 989 (1992) (holding that where defendant is represented by a lawyer who is temporarily not entitled to practice law for some “technical” reason, such as failure to pay bar dues, reversal is not appropriate unless defendant was harmed).

191. See People v. Arroyo, 98 N.Y.2d 101, 103–104, 772 N.E.2d 1154, 1156, 745 N.Y.S.2d 796, 798 (2002) (reversing a conviction because the trial court allowed defendant to represent himself without adequate inquiry into defendant's understanding of the choice).

192. See Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 835, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2541, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 581–582 (1975) (holding that refusal to let a “literate, competent, and understanding” defendant represent himself violated the 6th and 14th Amendments). However, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that a court has the discretion to deny the request if the defendant is found to lack competence to represent himself, and it can force an incompetent defendant to accept the aid of a lawyer. See Indiana v. Edwards, 554 U.S. 164, 178, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 2388, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345, 357 (2008) (“[T]he Constitution permits States to insist upon representation by counsel for those competent enough to stand trial ... but who still suffer from severe mental illness to the point where they are not competent to conduct trial proceedings by themselves”).

193. See Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510, 523, 47 S. Ct. 437, 441, 71 L. Ed. 749, 754 (1927) (holding that trial under a judge with a personal financial interest in the defendant’s conviction violated defendant’s 14th Amendment rights).

194. See Sullivan v. Louisiana, 508 U.S. 275, 278–282, 113 S. Ct. 2078, 2081–2083, 124 L. Ed. 2d 182, 188–191 (1993) (holding that constitutionally-deficient reasonable doubt instruction required reversal).

195. See Griffin v. United States, 502 U.S. 46, 52–55, 112 S.Ct. 466, 470–472, 116 L. Ed. 2d 371, 378–380 (1991) (summarizing precedent stating that a verdict must be set aside if it could have been decided on multiple grounds and one of the possible grounds was unconstitutional or illegal); People v. Martinez, 83 N.Y.2d 26, 35, 628 N.E.2d 1320, 1325, 607 N.Y.S.2d 610, 615 (1993) (reversing because judge told the jury it could return a guilty verdict based on either of two theories, one of which was illegal, and the jury did not say which theory it used to reach the guilty verdict).

196. See, e.g., People v. Antommarchi, 80 N.Y.2d 247, 249–250, 604 N.E.2d 95, 96–97, 590 N.Y.S.2d 33, 34–35 (1992) (reversing because defendant was not present at bench conferences with jury candidates regarding their ability to weigh evidence objectively and to hear evidence impartially); People v. Dokes, 79 N.Y.2d 656, 660–662, 595 N.E.2d 836, 839–840, 584 N.Y.S.2d 761, 764–765 (1992) (reversing because defendant was not present at hearing about impeaching him with prior acts).

197. See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 84, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1716, 90 L. Ed. 2d. 69, 79 (1986) (holding that challenging potential jurors on the basis of race violates the defendant’s equal protection rights); see also Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 476–486, 128 S. Ct. 1203, 1207–1212, 170 L. Ed. 2d 175, 180–186 (2008) (granting a new trial because the prosecutor had improperly excluded black jurors in a case where the defendant was black, and noting that a close examination of why the prosecutor excluded jurors was necessary where racial motives were not acknowledged). The 14th Amendment prohibits discrimination in jury selection on the basis of gender as well as race. See J.E.B. v. Ala. ex rel. T.B., 511 U.S. 127, 129, 114 S. Ct. 1419, 1421, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89, 97 (1994) (stating that gender discrimination by the state violates Equal Protection Clause). The law no longer requires that you be a member of the same group as the wrongfully excluded jurors for the error to be considered fundamental. See Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 416, 111 S. Ct. 1364, 1373–1374, 113 L. Ed. 2d 411, 429 (1991) (reversing conviction of white defendant because black jurors were improperly not selected for the jury).

198. See, e.g., People v. Anderson, 70 N.Y.2d 729, 730–731, 514 N.E.2d 377, 377–378, 519 N.Y.S.2d 957, 957–958 (1987) (reversing conviction because trial court did not conduct proper inquiry before discharging a juror, and noting that such an error is not subject to harmless error analysis); People v. Jones, 210 A.D.2d 430, 431, 620 N.Y.S.2d 124, 125 (2d Dept. 1994) (holding same).

199. See People v. Ahmed, 66 N.Y.2d 307, 311–312, 487 N.E. 2d 894, 896, 496 N.Y.S.2d 984, 986 (1985) (reversing conviction because absence of judge during jury deliberations violated defendant’s right to jury trial).

200. See People v. Richie, 217 A.D.2d 84, 89, 635 N.Y.S.2d 263, 267 (2d Dept. 1995) (“The explanations based on crime-victim status, familial relationship to a correction officer, or prior jury service are not ‘pretextual on their face’ and are not ‘implausible’, ‘silly’, or ‘superstitious’. That there was less than complete uniformity in the application of these factors does not establish that these factors were pretextual” (citations omitted)).

case fairly, and you or your lawyer eventually used up all of your challenges to the jury composition.²⁰¹

Note that the questions of whether the harmless error test applies (as opposed to automatic reversal) and what standard to apply are issues evolving on both the state and federal levels.²⁰² This means that you should research what law applies to your case.

(b) Errors That May be “Harmless”

If the error that occurred in your proceedings was not necessarily enough to warrant reversal of your judgment, the court will examine the error to the harmless error test. Once the court decides that the error occurred, it must decide if the error harmed you. If the court finds that your conviction had an error but the error did not impact your conviction (you would have been convicted and sentenced in the same way even if the error had not happened), then it will find that the error was “harmless.” The specific test that New York appellate courts apply to determine whether an error is harmless depends on whether the error is a constitutional or non-constitutional error.

A non-constitutional legal error does not violate rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or the New York State Constitution. Rather, these types of errors generally violate rights guaranteed by state statutes or common law. A non-constitutional legal error is harmful if (1) there was not overwhelming proof of your guilt at trial (apart from any wrongly admitted evidence) and (2) there is a “significant probability” that the jury would have acquitted you had it not been for the error.²⁰³

For example, the trial judge may improperly examine a witness (for instance, by asking a witness questions in a way that gives the jury an impression that the judge does not find the witness to be credible or trustworthy).²⁰⁴ If the appellate court holds that the trial judge improperly examined a witness, it will use the harmless error test to determine if your judgment should be modified or reversed. In general, the stronger the evidence against you, the more likely a court will find a non-constitutional error harmless (and therefore affirm the judgment against you).²⁰⁵

A constitutional error is a legal error that violates rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution or the New York State Constitution. Appellate courts apply a standard that is more favorable to the 201. See People v. Johnson, 94 N.Y.2d 600, 614–615, 730 N.E.2d 932, 939–940, 709 N.Y.S.2d 134, 141–142 (2000) (reversing conviction because trial court failed to either excuse or demand unconditional assurances from jurors who openly admitted that they doubted whether they could be fair in the case); People v. Johnson, 17 N.Y.3d 752, 753, 952 N.E.2d 1008, 1009, 929 N.Y.S.2d 16, 17 (2011) (reversing conviction because trial court failed to follow up with questioning after a juror expressed uncertainty about her ability to fairly consider a major issue in the case); People v. Giuliani, 47 Misc. 3d 31, 33, 6 N.Y.S.3d 382, 385 (2d Dept., 9th & 10th Jud. Dists. 2014) (reversing trial court’s refusal to excuse juror, thus requiring the defendant to use his last peremptory strike, who admitted that she could not decide a DWI case without relying on her professional knowledge as a nurse); People v. Russell, 116 A.D.3d 1090, 1093–1094, 983 N.Y.S.2d 105, 108–109 (2014) (holding that failure to make further inquiries into jurors who had shared inability to be unbiased required new trial).

202. For example, in 1991, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the harmless error test applies to the admission of coerced confessions. See Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 311–312, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1265–1266, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 332–333 (1991). This was a change in the previous standard, in which admission of a coerced confession was always considered harmful. See Payne v. Arkansas, 356 U.S. 560, 568, 78 S. Ct. 844, 850, 2 L. Ed. 2d 975, 981 (1958). Although many of the cases cited in this Section are New York state cases, you should be aware that federal cases (such as cases decided by the Supreme Court and the Second Circuit) may apply to you.

203. See People v. Ayala, 75 N.Y.2d 422, 431, 553 N.E.2d 960, 964, 554 N.Y.S.2d 412, 416 (1990) (alteration in original) (citing People v. Crimmins, 36 N.Y.2d 230, 242, 326 N.E.2d 787, 794, 367 N.Y.S.2d 213, 222 (1975)) (“[T]he standard for nonconstitutional error, which is governed solely by State law, requires reversal if the properly admitted evidence was not ‘overwhelming’ and there is a ‘significant probability ... that the jury would have acquitted the defendant had it not been for the error or errors which occurred.’”).

204. See People v. Mendez, 225 A.D.2d 1051, 1051–1052, 639 N.Y.S.2d 219, 219–220 (4th Dept. 1996) (granting defendant a new trial because the trial judge skeptically questioned a defense witness).

205. See People v. Kello, 96 N.Y.2d 740, 743–744, 746 N.E.2d 166, 166–168, 723 N.Y.S.2d 111, 112–114 (2001) (holding that there was no significant probability that entering the excluded 911 tapes into evidence at trial would have led to the defendant’s acquittal given the testimony offered at trial, and therefore finding the error harmless).

defendant when reviewing constitutional errors than they do when reviewing statutory errors. In general, a constitutional error is harmful unless there is no reasonable possibility that the error might have contributed to your conviction (as in the error is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt).²⁰⁶

E. Preparing Your Papers for Your Appeal

1. What and Where to File

This Part will help you determine what papers you need to file and how to file them.

If you have a right to appeal and are appealing “as a matter of right,”²⁰⁷ you must file two copies of a written notice of appeal with the clerk of the court where you were sentenced.²⁰⁸ You must also serve a copy of your notice of appeal upon, or give a copy to, the district attorney of the county where your trial court is located.²⁰⁹ The notice of appeal should state the following information: (1) your name; (2) your desire to appeal; (3) the court to which you plan to appeal; (4) a description of the judgment, sentence, or order you wish to appeal; and (5) your indictment number or your docket number if your proceedings occurred in the criminal court.²¹⁰ If your notice of appeal contains mistakes in the description of the judgment, sentence, or order to be appealed, the appellate court may, in the interest of justice, excuse your mistakes and treat your notice as valid.²¹¹ However, you should try to make your legal papers as correct as possible.

If you are challenging a decision for which there is no right to appeal without permission—for example, a trial court’s denial of your Article 440.10 or Article 440.20 motion—you must first seek permission to appeal. To do this, you must file an application for a certificate granting leave (permission) to appeal in the intermediate appellate court.²¹² If you do not file the application and simply appeal without permission, the court will not consider your appeal, and by the time the problem comes to light it might be too late to get permission. If your application is granted, the court will issue a certificate to you granting leave (permission) to appeal. You must file both this certificate and a notice of appeal with your trial court within fifteen days.²¹³ If the appeal is from a local criminal court and a court stenographer or reporter did not record your proceedings, you may submit an affidavit of 206. See Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 24, 87 S. Ct. 824, 828, 17 L. Ed. 2d 705, 710–711 (1967) (noting that on appeal the prosecution must “prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the error complained of did not contribute to the verdict obtained” for a conviction to be sustained despite a constitutional error); see also People v. Ayala, 75 N.Y.2d 422, 431, 553 N.E.2d 960, 964, 554 N.Y.S.2d 412, 416 (1990) (“Constitutional error... must lead to reversal unless there is no reasonable possibility that the error might have contributed to the conviction.”). The harmless error test for constitutional errors in habeas corpus proceedings is different from the standard in direct appeals. See JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus” on federal habeas corpus proceedings and JLM, Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan” on New York State habeas corpus proceedings.

207. See Part B(4) of this Chapter, which explains when you have a right to appeal without asking permission.

208. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2009). This section applies to appeals as a matter of right to an intermediate appellate court or directly to the Court of Appeals. If there is no clerk of the trial court, you must file one copy of your notice of appeal with the judge of the trial court and a second copy with the clerk of the appellate court to which you plan to appeal. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(2) (McKinney 2009). If a transcript of your trial was not made because there was no court reporter at your trial, you may file an affidavit of errors with the trial court instead of a notice of appeal. If you file a notice of appeal, you must also file an affidavit of errors within thirty days of filing your notice of appeal. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(3) (McKinney 2009). See Part E(2) of this Chapter for deadlines for filing.

209. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(1)(b), (3)(b) (McKinney 2009).

210. See Forms B-1, B-2, and B-3 in Appendix B of this Chapter.

211. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(6) (McKinney 2009).

212. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2009) (describing procedure for seeking leave to appeal to an intermediate court). See also Appendix B, Form B-2, for a sample application for a certificate granting leave to appeal. Note, each appellate division has its own rules for applying for a certificate. See JLM, Chapter 20, for information on 440 motions.

213. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(b) (McKinney 2009).

errors in place of the notice of appeal. Please note that these procedures apply to appeals by permission to the intermediate appellate court (usually the appellate division). For information on seeking permission from the Court of Appeals, see Part F.

In either case, once you have filed a notice of appeal, you should order copies of the trial transcript from the court reporter. You will need copies of the transcript to “perfect your appeal.”²¹⁴ You will generally need to pay a fee when you order copies of the transcript. If you cannot afford the transcripts, you may request that the appellate court give you a free transcript, or request to appeal on the original record. To do either, you must send the appellate court: (1) a letter stating your request, and (2) an affidavit (a sworn statement witnessed by a notary public) setting forth your request, the amount and sources of your income, and facts showing that you are unable to pay the relevant expenses.²¹⁵ This affidavit to proceed as a poor person on appeal, or for partial poor person relief, is called an “in forma pauperis affidavit.” You should also send copies of the letter and affidavit to the district attorney of the county where your trial court is located. Appendix B of this Chapter explains exactly how to fill out poor person’s papers. The same procedure can be used to ask the court to appoint a lawyer for you if you cannot afford one.

2. When to File

If your appeal is a matter of right, you must file and serve your notice of appeal within thirty days of your sentencing date.²¹⁶ If you want to appeal, you should file even if you are unsure of the details of your appeal. Filing does not force you to complete your appeal, but if you do not file you will probably lose your right to appeal when the thirty-day deadline passes. You can get a lawyer to help you with the rest of your appeal. See Part C(1) above for how to get a lawyer.

If your appeal is a matter of right and you are appealing directly to the Court of Appeals, the deadline for filing your notice of appeal is the same as for an appeal as of right to an intermediate appellate court. Also, you must file and serve your jurisdictional statement, that is, why you are able to appeal to a given court, within ten days of filing your notice of appeal.

If you must seek permission to appeal, an application for a certificate granting leave to appeal to an intermediate appellate court must be filed within thirty days after you or your lawyer at trial received a copy of the order or judgment you wish to appeal.²¹⁷ If the court gives you a certificate granting permission to appeal, you must file the certificate and notice of appeal within fifteen days from the time the court created the certificate.²¹⁸

3. How to Perfect Your Appeal

In addition to filing a notice of appeal, you must “perfect” your appeal.²¹⁹ Generally, to perfect an appeal, you must deliver a specified number of copies of the trial record and your brief to the appellate court and to the opposing party. The exact steps necessary to perfect an appeal vary in each appellate 214. See Part E(3) of this Chapter on how to perfect an appeal.

215. Under the rules of the four appellate divisions, the procedure for seeking relief as a poor person in criminal appeals is the same as that in civil cases. For an explanation of this procedure, see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101 (McKinney 2009). See also Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 741, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1398, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 496 (1967) (holding that an indigent person has the right to appellate representation equal to that of a nonindigent person); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 355, 83 S. Ct. 814, 815–816, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 813–814 (1963) (holding that the 14th Amendment requires states to provide indigent persons representation on their appeals as of right); People v. Garcia, 93 N.Y.2d 42, 46, 710 N.E.2d 247, 249, 687 N.Y.S.2d 601, 603 (1999) (“[O]n a People’s appeal, a defendant has the right to appellate counsel of defendant’s choice and the right to seek appointment of counsel upon proof of indigency.”).

216. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2009). If you file the notice, but fail to serve a copy on the district attorney within the 30-day period, the appellate court may allow you to serve the notice after the deadline, provided that you have a good reason. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(6) (McKinney 2009).

217. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2009).

218. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(b) (McKinney 2009).

219. See generally N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.70 (McKinney 2009).

court. For details, you should consult the rules of the appellate division or appellate term to which you are appealing.²²⁰

4. How to Prepare for Your Appeal

Once you have properly taken your appeal, you or your lawyer will need to review the record and begin to prepare a brief. The brief is a legal memorandum, which is a paper that informs the appellate court of the facts of your case, identifies the trial court's errors, and explains why these errors require the appellate court to reverse or modify your conviction or sentence.²²¹ The brief is "served upon" or officially given to the court and your opponent (the prosecution). If your lawyer prepares the brief, you should read a copy to be sure that it contains all the arguments that you believe the appeals court should consider in deciding your case.

If you have been assigned a lawyer, you do not have the right to insist that the lawyer include arguments in the brief that your lawyer believes should not be presented to the appellate court.²²² You may, however, request permission to file a pro se supplemental brief (an additional brief of your own) to raise issues your lawyer left out of the original brief. The appellate court will likely (but not necessarily) accept your pro se brief, provided that you request to file it in a timely fashion, usually by writing for permission to the appellate court where your appeal will be heard, and provided you specifically identify in your request the issues that you intend to raise in the pro se brief. You must request this permission in writing within thirty days of the date that your attorney files the brief. You should make sure that your request is not too late or too general.²²³ The rules for when you must file your request can be found in the rules of the court to which you are appealing.²²⁴

In response to your brief, your opponent (the prosecution) will almost certainly file a brief that argues that the trial court's judgment should stand. After the appellate court receives your opponent's brief, it will set a calendar date for oral argument.²²⁵ After your opponent files his brief, you also have the right to file a reply brief within a few days. A reply brief gives you the opportunity to point out factual errors in the respondent's brief, or to mention relevant court decisions that have been issued since you submitted your initial brief. You are not allowed to raise new issues in your reply.²²⁶

In an oral argument, your lawyer has about fifteen minutes to discuss the merits of your appeal directly with the appellate court.²²⁷ The purpose of the oral argument is to focus the judges' attention

220. See Appendix A of this Chapter to determine where you should direct your appeal. See generally N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 600.9, .11 (2020) for 1st Dept. Appellate Division; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 640.3, .5, .6(b) (2020) for 1st Dept. Appellate Term; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 670.9–.11 (2020) for 2d Dept. Appellate Division; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 731.1, .4(c) (2020) for 2d Dept. Appellate Term; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, §§ 850.1, .5, .9, .11 (2020) for 3d Dept. Appellate Division; N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. Tit. 22 § 1000.1, .7–.9, .11 (2020) for 4th Dept. Appellate Division.

221. Part B of Chapter 6 of the JLM describes briefs (memorandum of law) and other legal papers in more detail.

222. See Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 751, 103 S. Ct. 3308, 3312, 77 L. Ed. 2d 987, 993 (1983) (holding that a defendant does not have the right to insist that his lawyer raise every possible argument that has some merit); People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (holding same).

223. See People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (holding that while it would be "better practice" for appellate courts to accept timely supplemental pro se briefs, the denial of an application to accept a pro se brief is within the court's discretion).

224. In the second department of the appellate division, for example, if you want to file a pro se brief, you must do so within 30 days from the date your attorney filed her brief. For more information about the rules of the court to which you are applying, see JLM, Chapter 5.

225. Some appeals may take place without oral argument. Check the rules of the appellate court to which your appeal is directed. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.80 (McKinney 2009).

226. See, e.g., State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. LiMauro, 103 A.D.2d 514, 521, 481 N.Y.S.2d 90, 95 (2d Dept. 1984) ("It is beyond cavil that raising a new substantive issue of law for the first time in a reply brief is improper...."); see also JONATHAN M. PURVER & LAWRENCE E. TAYLOR, HANDLING CRIMINAL APPEALS § 128.12 (1960), Westlaw HANDCRIMAPP (database updated Mar. 2018) ("[T]he petitioner-appellant must not raise new issues in the reply brief.").

227. The rules of the individual appellate courts set the amount of time allowed for oral argument. See N.Y.

on important points of your case and answer any questions or doubts they have about your claims. You should discuss with your lawyer any particular points that you would like emphasized in oral argument, since it is your lawyer's final chance to convince the appellate court to rule in your favor. In some cases, you and your lawyer may decide that it is best not to argue your case orally. For example, your lawyer may believe an oral argument will add little to the arguments presented in your written brief. Keep in mind that there are risks involved in such a decision. In some cases, the court may consider waiving the oral argument as an admission that your case is weak. An oral argument also provides an important chance to clarify and expand on issues raised in your brief. You and your lawyer should consider the matter carefully before making a decision on how to proceed.

Appellate court judges will decide your case after they read the briefs and hear the oral argument. The court may or may not explain in writing the reasons for its decision.²²⁸ Keep in mind that the whole process—from the time you file a notice of your appeal to the date the judges hand down their decision—is very time consuming and may be subject to delays. Despite the strict time limits for starting an appeal, the entire process can take several years to conclude. Each step may take several months—including gathering the necessary documents, preparing the brief, obtaining the respondent's brief, getting a calendar date, and, finally, waiting for a decision.

Throughout your appeal, you should take an active role even if you have a lawyer. This includes communicating frequently with your lawyer, suggesting issues for your lawyer to include in your briefs, and requesting copies of documents relating to your appeal.

F. Continuing Your Appeal

If your first appeal is not successful, you may be able to pursue your claim in a higher court or by an alternative procedure. This Part discusses how you can take an appeal that has been denied by an intermediate appellate court to the Court of Appeals. It also discusses alternatives that you may consider if the Court of Appeals denies your appeal.

If the intermediate appellate court denies your appeal, you may continue pursuing your claim by appealing the intermediate appellate court's order to New York's highest court, the Court of Appeals. You can appeal an intermediate appellate court decision affirming or modifying a trial court decision against you only if: (1) the decision is based on the law alone or (2) the remedy ordered is illegal. Unlike the intermediate appellate courts, the Court of Appeals cannot vacate a conviction solely on the basis that the evidence does not sufficiently support the facts.

Keep in mind that you do not have a right to appeal an intermediate appellate court decision to the Court of Appeals; you may do so only if you obtain a certificate granting leave (permission) to appeal.²²⁹ You must apply for this certificate within thirty days after you are served with the appellate court order that you wish to appeal.²³⁰ THIS THIRTY-DAY TIME LIMIT IS EXTREMELY IMPORTANT. You may seek permission to continue your appeal if the appellate court affirms the trial court judgment, sentence, or order against you, or if you are dissatisfied with the appellate court's modification of the judgment, sentence, or order.²³¹

The specific procedure for obtaining permission to appeal depends upon the particular intermediate appellate court from which you are appealing. If you are appealing from any court other than the appellate division, you must seek permission from a judge of the Court of Appeals. However, if you are appealing from a decision of the appellate division, you may request a certificate of leave to

CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.80 (McKinney 2009).

228. The practice of affirming a decision without a written explanation (known as "summary affirmance") has been criticized by lawyers, but appellate courts sometimes do it nonetheless. See 21 C.J.S. Courts § 232, Westlaw (database updated Feb. 2019) (noting that "no more may be read into the court's action [in affirming a lower court decision without opinion] than is essential to sustain that judgment").

229. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.90(1) (McKinney 2009). Form B-2 in Appendix B is a sample application for a certificate granting leave to appeal.

230. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(5)(a) (McKinney 2009).

231. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.90(1) (McKinney 2009).

appeal from either a judge of the Court of Appeals or a justice of the appellate division in the same department that handed down the decision that you are appealing.²³² Many appellate division judges are hesitant to grant leave to appeal, however, because they know that the Court of Appeals likes to decide for itself what cases it will hear. You can file only one application, so you may wish to seek a certificate directly from the Court of Appeals. However, if an appellate division judge dissented from the majority in your case, you may decide to apply to that judge for a certificate of leave to appeal instead of going directly to a judge of the Court of Appeals. In sum, you must get permission to file another appeal. The permission must come from a judge in the appellate division of the Court of Appeals your case was heard in. You may choose to submit the request for permission to file an appeal directly to a judge you think will grant it to you. Or if you are unsure if any particular judge will give you permission, you may file for permission to appeal from the Court of Appeals generally.

To request a certificate from a judge of the Court of Appeals, you must send an application to the clerk of the Court of Appeals. The application should be addressed to the chief judge, who will appoint one judge of the Court of Appeals to consider your application.²³³ Your application must include copies of the appellate briefs filed by you (or your lawyer) and by the prosecution, the appellate division decision, any other relevant documents you will rely upon, and a letter explaining why your case needs further review. You must also include relevant transcripts that demonstrate that your appeal is based on a question of law (which usually requires that you preserved the right to appeal when the error was made).²³⁴ Further review might be considered appropriate if your case presents a novel issue of law (that is, an issue that the court has never decided before), if the lower court did not follow established precedent, or if the appellate divisions differ in their approaches to the issue involved. For an example of an application to the Court of Appeals, see Form B-2 in Appendix B at the end of this Chapter. If the judge grants your application and issues a certificate, your appeal is taken. You may proceed to prepare your brief and oral argument.

If the Court of Appeals denies permission to appeal, but you think you have “extraordinary and compelling reasons” for them to reconsider that denial, you may contest their decision. To do so, serve a request for reconsideration on the District Attorney, then send that same request and proof of its service on the District Attorney to the clerk of the court within thirty days of the issuance of the certificate denying permission. Your application will be reassigned to the same judge who originally ruled on it.²³⁵ Be aware that very few cases heard at the intermediate level reach the Court of Appeals.²³⁶

If the Court of Appeals hears your appeal, it will affirm, reverse, or modify the intermediate appellate court order.²³⁷ If it reverses or modifies the intermediate appellate court, it will also take or direct the appellate court to take some appropriate corrective action.²³⁸

If the Court of Appeals does not hear your appeal, or if it hears your appeal but rules against you, you may still have other opportunities for relief. First, if your case involves issues of federal law,²³⁹

232. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.20(2)(a) (McKinney 2009). If you are appealing from the decision of an intermediate appellate court other than the appellate division (i.e. the appellate term), you must request the certificate from a judge of the Court of Appeals. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.20(2)(b) (McKinney 2009).

233. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.20(3)(b) (McKinney 2009).

234. See generally N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 500.20 (2013).

235. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 500.20(d) (2013).

236. In 2017, the Court of Appeals decided 62 criminal appeals. See JOHN P. ASIELLO, N.Y. COURT OF APPEALS, 2017 ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CLERK OF THE COURT TO THE JUDGES OF THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK 5 (2017), available at <https://www.nycourts.gov/ctapps/news/annrpt/AnnRpt2017.pdf> (last visited Feb. 4, 2019); see also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.90 practice cmts. (McKinney 2009) (discussing appellant’s hurdles to reaching appeals court).

237. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.35(3) (McKinney 2009).

238. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 470.40(1) (McKinney 2009).

239. For example, violations of the U.S. Constitution present issues of federal law. See 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (2012).

you can apply for a writ of certiorari.²⁴⁰ This would allow you a final appeal on those federal issues to the United States Supreme Court, but the Supreme Court very rarely grants such permission.²⁴¹ Second, in certain circumstances, you may seek to challenge your conviction or sentence through a different post-conviction proceeding, such as an Article 440 motion, a petition for state habeas corpus, or a petition for federal habeas corpus. See JLM Chapters 20, 21, and 13, respectively, for explanations of these remedies.

G. Three Options for Dealing with Ineffective Assistance of Appellate Counsel

When you appeal your conviction, you have the right to effective assistance from your appellate lawyer.²⁴² This Part addresses what to do if you believe that your appointed attorney is not raising all the issues that should be pursued on appeal or is otherwise failing to represent you appropriately. Note that you also have a right to receive effective assistance from your trial lawyer, and if you did not receive effective assistance at your trial this could itself be grounds for appeal. For information about effective assistance from your trial lawyer, see JLM Chapter 12, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.”

This Part will discuss three particular strategies that may be valuable for you: (1) responding to an Anders brief submitted by your attorney, (2) filing supplemental briefs along with those of your attorney, and (3) applying for a writ of error coram nobis for relief from ineffective counsel.

1. Anders Briefs

You may encounter a situation in which the attorney appointed for your criminal appeal asks the court for permission to withdraw from your case by filing a motion known as an “Anders brief.” An attorney files an Anders brief if she or he reviews your case and decides, that there are no non-frivolous, or substantial and important, claims you could make on appeal. However, in the Anders brief your attorney must reference the trial record and identify any issues that are supported by legal authority and arguable if the case is appealed.²⁴³ After reviewing the Anders brief, a court will grant

240. The Supreme Court has rules governing petitions for writs of certiorari. See SUP. CT. R. 12–16. A writ of certiorari is a petition requesting that the Supreme Court review a lower court’s decision. Supreme Court Rules 12–16 outline the steps of requesting a writ of certiorari. Rule 12 outlines how many copies of a petition must be filed, steps for notifying people involved, and the timeline and steps for the Clerk to certify and transmit the record. Rule 13 outlines the timeline for filing a writ of certiorari after a judgment from a lower court or denial of a request for discretionary review. Rule 14 outlines what a writ of certiorari must contain, including items such as a short and clear question, a short and clear set of facts, a list of all people or groups involved, and a date of the judgment or order. Rule 15 outlines the opposing person’s or group’s right to submit a brief stating why a writ of certiorari should not be granted, the contents of such a brief, and the timeline for filing this brief. Rule 16 outlines the Court’s procedures for granting or denying the petition.

241. From October 1, 2016, through September 30, 2017, just 29 petitions for certiorari were granted (that is, had a hearing in the Supreme Court) in criminal cases, and 1,360 were denied or dismissed. That is a success rate below 3%. See Judicial Business 2017, U.S. COURTS, tbl. B-2, available at https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/jb_b2_0930.2017.pdf (last visited Feb. 4, 2019).

242. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 396, 105 S. Ct. 830, 836, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 830 (1985) (holding that fairness of the appellate process requires that a defendant receive more than nominal representation from counsel); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 814–16 (1963) (holding that the state requirement that requires indigent defendants to make a preliminary showing of merit prior to assignment of appellate counsel was unconstitutional).

243. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (holding that “[I]f counsel finds his case to be wholly frivolous, after a conscientious examination of it, he should so advise the court and request permission to withdraw. That request must, however, be accompanied by a brief referring to anything in the record that might arguably support the appeal.”). But see Smith v. Robbins, 528 U.S. 259, 272, 120 S. Ct. 746, 756–57, 145 L. Ed. 2d 756, 771–72 (2000) (holding that states may adopt procedures that differ from that described in Anders, so long as the underlying goal of adequate appellate review required by the 14th Amendment is met). However, “the procedures adopted by New York courts closely parallel and are clearly modeled upon the procedure set forth by the Supreme Court in Anders.” People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.S.2d 217, 219 (2001) (describing the procedures for Anders briefs that New York courts have adopted and holding that the Anders brief filed by assigned counsel was insufficient because it did your attorney's request to withdraw from handling your appeal if it determines that your attorney has fulfilled the obligation to thoroughly examine the trial record for arguably appealable issues. If the court agrees that there are not any non-frivolous claims you could make on appeal, it will affirm the lower court's judgment that you are trying to appeal and dismiss your appeal. But, if the court concludes there are non-frivolous claims on which you could base an appeal (whether or not it thinks you will actually prevail), the court will appoint you a new attorney to help with your appeal.²⁴⁴

The fact that your attorney files an Anders brief does not in itself constitute ineffective assistance of counsel.²⁴⁵ However, your attorney's duty in the matter of your appeal is to be an "active advocate," and his or her Anders brief must be more than a simple assertion that there are not any non-frivolous claims that you could make on appeal. It must show that your attorney made an independent and thoughtful examination of the record for the purposes of your appeal.²⁴⁶ You may disagree with your attorney over whether certain issues of your case should be appealed. Your attorney must raise all issues that, in his or her professional judgment, have arguable merit, but he is not obligated to raise every non-frivolous issue you request.²⁴⁷

If you believe that there are non-frivolous issues that should be pursued on appeal, but your attorney refuses to do so and instead files an Anders brief, you will generally have the opportunity to file a pro se supplemental brief on any issues you believe to have merit (deserving consideration by the court).²⁴⁸ You should review the rules of the court to which you are appealing to determine whether you must first apply for permission to submit your brief and whether there are any criteria the court may have set out for the format of your brief. Your attorney is required to inform you of the fact that he has filed an Anders brief that will likely result in an affirmation of your conviction, and he must also inform you of your right to file a pro se supplemental brief.²⁴⁹ Your attorney must also provide you with a copy of the brief.²⁵⁰

You should file a supplemental brief or else you may waive other rights unrelated to your direct appeal. If you do not file your own brief in response to your attorney's Anders brief, you could be prevented from successfully pursuing habeas relief on issues that could have been raised on appeal, including ineffective assistance of counsel. For example, to obtain federal habeas relief, a petitioner not adequately advocate available non-frivolous arguments on defendant's behalf).

244. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (describing appointed attorneys' duties to handle appeals); see also People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.2d 217, 219 (2001) (describing procedures New York courts have adopted for Anders briefs and holding that the Anders brief filed by assigned counsel was insufficient because it did not adequately present available non-frivolous arguments).

245. McCoy v. Court of Appeals of Wisconsin, 486 U.S. 429, 444, 108 S. Ct. 1895, 1904–05, 100 L. Ed. 2d 440, 456–57 (1988) (upholding constitutionality of a state requirement that when counsel filed a no-merit brief, he must include an explanation of why an issue lacked merit); see also Anim v. United States, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113462, at *18–19, 2013 WL 4056211, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2013) (holding the "filing of an Anders brief does not in itself constitute ineffective assistance of counsel").

246. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1386, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (stating that if after a conscientious review of the case, counsel finds it to be frivolous, he may request permission to withdraw along with "a brief referring to anything in the record that might arguably support the appeal").

247. Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745, 751–54, 103 S. Ct. 3308, 3312–14, 77 L. Ed. 2d 987, 993–95 (1983) (holding that appellate counsel fulfilled duty of representing client to the best of his ability even though counsel did not raise every non-frivolous issue).

248. United States v. Gomez-Perez, 215 F.3d 315, 320 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that "[i]f counsel subsequently determines that an Anders brief is appropriate and thereafter files such a brief, this Court must . . . afford the defendant an opportunity to raise pro se any issues he feels merit discussion.") (citing Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967)).

249. United States v. Gomez-Perez, 215 F.3d 315, 321 n.2 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that an attorney should "adhere to standard procedure by including with his Anders brief an affidavit certifying" that he has informed his client of the filing of the brief, which will likely result in the affirmation of the client's conviction).

250. Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738, 744, 87 S. Ct. 1396, 1400, 18 L. Ed. 2d 493, 498 (1967) (stating that "[a] copy of counsel's brief should be furnished" to the defendant).

must exhaust state remedies and show that his constitutional rights were violated.²⁵¹ If you do not raise issues in a pro se brief, a court may find that you did not exhaust state remedies and stop you from bringing a federal habeas petition.²⁵² Further, where your attorney has submitted an Anders brief rejecting issues in your supplemental brief as frivolous, New York courts may assign new counsel for your appeal.²⁵³

Finally, note that Anders is only binding law in federal court.²⁵⁴ That being said, citing Anders in state appeals is only persuasive since state courts must follow an Anders-like analysis to ensure that your Fourteenth Amendment rights are upheld and since New York's procedures "closely parallel" Anders.²⁵⁵

2. Filing Supplemental Briefs

Though you do not have an absolute right to file briefs to supplement the arguments made by your appeals attorney in his or her brief, many appellate courts allow you to do so.²⁵⁶ You should first apply to the court to which you are appealing for permission to file. Permission will usually be granted if you request permission within thirty days of the date your appeals attorney has filed his or her brief AND you specifically identify the issues you intend to raise in the pro se brief. You should consult the specific Department's rules and regulations for what your request should include.²⁵⁷ It is important to follow the timeliness and specificity requirements, because if you do not, the court will likely deny permission to file.

3. Applying for Writ of Error Coram Nobis

If you want to challenge an appellate court's affirmation of your conviction on the grounds that you received ineffective assistance of appellate counsel, you may do so by filing a writ of error coram nobis.²⁵⁸ A writ of error coram nobis is a way to challenge your conviction because of fundamental 251. See JLM Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information on federal habeas and exhaustion.

252. See Marone v. United States, 10 F.3d 65, 67 (2d Cir. 1993) ("In order to raise a claim that could have been raised on direct appeal, a § 2255 petitioner must show cause for failing to raise the claim at the appropriate time and prejudice from the alleged error.").

253. See, e.g., People v. Pertillar, 15 A.D.3d 679, 679–80, 789 N.Y.S.2d 921, 922 (2d Dept. 2005) (relieving attorney who had filed Anders brief and assigning new counsel to represent defendant on appeal).

254. Smith v. Robbins, 528 U.S. 259, 265, 120 S. Ct 746, 753, 145 L. Ed. 2d 756, 767 (2000) (holding that states may adopt procedures that differ from those described in Anders, so long as the underlying goal of adequate appellate review required by the 14th Amendment is met).

255. See People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 637, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1155, 722 N.Y.S.2d 217, 219 (2001) (noting that the "procedures adopted by New York courts closely parallel and are clearly modeled upon the procedure set forth by the Supreme Court in Anders.").

256. See People v. White, 73 N.Y.2d 468, 479, 539 N.E.2d 577, 583, 541 N.Y.S.2d 749, 755 (1989) (finding while it would be "better practice" for appellate courts to accept timely supplemental pro se briefs, courts can decline to accept them).

257. For more information about the rules of the court to which you are applying, see JLM Chapter 5, "Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options".

258. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 594, 509 N.E.2d 318, 319, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (1987) (holding claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in the intermediate appellate court will be determined through the writ of error coram nobis).

errors at trial or on appeal. For example, you can use a writ of error coram nobis if your appellate lawyer failed to prosecute an appeal or to raise all issues effectively.²⁵⁹

You should direct the petition to the appellate division “where the allegedly deficient representation occurred.”²⁶⁰ Note, if you wish to challenge your conviction’s affirmance, or upholding by the appellate court, because of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel in New York state, the only way to do so is a writ of error coram nobis. You may not challenge it with a motion to vacate judgment under New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 440.10.²⁶¹ If your petition is granted, the appellate court may allow you (most likely with a new lawyer) to re-argue your original appeal.²⁶² If your petition is denied, you may appeal that decision to the Court of Appeals.²⁶³

A form for writs of error coram nobis can be found in Appendix B-7. In the coram nobis brief, you must explain the particular actions your appellate counsel took and the actions you believe your attorney should have taken. Your statements—both of the facts and arguments—should be as clear and specific as possible. Also, be sure to look up and review the rules of the particular jurisdiction for additional deadlines and requirements that you must follow. Note that you also have the right to effective assistance from your trial lawyer. For information about how to challenge your trial lawyer’s assistance, see JLM Chapter 12, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel”.

H. Conclusion

If you believe a harmful error occurred at your hearing or trial, you may be able to appeal and have the error corrected. The first step in this process is determining whether your appeal is prevented by time, plea agreements, failure to protest, or various other reasons. If your appeal is not prevented and you are eligible to appeal, you should begin the process and get a lawyer. You have the right to a lawyer, and without one you risk making a mistake that will waste your limited opportunity to appeal. Next, your lawyer or you will need to decide the specific legal basis for your appeal and file the correct appeals papers at the proper times to the right court. The appeals process can feel overwhelming and complicated, but by following the steps in this Chapter, you should be able to appeal your conviction.

259. People v. Forsythe, 105 A.D.3d 1430, 1430, 964 N.Y.S.2d 363, 364 (4th Dept. 2013) (granting motion for writ of error coram nobis where defendant had not been represented, nor informed of his right to be represented, on the People’s appeal); People v. Shegog, 23 A.D.3d 1158, 1158, 807 N.Y.S.2d 764, 764–765 (4th Dept. 2005) (granting motion for writ of error coram nobis where the court found merit in defendant’s contention that “counsel failed to raise an issue on direct appeal that would have resulted in reversal”); People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 598, 509 N.E.2d 318, 321, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 626 (1987) (“[A] motion for a writ of error coram nobis lies where it was asserted that a court-appointed lawyer failed to prosecute an appeal”) (citing People v. De Renzio, 14 N.Y.2d 732, 199 N.E.2d 172, 250 N.Y.S.2d 76 (1964)).

260. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 599, 509 N.E.2d 318, 322, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 627 (1987) (“[T]he natural venue for coram nobis review of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claims is in the appellate tribunal where the allegedly deficient representation occurred.”).

261. People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 595–596, 509 N.E.2d 318, 319, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (1987) (“[A] common-law coram nobis proceeding brought in the proper appellate court is the only available and appropriate procedure and forum to review a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel.”).

262. People v. Walton, 40 A.D.3d 1258, 1259, 836 N.Y.S.2d 442, 443 (3d Dept. 2007) (granting coram nobis relief in part and reinstating defendant’s appeal as to certain issues).

263. People v. Stultz, 2 N.Y.3d 277, 281–85, 810 N.E.2d 883, 885–86, 778 N.Y.S.2d 431, 433–34 (2004) (explaining that an intermediate appellate court’s decision regarding a petition for a writ of error coram nobis may be appealed to the Court of Appeals and defining the Court of Appeal’s “meaningful representation” standard of review for such an appeal).

APPENDIX A

THE COURT TO WHICH YOU SHOULD APPEAL

Please also refer to the inside back cover of the JLM, which shows the structure of the New York court system.

Crime	Court Where You Were Convicted²⁶⁴	Court Where Appeal May be Heard
Misdemeanor	Local criminal court outside New York City	County court of the county where you were convicted; or the Appellate Term of the New York State Supreme Court in the Second, Third, or Fourth Departments, if the appellate division of that department so directs. ²⁶⁵
Misdemeanor	New York City Criminal Court in New York or Bronx Counties	Appellate Term for the New York State Supreme Court of the First Department.
Misdemeanor	New York City Criminal Court in Kings, Queens, or Richmond Counties	Appellate Term for the New York State Supreme Court of the Second Judicial Department.
Misdemeanor	County court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted; or the Appellate Term of the New York State Supreme Court in the Second, Third, or Fourth Departments, if the appellate division of the department so directs.
Felony	County court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted.
Any Offense	New York State Supreme Court	Appellate division of the department where you were convicted.

264. This is also the court where you file your notice of appeal.

265. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.60 (McKinney 2005). The Appellate Division of the Second Department

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE PAPERS FOR A CRIMINAL APPEAL²⁶⁶

This Appendix contains the following materials:

- B-1. Notice of Appeal as of Right to an Intermediate Appellate Court²⁶⁷ from a Superior Court²⁶⁸ Judgment, Sentence, Judgment and Sentence, or Order
- B-2. Notice of Application for a Certificate Granting Leave to Appeal to an Intermediate Appellate Court or to the Court of Appeals
- B-3. Papers Needed to Obtain the Services of a Lawyer Without Cost on Appeal, or Other Poor Person Relief
 - a. Notice of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person
 - b. Affidavit in Support of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person on Appeal
- B-4. Papers Needed to Get Release on Bail Pending Appeal
 - a. Notice of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal
 - b. Affidavit in Support of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal
- B-5. Notice of Motion for Extension of Time in Which to Take an Appeal Pursuant to New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 460.30
- B-6. Affidavit in Support of Motion for Extension of Time to Take Appeal
- B-7. Petition for Writ of Error Coram Nobis

DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM. If you simply tear these papers out of the JLM and send them to the court, the court will ignore the papers. Write your own versions of these forms, and fill them out according to the facts of your particular case. The endnotes following the sample documents tell you how to fill in the necessary information. Consult Parts A through F of this Chapter and Chapter 6 of the JLM, “An Introduction to Legal Documents,” for assistance in preparing your case. The name and address of the court to which you should send these papers are contained in Appendices I and II of the JLM.

does direct certain classes of cases to the appellate term. Rules of the Second Department that discuss this matter may be found in McKinney’s New York Rules of Court. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 730.1 (McKinney 2005); see also N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 730.1 (2020).

266. These forms are based in part upon McKinney’s Forms, a useful resource providing sample forms for almost any action you may wish to bring. The samples we have provided are broad and general, while the McKinney’s Forms are specific and correspond to the statute underlying your action. See generally 18B West’s McKinney’s Forms Criminal Procedure Law §§ 450–70 (2015).

267. New York law uses the term “intermediate appellate court” to refer to the appellate courts in each county that decide the defendant’s first appeal. These courts are the appellate division and the appellate term.

268. New York law uses the general term “superior court” to include both the supreme court and certain county courts in different counties that have jurisdiction over both felonies and misdemeanors.

B-1. NOTICE OF APPEAL AS OF RIGHT TO AN INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURT FROM A SUPERIOR COURT JUDGMENT, SENTENCE, JUDGMENT AND SENTENCE, OR ORDER

Supreme Court of the State of New York

County of _____

-----x

The People of the State of New York,
Plaintiffs,

- against -

_____,
Defendant.

-----x

:
:
:
:
:
:
:

Notice of Appeal

Indictment No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that defendant, _____, hereby appeals pursuant to section 450.10, subdivision (1), of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, _____ Judicial Department, from the _____, _____ judgment made and entered by Hon. _____, convicting [him/her] of the class ____ felony of _____ and that this appeal is taken from said judgment and from each and every part thereof and every intermediate order made therein.

Dated: _____, New York

Attorney for Defendant

_____ Street

_____ New York

Telephone Number: _____

To: Hon. _____
District Attorney |

_____ County

_____ Street

_____, New York

Clerk

Supreme Court of the State of New York

_____ County

_____ Street

_____, New York

B-2. NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR A CERTIFICATE GRANTING LEAVE TO APPEAL TO AN INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURT OR TO THE COURT OF APPEALS

Court of Appeals of the State of New York
-----x

The People of the State of New York,	:
Plaintiffs-Respondents, :	:	Notice of Application
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____
	:
_____ ,	:
Defendant-Appellant. _____	:
-----x

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit, the above named defendant-appellant makes application to _____ to determine the application hereby made for a certificate, pursuant to section 460.20 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York, certifying that this case involves a question of law that ought to be reviewed by the Court of Appeals and granting leave to appeal to the Court of Appeals from __[date]____, __[year]__ order of the Appellate Division _____ Judicial Department which affirmed the __[date]__, __[year]__, Supreme Court, _____ County, judgment convicting defendant of the class _____ felony of _____ and sentencing defendant to an indeterminate term of imprisonment at _____.

Dated: _____

Attorney for Defendant-Appellant
[Address and phone number]

To: Clerk
Court of Appeals of the State of New York
Court of Appeals Hall
20 Eagle Street
Albany, New York

To: [Name of District Attorney]
District Attorney, [name of county] County
[PO Address]²⁶⁹

269. Fill in the name and address of the District Attorney of the county in which you were tried. Include this information on both the copy you are sending to the District Attorney and on the two copies you are sending to the trial court, so that the clerk of the trial court will know that you have notified the District Attorney. See Appendix III of the JLM for a list of addresses of New York district attorneys.

B-3. PAPERS NEEDED TO OBTAIN THE SERVICES OF A LAWYER WITHOUT COST ON APPEAL, OR OTHER POOR PERSON RELIEF

These papers will allow you to obtain a free copy of the trial transcript, as well as a lawyer. Remember that these papers (like all in this Chapter) are for an appeal under the law of New York State. They are not the correct papers to file if you are filing a poor person's action in federal court or in another state's court.

a. Notice of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person

Supreme Court of the State of New York,
Appellate Division,

_____ Judicial Department

-----x

The People of the State of New York, :
Plaintiffs-Respondents, :

- against - :

_____, :

Defendant-Appellant. :

-----x

Notice of Motion to Proceed
As a Poor Person Upon Appeal

Indictment No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the affidavit of _____, sworn to on the _____ day of _____, _____, a motion pursuant to New York Civil Practice Law and Rules 1101 will be made at a term of this court, for an order permitting defendant-appellant to prosecute this appeal from the judgment entered in this action on the _____ day of _____, _____ as a poor person, directing that [he/she] be furnished a copy of the stenographic transcript of the trial of this action without fee, and granting permission to appeal on the original record, upon the ground that said defendant-appellant has insufficient income and property to enable [him/her] to pay the costs, fees, and expenses to prosecute said appeal, and for such other and further relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

Dated: _____

Defendant-Appellant

To: _____

District Attorney
[Address]

- or -

Clerk
Appellate Division, _____ Judicial Department
[Address]

b. Affidavit in Support of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person on Appeal

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division,

_____ Judicial Department

-----x

Defendant-Appellant,

- against -

The People of the State of New York
Plaintiffs-Respondent.

-----x

:
:
:
:
:
:
:

Affidavit in Support of Motion to Proceed as a Poor Person Upon Appeal

Indictment No. _____

State of New York

County of _____

_____, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the petitioner in the above-captioned case, and I make this affidavit in support of the attached motion to proceed in forma pauperis.

2. I am presently in the custody of the Superintendent of _____ at _____ pursuant to a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, _____ County, rendered on _____, _____, convicting me of _____, in the _____ degree, and sentencing me to _____ years' imprisonment.

3. A notice of appeal pursuant to [section 450.10, subdivision (1) – or subdivision (2) – of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York] was served upon attorney for plaintiff-respondent, on [date of service of notice of appeal], and that notice was filed in the office of the Clerk of the County of [name of county] on [date of filing of notice of appeal].

3. I am unable because of my indigence to pay the costs, fees, and expenses necessary to prosecute this appeal. I am currently incarcerated and am earning $_____ per week in income. I own $_____ worth of property. No other person has a beneficial interest in the outcome of this appeal.

4. During the trial I was represented by _____.

5. I believe in good faith that I am entitled to the relief that I am seeking in this case.

WHEREFORE, I respectfully ask for an order permitting me to prosecute this appeal as a poor person and that I be furnished with the stenographic transcript of this action without fee and that I be assigned an attorney to represent me on appeal and for such other and further relief as may be proper and equitable.

Defendant-Appellant

Sworn to before me
this _____ day of _____, _____

Notary Public

B-4. PAPERS NEEDED TO GET RELEASE ON BAIL PENDING APPEAL

a. Notice of Motion for Recognizance or Bail Pending Appeal

Supreme Court of the State of New York

_____ Judicial Department

-----x

The People of the State of New York :

Plaintiffs-Respondents, :

- against - :

Defendant-Appellant. :

-----x

Motion for Recognizance or Bail

Indictment No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit of _____ sworn to on the _____ day of _____, ____ and upon all proceedings in this case, a motion pursuant to section 510.20 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York is made to this Court for an order revoking the order committing _____ to the custody of the _____ and releasing me in my own recognizance or on bail, on the grounds set forth in the annexed affidavit, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just and proper.

Dated: _____

Defendant-Appellant

To: _____

District Attorney

[Address]

- or -

Clerk

Appellate Division, ____ Judicial Department

[Address]

B-5. NOTICE OF MOTION FOR EXTENSION OF TIME IN WHICH TO TAKE AN APPEAL PURSUANT TO NEW YORK CRIMINAL PROCEDURE LAW § 460.30

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department

-----x

The People of the State of New York :

Plaintiffs-Respondents,

: Notice of Motion For

: Extension of Time to

: Appeal Pursuant to

- against -

: CPL § 460.30

:

: Indictment No. _____

Defendant-Appellant.

:

-----x

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that upon the annexed affidavit of _____ sworn to on the ____ day of _____, _____, and upon all the proceedings in this case, a motion pursuant to section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York is made to this Court for an order reinstating the time for taking an appeal from the [judgment/sentence/order] imposed by the Supreme Court of the County of _____ rendered on the _____ day of _____, _____ upon conviction of the above named defendant of the crime of _____, in the _____ degree upon the ground that said defendant's failure to file a notice of appeal in timely fashion resulted from

_____, and for such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Dated: _____

Defendant-Appellant

To: Hon. _____
District Attorney
[Address]

Clerk

Appellate Division

Judicial Department
[Address]

B-6. AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR EXTENSION OF TIME TO TAKE APPEAL

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department

-----x
The People of the State of New York :
Plaintiffs-Respondents, : Affidavit in Support of : Motion for Extension of
- against - : Time to Appeal Pursuant
 : to CPL § 460.30
 :
 : Indictment No. _____
Defendant-Appellant. :
-----x

_____, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That I am the defendant herein and submit this affidavit in support of my application for leave to serve a notice of appeal within thirty days after the granting of an order permitting me to file pursuant to Section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York.

On _____, _____, I was convicted of _____ in the _____ degree. (Trial Judge _____.) I received a sentence of _____ years on _____, _____. (Judge _____.)

I desire to take an appeal to this Court from that conviction and sentence, but have failed to file a Notice of Appeal within the prescribed thirty-day period. That period expired on the [date of expiration of period. I failed to file my Notice of Appeal within thirty days because:

_____.

WHEREFORE, I respectfully urge this Court to extend the time within which a notice of appeal may be served and filed pursuant to section 460.30 of the Criminal Procedure Law of the State of New York and issue an order granting this application permitting me to serve and file a notice of appeal within thirty days from the date of said order and for such other relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

Defendant-Appellant²⁷⁰

Sworn to before me
this _____ day of _____, _____.

Notary Public

²⁷⁰. Do not sign until the notary is present.

B-7. PETITION FOR WRIT OF ERROR CORAM NOBIS

Supreme Court of the State of New York
Appellate Division _____ Department

-----x

The People of the State of New York, :

Plaintiffs-Respondents, :

Petition for Writ of Error

Coram Nobis

:

- against -

:

Indictment No. _____

:

:

_____,
Defendant-Petitioner:

-----x

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that above-named defendant-petitioner hereby moves the court for an issuance of a writ of error coram nobis on the ground that defendant-petitioner was convicted of _____ in _____ on _____, and appealed to this court which affirmed his conviction and that the representation of _____, defendant-petitioner's attorney on appeal, was ineffective according to the standards of representation set out in the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

The representation afforded to defendant-petitioner was defective in the following ways:

_____.

This motion is made and based on this petition and the affidavit of defendant-petitioner, and on the appellate briefs and the Appellate Division decision, copies of which are attached and served, and on the pleadings, papers, records, and files of this action.

Defendant-petitioner requests assignment of new appellate counsel for assistance in presentation of the writ moved for herein.

Dated: _____

Defendant-Appellant

[Address and phone number]

To:

Clerk

Supreme Court of the State of New York

Appellate Division, ____ Department

CHAPTER 10

APPLYING FOR RE-SENTENCING FOR DRUG OFFENSES*

A. Introduction

Federal and New York law have been changed so that some incarcerated persons who were convicted of drug crimes may apply for re-sentencing. If you were convicted of a federal drug crime, you should read Part B of this Chapter to learn about federal re-sentencing for drug crimes. If you were convicted of a state drug crime in New York, you should read Part C of this Chapter for information on re-sentencing in New York. Appendix A contains sample forms that you may need to apply for re-sentencing for federal drug crimes. Appendix B contains forms that you may need to apply for re-sentencing in New York State.

B. Re-Sentencing for Federal Drug Crimes

1. Introduction

The Federal Sentencing Commission (“the Commission”) has recently changed the United States Sentencing Guidelines (“the Guidelines”) for some drug offenses. The Commission has made changes that lower the sentencing recommendations for crimes involving crack cocaine (also called cocaine base). The new crack sentencing Guidelines took effect on November 1, 2014.¹ The Commission decided to apply the new sentencing Guidelines “retroactively.” This means that some incarcerated persons who were sentenced for certain federal drug offenses under the old, harsher Guidelines can apply for re-sentencing under the new Guidelines. So, if you were sentenced for a federal offense involving crack cocaine or some other eligible drug offenses (such as those involving Percocet or live marijuana plants), you might be eligible to apply for re-sentencing.

This Chapter describes who can apply for re-sentencing and explains the re-sentencing process. Section 2 explains who is allowed to apply for re-sentencing. Section 3 explains how to apply for re-sentencing and the possible results of your re-sentencing application. Appendix A at the end of the Chapter provides sample forms you can use if you decide to apply for re-sentencing.

2. Eligibility: Who Is Allowed to Apply?

If you are serving time for a federal drug offense and wish to apply for re-sentencing, you must first determine whether you may do so. Not all incarcerated persons serving time for federal drug offenses are able to apply for re-sentencing.

In order for changes in the Guidelines to apply to incarcerated persons who were sentenced under the old Guidelines (before November 1, 2014), the changes must be passed retroactively. Section 1B1.10 of the Guidelines shows which changes in the law are retroactive.² Section 1B1.10 says that you can apply for re-sentencing if one of the amendments listed in Section 1B1.10(d) of the Guidelines lowers the sentencing range for your offense.³ The only amendments listed in Section 1B1.10(d) that apply to drug offenses are Amendments 126, 130, 484, 488, 499, 505, 516, 591, 657, 706 (as changed by 711, 715, and 750, parts A and C only), and 782 (subject to subsection (e)(1)).⁴ To decide if you can

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Reid, based on a previous version written by Sydney Bird and revised by Nathan Piper. Special thanks to William Gibney of the New York Legal Aid Society for his valuable comments.

1. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL §1B1.10 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

2. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL §1B1.10(a)(1) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

3. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL §1B1.10 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

4. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL §1B1.10 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

apply for re-sentencing, you must first see if any of these amendments affects the sentencing Guidelines for your offense.

You should remember that if any of the other Amendments from Section 1B1.10(d) listed above applies to your case and would lower the Guidelines sentencing range for your offense, then you may also be eligible for re-sentencing. For example, Amendment 516 changes the Guidelines for cases involving more than fifty “marijuana plants.” In the Guidelines, a marijuana plant is defined as a marijuana cutting with roots, a rootball, or root hairs.⁵ Amendment 516 lowers the amount of marijuana each plant is expected to produce from one kilogram (KG) to 100 grams (G), making the offense less serious.⁶ So, if you were sentenced for an offense involving more than fifty marijuana plants before Amendment 516 was passed, you might be eligible for re-sentencing. Similarly, Amendment 657 changes the way that the weight of the drug Oxycodone is calculated for sentencing purposes. This change usually results in shorter sentences for offenses involving Percocet and OxyContin pills.⁷ So, if you were sentenced for an offense involving possession of Percocet or OxyContin, you should check to see if the new standards would lower your Guidelines range, making you eligible for re-sentencing.

(a) Determining Eligibility for Re-Sentencing for an Offense Involving Crack Cocaine

Amendment 706 (as changed by Amendments 711, 715, and 750) changes the Guidelines for crack cocaine offenses. It also changes the way you figure out the “base offense level” for crimes involving possession of both crack cocaine and one or more other drugs. The base offense level is a number given to a type of crime and is a starting point for determining its seriousness. More serious crimes, such as kidnapping, have higher base offense levels than less serious crimes, such as trespass. The base offense level is used to help calculate the range of sentences in the Guidelines that a court may give for a particular crime.⁸

If you are currently serving time for an offense committed before November 1, 2007 involving only crack cocaine, you will probably be able to apply for re-sentencing. Before 2007, the sentencing Guidelines said that 150KG of powder cocaine was the same as 1.5KG of crack cocaine (cocaine base) for sentencing purposes.⁹ This meant that if you were convicted of possessing a certain amount of crack cocaine, your sentence would be the same as if you were convicted of possessing 100 times as much powder cocaine. This was known as the “100:1 cocaine sentencing disparity.” There is an important difference between changes to mandatory minimum laws, which are created by Congress, and changes to the Guidelines, which are created by the United States Sentencing Commission. The Guidelines give recommended sentencing ranges for offenses based on drug quantity. At one time, the 100:1 difference for cocaine sentencing was in both the Guidelines and the laws about mandatory minimum sentences. This Chapter primarily focuses on the Guidelines because their amendments (changes) have been made retroactive, which means that even though you were sentenced under the old Guidelines, you may be able to apply for re-sentencing under the new ones.

5. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL §2D1.1 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

6. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 516 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2003), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_I.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

7. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 657 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2003), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_II.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

8. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION, An Overview of the Federal Sentencing Guidelines, 1, available at http://www.ussc.gov/About_the_Commission/Overview_of_the_USSC/Overview_Federal_Sentencing_Guidelines.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

9. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 706 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2011), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_III.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

The 100:1 disparity between the sentences for crack offenses and the sentences for cocaine offenses has received a lot of criticism. Many people in the legal community thought that it was unfair to have such tough sentences for crack cocaine and much lighter sentences for powder cocaine. Some judges even began thinking about this unfair difference when sentencing defendants for crack cocaine offenses, stating that the unfair difference was a reason to give the defendants shorter sentences than the sentencing Guidelines called for.¹⁰

In 2007, the United States Sentencing Commission issued a report to Congress calling for reform of the federal cocaine sentencing disparity.¹¹ The report said that members of the legal community and the public were very concerned about the unfair sentencing policy that gave higher sentences for crack cocaine offenses than for powder cocaine offenses.¹²

The Guidelines were amended in 2007 and again in 2014, and these changes were made retroactive. Amendment 706, which came into effect on November 1, 2007, reduces the difference between sentences for crack (cocaine base) and powder cocaine. The old version of Section 2D1.1(c)(1) stated that 150KG of powder cocaine was the same as 1.5KG of crack cocaine. Amendment 706 adjusted this, changing Section 2D1.1(c)(1) so that 150KG of powder cocaine is now the same as 4.5KG of crack cocaine. Although there is still a significant disparity between sentences for crack and powder cocaine, this amendment has led to lower sentences for crack cocaine than under the old version of the Guidelines.

The following table illustrates the changes in Section 2D1.1(c) for calculating the base offense level for crack cocaine offenses. Level 38 is the most severe base level sentence that can be given for a drug offense (not taking into account sentencing enhancements).¹³

10. See Spears v. U.S., 555 U.S. 261, 265–266, 129 S. Ct. 840, 843–844, 172 L. Ed. 2d 596, 601 (2009) (“... we now clarify that district courts are entitled to reject and vary categorically from the crack-cocaine Guidelines based on a policy disagreement with those Guidelines”); Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 91, 128 S. Ct. 558, 564, 169 L. Ed. 2d 481, 488 (2007) (holding that sentencing judges may think about the difference between sentences for powder and crack cocaine when deciding not to use the sentences recommended by the Guidelines and impose a lighter sentence); see also Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 47, 128 S. Ct. 586, 595, 169 L. Ed. 2d 445, 455 (2007) (holding that appeals courts cannot require “extraordinary circumstances” if sentencing judges move away from the Guidelines to give a lighter sentence); United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 245, 125 S. Ct. 738, 756–757, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621, 651 (2005) (holding that the Guidelines are advisory rather than mandatory, that judges may use their discretion (make their own decision) when deciding to depart from the Guidelines, and that sentencing decisions can only be overturned by appeals courts for “abuse of discretion” even if the sentencing judge did not follow the Guidelines).

11. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION, REPORT TO THE CONGRESS: COCAINE AND FEDERAL SENTENCING POLICY 2 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2007), available at http://www.ussc.gov/Legislative_and_Public_Affairs/Congressional_Testimony_and_Reports/Drug_Topics/200705_RtC_Cocaine_Sentencing_Policy.pdf (last visited Sep 19, 2020).

12. The Commission has repeatedly recommended that Congress correct the disparity between mandatory minimum sentences for crack and powder cocaine. See U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION, REPORT TO THE CONGRESS: COCAINE AND FEDERAL SENTENCING POLICY 6–9 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2007), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/news/congressional-testimony-and-reports/drug-topics/200705_RtC_Cocaine_Sentencing_Policy.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020). In 2010, Congress finally passed the Fair Drug Sentencing Act, which changed mandatory minimum sentences for crack cocaine, increasing the amount of cocaine that triggers a five-year mandatory minimum from 5G to 28G. This adjustment reduced the mandatory minimum sentencing disparity from 100:1 to about 18:1. However, the change has not been made retroactive, which means that as of now, this new law probably does not provide a basis for you to apply for re-sentencing. Fair Sentencing Act of 2010, Pub. L. No. 111-20, §§ 2–3, 124 Stat. 2372, 2372 (to be codified at 21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1), 844(a)) (reducing the quantity thresholds triggering mandatory minimum sentences for crack cocaine and eliminating mandatory minimums for possession-only offenses).

13. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 505 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2003), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_I.pdf (last visited Sep 19, 2020).

Base Offense Level	Amount of drug (pre-Amendment 706) [Old Guideline] ¹⁴	Amount of drug (post-Amendment 706) [New Guideline] ¹⁵¹⁶
38	150KG or more of cocaine or 1.5 KG or more of cocaine base (crack)	450KG or more of cocaine or 25.2KG or more of cocaine base
36	50KG–150KG cocaine or 500G–1.5KG cocaine base	150KG–450KG cocaine or 8.4KG–25.2KG cocaine base
34	15KG–50KG cocaine or 150G–500G cocaine base	50KG–150KG cocaine or 2.8KG–8.4KG cocaine base
32	5KG–15KG cocaine or 50G–150G cocaine base	15KG–50KG cocaine or 840G–2.8KG cocaine base
30	3.5KG–5KG cocaine or 35G–50G cocaine base	5KG–15KG cocaine or 280G–840G cocaine base
28	2KG–3.5KG cocaine or 20G–35G cocaine base	3.5KG–5KG cocaine or 196G–280G cocaine base
26	500G–2KG cocaine or 5G–20G cocaine base	2KG–3.5KG cocaine or 112G–196G cocaine base
24	400G–500G cocaine or 4G–5G cocaine base	500G–2KG cocaine or 28G–112G cocaine base
22	300G–400G cocaine or 3G–4G cocaine base	400G–500G cocaine or 22.4G–28G cocaine base
20	200G–300G cocaine or 2G–3G cocaine base	300G–400G cocaine or 16.8G–22.4G cocaine base
18	100G–200G cocaine or 1G–2G cocaine base	200G–300G cocaine or 11.2G–16.8G cocaine base
16	50G–100G cocaine or 500MG–1G cocaine base	100G–200G cocaine or 5.6G–11.2G cocaine base
14	25G–50G cocaine or 250MG–500MG cocaine base	50G–100G cocaine or 2.8G–5.6G cocaine base
12	Less than 25G cocaine or less than 250MG cocaine base	Less than 50G cocaine or less than 2.8G cocaine base

Sentences for cocaine under the new Guidelines are usually one level lower than the old guidelines. In general, sentences for crack cocaine under the new Guidelines are usually about four levels lower than sentences under the old Guidelines, especially for lower amounts. This can mean that you might be able to get a reduction in your sentence if you were convicted of a crack cocaine offense committed before the new Guidelines came into effect on November 1, 2014.

14. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1(c) at 129–147 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2003), available at http://www.ussc.gov/Guidelines/2003_guidelines/Manual/CHAP2-2.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

15. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1(c) at 141–167 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

16. It should be noted that the new ranges are retroactive. Meaning the ranges and base offense levels apply to all prison sentences, either currently being served or being served in the future. Language in the new Guidelines prevented the courts from releasing you if your sentence would be reduced until November 1, 2015. As November 1, 2015 has now passed, you may petition under the new Guidelines seeking a reduced sentence.

(b) Determining Eligibility for Re-Sentencing for an Offense Involving Crack Cocaine and at Least One Other Drug

Amendment 706, as changed by Amendments 711, 715, and 750, also reformed the way that the base offense level is calculated for crimes involving crack cocaine and at least one other drug.¹⁷ Under the old Guidelines, the base offense level for offenses involving more than one drug was calculated by converting all the drugs involved to their equivalent amounts of marijuana using the “Drug Equivalency Tables.”¹⁸ These amounts were then added together, and the total was used to find the correct base offense level using the “Drug Quantity Table.”¹⁹

This calculation can be a little confusing, so an example may be helpful: Imagine you were convicted of selling 80G of cocaine, 30G of cocaine base, and 1KG of marijuana. In order to calculate the base offense level, you would look at the Drug Equivalency Tables to determine that 1G of cocaine is equal to 200G of marijuana, and 1G of cocaine base is equal to 20KG of marijuana. So, the cocaine sold is equal to 16,000G (or 16KG) of marijuana (80G x 200G/1G = 16,000G). The cocaine base is equal to 600KG of marijuana (30G x 20KG/1G = 600KG). The total offense, therefore, involves the equivalent of 617KG of marijuana (16KG + 600KG + 1KG). Looking now at the Drug Quantity Table, we can see the 617KG of marijuana corresponds to a Level 28 base offense level.

Amendment 715 doesn't change the old method of calculating the base offense level for multiple-drug offenses. However, it says that whenever the offense involves crack cocaine and at least one other drug, the base offense level you get using the method above should be lowered by two levels.²⁰ So, under the new Guidelines, your base offense level would be calculated exactly as it was under the old Guidelines (as demonstrated in the example above), but the base offense level would then be reduced by two levels. So, in the example above, the base offense level would actually be Level 26 (Level 28 – 2 levels = Level 26).

This means that if you were convicted of an offense involving crack cocaine and at least one other drug, you are probably eligible to apply for re-sentencing under the new Guideline because your offense is most likely two levels lower than it was under the old Guidelines.²¹ You should be aware, however, that Amendment 715 provides three exceptions to the two-level reduction in cases involving crack cocaine. The two-level reduction will not apply if: 1) your offense involved 4.5KG or more of crack cocaine; 2) your offense involved less than 250MG of crack cocaine, or; 3) the base offense level after the two-level reduction would be lower than the base offense level for the same offense involving only the other drugs and not the cocaine base.²² If one of these three exceptions applies to your case, you probably will not be eligible for re-sentencing.

17. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 715 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2003), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_III.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

18. The Drug Equivalency Tables can be found at the end of Note 10(D) of § 2D1.1 in the 2003 version of the Sentencing Guidelines and in Note 8(C) of § 2D1.1 in the 2014 version of the Sentencing Guidelines. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1 cmt. n.8(D) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/drug_trafficking.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

19. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1 cmt. n.8(D) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/drug_trafficking.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

20. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 715 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2011), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_III.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

21. If you were convicted of a crime committed between Nov. 1, 2007, and May 1, 2008, your sentence may have been calculated using the method established by Amendment 711. If this is the case, you should calculate your base offense level the way that Amendment 711 tells you to and compare this result to your base offense level using the current Guideline method explained in Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

22. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C, AMEND. 715 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2011), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_III.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

An example may be helpful to explain the third exception: Suppose a case involves 5G of cocaine base and 6KG of heroin. Under the Drug Equivalency Tables in subdivision (E) of this note, 5G of cocaine base converts to 100KG of marijuana ($5G \times 20KG/1G = 100KG$), and 6KG of heroin converts to 6,000KG of marijuana ($6KG \times 1000KG/1G = 6,000KG$), which, when added together equals 6,100KG of marijuana. Under the Drug Quantity Table, 6,100KG of marijuana leads to a combined offense level of 34, which is reduced by two levels to 32. For the heroin, the 6,000KG of marijuana corresponds to an offense level 34 under the Drug Quantity Table. The combined offense level for cocaine and heroin, if reduced, would be Level 32. Since this is less than the offense level for only heroin (Level 34), the third exception says that the reduction does not apply. So, the combined offense level for the cocaine and heroin is still Level 34.²³

(c) What if Your Original Sentencing Judge Already Gave You a Shorter Sentence than the Old Guidelines Recommended?

Even if you were originally sentenced to shorter time in prison than the Guidelines recommended, you may still be eligible for re-sentencing. There is very little law in this area, but it is possible that you can receive a further reduction in your prison sentence if the Sentencing Commission has lowered the prison sentence for your offense in the new Guidelines. Section 1B1.10 of the 2014 Federal Sentencing Guidelines Manual governs this situation.²⁴

(d) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing Even if Your Current Sentence Is the Result of a Binding Plea Agreement?

You may not be eligible for re-sentencing if your current sentence is the result of a binding plea agreement.²⁵ Many courts have held that if you were sentenced pursuant to a binding plea agreement, then you are automatically ineligible for re-sentencing.²⁶ However, not all courts agree.²⁷ Even if you

23. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL APP. C. AMEND. 715 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2011), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/Appendix_C_Vol_III.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

24. § 1B1.10(a)(1) reads as follows: “In General. In a case in which a defendant is serving a term of imprisonment, and the guideline range applicable to that defendant has subsequently been lowered as a result of an amendment to the Guidelines Manual listed in subsection (d) below, the court may reduce the defendant's term of imprisonment as provided by 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). As required by 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2), any such reduction in the defendant's term of imprisonment shall be consistent with this policy statement.” U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 1B1.10(a)(1), policy statement (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_1.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

24. FAQs: 2014 Amendments to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance 4 (2014), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

25. FAQs: 2014 Amendments to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance 4 (2014), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

26. See, e.g., United States v. Rivera-Martinez, 665 F.3d 344, 348 (1st Cir. 2011); United States v. Green, 595 F.3d 432, 436 (2d Cir. 2010); United States v. Sanchez, 562 F.3d 275, 277–279 (3d Cir. 2009), abrogated by Freeman v. United States, 564 U.S. 522, 131 S. Ct. 2685, 180 L. Ed. 2d 519 (U.S. 2011); United States v. Scurllark, 560 F.3d 839, 841 (8th Cir. 2009) (holding that because defendant had been sentenced under plea agreement he had not been sentenced based on a sentencing range that had been lowered); United States v. Peveler, 359 F.3d 369, 377–379 (6th Cir. 2004), abrogated by Freeman v. United States, 564 U.S. 522, 131 S. Ct. 2685, 180 L. Ed. 2d 519 (U.S. 2011); United States v. Trujeque, 100 F.3d 869, 870–871 (10th Cir. 1996) (all holding that sentences obtained by binding plea agreements cannot be reduced under the revised crack-cocaine sentencing Guidelines).

27. See United States v. Garcia, 606 F.3d 209, 214 (5th Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (holding that “[t]he jurisdictional question is whether the sentence was ‘based on’ the subsequently amended crack-offense Guidelines, and answering that question requires that we examine the nuances of both the plea agreement and the sentencing transcript in each particular case”); United States v. Franklin, 600 F.3d 893, 896 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that some binding plea agreements may be eligible for re-sentencing if original sentence was based on the Guidelines); United States v. Bride, 581 F.3d 888, 891 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that where a binding plea pleaded guilty and are eligible for re-sentencing, you may not be re-sentenced automatically. You may have to prove that your plea agreement was based on the Guideline recommendations for your offense level that existed at the time.²⁸ Thus, if your sentence is the result of a binding plea agreement, you can file for re-sentencing, but you should be prepared to argue that your sentence was in fact based on the Guidelines. You should also know that a judge might still find you ineligible for re-sentencing because you entered into a binding plea agreement.

(e) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing if You Were Originally Sentenced as a “Career Offender”?

A “career offender” is defined under Section 4B1.1 of the new Guidelines.²⁹ The Guidelines says that you are a “career offender” if:

- (1) You were at least eighteen years old when you committed the offense you are currently serving time for,
- (2) The crime you are in jail for now is a felony, either a crime of violence or a controlled substance abuse, and
- (3) You had at least two prior felony convictions of either crimes of violence or controlled substance abuse.³⁰

If you were sentenced as a career offender under Section 4B1.1 of the Guidelines, you are probably not eligible to receive a sentence reduction under the new Guidelines. This is because your sentence may not have been based on the parts of the Guidelines that were amended. If the sections of the Guidelines that you were sentenced under were not amended, your sentence would probably not be lower under the New Guidelines. Recent decisions in a variety of circuit courts have rejected applications for re-sentencing made by incarcerated persons designated as career offenders.³¹ agreement is based on the Guidelines, it does not render the offender ineligible for re-sentencing).

28. See United States v. Garcia, 606 F.3d 209, 214 (5th Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (holding that binding plea agreements could be eligible for re-sentencing if they could be fairly said to have been based on the Guidelines); United States v. Franklin, 600 F.3d 893, 896 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that some binding plea agreements may be eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Cobb, 584 F.3d 979, 985 (10th Cir. 2009) (holding that the court has broad discretion to re-sentence offenders under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) even where the original sentence was based on a binding plea agreement); United States v. Bride, 581 F.3d 888, 891 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that where a binding plea agreement is based on the Guidelines, the offender may be eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Coleman, 594 F. Supp. 2d 164, 167 (D. Mass. 2009) (holding that sentences obtained by binding plea agreements may be reduced under the revised sentencing Guidelines). Incarcerated persons sentenced under binding plea agreements may also be eligible for re-sentencing in the Fourth Circuit, although the law is not entirely clear because the decision was vacated and is no longer the law. See United States v. Dews, 551 F.3d 204, 209 (4th Cir. 2008), reh’g en banc granted (Feb 20, 2009), reh’g dismissed as moot (May 04, 2009), (holding that nothing in the federal rule regarding binding plea agreements “precludes a defendant pleading guilty under that rule from receiving the benefit of a later favorable retroactive amendment to the Guidelines, provided, of course, that the requirements of § 3582(c)(2) are met”).

29. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 4B1.1(a) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_4.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

30. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 4B1.1(a) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_4.pdf (last visited Sep. 20, 2020).

31. See United States v. Mateo, 560 F.3d 152, 154 (3d Cir. 2009) (holding that because Amendment 706 did not affect defendant’s applicable sentencing range U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) did not authorize a reduction in his sentence); United States v. Anderson, 591 F.3d 789, 791 (5th Cir. 2009) (holding that the crack cocaine guideline amendments did not apply to defendants sentenced as career offenders); United States v. Perdue, 572 F.3d 288, 293 (6th Cir. 2009) (holding that Congress had decided to cabin the court’s discretion and amendment 706 did not offer any relief to defendants sentenced as career offenders); United States v. Forman, 553 F.3d 585, 589-590 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 556 U.S. 1173, 129 S. Ct. 1924, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1071 (holding Amendment 706 does not apply to career offenders); United States v. Thomas, 524 F.3d 889, 890 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that career offenders’ sentences are determined by § 4B1.1 not § 2D1.1 so they are not eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Ayala-Pizarro, 551 F.3d 84, 85 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that incarcerated persons sentenced as career offenders are not eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Caraballo, 552 F.3d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 2008) (holding that career offenders are not eligible for re-sentencing unless their sentence as a career offender would be lower under the amended Guidelines, which is highly unlikely); United States v. Sharkey, 543 F.3d 1236, 1239 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding

Although some circuits had held if you were designated a career offender, but you were ultimately sentenced based on the crack cocaine amount Guidelines, not the career offender Guidelines, you could be eligible for re-sentencing, the Sentencing Commission chose to reject that by amending its commentary on the Guidelines.³² It is still unclear whether incarcerated persons sentenced as career offenders can receive sentence reductions. If you were sentenced as a career offender, you may still want to apply for re-sentencing. But you should know that your request might be denied because you were sentenced as a career offender.

(f) Are You Eligible for Re-Sentencing if You Were Originally Sentenced to a Minimum Sentence under a Statute?

If you were sentenced a statutory minimum sentence, for example sixty months for 5G or more of crack or 120 months for 50G or more of crack, you are probably not eligible for re-sentencing. This is because the statutory minimum sentence is not affected by any reduction under the new Guidelines.³³

3. Applying for Re-Sentencing

(a) How Do You Apply?

To apply for re-sentencing because the new Guidelines have lowered the sentence for your offense, you must file a motion under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2).³⁴ You must file the motion in the same district court where you were sentenced. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) allows courts to re-sentence incarcerated persons who were sentenced using the old Guidelines when the new Guidelines are retroactive and have lowered the suggested sentence for your offense.³⁵ You can find sample motions at the end of this Chapter.

It is unclear whether you have the right to an attorney when you apply for re-sentencing.³⁶ You may need to write and file your application for re-sentencing on your own. This is called filing pro se.

(i) How to File a Section 3582(c)(2) Re-Sentencing Motion Pro Se

In order to file a motion pro se for re-sentencing under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2), you will need to prepare an application. When you are finished, you will file your application and submit it to the district court that handled your original sentencing. Before you begin your application, you should make sure you know some key facts about your case:

(4) Your criminal case number, that, because Amendment 706 of the Sentencing Guidelines has no effect on the Guidelines for career offenders, incarcerated persons sentenced as career offenders are not eligible for re-sentencing); United States v. Wesson, 583 F.3d 728, 731 (9th Cir. 2009); United States v. Moore, 541 F.3d 1323, 1330 (11th Cir. 2008).

32. The 2nd Circuit interpreted the guidelines to allow for re-sentencing if the prisoner was sentenced based on Guidelines for crack cocaine in his possession, not the Guidelines for career offenders. United States v. McGee, 553 F.3d 225, 230 (2d Cir. 2009). However, there was a split among the Circuits and the Sentencing Commission decided to update Note 1 to § 1B1.1(a) which rejected McGee. United States v. Montanez, 717 F.3d 287, 294 (2d Cir. 2013). See also United States v. Quattlebaum, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82934, *4 (W.D. Va. June 26, 2015) (noting that the Sentencing Commission abrogated McGee); United States v. Ponder, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63542, *6, 2012 WL 1570845 (S.D.N.Y. May 3, 2012) (noting that the Sentencing Commission abrogated McGee by updating the commentary).

33. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL §§ 1B1.10 cmt. n.1(A), 5G1.1(b) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_1.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020). The changes made to the mandatory minimum sentencing scheme in 2010 by the Fair Sentencing Act have not been made retroactive, which means the old mandatory minimums still apply to you if you were sentenced under them. See Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter for more on the Fair Sentencing Act of 2010.

34. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2).

35. Office of Defender Servs., Retroactivity of Crack Cocaine Amendments: Guidance to CJA Panel Attorneys, FD.ORG, available at <https://www.fd.org/crack-cocaine-sentencing/2007-crack-cocaine-guideline-amendments/retroactivity-crack-cocaine-amendments> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

36. For more information on the right to counsel issue, see Part C(3) of this Chapter.

- (5) Your base offense level—you can find this in the “Criminal Computation” section of your pre-sentence report or you can calculate it yourself,
- (6) Your criminal history,
- (7) The Sentencing Guideline range that was originally used in your sentencing,
- (8) Your actual sentence,
- (9) The new Sentencing Guideline range that would be applicable to your crime under the amended Guidelines,
- (10) Whether you were sentenced pursuant to a binding plea agreement or were sentenced based on your status as a career offender,
- (11) Your disciplinary record and program participation during your incarceration.³⁷

Your application is a chance for you to argue that you are an ideal candidate for re-sentencing. You should remember that the court will probably receive many of these kinds of motions from incarcerated persons, so you may not want to make your application too long. Using the sample motions at the end of this chapter and filling in your own information is probably the simplest way to file an effective pro se motion.³⁸

After you file your motion for re-sentencing under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2), the judge may hold a re-sentencing hearing. At this hearing, the judge may consider factors listed in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).³⁹ If you think that some of these factors might help you for re-sentencing, you may want to explain them in your application. For example, you should mention any vocational or educational programs you have participated in while in prison. You should also mention other ways in which you can show your own rehabilitation. If you think these factors will be important in your re-sentencing, you should apply to have an attorney appointed using the form in Appendix A of this Chapter.

(b) Are You Entitled to a Hearing?

Under the Sentencing Guidelines, you are entitled to a hearing whenever any important factor in the sentencing determination is “reasonably in dispute” or whenever a judge plans to consider facts not found at the original sentencing proceeding.⁴⁰ Usually, courts find that a hearing is appropriate whenever there is a legitimate question of fact. Some appellate courts have found abuse of discretion where the lower court refused to hold a 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) hearing and denied the prisoner’s Section

37. See Office of Defender Servs., Sample Motions, Briefs, Petitions and Orders Relating to Retroactive Application of Crack Cocaine Guideline Amendment, FD.ORG, available at <https://www.fd.org/crack-cocaine-sentencing/2007-crack-cocaine-guideline-amendments/sample-motions-briefs-petitions-orders> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020) (providing links to various sample forms).

38. The Sample Document in Appendix B of this Chapter can serve as a template for your application.

39. These factors include the nature of the offense committed, the prior history and character of the prisoner, the need for the punishment to reflect the seriousness of the offense, the need to provide just punishment and protect the public, the need to avoid arbitrary sentencing differences among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct, and the need to provide restitution to victims. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) (2012).

40. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 6A1.3 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_6.pdf, 476 (last visited Feb. 4, 2019) (“[w]hen any factor important to the sentencing determination is reasonably in dispute, the parties shall be given an adequate opportunity to present information to the court regarding that factor”); see also Fed. Pub. & Cmty. Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines, FD.ORG, 3–4 (2008), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/crack-retroactivity-questions-answers-caselaw-argument-outlines.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

3582(c)(2) motion for a sentence reduction.⁴¹ However, other circuits have held you are not entitled to a hearing.⁴²

(c) Are You Entitled to Be Represented by Counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) Proceeding?

Because Section 1B1.10 of the Guidelines was recently amended, it is still unclear whether you are entitled to counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) proceeding.⁴³ Section 1B1.10 was revised in May 2008 and says that proceedings under Section 3582(c)(2) “do not constitute a full re-sentencing of the defendant.”⁴⁴ Because of this, many courts have held that you do not have a right to counsel at a Section 3582(c)(2) proceeding.⁴⁵

However, Section 1B1.10 calls for judges to reconsider the facts surrounding the offense as part of considering the factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a).⁴⁶ Judges may also consider your post-sentencing conduct (such as your behavior while in prison).⁴⁷ These kinds of factual findings are characteristic of the kinds of proceedings where the Sixth Amendment requires that defense counsel is given to defendants.⁴⁸

41. See United States v. Neal, 611 F.3d 399, 401–402 (7th Cir. 2010) (although “[r]eliance on the prior resolution of factual disputes means that the court usually need not hold evidentiary hearings before acting on motions under § 3582(c)(2),” if judge wishes to rely on contestable post sentence facts to deny § 3582(c)(2) motion, defendant “is entitled to an opportunity to contest propositions that affect how long he must spend in prison.”); United States v. Jules, 595 F.3d 1239, 1245, 22 Fla. L. Weekly Fed. C 512 (11th Cir. 2010) (holding that a district court must allow the prisoner and Government an opportunity to dispute evidence in a § 3582(c)(2) motion when the court relies on new information); United States v. Byfield, 391 F.3d 277, 280–281 (D.C. Cir. 2004) (citing U.S. Sentencing Guidelines Manual § 6A1.3 (2004)) (finding that the lower court had abused its discretion by failing to hold an evidentiary hearing where prisoner’s factual assertions in his § 3582(c)(2) motion raised “enough of a smidgeon to put the matter ‘reasonably in dispute’”); United States v. Mueller, 168 F.3d 186, 189–190 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that where a judge, in deciding a § 3582(c)(2) motion, intends to consider evidence not presented in the defendant’s pre-sentencing report, the judge must give notice to the prisoner and allow the prisoner an opportunity to respond).

42. See United States v. Styer, 573 F.3d 151, 153–154 (3d Cir. 2009) (holding that defendant is not entitled to an evidentiary hearing because § 1B1.10 limited the scope of the proceedings); United States v. Brown, 556 F.3d 1108, 1113 (10th Cir. 2009) (holding defendant not entitled to evidentiary hearing); United States v. Legree, 205 F.3d 724, 730 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding defendant not entitled to evidentiary hearing); United States v. Edwards, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 39855 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding defendant is not entitled to evidentiary hearing because no facts are in dispute). But see United States v. Burrell, 622 F.3d 961, 966 (8th Cir. 2010) (though no hearing is required the district court must give enough explanation of the court’s reasoning to allow for meaningful appellate review).

43. Memorandum on Appointment of Counsel in Crack Retroactivity Cases from the Training Branch of the Office of Defender Servs. to Participants, Nat’l Sentencing Policy Inst. (Jun. 25, 2008), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/crack_appointment_of_counsel.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

44. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 1B1.10(a)(3) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/CHAPTER_1.pdf.

45. See, e.g., United States v. Webb, 565 F.3d 789, 794–795 (11th Cir. 2009) (holding that incarcerated persons have no constitutional or statutory right to representation at § 3582(c)(2) proceedings); United States v. Harris, 568 F.3d 666, 668–669 (8th Cir. 2009) (same); United States v. Forman, 553 F.3d 585, 590 (7th Cir. 2009) (same); United States v. Legree, 205 F.3d 724, 730 (4th Cir. 2000) (same); United States v. Townsend, 98 F.3d 510, 512–513 (9th Cir. 1996) (same); United States v. Reddick, 53 F.3d 462, 463–465 (2d Cir. 1995) (same); United States v. Brown, 556 F.3d 1108, 1113 (10th Cir. 2009) (same).

46. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL § 1B1.10 cmt. n.1(B)(i) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2008), available at http://www.ussc.gov/Guidelines/2008_guidelines/Manual/CHAP1.pdf (last visited Feb. 4, 2019).

47. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 1B1.10 cmt. n.1(B)(iii) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

48. U.S. CONST. AMEND. VI.; Fed. Pub. & Cmty. Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines, PD.ORG (2008), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/crack-retroactivity-questions-answers-caselaw-argument-outlines.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

There are some cases saying that a prisoner might be entitled to counsel for some 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) hearings, but no court has found a general right to counsel during re-sentencing.⁴⁹

If you want to have an attorney represent you during the re-sentencing process and cannot afford to hire one, you can apply to have counsel appointed to you. The form at Appendix A-1 of this Chapter provides a template for your application to have an attorney represent you in court.

(d) Are You Entitled to Be Present at a Section 3582(c)(2) Hearing?

You are not usually entitled to be present at a Section 3582(c)(2) hearing. Under the Federal Rules of Evidence, proceedings under Section 3582(c) are excused from the rule that a prisoner must be present at his sentencing.⁵⁰ You may also choose not to be present if your absence from prison would affect your housing, your work, or other obligations. However, if you think that important facts relating to your case will be involved at the hearing, you can argue that you have a constitutional right to be present.⁵¹

(e) What Sentence Might You Get if a Judge Grants Your Motion for Re-Sentencing?

Most likely, you will get a sentence within the changed Guidelines. You may get a sentence that is lower than the recommended sentence from the changed Guidelines if your original sentence was already lower than the sentence recommended by the old Guidelines.⁵²

49. See Halbert v. Michigan, 545 U.S. 605, 610, 125 S. Ct. 2582, 2586, 162 L. Ed. 2d 552, 560 (2005) (finding that the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Federal Constitution require that if an avenue for relief is provided by statute, the government may not “bolt the door to equal justice to indigent defendants”); Mempa v. Rhay, 389 U.S. 128, 135, 88 S. Ct. 254, 257, 19 L. Ed. 2d 336, 341 (1967) (holding that the 6th Amendment guarantees a right to counsel in a proceeding where a judge has to recommend a revised sentence to the parole board because “to the extent such recommendations are influential in determining the resulting sentence, the mitigating circumstances and in general aiding and assisting the defendant to present his case as to sentence is apparent”); United States v. Robinson, 542 F.3d 1045, 1052 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that where a prisoner convicted of selling crack cocaine moved for a sentence reduction by filing a §3582(c)(2) motion and requesting counsel, the interest of justice warranted appointment of counsel; the court refrained from definitively stating that all incarcerated persons have a right to counsel at § 3582(c)(2) hearings); United States v. Reddick, 53 F.3d 462, 465 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that appointment of counsel for § 3582(c)(2) application rests in the discretion of the district court); Turnbow v. Estelle, 510 F.2d 127, 129 (5th Cir. 1975) (holding that there is a right to counsel whenever the judge can exercise some discretion and influence over the sentence imposed); see also Fed. Pub. & Cmty. Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines (2008), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/crack-retroactivity-questions-answers-caselaw-argument-outlines.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020) (arguing that prior case law finding no right to counsel under United States Sentencing Guidelines § 1B1.10 for § 3582(c)(2) proceedings is now obsolete because of the significant revisions of § 1B1.10 in 2008).

50. See Fed. R. Crim. P. 43(b)(4); United States v. Gainer, 303 F. App’x 795, 796–797 (11th Cir. 2008) (per curiam) (holding that a prisoner has no right to be present for a § 3582(c)(2) re-sentencing hearing); United States v. Jones, 298 F. App’x 70, 72 (2d Cir. 2008) (unpublished) (distinguishing United States v. DeMott and holding that incarcerated persons who file § 3582(c)(2) motions for re-sentencing have no right to be present at a hearing); United States v. Parrish, 427 F.3d 1345, 1347 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding a prisoner has no right to be present at a § 3582(c)(2) re-sentencing hearing and that Federal Rule of Procedure 43(b)(4) exempts proceedings under § 3582(c)(2) from the rule that a prisoner must be present at sentencing). But see United States v. DeMott, 513 F.3d. 55, 58 (2d Cir. 2008) (holding that defendant has a constitutional right to be present during re-sentencing, insofar as the proceeding is technically imposing a new sentence in place of the vacated sentence).

51. Fed. Pub. & Cmty. Defenders, Crack Retroactivity: Questions, Answers, Caselaw, Argument Outlines (2008), available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/crack-retroactivity-questions-answers-caselaw-argument-outlines.pdf (last visited Sep. 19, 2020) (finding a possible constitutional right to be present at a re-sentencing hearing where important facts are in dispute).

52. See Part B(2)(c) above.

(f) May a Court Deny Your Motion for Re-Sentencing Even When the New Guidelines Have Been Lowered for Your Offense?

Yes, a court may deny your Section 3582(c)(2) motion even if it is clear that the Sentencing Commission has lowered the sentencing Guidelines for the incident for which you are serving time. A judge may choose not to re-sentence you if he believes that the factors listed in Section 3553(a), the history after your conviction, or concerns about public safety suggest that a reduction in your sentence would not be appropriate.⁵³

4. Applying for Reduction in Sentence under Amendment 782 (“Drug Minus Two” Amendment)

(a) Introduction

In July 2014, the U.S. Sentencing Commission passed Amendment 782, also called the “Drug Minus Two” Amendment, to § 1B1.10.⁵⁴ The amendment affects motions for sentence reductions filed under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). It reduces by two levels the offense levels assigned to drug quantities in the Drug Quantity Table in § 2D1.1.⁵⁵ This applies for offenses related to any controlled substance. The Drug Quantity Table is used by federal judges to calculate sentences. It establishes a sentencing range for each offense level. Amendment 782, however, does not change the minimum base offense level (Level 6) or the maximum base offense level (Level 38) for most drug types. The Drug Quantity Table is at the end of this chapter.

In July 2014, the Commission voted to make Amendment 782 apply retroactively.⁵⁶ This means that if you are already serving a sentence for a federal drug offense, you are now able to file a motion for sentence reduction based on the changes made to the base offense levels. The first date motions could be filed was November 2014, and the effective date of sentence reduction orders (the first date people could be released) was November 1, 2015.⁵⁷ The effective date was delayed until November 2015 partly to give federal agencies time to set up reentry options.⁵⁸

The Commission has made it clear that the purpose of Amendment 782 is to deal with the overcapacity of federal prisons.⁵⁹ The Commission has also recognized that setting base offense levels above mandatory minimum penalties was no longer necessary.⁶⁰ The Commission projected that

53. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL, §1B1.10 cmt. n.1(B), 39 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Sep. 19, 2020).

54. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 5 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at <https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/training/CLE/presentation-amendments-20141030.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

55. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1-2 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

56. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1-2 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

57. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL, § 1B1.1(e), 39 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2015), available at <http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

58. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 2 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

59. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

60. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM’N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

approximately 46,000 offenders could take advantage of the Amendment's retroactive application, with sentences lessened on average by 18 percent.⁶¹

(b) Eligibility

Amendment 782 applies only to offenders sentenced in federal courts and currently serving a term of imprisonment. It applies to offenses related to any controlled substance. There are no specific eligibility limitations based on an incarcerated person's criminal history, use of weapons in the offense, or type of drug trafficking. However, these are factors that a judge is likely to take into consideration when deciding on the motion for a sentence reduction.⁶²

Amendment 782 does not provide for a sentence reduction for offenders whose sentences were based on guidelines specified in Section 2B1.1(a)(1-4).⁶³ These subsections provide for an enhanced base offense level if the defendant was convicted under a different statute and/or was accompanied by other mitigating circumstances, such as death or serious bodily injury resulting from the use of the substance. A judge may not re-sentence a defendant to a term that is lower than the amended guideline range.⁶⁴ Amendment 782 may also not apply if the petitioner originally received a downwardly adjusted sentence that was more than two levels below the offense base level at the time.

Several other exceptions to your eligibility for a sentence reduction under Amendment 782 may apply. These are discussed briefly below:⁶⁵

- (1) Are you eligible if your sentence has already been reduced pursuant to previous amendments to the crack cocaine guidelines?

You may still be eligible for further reduction to your sentence under Amendment 782.

- (2) Are you eligible for re-sentencing if you were originally sentenced as a Career Offender or under the Armed Career Criminal Statute?

No, reductions provided for by Amendment 782 do not apply if you were sentenced under the Career Offender (Section 4B1.1) or Armed Career Criminal Statute.⁶⁶ However, if your sentence was originally determined by the drug guideline range rather than the career offender range, you can still try to seek relief. Case law varies among the circuits on whether a defendant who was subject to the career offender guideline but received a variance or departure from that guideline is eligible for sentence reduction.⁶⁷

61. AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

62. See 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) (“[I]n the case of a defendant who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment based on a sentencing range that has subsequently been lowered by the Sentencing Commission,” the court may “reduce the term of imprisonment ... after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable...”); see generally 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) (providing a detailed list of factors that the court may use to determine whether a sentence reduction is warranted and consistent with sentencing policies).

63. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1 (a)(1-4), 141 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at <https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

64. United States v. Erskine, 717 F.3d 131, 137 (2d Cir. 2013).

65. See generally, FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders, available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

66. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders, available at https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

67. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders

- (3) Are you eligible if you were sentenced under a mandatory minimum statute provided by Congress?

Yes, if you provided “substantial assistance to the government in the investigation and prosecution of others,” you may still be eligible for a sentence reduction despite a mandatory minimum.⁶⁸

- (4) Are you eligible if you entered into a plea agreement pursuant to Rule 11(c)(1)(c)?

Yes, most courts have held that a defendant is still eligible to file a motion under 18 USC § 3582(c) for a reduction in sentence if he or she entered into an 11(c)(1)(c) agreement.⁶⁹

- (5) How will Amendment 782 affect your sentence if you received a reduction for substantial assistance?

The Commission was clear in Amendment 782 that sentence reduction is still possible for petitioners who received downwardly adjusted sentences in substantial assistance cases.⁷⁰ Therefore, you should still file a 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) motion under Amendment 782.

- (6) What if you have previously waived the right to file a motion under 18 USC §3582(c)(2)?

If you have previously waived this right, counsel can file a “Notice of Eligibility” motion to alert the court that you may still be eligible for a sentence reduction pursuant to changes made by Amendment 782. The court can then file a sua sponte motion on its own if it determines the case warrants this.⁷¹

- (7) How do you apply?

The changes to your sentence provided for in Amendment 782 do not apply automatically. To apply for re-sentencing, you must file a motion under 18 USC § 3582(c)(2). The motion must be filed in the same district court that handled your original sentencing. This motion may be filed pro se.⁷² You can find a sample pro se motion at the end of this Chapter.

3, 12–14, available at

https://www.fed.defenders.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

68. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders 12, available at

https://www.fed.defenders.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

69. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders 4, available at

https://www.fed.defenders.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

70. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders 12–13, available at

https://www.fed.defenders.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

71. FAQs: 2014 Amendment to USSG §1B1.10: Retroactivity of “Drugs Minus 2” (Amendment 782) and Sentence Reductions in Cases Involving Mandatory Minimums and Substantial Assistance, Federal Defenders 1, available at

https://www.fed.defenders.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/essential_topics/sentencing_resources/specific_guideline/faqs-2014-amendments-to-ussg-1b1-10-retroactivity-of-drugs-minus-2.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

72. “Pro se” means advocating on one’s own behalf before a court, rather than being represented by a lawyer.

It is important to show in the motion that your sentence would be different if today's guidelines had been in place during your original sentencing. At the end of this section, you can find the amended Drug Quantity Table.⁷³

Amendment 782 allows judges to reduce sentences on a case-by-case basis. There are a number of factors provided for both in 18 USC §3553(a) and in the Commission's explanation of Amendment 782 that will be used by the judge to make this determination. These include:⁷⁴

- (1) The nature and circumstances of the offense;
- (2) The history and characteristics of the defendant;
- (3) The need for the sentence based on the seriousness of the offense, protecting the public, and providing for adequate deterrence;
- (4) Any policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission;
- (5) Your post-sentencing conduct;
- (6) Any new factual findings about the drug quantity.

Below is more information on how best to apply and what the process will be like.

- (1) Will this be an opportunity for a full re-sentencing?

No, the judge is not permitted to consider a full re-sentencing. The judge is only able to consider whether or not to apply a reduced sentence based on the two-level reduction of the base offense levels.

- (2) Are you entitled to a hearing on the matter?

No, petitioners filing a motion for a sentence reduction are not automatically entitled to a hearing. Most of the requests under Amendment 782 will be resolved based on written materials. The need for a hearing will most likely arise in cases where there is question of whether the amendment actually lowered the sentence. If the court denies the motion as a matter of discretion, no hearing is provided.

- (3) If your first motion is denied, can you file again?

It is not clear how many motions you can file for reconsideration or a second motion for relief based upon the same retroactive amendment. Nothing in 18 USC § 3582(c)(2) technically limits how many motions a petitioner may file.

(c) Calculating the New Range

Under Section 2D1.1, unless you are convicted of an offense that comes within the category of offenses specified in Section 2D1.1 (a)(1)–(4), the type and amount of drugs for which you are held responsible is a key factor in determining your sentence.⁷⁵ The base offense level specified in the Drug Quantity Table will apply.⁷⁶ Note that Amendment 782 revised the Drug Quantity Table so the table listed at the end of the Chapter is the current version. It is important to find out what was the base offense level used in your original sentencing.

If you received a departure or variance at the original sentencing hearing (for reasons other than substantial assistance), the court will likely calculate your new sentencing range based on an offense level without the previous departure or variance.

To determine how your base offense level would be different today, find the original base offense level used in your sentencing hearing. If your offense level was not the maximum or minimum, then 73. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1(c), 145–167 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at <https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

74. For more information on the factors that could be considered, refer to 18 USC §3553(a); See also AMENDMENTS TO THE GUIDELINES MANUAL, AMEND. 782, 1 (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at http://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/amendment-process/reader-friendly-amendments/20140718_RF_Amendment782.pdf (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

75. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL § 2D1.1(a)(1)–(4) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at <https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

76. U.S. SENTENCING COMMISSION GUIDELINES MANUAL, 145–167 § 2D1.1(c) (U.S. SENTENCING COMM'N 2014), available at <https://www.ussc.gov/sites/default/files/pdf/guidelines-manual/2014/GLMFull.pdf> (last visited Oct. 16, 2020).

you can move forward with the calculation. Subtract two levels from the original base offense level used in your sentencing. For example, if your original base level was Level 28, then $28 - 2 = 26$. Today your base offense level would be Level 26, meaning the judge should consider the sentencing guidelines applicable to Level 26 for your potential sentence reduction.

(d) Recommendations

We recommend that if possible you get a lawyer to help you file this motion. Based on previous Amendment 782 cases, courts have been more willing to grant sentence reductions when the petitioner has had counsel. Included at the end of the Chapter is a petition for a court-appointed lawyer or a Federal Public Defender.

Also, a judge is likely to consider your disciplinary record in prison. If your record since post-sentencing is good, this is an important factor to tell the judge determining your sentence reduction.

5. Conclusion

In conclusion, the recent changes in the Federal Sentencing Guidelines that are in effect for prior sentencings for some drug offenses, especially those involving crack cocaine, allow some individuals currently serving sentences for federal drug convictions to apply for sentence reductions under the new Guidelines. If the sentencing range for your offense has been lowered by the changes, you may qualify for re-sentencing. You should try to have an attorney appointed to your case or, if you cannot get an attorney, you should file a re-sentencing application pro se.

(a) Drug Quantity Table

Controlled Substances and Quantity	Base Offense Level
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 90 KG or more of Heroin; • 450 KG or more of Cocaine; • 25.2 KG or more of Cocaine Base; • 90 KG or more of PCP, or 9 KG or more of PCP (actual); • 45 KG or more of Methamphetamine, or 4.5 KG or more of Methamphetamine (actual), or 4.5 KG or more of "Ice"; • 45 KG or more of Amphetamine, or 4.5 KG or more of Amphetamine (actual); • 900 G or more of LSD; • 36 KG or more of Fentanyl; • 9 KG or more of a Fentanyl Analogue; • 90,000 KG or more of Marihuana; • 18,000 KG or more of Hashish; • 1,800 KG or more of Hashish Oil; • 90,000,000 units or more of Ketamine; • 90,000,000 units or more of Schedule I or II Depressants; • 5,625,000 units or more of Flunitrazepam. 	38
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 30 KG but less than 90 KG of Heroin; • At least 150 KG but less than 450 KG of Cocaine; • At least 8.4 KG but less than 25.2 KG of Cocaine Base; • At least 30 KG but less than 90 KG of PCP, or at least 3 KG but less than 9 KG of PCP (actual); • At least 15 KG but less than 45 KG of Methamphetamine, or at least 1.5 KG but less than 4.5 KG of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 1.5 KG but less than 4.5 KG of "Ice"; • At least 15 KG but less than 45 KG of Amphetamine, or 	36

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> at least 1.5 KG but less than 4.5 KG of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 300 G but less than 900 G of LSD; • At least 12 KG but less than 36 KG of Fentanyl; • At least 3 KG but less than 9 KG of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 30,000 KG but less than 90,000 KG of Marihuana; • At least 6,000 KG but less than 18,000 KG of Hashish; • At least 600 KG but less than 1,800 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 30,000,000 units but less than 90,000,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 30,000,000 units but less than 90,000,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 1,875,000 units but less than 5,625,000 units of Flunitrazepam.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 10 KG but less than 30 KG of Heroin; • At least 50 KG but less than 150 KG of Cocaine; • At least 2.8 KG but less than 8.4 KG of Cocaine Base; • At least 10 KG but less than 30 KG of PCP, or at least 1 KG but less than 3 KG of PCP (actual); • At least 5 KG but less than 15 KG of Methamphetamine, or at least 500 G but less than 1.5 KG of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 500 G but less than 1.5 KG of "Ice"; • At least 5 KG but less than 15 KG of Amphetamine, or at least 500 G but less than 1.5 KG of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 100 G but less than 300 G of LSD; • At least 4 KG but less than 12 KG of Fentanyl; • At least 1 KG but less than 3 KG of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 10,000 KG but less than 30,000 KG of Marihuana; • At least 2,000 KG but less than 6,000 KG of Hashish; • At least 200 KG but less than 600 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 10,000,000 but less than 30,000,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 10,000,000 but less than 30,000,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 625,000 but less than 1,875,000 units of Flunitrazepam. 	34
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 3 KG but less than 10 KG of Heroin; • At least 15 KG but less than 50 KG of Cocaine; • At least 840 G but less than 2.8 KG of Cocaine Base; • At least 3 KG but less than 10 KG of PCP, or at least 300 G but less than 1 KG of PCP (actual); • At least 1.5 KG but less than 5 KG of Methamphetamine, or at least 150 G but less than 500 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 150 G but less than 500 G of "Ice"; • At least 1.5 KG but less than 5 KG of Amphetamine, or at least 150 G but less than 500 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 30 G but less than 100 G of LSD; • At least 1.2 KG but less than 4 KG of Fentanyl; • At least 300 G but less than 1 KG of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 3,000 KG but less than 10,000 KG of Marihuana; • At least 600 KG but less than 2,000 KG of Hashish; • At least 60 KG but less than 200 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 3,000,000 but less than 10,000,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 3,000,000 but less than 10,000,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 187,500 but less than 625,000 units of Flunitrazepam. 	32
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 1 KG but less than 3 KG of Heroin; 	30

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 5 KG but less than 15 KG of Cocaine; • At least 280 G but less than 840 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 1 KG but less than 3 KG of PCP, or at least 100 G but less than 300 G of PCP (actual); • At least 500 G but less than 1.5 KG of Methamphetamine, or at least 50 G but less than 150 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 50 G but less than 150 G of "Ice"; • At least 500 G but less than 1.5 KG of Amphetamine, or at least 50 G but less than 150 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 10 G but less than 30 G of LSD; • At least 400 G but less than 1.2 KG of Fentanyl; • At least 100 G but less than 300 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 1,000 KG but less than 3,000 KG of Marihuana; • At least 200 KG but less than 600 KG of Hashish; • At least 20 KG but less than 60 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 1,000,000 but less than 3,000,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 1,000,000 but less than 3,000,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 62,500 but less than 187,500 units of Flunitrazepam.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 700 G but less than 1 KG of Heroin; • At least 3.5 KG but less than 5 KG of Cocaine; • At least 196 G but less than 280 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 700 G but less than 1 KG of PCP, or at least 70 G but less than 100 G of PCP (actual); • At least 350 G but less than 500 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 35 G but less than 50 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 35 G but less than 50 G of "Ice"; • At least 350 G but less than 500 G of Amphetamine, or at least 35 G but less than 50 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 7 G but less than 10 G of LSD; • At least 280 G but less than 400 G of Fentanyl; • At least 70 G but less than 100 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 700 KG but less than 1,000 KG of Marihuana; • At least 140 KG but less than 200 KG of Hashish; • At least 14 KG but less than 20 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 700,000 but less than 1,000,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 700,000 but less than 1,000,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 43,750 but less than 62,500 units of Flunitrazepam. 	28
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 400 G but less than 700 G of Heroin; • At least 2 KG but less than 3.5 KG of Cocaine; • At least 112 G but less than 196 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 400 G but less than 700 G of PCP, or at least 40 G but less than 70 G of PCP (actual); • At least 200 G but less than 350 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 20 G but less than 35 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 20 G but less than 35 G of "Ice"; • At least 200 G but less than 350 G of Amphetamine, or at least 20 G but less than 35 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 4 G but less than 7 G of LSD; • At least 160 G but less than 280 G of Fentanyl; • At least 40 G but less than 70 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 400 KG but less than 700 KG of Marihuana; 	26

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 80 KG but less than 140 KG of Hashish; • At least 8 KG but less than 14 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 400,000 but less than 700,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 400,000 but less than 700,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 25,000 but less than 43,750 units of Flunitrazepam.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 100 G but less than 400 G of Heroin; • At least 500 G but less than 2 KG of Cocaine; • At least 28 G but less than 112 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 100 G but less than 400 G of PCP, or at least 10 G but less than 40 G of PCP (actual); • At least 50 G but less than 200 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 5 G but less than 20 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 5 G but less than 20 G of "Ice"; • At least 50 G but less than 200 G of Amphetamine, or at least 5 G but less than 20 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 1 G but less than 4 G of LSD; • At least 40 G but less than 160 G of Fentanyl; • At least 10 G but less than 40 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 100 KG but less than 400 KG of Marihuana; • At least 20 KG but less than 80 KG of Hashish; • At least 2 KG but less than 8 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 100,000 but less than 400,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 100,000 but less than 400,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 6,250 but less than 25,000 units of Flunitrazepam. 	24
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 80 G but less than 100 G of Heroin; • At least 400 G but less than 500 G of Cocaine; • At least 22.4 G but less than 28 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 80 G but less than 100 G of PCP, or at least 8 G but less than 10 G of PCP (actual); • At least 40 G but less than 50 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 4 G but less than 5 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 4 G but less than 5 G of "Ice"; • At least 40 G but less than 50 G of Amphetamine, or at least 4 G but less than 5 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 800 MG but less than 1 G of LSD; • At least 32 G but less than 40 G of Fentanyl; • At least 8 G but less than 10 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 80 KG but less than 100 KG of Marihuana; • At least 16 KG but less than 20 KG of Hashish; • At least 1.6 KG but less than 2 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 80,000 but less than 100,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 80,000 but less than 100,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 5,000 but less than 6,250 units of Flunitrazepam. 	22
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 60 G but less than 80 G of Heroin; • At least 300 G but less than 400 G of Cocaine; • At least 16.8 G but less than 22.4 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 60 G but less than 80 G of PCP, or at least 6 G but less than 8 G of PCP (actual); • At least 30 G but less than 40 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 3 G but less than 4 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or 	20

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> at least 3 G but less than 4 G of "Ice"; • At least 30 G but less than 40 G of Amphetamine, or at least 3 G but less than 4 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 600 MG but less than 800 MG of LSD; • At least 24 G but less than 32 G of Fentanyl; • At least 6 G but less than 8 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 60 KG but less than 80 KG of Marihuana; • At least 12 KG but less than 16 KG of Hashish; • At least 1.2 KG but less than 1.6 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 60,000 but less than 80,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 60,000 but less than 80,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • 60,000 units or more of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 3,750 but less than 5,000 units of Flunitrazepam.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 40 G but less than 60 G of Heroin; • At least 200 G but less than 300 G of Cocaine; • At least 11.2 G but less than 16.8 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 40 G but less than 60 G of PCP, or at least 4 G but less than 6 G of PCP (actual); • At least 20 G but less than 30 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 2 G but less than 3 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 2 G but less than 3 G of "Ice"; • At least 20 G but less than 30 G of Amphetamine, or at least 2 G but less than 3 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 400 MG but less than 600 MG of LSD; • At least 16 G but less than 24 G of Fentanyl; • At least 4 G but less than 6 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 40 KG but less than 60 KG of Marihuana; • At least 8 KG but less than 12 KG of Hashish; • At least 800 G but less than 1.2 KG of Hashish Oil; • At least 40,000 but less than 60,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 40,000 but less than 60,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 40,000 but less than 60,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 2,500 but less than 3,750 units of Flunitrazepam. 	18
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 20 G but less than 40 G of Heroin; • At least 100 G but less than 200 G of Cocaine; • At least 5.6 G but less than 11.2 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 20 G but less than 40 G of PCP, or at least 2 G but less than 4 G of PCP (actual); • At least 10 G but less than 20 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 1 G but less than 2 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 1 G but less than 2 G of "Ice"; • At least 10 G but less than 20 G of Amphetamine, or at least 1 G but less than 2 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 200 MG but less than 400 MG of LSD; • At least 8 G but less than 16 G of Fentanyl; • At least 2 G but less than 4 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 20 KG but less than 40 KG of Marihuana; • At least 5 KG but less than 8 KG of Hashish; • At least 500 G but less than 800 G of Hashish Oil; • At least 20,000 but less than 40,000 units of Ketamine; 	16

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 20,000 but less than 40,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 20,000 but less than 40,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 1,250 but less than 2,500 units of Flunitrazepam.
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 10 G but less than 20 G of Heroin; • At least 50 G but less than 100 G of Cocaine; • At least 2.8 G but less than 5.6 G of Cocaine Base; • At least 10 G but less than 20 G of PCP, or at least 1 G but less than 2 G of PCP (actual); • At least 5 G but less than 10 G of Methamphetamine, or at least 500 MG but less than 1 G of Methamphetamine (actual), or at least 500 MG but less than 1 G of "Ice"; • At least 5 G but less than 10 G of Amphetamine, or at least 500 MG but less than 1 G of Amphetamine (actual); • At least 100 MG but less than 200 MG of LSD; • At least 4 G but less than 8 G of Fentanyl; • At least 1 G but less than 2 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 10 KG but less than 20 KG of Marihuana; • At least 2 KG but less than 5 KG of Hashish; • At least 200 G but less than 500 G of Hashish Oil; • At least 10,000 but less than 20,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 10,000 but less than 20,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 10,000 but less than 20,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 625 but less than 1,250 units of Flunitrazepam. 	14
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Less than 10 G of Heroin; • Less than 50 G of Cocaine; • Less than 2.8 G of Cocaine Base; • Less than 10 G of PCP, or less than 1 G of PCP (actual); • Less than 5 G of Methamphetamine, or less than 500 MG of Methamphetamine (actual), or less than 500 MG of "Ice"; • Less than 5 G of Amphetamine, or less than 500 MG of Amphetamine (actual); • Less than 100 MG of LSD; • Less than 4 G of Fentanyl; • Less than 1 G of a Fentanyl Analogue; • At least 5 KG but less than 10 KG of Marihuana; • At least 1 KG but less than 2 KG of Hashish; • At least 100 G but less than 200 G of Hashish Oil; • At least 5,000 but less than 10,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 5,000 but less than 10,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 5,000 but less than 10,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 312 but less than 625 units of Flunitrazepam; • 80,000 units or more of Schedule IV substances (except Flunitrazepam). 	12
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 2.5 KG but less than 5 KG of Marihuana; • At least 500 G but less than 1 KG of Hashish; 	10

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 50 G but less than 100 G of Hashish Oil; • At least 2,500 but less than 5,000 units of Ketamine; • At least 2,500 but less than 5,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 2,500 but less than 5,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • At least 156 but less than 312 units of Flunitrazepam; • At least 40,000 but less than 80,000 units of Schedule IV substances (except Flunitrazepam)
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 1 KG but less than 2.5 KG of Marihuana; • At least 200 G but less than 500 G of Hashish; • At least 20 G but less than 50 G of Hashish Oil; • At least 1,000 but less than 2,500 units of Ketamine; • At least 1,000 but less than 2,500 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • At least 1,000 but less than 2,500 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • Less than 156 units of Flunitrazepam; • At least 16,000 but less than 40,000 units of Schedule IV substances (except Flunitrazepam); • 160,000 units or more of Schedule V substances. 	8
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Less than 1 KG of Marihuana; • Less than 200 G of Hashish; • Less than 20 G of Hashish Oil; • Less than 1,000 units of Ketamine; • Less than 1,000 units of Schedule I or II Depressants; • Less than 1,000 units of Schedule III substances (except Ketamine); • Less than 16,000 units of Schedule IV substances (except Flunitrazepam); • Less than 160,000 units of Schedule V substances. 	6

C. Re-sentencing for Drug Crimes in New York State

1. Introduction

In 2004, New York reformed the state's old Rockefeller drug laws by adopting the Drug Law Reform Act ("DLRA").⁷⁷ The DLRA took effect on January 13, 2005, and changed sentencing ranges for drug offenses generally by making sentences shorter.⁷⁸ The new, shorter sentence ranges automatically apply to anyone sentenced for a drug offense committed after January 13, 2005.⁷⁹ The DLRA also allows people currently serving sentences for A-I felony drug offenses under the old law to apply for re-sentencing under the new law.⁸⁰ A second law, which took effect on October 29, 2005, also allows some people serving sentences for A-II felony drug convictions to apply for re-sentencing under the new law.⁸¹ The New York state legislature also adopted new re-sentencing policies in April 2009.⁸² This bill created a new provision of the criminal procedure law that allows certain people currently in prison for Class B felony drug offenses to apply for re-sentencing.⁸³

Overall, this means that if you are serving a sentence for an A-I, A-II, or Class B felony drug offense, and you were sentenced under the old laws, you may be able to have your sentence reduced under the new laws. This Chapter describes who is allowed to apply for re-sentencing, which new sentences you could receive if you apply, and how to apply for re-sentencing. Section 2 of this Part describes who is allowed to apply for re-sentencing. Section 3 describes what happens if you decide to apply. Section 4 explains how to apply for re-sentencing. Appendix B at the end of the Chapter provides forms you will need in order to apply for re-sentencing.

2. Eligibility: Who Is Allowed to Apply?

If you are serving time for a felony drug offense, you must first find out whether you are eligible for re-sentencing. Re-sentencing is only available to people who were convicted of A-I, A-II, or Class B felony drug offenses and are currently serving time for those offenses in the custody of the New York State Department of Corrections. The A-I felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the first degree,⁸⁴ criminal sale of a controlled substance in the first degree,⁸⁵ and operating as a major trafficker.⁸⁶ The A-II felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the second degree⁸⁷ and criminal sale of a controlled substance in the second degree.⁸⁸ The Class B felony drug offenses are criminal possession of a controlled substance in the third degree,⁸⁹ criminal sale of a controlled substance in the third degree,⁹⁰ criminal sale of a controlled substance in

77. Alan Rosenthal, A Guide to Rockefeller Drug Reform: Understanding the New Legislation, COMMUNITYALTERNATIVES.ORG, 1, available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/sentencing_guide.pdf (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

78. Alan Rosenthal, A Guide to Rockefeller Drug Reform: Understanding the New Legislation, COMMUNITYALTERNATIVES.ORG, 1, available at http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/sentencing_guide.pdf (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

79. People v. Nelson, 21 A.D.3d 861, 862, 804 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (1st Dept. 2005) (holding that new sentencing ranges under the DLRA do not apply to persons sentenced for offenses committed before January 13, 2005, even where sentencing takes place after January 13, 2005). New York's highest court, the New York Court of Appeals, upheld this decision in the consolidated appeals of three inmates in People v. Utsey, 7 N.Y.3d 398, 855 N.E.2d 791, 822 N.Y.S.2d 475 (2006).

80. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71 (Consol. 2019).

81. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71 (McKinney 2009).

82. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (McKinney 2009).

83. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (McKinney Supp. 2015).

84. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.21 (McKinney 2008).

85. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.43 (McKinney 2008).

86. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.77 (McKinney Supp. 2015).

87. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.18 (McKinney 2008).

88. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.41 (McKinney 2008).

89. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.16 (McKinney 2008).

90. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.39 (McKinney 2008).

or near school grounds,⁹¹ criminal sale of a controlled substance to a child,⁹² and unlawful manufacture of methamphetamine in the first degree.⁹³ These offenses are all described in Section 220 of the New York Penal Law.⁹⁴ People who are serving sentences for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses have different re-sentencing requirements.

(a) If You Are Serving a Sentence for an A-I Felony Drug Conviction

Generally, if you are serving an indeterminate sentence for an A-I felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law, you may apply for re-sentencing.⁹⁵ An indeterminate sentence means that the sentence did not have a specified end date. But you must still meet some requirements to apply for re-sentencing. The courts have read the law to mean that you must be “in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services” to qualify for re-sentencing.⁹⁶ If you are incarcerated for a parole violation after being released from prison for your original A-I sentence, you are not considered to be “in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services” and cannot apply for re-sentencing under the Drug Law Reform Acts.⁹⁷

To be eligible for A-I re-sentencing, you also must have been subjected to an indeterminate length of imprisonment of fifteen or more years.⁹⁸ If you were sentenced to an A-I felony of fifteen or more years, but then had your sentence commuted to less than fifteen years, you might not be eligible for re-sentencing under an A-I felony drug offense.⁹⁹ However, you should look to Subsection (b) to see whether you are eligible for re-sentencing under an A-II felony drug conviction,¹⁰⁰ or Subsection (c) to see if you are eligible to apply for re-sentencing under a Class B felony drug conviction. Both of these Subsections are found below.

(b) If You Are Serving a Sentence for an A-II Felony Drug Conviction

If you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law, you may apply for re-sentencing if you meet two additional requirements.¹⁰¹ The first requirement is the “Time to Parole Eligibility” requirement. This requirement sets Guidelines on how long it must be until you are eligible for parole under your current sentence. The second requirement is the “Merit Time Eligibility” requirement. This requirement concerns whether you are currently eligible for a merit time reduction. Both of these requirements are explained below. If you meet both of them, and you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense under the old law, then you may apply for re-sentencing.

91. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.44 (McKinney 2008).

92. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.48 (McKinney Supp. 2015).

93. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220.75 (McKinney 2008).

94. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 220 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2015).

95. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71 (Consol. 2019).

96. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 886–891, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 304–310 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006) (holding (1) that defendant whose A-I felony sentence was commuted to eight and one-third years to life was not eligible for re-sentencing for an A-I offense; (2) that a defendant who has been placed on parole for an A-I or A-II offense, violates that parole, and is then incarcerated as a result of his parole violation is not eligible for re-sentencing; and (3) that only those defendants incarcerated on their original prison sentence have a mechanism for re-sentencing).

97. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 886, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 306 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006); see also People v. Overton, 86 A.D.3d 4, 14, 923 N.Y.S.2d 619, 626 (2d Dept. 2011). But see People v. Figueroa, 27 Misc. 3d 751, 762–763, 767–774, 894 N.Y.S.2d 724, 732, 736–739 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County. 2010) (holding that neither the Drug Law Reform Act of 2009 nor the Drug Law Reform Act of 2004 bars parole violators from re-sentencing).

98. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).

99. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).

100. People v. Bagby, 11 Misc. 3d 882, 890, 816 N.Y.S.2d 302, 309 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 2006).

101. Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643, 2005 N.Y. ALS 643.

(i) The Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement

The first requirement is that you must be a certain period of time away from parole eligibility under your current sentence. The New York courts have determined this period to be three years, although the law itself does not clearly state how many years are required.¹⁰² The law only says you must be “more than twelve months from being an eligible inmate as that term is defined in [S]ubdivision 2 of [S]ection 851 of the correction law.”¹⁰³ An “eligible” person, according to Subdivision 2 of Section 851, is an incarcerated person “who is eligible for release on parole or who will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release within two years.”¹⁰⁴ This meaning of “eligible” has two parts—“eligible for release on parole” and “who will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release within two years.” Even though there are two possible meanings of the time to parole eligibility requirement in the re-sentencing law, New York has only followed the three-year requirement. In other words, the courts have stated that you must be at least three years away from parole eligibility.¹⁰⁵

a. The Established Meaning of the Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement in New York

Basically, this requirement for re-sentencing means that you must be more than three years away from becoming eligible for release on parole or conditional release.¹⁰⁶ The Appellate Division First Department decided on the three-year requirement in 2006.¹⁰⁷ In later cases, the Appellate Divisions in the Second, Third, and Fourth Departments have followed the three-year requirement for eligibility.¹⁰⁸

102. See People v. Bautista, 26 A.D.3d 230, 230–231, 809 N.Y.S.2d 62, 63 (1st Dept. 2006) (holding that in order to be eligible for re-sentencing under the 2005 law, an incarcerated person serving time for an A-II drug felony must be at least three years away from his first possible parole date), appeal granted, 6 N.Y.3d 831, 847 N.E.2d 376, 814 N.Y.S.2d 79 (2006), appeal dismissed, 7 N.Y.3d 838, 857 N.E.2d 49, 823 N.Y.S.2d 754 (2006).

103. Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643, 2005 N.Y. ALS 643.

104. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 851(2) (McKinney 2009).

105. See People v. Corley, 45 A.D.3d 857, 858, 847 N.Y.S.2d 148, 148–149 (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that a defendant who had already been denied parole and whose motion for re-sentencing would always be less than three years away from the next parole hearing was not eligible for re-sentencing); People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 419, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that the Supreme Court was not required to assign counsel or conduct a hearing for a defendant who was less than three years from parole eligibility when he filed a motion for re-sentencing since defendant was ineligible for re-sentencing); People v. Nolasco, 37 A.D.3d 622, 623, 831 N.Y.S.2d 197, 197–198 (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that because defendant was less than three years from parole, he was an “eligible inmate” in the meaning of Chapter 643 and was not allowed to proceed with a motion for re-sentencing); People v. Thomas, 35 A.D.3d 895, 895–896, 826 N.Y.S.2d 456, 457 (3d Dept. 2006) (holding that defendant who was convicted of an A-II felony drug offense was not eligible for re-sentencing under the Drug Law Reform Act, because the defendant was eligible for parole within three years); People v. Parris, 35 A.D.3d 891, 892, 828 N.Y.S.2d 429, 429 (2d Dept. 2006) (holding that, since defendant was less than three years away from eligibility for parole, defendant could not seek re-sentencing under Chapter 643).

106. This determination is reached by adding the “more than twelve months” requirement to the “release within two years” requirement from the definition of “eligible” in Subdivision 2 of Section 851. N.Y. Correct. Law § 851(2) (McKinney 2009).

107. People v. Bautista, 26 A.D.3d 230, 809 N.Y.S.2d 62 (1st Dept. 2006).

108. See, e.g., People v. Mills, 48 A.D.3d 1108, 1108, 849 N.Y.S.2d 855, 855 (4th Dept. 2008) (finding applicant ineligible for re-sentencing because he was scheduled to appear before the parole board within two years after his initial parole denial); People v. Dunham, 46 A.D.3d 1416, 1417, 847 N.Y.S.2d 506, 506 (4th Dept. 2007) (denying application for re-sentencing because defendant was eligible for parole within three years); People v. Corley, 45 A.D.3d 857, 858, 847 N.Y.S.2d 148, 149, (2d Dept. 2007) (holding that because “defendant’s next parole hearing will always be less than three years away from any date he moves for re-sentencing in the future ... chapter 643 does not and will not afford him the right to move for re-sentencing”); People v. Smith, 45 A.D.3d 1478, 1479–1480, 846 N.Y.S.2d 520, 521 (4th Dept. 2007) (holding that the defendant could not be resentenced because she was eligible for parole within seven months); People v. Nolasco, 37 A.D.3d 622, 623, 831 N.Y.S.2d 197, 198 (2d Dept. 2007) (denying defendant’s motion for re-sentencing because he was fewer than three years from parole eligibility); People v. Parris, 35 A.D.3d 891, 892, 828 N.Y.S.2d 429, 430 (2d Dept. 2006) (holding that

For example, if you will become eligible for release on parole or conditional release on December 1, 2028, you may apply for re-sentencing on or before November 30, 2025, but not on or after December 1, 2025. If you file your application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible release date under your current sentence, you will be eligible for re-sentencing.

You should be aware that if you have already become eligible for parole and have been denied parole, it is likely that you are not eligible for re-sentencing. Once you have been granted a parole hearing and your request has been denied, your next parole hearing will be scheduled within two years of your last hearing. So, once you have come up for parole and been denied, you are always “eligible for release on parole within two years” and are therefore ineligible for re-sentencing because you fail to meet the Time to Parole Eligibility Requirement.¹⁰⁹

b. Measuring Time to Parole Eligibility

Time to Parole Eligibility is measured from the date that the court receives your application for re-sentencing.¹¹⁰ The day that you file the application with the court must be more than three years from your parole date. In People v. Perez, the Appellate Division First Department noted that, since the defendant “was less than three years from his parole eligibility date when he filed the motion,” he was ineligible for re-sentencing.¹¹¹ The court looked at the date of the motion for re-sentencing to measure the time to parole, and denied it because the application was filed within three years of parole eligibility. This means that the three years should be counted from the day you file the application. Other courts in New York have followed the same procedure to determine whether incarcerated people were eligible for re-sentencing. Therefore, if possible, you should make sure you file your re-sentencing application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible parole release date.

Another issue under the 2005 DLRA is how to measure the three years from parole if you are serving cumulative sentences for an A-II felony along with other crimes. The government has argued that eligibility for re-sentencing should be based only on the time left in serving the A-II felony sentence. This would mean that if you have served two years of a four-year A-II sentence, but also have more than three years to serve for another sentence, you would not be eligible for re-sentencing. But the Appellate Division has not followed this argument. The First Department said that defendant’s parole eligibility date was the date he would be eligible for parole on his cumulative sentence for both A-I and A-II felonies—not the date he would be eligible for parole if he was just serving his A-II felony sentence.¹¹² The court stated that “[t]he pivotal measuring rod is not the time remaining on an A-II felony sentence, but the time before an inmate becomes an ‘eligible inmate’”—in Chapter 643 does not apply to incarcerated people who are three or fewer years from eligibility for parole); People v. Thomas, 35 A.D.3d 895, 896, 826 N.Y.S.2d 456, 457 (3d Dept. 2006) (holding that the two provisions of Subdivision 2 of Section 851 when read together require that in order to qualify for re-sentencing under the 2005 DLRA, a class A-II felony drug offender must not be eligible for parole within three years).

109. People v. Mills, 11 N.Y. 3d 527, 536, 901 N.E.2d 196, 202, 872 N.Y.S.2d 705, 711 (2008) (holding that an incarcerated person who had been denied parole four times in eight years was not eligible for re-sentencing because he was necessarily within two years of his next parole hearing).

110. See, e.g., People v. Then, 47 A.D.3d 404, 405, 849 N.Y.S.2d 234, 235 (1st Dept. 2008) (stating that an incarcerated person must be more than three years away from becoming eligible for parole at the time of his application for re-sentencing); People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 419, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1st Dept. 2007) (holding that a prisoner who was less than three years away from becoming eligible for parole at the time of his application was ineligible for re-sentencing); Memorandum from Al O’Connor, N.Y. State Defenders Ass’n, to Chief Defenders 2–3 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf> (last visited Feb. 2, 2019) (stating “Class A-II offenders who are within the eligibility window ‘at the time of the petition’ are eligible for re-sentencing” and imploring that “caution dictates that whenever possible a motion be filed before an inmate might otherwise be time-barred. When a deadline is imminent, a bare bones application should suffice to toll the limitations period.”).

111. People v. Perez, 44 A.D.3d 418, 419, 843 N.Y.S.2d 68, 68 (1st Dept. 2007).

112. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 104–105, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 511–512 (1st Dept. 2007); People v. Marchena, 60 A.D.3d 508, 508, 875 N.Y.S.2d 53, 53 (1st Dept. 2009); People v. Loyd, 53 A.D.3d 679, 680, 861 N.Y.S.2d 176, 177–178 (3rd Dept. 2008); People v. Peterson, 50 A.D.3d 1588, 1589, 856 N.Y.S.2d 430, 430–431 (4th Dept. 2008).

other words, when the inmate will actually be up for parole.¹¹³ Therefore, you should file your application with the court more than three years before your earliest possible release date.

(ii) The Merit Time Eligibility Requirement

The second re-sentencing requirement is that you must be eligible to receive a merit time reduction of your current sentence. As with the first requirement, the re-sentencing law states this requirement indirectly. Specifically, the re-sentencing law says that you must meet “the eligibility requirements of paragraph (d) of [S]ubdivision 1 of [S]ection 803 of the correction law.”¹¹⁴ In order to meet the merit time requirements for the purposes of the DLRA, you:

[M]ust be serving a sentence of one year or more, be in the Correctional Service Department's custody as of certain periods of time, not have been convicted of certain crimes, not have committed a 'serious disciplinary infraction' or commenced a frivolous civil lawsuit or other civil proceeding against a state agency, officer or employee, and have participated in certain programs.”¹¹⁵

Section 803(1)(d) of the New York Correction Law states that prisoners serving sentences for certain types of crimes are ineligible for merit time.¹¹⁶ These crimes are listed below in Subsection (1) of this Section. If you are serving time for one of the disqualifying offenses listed below, you do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement for re-sentencing, and you may not apply for re-sentencing.

a. Eligibility for Merit Time Under New York Correction Law § 803(1)(d): Disqualifying Offenses

If you are serving time for certain types of offenses in addition to the A-II felony drug offense, you are not eligible for merit time under Section 803(1)(d) of the New York Correction Law, and therefore you are not eligible to apply for re-sentencing. The disqualifying offenses are:

- (1) Any non-drug class A-I felony,
- (2) Any violent felony offense as defined in Section 70.02 of the New York Penal Law,¹¹⁷
- (3) Manslaughter in the second degree,
- (4) Vehicular manslaughter in the first or second degree,
- (5) Criminally negligent homicide,
- (6) Any sex offense defined in Article 130 of the New York Penal Law,¹¹⁸
- (7) Incest,
- (8) Any sexual performance by a child offense defined in Article 263 of the New York Penal Law,¹¹⁹ and
- (9) Aggravated harassment of an employee by a prisoner.¹²⁰

You may wonder whether you are eligible for re-sentencing if you were sentenced for both a disqualifying offense and a drug offense, and you have arguably finished serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense. For example, if you were sentenced to two years' imprisonment for a disqualifying offense, to be served concurrently or consecutively with a longer prison term for an A-II felony drug offense, and you have already served four years, it appears that you are no longer serving time for the disqualifying offense. It is possible to apply for re-sentencing, but you would need to argue in your application that you are no longer serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense. This argument will likely be unsuccessful. Several cases have indicated that a defendant whose sentence originally included a disqualifying offense will not be resentenced.¹²¹

113. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 105, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 512 (1st Dept. 2007).

114. Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643, 2005 N.Y. ALS 643.

115. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513 (1st Dept. 2007).

116. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2009).

117. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

118. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 130.00–130.96 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

119. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 263.00–263.30 (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

120. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(ii) (McKinney 2009) (listing all of the disqualifying offenses).

121. People v. Martinez, 74 A.D.3d 434, 434, 900 N.Y.S.2d 875, 875, 2010 NY Slip Op. 04648, 1 (1st Dept.

If you were sentenced for a disqualifying offense and an A-II offense at the same time, the decisions in Merejildo and Quiñones mean that your argument that you have finished serving the disqualifying offense will probably be unsuccessful, and you will therefore not be resentenced under the DLRA.

You are also probably not eligible to apply for re-sentencing if you were on parole for any one of the disqualifying offenses at the time that you were charged with the A-II felony drug offense. If you are in this situation, the time owed to parole on the first sentence was probably added to the A-II felony drug sentence. This would make you ineligible for merit time, which would make you ineligible for re-sentencing under the new law.¹²²

You probably meet the merit time eligibility requirement if you are not serving time for any of the disqualifying offenses listed above (or listed in Section 803(1)(d)(ii) of the New York Correction Law), and if you were not on parole for any of those offenses at the time that you were charged with the A-II felony drug offense.¹²³ However, the judge may also look at the other restrictions on granting merit time that are included in Correction Law Section 803(1)(d). These restrictions are discussed below, in Subsection (2).

b. Other Restrictions on Merit Time Under New York Correction Law § 803(1)(d)

Courts have identified other restrictions that might apply to merit time allowances in re-sentencing under the DLRA, according to Section 803(1)(d).¹²⁴ This means that it is possible that a judge may decide that you are ineligible for merit time—and therefore ineligible for re-sentencing—if you have a serious disciplinary infraction on your prison record or if, while you were in prison, you filed or proceeded with a lawsuit that the court dismissed as frivolous.¹²⁵

In other words, even if you are not serving time for any disqualifying offenses, a judge might decide that you do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement for re-sentencing because, under Correction Law § 803(1)(d)(iv), you could not be granted merit time. This Section states that “[A]llowance shall be withheld for any serious disciplinary infraction or upon a judicial determination that the person, while an inmate, commenced or continued a civil action, proceeding or claim that was found to be frivolous[.]”¹²⁶

However, most courts have decided that the re-sentencing law only requires that you be eligible for merit time under Correction Law § 803(1)(d). It does not require that you actually earned merit time under Correction Law § 803(1)(d). Therefore, a serious disciplinary infraction or a frivolous lawsuit or legal claim on your record does not necessarily prevent you from meeting the merit time eligibility requirement.¹²⁷ For example, the Supreme Court of New York County held, in People v.

2010); People v. Dervon, 29 Misc. 3d 1221(A), 1221A, 918 N.Y.S.2d 399, 399, 2010 NY Slip Op 51940(U), 2 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 2010).

122. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, N.Y. State Defenders Ass'n, to Chief Defenders, 2–4 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf> (last visited Feb. 3, 2019).

123. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, N.Y. State Defenders Ass'n, to Chief Defenders, 2–4 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf> (last visited Feb. 3, 2019).

124. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513 (1st Dept. 2007) (“[T]o obtain a merit time allowance a defendant must ... not have been convicted of certain crimes, not have committed a ‘serious disciplinary infraction’ or commenced a frivolous civil lawsuit or other civil proceeding against a state agency, officer or employee, and have participated in certain programs.”).

125. See People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106–107, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513 (1st Dept. 2007) (noting that merit time allowance will be withheld for any serious disciplinary infraction or upon a judicial determination when a defendant, while incarcerated, commences a frivolous lawsuit, and finding the defendant was not eligible for merit time since he had committed two serious disciplinary infractions); see also Memorandum from Al O'Connor, New York State Defenders Association, to Chief Defenders, 3–4 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf> (last visited Feb. 3, 2019).

126. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2009).

127. See People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc. 3d 582, 595–597, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 270 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2005)

Quiñones, that a serious disciplinary infraction does not hurt eligibility for re-sentencing under the new law.¹²⁸ The Supreme Court, Appellate Division Second Department, agreed with that decision in People v. Sanders.¹²⁹ The court stated, “the reference in the 2005 DLRA to the ‘eligibility requirements’ of Correction Law Section 803(1)(d), does not preclude a defendant from whom a merit time allowance has been withheld pursuant to Correction Law Section 803(1)(d)(iv), from seeking re-sentencing under the 2005 DLRA.”¹³⁰ In other words, eligibility for re-sentencing under the Drug Reforms laws is different from eligibility under Section 803(1)(d) as a whole. Under the DLRA, the only requirement that matters for merit time eligibility is that you are not serving time for a disqualifying offense.

However, the Supreme Court, Appellate Division First Department and the Supreme Court, Appellate Division Third Department both disagree with the Second Department. In People v. Paniagua, the First Department court held that the defendant was ineligible for merit time because he committed two serious disciplinary infractions. The court noted that the regulations of the Department of Correctional Services define a ‘serious disciplinary infraction’ to include “[actions resulting in the] ‘receipt of disciplinary sanctions’ that entail ‘60 or more days of SHU [Special Housing Unit] and/or keeplock time’ [or] the ‘receipt of any recommended loss of good time as a disciplinary sanction.’”¹³¹ The defendant in Paniagua argued that since he had not committed a disqualifying offense, such as a violent felony, he had met the eligibility requirements of “earning” a merit time allowance. He argued that this was all that he needed to meet the merit time requirement for re-sentencing. The court here took a stricter view. They held that the defendant must have both earned and been granted merit time allowance in order to meet the requirement. The court stated:

Thus, the requirements set forth in § 803(1)(d)(iv), no less than those in § 803(1)(d)(i) and (ii), constitute the “eligibility” requirements for the grant of merit time. Nothing in the 2005 DLRA or § 803(1)(d) supports defendant’s argument that the phrase “eligibility requirements” refers only to the requirements for earning a merit time allowance, and not also to those for being granted one.¹³²

In 2008, the Third Department decided People v. Williams, finding that an incarcerated person whose record showed serious disciplinary infractions during his incarceration was not eligible for re-sentencing because he failed to meet the merit time eligibility requirement. The court used the same reasoning as the First Department did in Paniagua. The Third Department stated:

Here, it is undisputed that defendant has been found to have committed numerous disciplinary infractions while incarcerated which resulted in sanctions being imposed that exceeded 60 days in the special housing unit and/or keeplock. As a result of these infractions, defendant is not eligible for a merit time allowance under the provisions of Correction Law § 803(1)(d) and, as such, is not eligible for re-sentencing under DLRA 2005.¹³³

(holding that the merit time eligibility requirement of the A-II re-sentencing law only requires that an incarcerated person not be serving time for any of the disqualifying offenses listed in N.Y. Correct. Law § 803(1)(d)(ii), and not that the incarcerated person meet any of the other requirements for actual granting of merit time); see also Memorandum from Al O’Connor, N.Y. State Defenders Ass’n, to Chief Defenders, 4 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf> (last visited Mar. 3, 2019). Note that before the decision in Quiñones, the New York Department of Corrections had taken the position that incarcerated people with serious disciplinary infractions and incarcerated people found to have filed frivolous lawsuits while in prison do not meet the merit time eligibility requirement. Memorandum from Anthony J. Annucci, Deputy Comm’r and Counsel for N.Y. Dept. of Corr. Servs., to Criminal Justice Practitioners, 2 (Sept. 20, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

128. People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc. 3d 582, 598, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 271 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2005).

129. People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 188 (2d Dept. 2007).

130. People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 188 (2d Dept. 2007).

131. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 107, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513–514 (1st Dept. 2007) (internal citations omitted); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 280.2(b)(3)–(4).

132. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 514 (1st Dept. 2007).

133. People v. Williams, 48 A.D.3d 858, 859–860, 850 N.Y.S. 2d 717, 718 (3d Dept. 2008) (internal citation

These cases show that the Departments disagree about whether eligibility for merit time requires 803(1)(d)(iv) (freedom from serious disciplinary infractions or frivolous lawsuits) in addition to 803(1)(d)(ii) (freedom from a disqualifying offense). Courts in the First and Third Departments may find that you are not eligible for re-sentencing if you have committed a “serious disciplinary infraction.”¹³⁴ If you wanted to argue for re-sentencing, you would have to argue, as the Second Department reasoned in Sanders, that Section 803(1)(d)(i) and (ii) provide the only requirements for being “eligible for merit time.”¹³⁵

Another thing to note is that you probably do not have to meet the work or program assignment requirement described in New York Correction Law Section 803(1)(d)(iv). This law, effective until September 2013, states that you may be granted merit time when you successfully participate in the work and treatment program assigned pursuant to New York Correction Law Section 805 and you successfully obtain one of the following: your general equivalency diploma (GED), an alcohol and substance abuse treatment certificate, a vocational trade certificate after six months of vocational programming, or completion of 400 hours of community service as part of a community work crew.¹³⁶ The court in Paniagua suggests that participation in these programs is included under the eligibility requirements of the DLRA.¹³⁷ But most courts do not follow this. Instead, they take the position of the Second Department in Sanders, which does not require participation in the programs listed above. Therefore, you probably do not need to participate in any of these programs in order to be considered eligible for merit time.¹³⁸

(c) If You Are Serving a Sentence for a Class B Felony Drug Conviction

If you are serving an indeterminate sentence with a maximum term of more than three years for a Class B felony drug offense committed before January 13, 2005, you may apply for re-sentencing.¹³⁹ As part of the re-sentencing application, you may also ask to be resentenced for Class C, D, or E felony drug offenses. However, you must have been sentenced for the Class C, D, or E felony drug offense at the same time or in the same court order as the Class B felony drug offense.¹⁴⁰ The applications for re-sentencing under this provision are governed by the provisions of the 2004 DLRA for A-II felony drug offenses. When deciding whether you are eligible for re-sentencing, courts will consider factors including, but not be limited to, your disciplinary history and your participation or willingness to participate in treatment or other programming while serving your sentence.¹⁴¹

You are ineligible to apply for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA if you committed what is called an “exclusion offense.”¹⁴² You committed an exclusion offense if you were convicted within the preceding ten years (from the date of the re-sentencing application) of a violent felony or of a felony omitted).

134. See People v. Williams, 48 A.D.3d 858, 859–860, 850 N.Y.S.2d 717, 718 (3d Dept. 2008) (concluding that an incarcerated person who committed serious disciplinary infractions was ineligible for merit time and therefore could not apply for re-sentencing under DLRA); People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 107–108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513–514 (1st Dept. 2007) (finding an incarcerated person ineligible for merit time based on two serious disciplinary infractions while incarcerated); see also N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(a) (McKinney 2009) (“Such allowances may be granted for good behavior and efficient and willing performance of duties assigned or progress and achievement in an assigned treatment program, and may be withheld, forfeited or canceled in whole or in part for bad behavior, violation of institutional rules or failure to perform properly in the duties or program assigned.”); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 280.2(b) (discussing serious disciplinary infractions that would lead to ineligibility for merit time).

135. People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946–947, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 188–189 (2d Dept. 2007).

136. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 803(1)(d)(iv) (McKinney 2009); see N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 805 (McKinney 2009) (discussing work and treatment program).

137. People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 106, 108, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 513–514 (1st Dept. 2007).

138. See, e.g., People v. Quiñones, 11 Misc. 3d 582, 595–596, 812 N.Y.S.2d 259, 269 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2005).

139. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(1) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

140. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(2) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

141. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(3) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

142. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(5) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015).

that makes you ineligible for merit-time allowance under Section 803(1)(d)(ii) (as discussed above), or if the court ever found you to be a second-time violent felony offender or a persistent violent felony offender.¹⁴³

(i) The Meaning of “In Custody”

Courts have interpreted these eligibility requirements as requiring that an applicant must be in the custody of the Department of Corrective Services (DOCS) at the time of the court’s decision on re-sentencing, rather than at the time the application was filed.¹⁴⁴ In People v. Tavarez, for example, the court explicitly applied appellate court precedent under the 2004 and 2005 DLRA, finding defendants

143. See People v. Sosa, 18 N.Y.3d 436, 440, 963 N.E.2d 1235, 1237, 940 N.Y.S.2d 534, 536 (2012). Violent felonies include:

(1) Class B violent felony offenses, which are:

Attempted murder in the second degree, Attempted kidnapping in the first degree, Attempted arson in the first degree, Manslaughter in the first degree, Aggravated manslaughter in the first degree, Rape in the first degree, Criminal sexual act in the first degree, Aggravated sexual abuse in the first degree, Course of sexual conduct against a child in the first degree, Assault in the first degree, Kidnapping in the second degree, Burglary in the first degree, Arson in the second degree, Robbery in the first degree, Sex trafficking, Incest in the first degree, Criminal possession of a weapon in the first degree, Criminal use of a firearm in the first degree, Criminal sale of a firearm in the first degree, Aggravated assault upon a police officer or a peace officer, Gang assault in the first degree, Intimidating a victim or witness in the first degree, Hindering prosecution of terrorism in the first degree, Criminal possession of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the second degree, Criminal use of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the third degree;

(2) Class C violent felony offenses, which are:

Attempts to commit any of the class B felonies specified above, Aggravated criminally negligent homicide, Aggravated manslaughter in the second degree, Aggravated sexual abuse in the second degree, Assault on a peace officer, police officer, fireman or emergency medical services professional, Assault on a judge, Gang assault in the second degree, Strangulation in the first degree, Burglary, in the second degree, Robbery in the second degree, Criminal possession of a weapon in the second degree, Criminal use of a firearm in the second degree, Criminal sale of a firearm in the second degree, Criminal sale of a firearm with the aid of a minor, Soliciting or providing support for an act of terrorism in the first degree, Hindering prosecution of terrorism in the second degree, Criminal possession of a chemical weapon or biological weapon in the third degree;

(3) Class D violent felony offenses, which are:

Attempts to commit any of the Class C felonies described above, Reckless assault of a child, Assault in the second degree, Menacing a police officer or peace officer, Stalking in the first degree, Strangulation in the second degree, Rape in the second degree, Criminal sexual act in the second degree, Sexual abuse in the first degree, Course of sexual conduct against a child in the second degree, Aggravated sexual abuse in the third degree, Facilitating a sex offense with a controlled substance, Labor trafficking, Criminal possession of a weapon in the third degree, Criminal sale of a firearm in the third degree, Intimidating a victim or witness in the second degree, Soliciting or providing support for an act of terrorism in the second degree, Making a terroristic threat, Falsely reporting an incident in the first degree, Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in the first degree, Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in a sports stadium or arena, mass transportation facility or enclosed shopping mall, Aggravated unpermitted use of indoor pyrotechnics in the first degree;

(4) Class E violent felony offenses, which are:

Attempts to commit various forms of criminal possession of a weapon in the third degree, Persistent sexual abuse, Aggravated sexual abuse in the fourth degree, Falsely reporting an incident in the second degree, Placing a false bomb or hazardous substance in the second degree. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.02(a)–(d) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2015). N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(5) (McKinney 2009 & Supp. 2012).

144. See, e.g., People v. Figueroa, 27 Misc. 3d 1205(A), 2 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2010) (“Because the defendant is no longer in the custody of the Department of Correctional Services, he is ... ineligible for re-sentencing.”) (citing People v. Rodriguez, 68 A.D.3d 676, 892 N.Y.S.2d 356 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept. 2009), a case pertaining to the 2005 DLRA); People v. Wiggins, 84 A.D.3d 1279, 923 N.Y.S.2d 349 (2d Dept. 2011) (holding that defendant arrested for felony drug offense in 2004 and granted release to parole supervision in January 2010 was ineligible for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA because he was no longer in custody at the time of the court’s consideration); People v. Suriel, No. 10325/03, slip op. at *3–4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Queens County Nov. 13, 2009) (holding that defendant released from DOCS custody and deported by Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials after applying for re-sentencing was no longer eligible for re-sentencing because not currently in DOCS custody), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Suriel.pdf> (last visited Feb. 28, 2019).

ineligible for re-sentencing once released on parole, even if they were subsequently returned to Department of Corrective Services custody.¹⁴⁵ The court held that this precedent applied to the 2009 DLRA to hold that “the fact that defendant was in NYSDOCS custody when the motion was filed ... does not determine his eligibility for re-sentencing at the time the motion is considered.” This means that a defendant released from the DOCS custody at the time the motion is considered ineligible to be re-sentenced under the 2009 DLRA.¹⁴⁶ Additionally, in People v. Figueroa, the court explicitly stated that “[o]nce a defendant is released to parole and is thus no longer incarcerated, even if re-incarcerated on the original sentence for a parole violation, the defendant is no longer entitled to the ameliorative provisions of the Drug Law Reform Acts.”¹⁴⁷

In People v. Sanabria, the court found that a defendant released on parole several days after filing his application for re-sentencing was eligible for re-sentencing. The court stated that this was because the “in custody” provision of the 2009 DLRA meant that a person had to be in DOCS custody on the day of filing the application.¹⁴⁸

Regardless of the decisions of the courts in People v. Cruz and People v. Sanabria, the rule in most New York courts appears to be that the defendant must be in DOCS custody at the time the court considers the motion for re-sentencing. Thus, petitioners filing for re-sentencing under the 2009 DLRA are probably not eligible for re-sentencing if they are out of custody at the time the court considers the motion.

(ii) The Meaning of the Ten-Year “Look Back”

The majority of New York courts have interpreted the ten-year “look back” period for determining exclusion offenses to be ten years from the date of filing the re-sentencing application, rather than ten years from the present felony drug offense or the effective date of the statute.¹⁴⁹ In People v. Danton, 145. People v. Tavarez, Nos. 5241/99, 5261/99 & 1824/00, slip op. at 3–4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Bronx County Mar. 15, 2010) (citing People v. Mills, 11 N.Y.3d 527, 536–537, 901 N.E.2d 196, 202–203, 872 N.Y.S.2d 705 (2008) and People v. Rodriguez, 68 A.D.3d 676, 676, 892 N.Y.S.2d 356 (1st Dept. 2009), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Tavarez-BronxCo.pdf> (last visited Feb. 4, 2019)).

146. People v. Tavarez, Nos. 5241/99, 5261/99, 1824/00, slip op. at 4–5 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Bronx County Mar. 15, 2010), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Tavarez-BronxCo.pdf> (last visited Feb. 4, 2019).

147. People v. Figueroa, 27 Misc. 3d 1205(A), 910 N.Y.S. 2d 407, No. 50557, slip op. at 2 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2010) (applying appellate court precedent from 2004 and 2005 DLRA to defendant’s case under 2009 DLRA), available at <http://law.justia.com/cases/new-york/other-courts/2010/2010-50557.html> (last visited Feb. 4, 2019).

148. People v. Sanabria (N.Y. Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Mar. 29, 2010), Community Alternative, available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Sanabria.pdf> (last visited Feb. 28, 2019); see also People v. Cuebas, 12 Misc. 3d 987, 820 N.Y.S.2d 688 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 2006).

149. See People v. Arroyo, 28 Misc.3d 1205(A), 957 N.Y.S.2d 637, 2010 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 2823, at *7 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County June 25, 2010) (basing its decision that the ten-year look back should be measured from the date of the re-sentencing application on the ameliorative purpose of the 2009 DLRA, the absence of any language similar to that in other Penal Law provisions specifying the date of commission of the instant felony as the starting point for the 10-year look back, and similar decisions by other lower courts); People v. Lee, 88 A.D.3d 626, 931 N.Y.S.2d 502 (N.Y. App. Div. 1st Dept 2010), aff’d, People v. Walltower, 27 Misc. 3d 1205(A), 910 N.Y.S.2d 407, 2010 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 663, at *4 (Sup. Ct. Queens County Apr. 6, 2010) (holding that “in light of both the dearth of legislative guidance and the ameliorative purposes of the 2009 DLRA, the natural meaning of the term ‘within the preceding ten years’ . . . is the ten-year period immediately preceding the date of filing of the application for re-sentencing.”); People v. Lashley, No. N10596/04, slip op. at 4 (Sup. Ct. Queens County Apr. 5, 2010), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Lashley.pdf> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019) (analogizing to interpretation of “other recidivist sentencing statutes . . .” to find that “the plain meaning of the phrase ‘within the preceding ten years,’ unadorned as it is by any limiting language, appears intended to run from the time immediately preceding the [re-sentencing] application.”); People v. Estela, Nos. 720/2004 & 4336/2004, slip op. at 4 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Mar. 24, 2010), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Estela-NYCo.pdf> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019) (holding that “the relevant point in time from which the statutory ‘preceding ten years’ is to be measured is the date of the filing of the petition for re-sentence . . .”); People v. Austin, No. 6738/02, slip op. at 4 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Mar. 22, 2010), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Austin.pdf> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019) (relying on the

for example, the court found that, in light of the ameliorative (relieving) purpose of both the 2004 and 2005 DLRA, as well as the similarly corrective provisions of the 2009 DLRA, the ten-year look back provision ought to refer to the ten years immediately preceding the date of filing the re-sentencing application.¹⁵⁰

(d) Conclusion

To sum up, you may apply for re-sentencing if, (1) you are serving a sentence for an A-I felony drug offense and you were sentenced under the old law; (2) you are serving a sentence for an A-II felony drug offense, you were sentenced under the old law, and you meet the time to parole eligibility and merit time eligibility requirements described above; or (3) you are serving a sentence for a Class B felony drug offense, for which you were sentenced under the old law, and you are not serving time for an “exclusion offense” within the ten year period before the date of your re-sentencing application. Exclusion offenses include (a) a violent felony offense, (b) an offense that makes you ineligible for merit time under Section 803(1)(d)(ii), (c) a second violent felony offense, or (d) a persistent violent felony offense. Sections 3 and 4 below will describe what happens if you apply for re-sentencing, and how to apply.

D. Re-Sentencing: What Happens if You Apply?

1. The Re-Sentencing Process

The re-sentencing process is the same for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses. When you apply, you must send your application to the court in which you were convicted, and you must also send a copy of your application to the District Attorney's office that prosecuted your conviction.¹⁵¹ The application will be decided by the judge that gave you your original sentence if that judge still works in the same court.¹⁵² Otherwise, the application will be decided by different judge in that court, chosen at random.¹⁵³ Or, if the original judge has moved to another court that has jurisdiction over your case, interpretation of “[n]umerous trial level courts” to find that the 10-year look back means “ten years from the date the application is filed”); People v. Murray, No. 121/03, slip op. at 3 (Sup. Ct. Kings Cty. Mar. 22, 2010), available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Murray.pdf> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019) (holding that the 10-year look back “refer[s] to the ten years immediately preceding the application for resentencing”) (citing People v. Danton, 27 Misc.3d 638, 895 N.Y.S.2d 669 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Feb. 2, 2010)) (internal citations omitted); People v. Loftin, 26 Misc. 3d 1229(A), 907 N.Y.S.2d 439, 2010 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 374, at *7–*8, slip op. at 3 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Onondaga County Mar. 2, 2010) (adopting position so as to “agree with an increasing number of other trial courts who have ruled that the statute, by its plain meaning, contemplates eligibility determinations from the present date ... and that the most natural construction of the law is to read the reference point as the date of a re-sentencing application”) (internal citations omitted); People v. Brown, No. 4097/02, slip op. at 5–73 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Jan. 4, 2010), available at <https://law.justia.com/cases/new-york/other-courts/2010/2010-50000.html> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019) (citing People v. Roman to find that the 10 year period is “measured from the date of a violent felony conviction to the date of a re-sentencing application”); People v. Roman, 26 Misc. 3d 784, 786, 889 N.Y.S.2d 922, 923 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 2009) (holding that “the statute by its plain meaning contemplates eligibility determinations from the present date,” especially in light of the clear purpose of the 2004, 2005, and 2009 DLRA to “ameliorate the lengthy sentences given to defendants for selling or possessing a small amount of drugs”); see also Ctr. for Cmty. Alternatives, Re-sentencing Eligibility (2009): Calculating the 10 Year Look Back Simplified. 1–2, available at <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/ClassBDrugOffense-10YearLookBack.pdf> (last visited Feb. 5, 2019).

150. People v. Danton, 27 Misc. 3d 638, 641–649, 895 N.Y.S.2d 669, 672–678 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2010) (“[V]iewing the re-sentencing provision generally, and its look-back provision particularly, in the context of the spirit and purpose underlying the legislation as a whole, it is appropriate to resolve any ambiguity in favor of the more ameliorative, rather than the more punitive, construction.”).

151. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (1) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

152. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (1) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

153. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

and if you and the District Attorney both agree, your application may be sent to the original judge at the new court where the judge works.¹⁵⁴

(a) How the Judge Will Make a Decision

If the judge finds that you meet the requirements to apply for re-sentencing, described above in Part B, the judge may consider any facts or circumstances that relate to whether you should be resentenced, including your prison record.¹⁵⁵ For Class B felony drug offenders, the judge is also instructed to consider your “participation in or willingness to participate in treatment or other programming while incarcerated” and your disciplinary history, though an inability to participate in such programs won’t count against you when making the determination.¹⁵⁶ It is your responsibility to provide the facts and circumstances that you want the judge to consider.¹⁵⁷ Similarly, the District Attorney may submit the facts and circumstances that the prosecutor wants the judge to consider.¹⁵⁸ The judge may also consider your institutional record of confinement.¹⁵⁹ However, the judge is only allowed to consider information regarding your re-sentencing, not information about whether you were correctly charged and convicted in the first place.¹⁶⁰

If you are eligible to apply for re-sentencing, you have a right to have an attorney represent you on your application.¹⁶¹ If you cannot pay for an attorney, you have a right to have one appointed by the court.¹⁶² Part 4 of this Chapter, “How to Apply for Re-sentencing,” explains how to get an attorney appointed to represent you. You also have a right to a hearing on your re-sentencing application and a right to be present at that hearing.¹⁶³ The court may also order a hearing to determine whether you are actually eligible to apply for re-sentencing. The court may also order a hearing to decide any relevant factual issues that are in dispute.¹⁶⁴

The judge will review the information you and the District Attorney submit and hold any necessary hearings before reaching a decision. If the judge decides to grant your application, he must choose a new sentence. The judge must choose the new sentence from the current sentencing ranges and tell you what that sentence is.¹⁶⁵ You will then have a choice—you can accept the suggested new sentence,

154. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

155. Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

156. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009).

157. In other words, it is up to you to convince the judge that you deserve to be re-sentenced. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

158. In other words, the District Attorney may try to convince the judge that you do not deserve to be re-sentenced. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

159. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

160. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

161. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (4) (McKinney 2009) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722(4) (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643 (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722 (4) (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738 (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722 (4) (McKinney 2009)).

162. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (4) (McKinney 2009) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722 (4) (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643 (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722 (4) (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738 (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717 (1), 722 (4) (McKinney 2009)).

163. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

164. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

165. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

withdraw your application, or appeal the suggested new sentence.¹⁶⁶ If you withdraw your application, you will keep your original sentence. If you do not take any action, the judge will vacate your original sentence and impose the new sentence.¹⁶⁷ All of the time you have served toward your old sentence will be counted towards your new sentence.¹⁶⁸ Whether the judge grants or denies your application, he must write an opinion explaining his findings of fact and legal reasoning.¹⁶⁹

The success or failure of achieving re-sentencing often turns on whether “substantial justice dictates that the application should be denied.” The judge is not supposed to have discretion beyond applying the law (for example, meeting the time to parole requirements, the merit time eligibility requirements, the ten-year look back) in determining whether a defendant is eligible for re-sentencing. The judge does have some discretion, however, in determining what substantial justice requires. For example, courts have previously denied re-sentencing because of substantial justice in cases where the defendant is a high-level drug offender, where the drug trafficking operation that the defendant participated in was very extensive, where the amount of drugs the defendant was convicted for was high, where the defendant had disciplinary infractions while in prison and a long prior criminal history, where the defendant committed serious offenses while incarcerated, where the defendant had a pattern of reoffending while on parole, and where the defendant showed no remorse for his crime and continued to deny guilt after pleading guilty.¹⁷⁰

166. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

167. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

168. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

169. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46 (3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Laws 643; Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Laws 738.

170. People v. Morales, 46 A.D.3d 1395, 1396, 848 N.Y.S.2d 486, 487 (4th Dep’t 2007) (affirming the lower court’s denial of re-sentencing application, under the “substantial justice” provision, because defendant’s conviction involved a large amount of cocaine and defendant was therefore not a “low level offender”); People v. Montoya, 45 A.D.3d 496, 496, 847 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (1st Dep’t 2007) (holding that “substantial justice” required denial of re-sentencing to a defendant who was a high-level participant in an international narcotics distribution ring); People v. Perez, No. 5450/03, slip op. at 9–11 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Mar. 4, 2010), <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Perez-NYCo.pdf>, aff’d, 89 A.D.3d 597, 932 N.Y.S.2d 903 (1st Dep’t 2011) (denying re-sentencing application as a result of a long criminal record with convictions that were “not a single sale for a couple of dollars,” but which included violent felony offenses and several severe infractions while in prison); People v. Arana, 45 A.D.3d 311, 311, 844 N.Y.S.2d 696, 696–697 (1st Dep’t 2007) (affirming lower court’s denial of defendant’s application for re-sentencing based on “substantial justice,” since defendant had been a participant in “a very extensive drug trafficking enterprise”); People v. Estela, Nos. 720/2004 & 4336/2004, slip op. at 4–5 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County Mar. 24, 2010), <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/People-v-Estela-NYCo.pdf>, aff’d, 80 A.D.3d 526, 914 N.Y.S.2d 893 (1st Dept. 2011) (denying defendant’s re-sentencing application because of “[t]he defendant’s history [as] one of a drug seller, not an addict,” given the fact that on one arrest “he was in possession of thirty-seven glassines of heroin and over one thousand dollars, and was observed selling four additional bags” and was later arrested “in possession of 200 glassines” while on parole); People v. Rivers, 43 A.D.3d 1247, 1248, 842 N.Y.S.2d 611, 612 (3d Dep’t 2007) (denying defendant’s application for re-sentencing based on defendant’s number of disciplinary violations while incarcerated and lengthy criminal record predating the conviction, even though defendant had achieved significant educational and vocational accomplishments while incarcerated); People v. Paniagua, 45 A.D.3d 98, 108–109, 841 N.Y.S.2d 506, 515 (1st Dep’t 2007) (“An inmate’s ...repeated commission of serious acts of insubordination while incarcerated can only be viewed adversely in considering his likelihood of re-adjusting to life outside of prison.”); People v. Vega, 40 A.D.3d 1020, 1020, 836 N.Y.S.2d 685, 686 (2d Dep’t 2007) (denying defendant’s application for re-sentencing after considering that defendant had a criminal history that included convictions for other controlled substance offenses and second-degree murder and that defendant’s prison disciplinary record was poor); People v. Sanders, 36 A.D.3d 944, 946–947, 829 N.Y.S.2d 187, 189 (2d Dep’t 2007) (denying defendant’s application for re-sentencing after considering that defendant committed disciplinary violation for drug use, for which he was confined to a special housing unit for at least 60 days after only 11 months in prison). But see People v. Walltower, No. N10539/96, slip op. at 8 (Sup. Ct. Queens County Apr. 6, 2010) (granting defendant’s application for re-sentencing under 2009 DLRA despite concerns about his “poor

Finally, you may also appeal a proposed, but not yet imposed, new sentence on the ground that it is harsh or excessive.¹⁷¹ If you do so, you still have the option to withdraw your application after the appeal is decided and keep serving your original sentence.¹⁷²

(b) Sentences: What Sentence Could You Receive?

While felony drug sentences imposed under the old law are indeterminate, the new sentencing laws require determinate sentences for drug felonies.¹⁷³ If you are resentenced, you will be given a determinate sentence.

A determinate sentence is a sentence for a fixed amount of time (eight years, for example). Under current law, you can receive good time or merit time reductions of a determinate sentence imposed for a drug offense.¹⁷⁴ These reductions are calculated and granted by the Department of Correctional Services. However, there is no possibility for parole from a determinate sentence, so the Parole Board has no say in when you are released.

An indeterminate sentence consists of two terms: a minimum and a maximum (for example, a sentence of five to ten years qualifies as an indeterminate sentence). The minimum term must be at least one year. It is the amount of time you must serve before you can become eligible for parole. The maximum term must be at least three years and can be as much as life imprisonment. The maximum term is the amount of time you will have to spend in prison if there are no reductions made to your sentence and you are not paroled. Many prisoners serving indeterminate sentences for non-violent offenses can receive reductions for good time or merit time as well as parole.¹⁷⁵ This means that both the Department of Correctional Services and the Parole Board may have a say in when you will be released.

If you are resentenced, you will receive a specific term of imprisonment. The term will fall within the appropriate range shown in the tables below. Any time you have already served under your original sentence will be subtracted from the time you will have to serve under your new sentence.

The new determinate sentencing ranges for A-I, A-II, and Class B felony drug offenses, effective January 13, 2005, are:

If Your Class A-I Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range¹⁷⁶
First Felony Offense	Between 8 and 20 years

inmate disciplinary record, consisting of 32 infractions, 21 of which are of the more serious tier 3 level,” as well as his “violent felony conviction”); People v. Encarnacion, 101 A.D.3d 1746, 1747, 956 N.Y.S.2d 387, 388 (4th Dep’t 2012) (affirming the lower court’s denial of the defendant’s application based on substantial justice because “[o]nly five years after his drug conviction, defendant stabbed a fellow inmate to death, for which he was convicted of murder in the second degree murder and promoting prison contraband in the first degree”); People v. Franklin, 101 A.D.3d 1148, 1149, 956 N.Y.S.2d 494, 495 (2d Dept. 2012) (denying application for re-sentencing because “the evidence of rehabilitation did not outweigh the seriousness of the [defendant’s] instant offense and his lengthy criminal history, including the pattern of successive reoffense while on parole”); People v. Lovett, 116 A.D.3d 428, 429, 984 N.Y.S.2d 299, 301 (1st Dep’t 2014) aff’d in part, appeal dismissed in part, 25 N.Y.3d 1088, 34 N.E.3d 851 (2015), reargument denied, 26 N.Y.3d 961 (2015) (holding substantial justice dictated the denial of defendant’s motion for re-sentencing, where defendant had extensive criminal history, and his “insistence on his innocence notwithstanding the overwhelming evidence underscores his complete lack of insight into the wrongful nature of his conduct and a lack of acceptance of responsibility for the harm he caused himself and others”).

171. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1581, 1581 (McKinney); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1462, 1475 (McKinney).

172. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1581, 1582 (McKinney); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1462, 1475 (McKinney).

173. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 70.70, 70.71 (McKinney 2009).

174. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 803–806 (McKinney 2009).

175. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW §§ 803–806 (McKinney 2009).

176. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71 (McKinney 2009).

Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 12 and 24 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 15 and 30 years

If Your Class A-II Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range¹⁷⁷
First Felony Offense	Between 3 and 10 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 6 and 14 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 8 and 17 years

If Your Class B Drug Offense Is Your:	Determinate Sentence Range¹⁷⁸
First Felony Offense	Between 1 and 9 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Non-Violent)	Between 2 and 12 years
Second Felony Offense (Prior Felony = Violent)	Between 6 and 15 years

Each of these determinate sentences includes a five-year period of post-release supervision¹⁷⁹ However, there are some exceptions to the five-year post-release supervision period.¹⁸⁰ One relevant exception is that the post-release supervision period for a first-time class B felony ranges from one to two years and for a second-time class B felony ranges from one and half years to five years.¹⁸¹

When deciding whether to apply for or accept a new sentence, you will want to compare your earliest likely release date under your old sentence with your earliest likely release date under your new sentence. Keep in mind that, depending on your prison record, you may or may not receive reduction for good time and/or merit time. Also, consider whether the Parole Board is likely to grant you parole under your indeterminate sentence. It is possible that your earliest resentenced determinate date could be further away than your earliest possible release date under your current sentence. For example, in People v. Newton, the defendant was originally sentenced six years to life, and the proposed re-sentencing was eleven years, which on appeal was found to be neither harsh nor excessive.¹⁸² Remember that even if the minimum term of your indeterminate sentence is shorter than the determinate sentence you receive at re-sentencing, you may be better off in some cases with the determinate sentence if you think that the Parole Board is unlikely to grant you parole at an earlier date.¹⁸³

2. How to Apply for Re-sentencing

You have the right to have an attorney represent you in your application for re-sentencing.¹⁸⁴ If you cannot afford an attorney, you can have one appointed.¹⁸⁵ You can file an application to have an

177. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.71 (McKinney 2009).

178. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70 (McKinney 2009). Note that for a first felony offense that occurs on school grounds or school buses, the statute requires a minimum of two years. So, the sentence range can be between two and nine years. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.70(2)(a)(i) (McKinney 2009).

179. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2009).

180. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2) (McKinney 2009).

181. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2)(b) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.45(2)(f) (McKinney 2009).

182. People v. Newton, 48 A.D.3d 115, 120, 847 N.Y.S.2d 645, 649 (2d Dep't 2007).

183. See Memorandum from Al O'Connor, N.Y. State Defenders Assoc., "Understanding the A-II Re-sentencing Law," to Chief Defenders, at 6 (Oct. 5, 2005, revised Oct. 24, 2005), <http://www.communityalternatives.org/pdf/A-II%20%20Re-sentencing%20Memo%20Revised%20NYSDA.pdf>.

184. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46.(4) (McKinney 2009) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717.(1), 722.(4) (McKinney 2009)).

185. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46.(4) (McKinney 2009) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717(1), 722(4)

attorney appointed with a notice of motion and basic application for re-sentencing. Once appointed, your attorney can prepare a more detailed and complete application for you. You can find a sample application for an appointed attorney, a sample notice of motion, and a basic application for re-sentencing attached to this Chapter as Appendix B.¹⁸⁶

If you are applying for re-sentencing for an A-II felony drug offense and your earliest possible release date is not much more than three years away, it is important that your application for an appointed attorney include an application for re-sentencing. This is because you need to make sure your application is filed in time to meet the Time to Parole Eligibility requirement, explained above in Part C(2)(b)(i) of this Chapter. If you are applying for re-sentencing for a Class B felony drug offense, you need to make sure your application is not barred by the ten-year look back for exclusion offenses, explained above in Part C(2)(c)(ii) of this Chapter. You should always try to have an attorney represent you in your re-sentencing application. You should only file an application pro se (on your own) if you have trouble getting an attorney.

(a) Filing a Pro Se Application

If you are applying for re-sentencing for an A-II felony drug offense under the alternate, one-year-to-parole-eligibility reading, you may have to prepare your own application because you may have trouble getting an attorney appointed.¹⁸⁷ You may also have trouble getting an attorney if you were sentenced for a disqualifying offense at the same time you were sentenced for the felony drug offense. This may be a problem even if you have already finished serving the sentence for the disqualifying offense, as described above in Part C(2)(b)(ii)(a).¹⁸⁸ In these cases, you may have to prepare a pro se application. You can find sample documents for your pro se application in Appendix C.

Your pro se application should explain why you deserve a new sentence. You might want to include information about your role in the offense, the nature of the offense, the judge's position at the original sentencing, and your prior criminal history (or lack of). You might also want to include information about your health, your prison disciplinary record, favorable evaluations from correctional personnel, your participation in educational, drug-treatment, or work programs while in prison, and other attempts to rehabilitate yourself. You might include your plans for re-entry into your community, such as where you plan to live and how you plan to look for work when you are released.¹⁸⁹ You should provide as much documentation as possible. For example, you should include any certificates you received for program participation while in prison.¹⁹⁰

If you think they will be helpful, you can try to request documents from the prison records office. These documents might include your medical file, disciplinary file, visit log, education file, guidance file, and legal file. A sample document request letter is attached to this Chapter as Appendix B-4. Some prisons refuse to cooperate with document requests from incarcerated persons. It may be easier for a lawyer to request your records than for you to do it yourself. This is another reason why you should try to get a lawyer appointed instead of filing your application for re-sentencing pro se.

If you file your application pro se, you should submit a notice of motion and basic petition for re-sentencing (a sample is attached in Appendix B). You should also submit a signed, written statement, or "affirmation", in support of your application and any supporting documents you have (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1581, 1581–1582 (McKinney) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717(1), 722(4) (McKinney 2009)); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1462, 1474–1475 (McKinney) (citing N.Y. COUNTY LAW §§ 717(1), 722(4) (McKinney 2009)).

186. The sample document in Appendix B is for an incarcerated person serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

187. E-mail from William Gibney, The Legal Aid Soc'y, to Sydney Bird, Contributing Author of this Chapter (Nov. 17, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

188. E-mail from William Gibney, The Legal Aid Soc'y, to Sydney Bird, Contributing Author of this Chapter (Nov. 17, 2005) (on file with the JLM).

189. Ctr. for Cmty. Alternatives, Rockefeller Drug Law Reform: Mitigation and Re-entry Planning Tips (2005) (unpublished manuscript) (on file with the JLM).

190. Ctr. for Cmty. Alternatives, Rockefeller Drug Law Reform: Mitigation and Re-entry Planning Tips (2005) (unpublished manuscript) (on file with the JLM).

collected. Your affirmation in support of your application should include: (1) a description of your original sentence, including the offense of which you were convicted, the term of the original sentence, the date it was imposed, how much of it you have served, and the judge who imposed it; (2) an explanation of why you are eligible for re-sentencing under the requirements of Chapter 738, Section 23 of the Laws of 2004 (for an A-I felony), Chapter 643 of the Laws of 2005 (for an A-II felony), or Section 440.46 of the Criminal Procedure Law (for a Class B felony); (3) what new sentence you think the judge should give you, according to the new sentencing law (for example, the minimum sentence allowed under the new law); and (4) the reasons you deserve the suggested new sentence, including, for example, an explanation of your prison disciplinary record, your participation in any work or drug-rehabilitation programs while in prison, any serious health problems you may have, and your plans to find housing and employment once you leave prison.¹⁹¹

Remember that when you file your application for re-sentencing, you must send it to both the court and the District Attorney's office that prosecuted your conviction.¹⁹² You must do this regardless of whether you are filing only a basic application or one combined with an application for an appointed attorney.

3. Conclusion

Many changes to the New York State drug laws went into effect in 2009. Some allow incarcerated persons serving time for drug offenses to apply for re-sentencing under the new, better sentencing framework. Incarcerated persons serving time for A-I felony drug offenses are automatically eligible for re-sentencing.¹⁹³ Incarcerated persons serving time for A-II and Class B felony drug offenses must meet additional requirements.¹⁹⁴ If you are serving time for an A-I, A-II, or Class B felony drug offense that occurred prior to January 13, 2005, you should consider whether you are eligible for re-sentencing. You should also consider whether re-sentencing is likely to give you an earlier release date. If you are eligible and think you might benefit from re-sentencing, you should try to get an attorney appointed to prepare your re-sentencing application. If you have trouble getting an attorney, you may file a re-sentencing application pro se.

E. Conclusion

Recent changes in the federal law and the law of New York have made some incarcerated persons eligible to apply for re-sentencing. You should make sure to conduct your own research and find out how these amendments are being applied to cases similar to your own. If you were convicted of a drug crime in either New York State or in federal court, you may be eligible for a reduction in your sentence. The reduction is not automatic, though, so you will need to make sure to apply for re-sentencing.

191. Sample Affirmation from William Gibney, The Legal Aid Soc'y, to JLM (2005) (on file with the JLM).

192. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46.(3) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1581, 1581 (McKinney); Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1462, 1474 (McKinney).

193. Drug Law Reform Act of 2004, ch. 738, § 23, 2004 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1462, 1474–1475 (McKinney).

194. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.46(1) (McKinney 2009); Drug Law Reform Act of 2005, ch. 643, § 1, 2005 N.Y. Sess. Laws 1581, 1581 (McKinney).

APPENDIX A: SAMPLE FORMS FOR APPLYING FOR FEDERAL RE-SENTENCINGA-1. SAMPLE EX-PARTE APPLICATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL¹⁹⁵

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF _____ _____ DIVISION
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff, _____
v.
Defendant, _____
Counsel;

NO. CR _____

Ex Parte Application for Appointment of Exhibits

Defendant hereby respectfully requests that this Court re-appoint his counsel under the Criminal Justice Act to assist him in preparing and filing a motion for reduction of sentence pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c).

This application is made pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3006A, and is based on the attached memorandum of points and authorities, declaration of counsel, and exhibits; the files and records of this case; and any such further information as shall be made available to the Court.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: [Month] __, 20__ By _____

195. Adapted from an example from Office of Defender Servs, Sample Motions, Briefs, Petitions and Orders Relating to Retroactive Application of Crack Cocaine Guideline Amendment, https://www.fd.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/motion-for-appointment-of-counsel-in-crack-cocaine-re-sentencing.pdf (last visited Mar. 3, 2019).

Memorandum of Points and Authorities

_____ respectfully applies to this Court to appoint counsel for his proceeding under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c). As set forth in the attached declaration, undersigned counsel was appointed to represent _____ in his criminal proceedings. He was convicted of _____ and sentenced by this Court to a term of _____ months' imprisonment. His case involved cocaine use. Based on a review of records and files in this case, as well as the law, counsel believes that _____ is likely eligible to file a motion for reduction of sentence, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c).

This Court should appoint counsel. The amendments to USSG § 1B1.10, effective March 3, 2008, now invite the presentation of new facts and arguments in the context of § 3582(c) proceedings. See Amendment 712 to Guidelines. Moreover, in United States v. Hicks, 472 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2007), the Ninth Circuit held that, when re-sentencing defendants pursuant to § 3582(c)(2), district courts must treat the Guidelines as advisory, as required by United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 125 S. Ct. 738, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621 (2005). In view of these changes to § 3582(c) proceedings, _____ will be greatly assisted by the appointment of counsel. In addition, appointment of counsel will allow for negotiation with the Government, facilitate factual and legal presentation to the Court, and promote the efficient use of judicial resources.

_____ is still indigent. See Exhibit A. As the Court is aware, the Administrative Office of the United States Courts has established a new representation type for appointment of counsel in these cases. See Exhibit B.

For the foregoing reasons, _____ respectfully submits that appointment of counsel, as set forth in the proposed order, is appropriate.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: [Month] __, 20__ By _____

A-2. SAMPLE APPLICATION FOR RE-SENTENCING¹⁹⁶

[DEFENDANT'S NAME]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

 DISTRICT OF ***

 DIVISION

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

NO. CR _____

v.

[DEFENDANT'S NAME],

Defendant.

NOTICE OF MOTION; MOTION FOR REDUCTION OF SENTENCE
PURSUANT TO 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2);
MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES
Hearing Date: [INSERT DATE]
Hearing Time: [INSERT TIME]

TO: UNITED STATES ATTORNEY , AND ASSISTANT UNITED STATES ATTORNEY [AUSA'S NAME]:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on [DATE], at [TIME], defendant, [NAME], will bring on for hearing the following motion:

MOTION

Defendant, [NAME], hereby moves this Honorable Court for a reduction in the sentence imposed in this case on [DATE]. This motion is made pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) and is based upon the attached memorandum of points and authorities, all files and records in this case, and such further argument and evidence as may be presented at the hearing on this motion.

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: [Month] __, 20__ By _____

196. Adapted from an example from Office of Defender Servs, Sample Motions, Briefs, Petitions and Orders Relating to Retroactive Application of Crack Cocaine Guideline Amendment, available at https://www.fed.org/sites/default/files/criminal_defense_topics/common_offenses/controlled_substances/crack_cocaine_sentencing/motion-for-reduction-of-sentence-pursuant-to-3582c2.pdf (last visited Feb. 6, 2019).

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

I. INTRODUCTION

On [DATE], [NAME] was sentenced for [TYPE OF CRACK OFFENSE, I.E., DISTRIBUTION, POSSESSION WITH INTENT TO DISTRIBUTE, CONSPIRACY, ETC.], to serve _____ months of imprisonment and _____ years of supervised release. The sentence was imposed under the sentencing Guidelines [QUALIFY THIS IF POST-BOOKER], with a base offense level computed under § 2D1.1 of the Guidelines for a crack cocaine quantity of [INSERT AMOUNT IN YOUR CASE] grams. That base offense level—under the Guidelines in effect at the time—was _____. Combined with other Guidelines factors, it produced a guideline range of _____. The sentence imposed by the Court was _____ months, [WHICH WAS THE LOW END/WHICH WAS THE HIGH END/WHICH WAS WITHIN THE RANGE/WHICH WAS BELOW THE RANGE/ABOVE THE RANGE, BASED ON A [DESCRIBE DEPARTURE IF ANY]].

Subsequent to [NAME]'s sentencing—on November 1, 2007—an amendment to § 2D1.1 of the Guidelines took effect, which, generally, reduces base offense levels for most quantities of crack cocaine by two levels and, specifically, reduces the base offense level for the [INSERT AMOUNT IN YOUR CASE] gram quantity of crack cocaine in this case by two levels, to _____. See U.S.S.G. § 2D1.1. This amendment was adopted in response to studies that raise grave doubts about the fairness and rationale of the 100-to-1 crack/powder ratio incorporated into the sentencing Guidelines. See generally Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 97–100, 128 S. Ct. 558, 568–569, 169 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492–494 (2007) (discussing history of crack cocaine guideline and various Sentencing Commission reports); United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (May 2007) [hereinafter 2007 Sentencing Commission Report]; United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (May 2002); United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (April 1997); United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (Feb. 1995). Yet the amendment is only a partial response, as the Sentencing Commission itself recognized. The Commission explained:

The Commission, however, views the amendment only as a partial remedy to some of the problems associated with the 100-to-1 drug quantity ratio. It is neither a permanent nor a complete solution to these problems. Any comprehensive solution requires appropriate legislative action by Congress. It is the Commission's firm desire that this report will facilitate prompt congressional action addressing the 100-to-1 drug quantity ratio.

2007 Sentencing Commission Report, supra, at 10.

Subsequent to the effective date of this amendment to § 2D1.1, the Sentencing Commission considered whether to make the amendment retroactive under the authority created by 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). It took that action on December 11, 2007, by including this amendment in the list of retroactive amendments in § 1B1.10 of the Guidelines. See 73 Fed. Reg. 217-01 (2008). Based on this retroactivity, the statutory authority underlying it, and the Supreme Court's intervening [ONLY IF ALL OF FOLLOWING CASES WERE AFTER YOUR SENTENCING] decisions in United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 125 S. Ct. 738, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621 (2005), Rita v. United States, 551 U.S. 338, 127 S. Ct. 2456, 168 L. Ed. 2d 203 (2007); Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. 38, 128 S. Ct. 586, 169 L. Ed. 2d 445 (2007), and Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. 85, 128 S.

Ct. 558, 169 L. Ed. 2d 481 (2007), [NAME] brings this motion to reduce his sentence.

II. ARGUMENT

A. [NAME]'S OFFENSE LEVEL SHOULD BE REDUCED FROM ____ TO ____, AND THE GUIDELINE RANGE REDUCED FROM ____ TO ____ BASED ON THE AMENDMENT TO § 2D1.1.

18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) provides as follows:

[I]n the case of a defendant who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment based on a sentencing range that has subsequently been lowered by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(o), upon motion of the defendant . . . the court may reduce the term of imprisonment, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, if such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.

Section 1B1.10 is the Guidelines policy statement which implements 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). Subsection (c) of that policy statement lists amendments that are covered by the policy statement, and one of the amendments listed is amendment 711 to the Guidelines. Amendment 711 reduced the base offense level for crack cocaine offenses. See U.S.S.G., App. C, § 711. Application of this amendment to the crack cocaine guideline in the present case results in a decrease of the base offense level from ____ to ____, a decrease in the total offense level from ____ to ____, and a decrease in the resulting guideline range from ____ to _____. [THEN GO THROUGH CALCULATIONS TO ESTABLISH THIS AND ALSO DISCUSS ANY OTHER ISSUES THAT ARE RELEVANT SUCH AS MANDATORY MINIMUMS THAT LIMIT REDUCTION, WHETHER QUESTION OF SAFETY VALVE CAN BE REOPENED, ETC.].

B. THE COURT SHOULD REDUCE [NAME]'S SENTENCE [TO [INSERT SPECIFIC AMOUNT]/A SIGNIFICANT AMOUNT/SOME OTHER CHARACTERIZATION YOU CHOOSE].

Based on the amendment to § 2D1.1, the Court should significantly reduce [NAME]'s sentence. It follows from the discussion in the preceding section that the amendment alone justifies a reduction of [INSERT DIFFERENCE BETWEEN GUIDELINE RANGES] months.

[THIS PARAGRAPH ONLY IF ORIGINAL SENTENCING PRE-BOOKER, BUT CONSIDER ADAPTING HICKS AND KIMBROUGH DISCUSSION EVEN IF POST-BOOKER.] The Court should not stop there, however. At the time of [NAME]'s original sentence, the Court was required to treat the Guidelines as mandatory, under the controlling law at that time. Since then, the Supreme Court has held the Guidelines in their mandatory form are unconstitutional and—through severing 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b)—made them “effectively advisory.” Booker, 543 U.S. at 245. Booker and subsequent Supreme Court cases clarifying it—namely, Rita v. United States, Gall v. United States, and Kimbrough v. United States—have created a brave new world, in which the Guidelines are but one of several factors to be considered under § 3553(a). What the Supreme Court has described as the “overarching provision” in § 3553(a) is the requirement that courts “impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary” to accomplish the goals of sentencing. Kimbrough, 552 U.S. at 101 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) (2012)).

Moreover, Booker and its progeny apply to the imposition of a new sentence under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2). The Ninth Circuit considered this question in United States v. Hicks, 472 F.3d 1167 (9th Cir. 2007) and held, put most succinctly, that “Booker applies to § 3582(c)(2) proceedings.”

Hicks, 472 F.3d at 1169. As the court explained in more depth:

Booker explicitly stated that, “as by now should be clear, [a] mandatory system is no longer an open choice.” Although the Court acknowledged that Congress had intended to create a mandatory guideline system, Booker stressed that this was not an option: “[W]e repeat, given today’s constitutional holding, [a mandatory Guideline regime] is not a choice that remains open. . . . [W]e have concluded that today’s holding is fundamentally inconsistent with the judge-based sentencing system that Congress enacted into law.” The Court never qualified this statement, and never suggested, explicitly or implicitly, that the mandatory Guideline regime survived in any context.

In fact, the Court emphasized that the Guidelines could not be construed as mandatory in one context and advisory in another. When the government suggested, in Booker, that the Guidelines be considered advisory in certain, constitutionally-compelled cases, but mandatory in others, the Court quickly dismissed this notion, stating, “we do not see how it is possible to leave the Guidelines as binding in other cases. . . . [W]e believe that Congress would not have authorized a mandatory system in some cases and a nonmandatory system in others, given the administrative complexities that such a system would create.” In short, Booker expressly rejected the idea that the Guidelines might be advisory in certain contexts, but not in others, and Congress has done nothing to undermine this conclusion. Because the “mandatory system is no longer an open choice,” district courts are necessarily endowed with the discretion to depart from the Guidelines when issuing new sentences under § 3582(c)(2).

Hicks, 472 F.3d at 1170 (citations omitted).

Here, there are a number of non-Guidelines factors that justify a sentence below even the new guideline range. [EITHER HERE OR BELOW, INSERT ARGUMENT ABOUT ANY § 3553(a) FACTORS AND BOOKER/GALL/KIMBROUGH] [EITHER CONTINUATION OF LAST TEXT SENTENCE ABOVE OR NEW PARAGRAPH] One [OR ANOTHER?] consideration to which the Court should give particular weight is a consideration expressly recognized by the Supreme Court in Kimbrough as a ground for not following the Guidelines—the questionable provenance of the crack/powder ratio. As the Government itself acknowledged in Kimbrough, “the Guidelines ‘are now advisory’ and . . . , as a general matter, ‘courts may vary [from Guidelines ranges] based solely on policy considerations, including disagreements with the Guidelines.’” Kimbrough, 552 U.S. at 101 (quoting Brief for United States 16). While the government then tried to distinguish policy disagreement with the 100-to-1 crack/powder ratio from other policy disagreements, the Supreme Court squarely rejected that argument. See Kimbrough, 552 U.S. at 100–08.

Indeed, the Court suggested that policy disagreement in this area was even more defensible than in other areas. It noted that “in the ordinary case, the Commission’s recommendation of a sentence will ‘reflect a rough approximation of sentences that might achieve § 3553(a)’s objectives,” id. at 109 (quoting Rita, 551 U.S. at 350), and so “closer review may be in order when the sentencing judge varies from the Guidelines, based solely on the judge’s view that the Guidelines range ‘fails properly to reflect § 3553(a) considerations’ even in a mine-run case,” id. (quoting Rita, 551 U.S. at 351). The Court then explained that this was not the case with the crack cocaine Guidelines:

The crack cocaine Guidelines, however, present no occasion for elaborative discussion of this matter because those Guidelines do not exemplify the Commission’s exercise of its characteristic institutional role. In formulating Guidelines ranges for crack cocaine offenses, as we earlier noted, the Commission looked to the mandatory minimum sentences set in the 1986 Act, and did not take account of “empirical data and national experience.” Indeed, the Commission itself has reported that the crack/powder disparity produces disproportionately harsh sanctions, i.e., sentences for crack cocaine offenses “greater than the necessary” in light of the purposes of sentencing set forth in § 3553(a). Given all this, it would not be an abuse of discretion for a district court to conclude when sentencing a particular defendant that the crack/powder disparity yields a sentence “greater than necessary” to achieve § 3553(a)’s purposes, even in a mine-run case.

Id. at 109–10 (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

These concerns are only partially assuaged by the recent amendment reducing crack cocaine offense levels, moreover. This also was recognized by the Supreme Court in Kimbrough:

This modest amendment yields sentences for crack offenses between two and five times longer than sentences for equal amounts of powder. (Citation and footnote omitted.) Describing the amendment as “only . . . a partial remedy” for the problems generated by the crack/powder disparity, the Commission noted that “[a]ny comprehensive solution requires appropriate legislative action by Congress.”

Id. at 100 (quoting 2007 Sentencing Commission Report, supra, at 10).

Kimbrough’s rationale for varying from the crack Guidelines therefore remains even after the new guideline is applied. [CONSIDER APPLYING THIS KIMBROUGH ARGUMENT TO YOUR SPECIFIC CASE IN SOME WAY; FOR EXAMPLE, BY POINTING OUT WHAT YOUR SENTENCE WOULD HAVE BEEN IF IT WAS JUST POWDER]

[INSERT ANY ARGUMENT ABOUT ANY § 3553(a) FACTORS AND BOOKER/GALL/KIMBROUGH NOT ALREADY INSERTED ABOVE]

III. CONCLUSION

The Court should adjust [NAME]’s sentencing guideline range downward to _____. It should then [RECOMMEND SPECIFIC SENTENCE AND/OR MORE GENERAL URGING FOR LOWER SENTENCE, IF YOU DON’T WANT TO RECOMMEND A SPECIFIC SENTENCE].

Respectfully submitted,

DATED: MONTH DAY, YEAR By _____

APPENDIX B: SAMPLE APPLICATION FOR NY STATE RE-SENTENCING¹⁹⁷

B-1. SAMPLE PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK¹⁹⁸
 _____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

_____x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:
- against -	:
	:
_____	:
Defendant.	:
_____x	:

PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

_____ County

Ind. No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that, upon the annexed affirmation of _____, and all the prior proceedings, the undersigned will move this Court, at 100 Centre Street, New York, New York, 10013, on _____, at the opening of Court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order vacating the sentence imposed by the Court on _____ (_____, J.); re-sentencing defendant pursuant to the Rockefeller Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)]; and granting such other relief as the Court may deem proper.

Please also accept this as an application for appointment of counsel. I am indigent, currently incarcerated, and I cannot afford counsel to represent me in this application for re-sentence.

Dated: _____, New York
 _____, 20__

Yours,

TO: Clerk of the Court
 New York County Supreme Court
 100 Centre Street
 New York, New York 10013

Hon. Cyrus R. Vance, Jr.
 New York County District Attorney
 1 Hogan Place
 New York, New York 10013

or

Hon. Bridget Brennan
 Special Narcotics Prosecutor
 80 Centre Street
 New York, New York 10013

197. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document. This sample is tailored to an incarcerated person serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

198. Your Notice of Appeal is addressed to the court you were tried in, not the Appeals Court. This sample presumes you were tried in a Supreme Court. If you were tried in a County Court, be sure to replace this court for the Supreme Court at the top of the form. Make sure to address the form to the correct individuals in the "To:" section.

B-2. SAMPLE AFFIRMATION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

	x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	AFFIRMATION
- against -	:
	:	_____ County
	:
Defendant.	:	Ind. No. _____
	x

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

Defendant _____, hereby affirms, under penalty of perjury, that the following statements are true.

1. I [pleaded guilty to] [was convicted after a trial of] second-degree criminal [possession] [sale] of a controlled substance (P.L. [possession: 220.18] [sale: 220.41]) and [list other counts, if any]. On _____, the court sentenced defendant to imprisonment for an indeterminate term of _____ years to the second-degree [sale] [possession] count to run [concurrently with] [consecutively to] [note other sentences, if any].

2. I am presently incarcerated on an A-II drug conviction.

3. Defendant is more than 12 months from being an “eligible inmate” as that term is defined in Subdivision 2 of Section 851 of the Correction Law.

4. Defendant meets the statutory eligibility requirements for merit time under Correction Law Section 803(1)(d).

5. For the above-stated reasons, defendant believes that [he] [she] is eligible to be re-sentenced under the Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 (“DLRA”) [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)] and defendant, thus, moves for such relief.

6. Defendant has yet to receive [his] [her] program and disciplinary records from the Department of Corrections. Defendant is filing this motion now to protect [his] [her] rights under the DLRA. Nevertheless, defendant requests the opportunity to supplement this motion and to provide the Court with additional pertinent information when that information becomes available.

WHEREFORE, Defendant respectfully requests that the Court grant [his] [her] petition for re-sentencing. Defendant further requests that the Court grant [him] [her] permission to supplement this application after additional information is obtained.

Dated: _____, New York
_____, 20____

[Name of Defendant]

B-3. SAMPLE AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, :
Plaintiffs, :
 : AFFIDAVIT
- against - : OF SERVICE
 :
 : _____ County
Defendant. :

Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

_____ being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is over the age of eighteen years and is not a party in this proceeding; that on the _____ day of _____ 20____, deponent served the within Petition for Re-sentence upon _____ in this action, at _____, the address designated by _____ for that purpose by depositing a true copy of the same by mail, enclosed in a post-paid properly addressed wrapper, in _____ a post office _____ official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Post Office Department within the State of New York.

Signature

Subscribed and sworn to before me this _____ day of ____ 20____

Notary Public

B-4. SAMPLE DOCUMENT REQUEST LETTER¹⁹⁹

_____ Correctional Facility

Attn: Inmate Records

Box ____

_____, NY _____

[Date]

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to request a copy of my entire inmate record. My name is _____, my date of birth is __/__/__, and my NYSID No. is _____. Please include the following records:

- (1) Complete copy of my legal file.
- (2) Complete copy of my guidance file.
- (3) Complete copy of my education file.
- (4) Complete copy of my package room file.
- (5) Complete copy of my medical file.
- (6) Complete copy of my disciplinary and disposition file.
- (7) Explanation of codes used in the inmate progress note sheets.
- (8) Visit log.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

199. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document.

APPENDIX C: SAMPLE PRO SE APPLICATION²⁰⁰

C-1. SAMPLE PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
 _____ COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

_____x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:
- against -	:
	:
	:
	:
Defendant.	:
_____x

PETITION FOR RE-SENTENCE

_____ County

Ind. No. _____

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that, upon the annexed affirmation of _____, and all the prior proceedings, the undersigned will move this Court, at 100 Centre Street, New York, New York, 10013, on _____, at the opening of Court on that day or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order vacating the sentence imposed by the Court on __ (__, J.); re-sentencing defendant pursuant to the Rockefeller Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 ("DLRA") [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)]; and granting such other relief as the Court may deem proper.

Dated: _____, New York
 _____, 20__

Yours,

TO: Clerk of the Court
 New York County Supreme Court
 100 Centre Street
 New York, New York 10013

Hon. Cyrus R. Vance, Jr.
 New York County District Attorney
 1 Hogan Place
 New York, New York 10013

or

Hon. Bridget Brennan
 Special Narcotics Prosecutor
 80 Centre Street
 New York, New York 10013

200. Adapted from New York Legal Aid Society sample document. This sample is tailored to an incarcerated person serving time for an A-II felony drug offense.

C-2. SAMPLE AFFIRMATION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK COUNTY CRIMINAL TERM

_____x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	AFFIRMATION
- against -	:
	:	_____ County
	:
Defendant.	:	Ind. No. _____
_____x

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

Defendant _____, hereby affirms, under penalty of perjury, that the following statements are true.

1. I [pleaded guilty to] [was convicted after a trial of] second-degree criminal [possession] [sale] of a controlled substance (P.L. [possession: 220.18] [sale: 220.41]) and [list other counts, if any]. On _____, the court sentenced defendant to imprisonment for an indeterminate term of years on the second-degree [sale] [possession] count to run [concurrently with] [consecutively to] [note other sentences, if any].

2. I am presently incarcerated on an A-II drug conviction.

3. Defendant is more than 12 months from being an “eligible inmate” as that term is defined in Subdivision 2 of Section 851 of the Correction Law.

5. Defendant meets the statutory eligibility requirements for merit time under Correction Law Section 803(1)(d).

6. For the above-stated reasons, defendant believes that [he] [she] is eligible to be re-sentenced under the Drug Law Reform Act of 2005 (“DLRA”) [see 2005 Sess. Law of N.Y., Ch. 643 (S. 5880)] and defendant, thus, moves for such relief.

7. Defendant has yet to receive [his] [her] program and disciplinary records from the Department of Corrections. Defendant is filing this motion now to protect [his] [her] rights under the DLRA. Nevertheless, defendant requests the opportunity to supplement this motion and to provide the Court with additional pertinent information when that information becomes available.

WHEREFORE, Defendant respectfully requests that the Court grant [his] [her] petition for re-sentence. Defendant further requests that the Court grant [him] [her] permission to supplement this application after additional information is obtained.

Dated: _____, New York
_____, 20____

[Name of Defendant]

C-3. SAMPLE AFFIDAVIT OF SERVICE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____

_____	x
THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	AFFIDAVIT
- against -	:	OF SERVICE
	:
	:	_____ County
Defendant.	:
_____	x	Ind. No. _____

STATE OF NEW YORK)
)	ss:
COUNTY OF NEW YORK)

_____ being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is over the age of eighteen years and is not a party in this proceeding; that on the _____ day of _____ 20__, deponent served the within Petition for Re-sentence upon _____ in this action, at _____, the address designated by _____ for that purpose by depositing a true copy of the same by mail, enclosed in a post-paid properly addressed wrapper, in _____ a post office _____ official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Post Office Department within the State of New York.

Signature

Subscribed and sworn to before me this _____ day of ____ 20__

Notary Public

CHAPTER 11

USING POST-CONVICTION DNA TESTING TO ATTACK YOUR CONVICTION OR SENTENCE*

A. Introduction

As of 2018, more than 350 individuals have been exonerated¹ in the United States through post-conviction DNA testing.² This is because DNA is uniquely capable of proving innocence in crimes where biological material was left by the perpetrator.³ Many people in prison were convicted before DNA testing was possible or before it was considered reliable, and they were not able to present DNA evidence at their trial that might have helped prove their innocence. There are many organizations throughout the country that help incarcerated people recover DNA evidence and secure DNA testing. Because of the complexity of applying for DNA testing, we strongly recommend that you contact one of these organizations rather than proceed pro se (on your own).

If you do decide to go forward on your own, this Chapter can help you understand some of the legal issues involved in the process. This Chapter explains how you may be able to use DNA testing of physical evidence to challenge your conviction or sentence. It can also help you understand how DNA testing is currently being used within the criminal justice system. Part B of this Chapter discusses how to reopen your case based on DNA testing. Part C explains how to seek assistance from a legal organization. Appendix A lists some legal organizations that might be able to help you obtain DNA testing.

B. Common Procedures Used to Obtain DNA Testing

In the past, methods of testing evidence found at crime scenes were unreliable, and identifications based on crime scene evidence were often inaccurate. DNA testing is much more accurate than older methods of testing evidence. If you believe there might have been biological evidence (like blood, semen, hair, saliva, or sweat) collected at the scene of the crime for which you were convicted, and if you think DNA tests of the biological evidence would exonerate you, you can file several types of motions in court to try to get the evidence tested and have the results admitted in court.

Finding evidence is one of the biggest obstacles to getting DNA testing. You must first understand the difference between biological evidence that was introduced at your trial (for instance, a bloody shirt that was found at the crime scene by police investigators and introduced to the court as evidence during trial) and biological evidence that was collected during the investigation but was not introduced at your trial (for instance, a pair of pants that were found and collected by police investigators but not introduced as evidence during trial). You do not need to actually locate the evidence you want tested yourself. You only need to show that it was either collected during the course of the investigation or introduced into evidence at your trial (or both). When filing a motion to get certain evidence tested, you must be specific about: 1) what evidence you want to test; 2) why that evidence is important; and 3) the last known location of the evidence. It is very important to identify the last known location of the evidence, which may be in the possession of the police where you were prosecuted.

* This Chapter was revised by Susan Maples, based on previous versions by Kristin Jamberdino, Oluwashola Ajewole, and Sara Manaugh.

1. The word, “exonerated,” means to clear someone of accusations and declare that person not guilty of criminal charges.

2. See THE INNOCENCE PROJECT, available at <http://www.innocenceproject.org/free-innocent/improve-the-law/fact-sheets/dna-exonerations-nationwide> (last visited Feb. 17, 2019).

3. DNA (which stands for “deoxyribonucleic acid”) is a substance contained in every human cell. Each strand of DNA is encoded with unique information about an individual’s specific physical characteristics. A perpetrator is a person who commits an illegal act.

1. Motion to Secure DNA Testing

Before filing a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence (discussed in Part B(2)), you need to file a motion to secure DNA testing. How you must file your motion will depend on the post-conviction DNA testing statute that is applicable to your case. All fifty states have post-conviction DNA testing statutes.⁴ If you are incarcerated in a state prison in one of these states, read Subsection (a) below on how to make your motion. If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, you should file your motion under the Justice for All Act.⁵ Subsection (c) below explains how that statute works.

(a) State Prisoners in States with a Post-Conviction DNA Testing Statute

As of September 2018, all fifty U.S. states have laws allowing post-conviction DNA testing.⁶ State laws vary greatly with regard to who may request DNA testing and when they may do so. For example, some states only allow incarcerated people who were convicted of certain felonies to petition for DNA testing.⁷ Other states impose “due diligence” requirements⁸ or only grant DNA testing if an individual’s identity was an issue at trial or in the case.⁹ You should carefully read the requirements and conditions for petitioning for post-conviction DNA testing under your state’s law. Footnote 19 (on the next page) lists each state’s relevant statute to help you do this research.

New York was the first state to allow post-conviction DNA testing, and its provisions are some of the most flexible.¹⁰ According to the provisions of New York’s law, which are incorporated into Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law,¹¹ there is no express due diligence requirement (though

4. See THE INNOCENCE PROJECT, available at <http://www.innocenceproject.org/free-innocent/improve-the-law/fact-sheets/access-to-post-conviction-dna-testing> (last visited Feb. 17, 2019).

5. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600A.

6. See THE INNOCENCE PROJECT, available at <http://www.innocenceproject.org/free-innocent/improve-the-law/fact-sheets/access-to-post-conviction-dna-testing> (last visited Feb. 17, 2019). Oklahoma became the fiftieth state to pass a post-conviction DNA testing statute on May 24, 2013.

7. See, e.g., IND. CODE ANN. §§ 35-38-7-1, 35-38-7-3, 35-38-7-5 (LexisNexis 2018) (indicating that only those convicted of murder or a class A, B, or C felony may petition).

8. The “due diligence” requirement means a court will not order DNA testing if the evidence was discoverable and you did not originally request the DNA evidence at the trial or plea stage. See, e.g., ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-112-201(a)(2) (West 2015) (requiring that an incarcerated person claim under penalty of perjury that “the scientific predicate for the claim could not have been previously discovered through the exercise of due diligence” in order for a DNA test to be ordered); see WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-12-303(d) (West 2008) (preventing the court from ordering DNA testing if the person did not request DNA testing or present DNA evidence for strategic or tactical reasons or as a result of a lack of due diligence).

9. The phrase, “Identity at issue at trial,” means that you or your attorney claimed that you were mistakenly identified as the perpetrator of the crime for which you were on trial. See, e.g., 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/116-3(b)(1) (2014) (requiring that identity must have been an issue at trial); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 770.16(4)(b)(iii) (2011) (requiring that identity must have been an issue at trial); MO. ANN. STAT. § 547.035(2)(4) (West 2015) (requiring that identity must have been an issue at trial); TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 64.03(a)(1)(C) (2015) (requiring that identity was or is an issue in the case).

10. The text of the New York provision reads as follows:

“Where the defendant’s motion requests the performance of a forensic DNA test on specified evidence, and upon the court’s determination that any evidence containing deoxyribonucleic acid (“DNA”) was secured in connection with the trial resulting in the judgment, the court shall grant the application for forensic DNA testing of such evidence upon its determination that if a DNA test had been conducted on such evidence, and if the results had been admitted in the trial resulting in the judgment, there exists a reasonable probability that the verdict would have been more favorable to the defendant.”

N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a)(a)(1) (McKinney 2015); see also Deborah F. Buckman, Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Application of State Statutes and Rules Governing Requests for Postconviction DNA Testing, 72 A.L.R.6th 227 (2012) (explaining that New York’s statutes are more flexible in allowing DNA testing than those of other states).

11. For more information on Article 440, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

some courts have imposed an implicit due diligence requirement),¹² identity does not need to have been an issue at trial, and there is no time limit for filing a petition. In New York, the court will order testing if it determines that you have met the following requirements:

- (1) Your Article 440 motion requests that a forensic test be performed on specific evidence that you have clearly identified;
- (2) The evidence you are requesting to have tested was obtained in connection with the trial that resulted in your conviction; and
- (3) There is a “reasonable probability” that, if the results of a DNA test had been admitted at your trial, the verdict would have been more favorable to you.¹³

The “reasonable probability” requirement is very important. The court will not order a DNA test if it believes there is not a “reasonable probability” that the verdict at your trial would have been different, even if you are right about whatever you are trying to prove with the DNA test.¹⁴ This requirement does not mean that the court must be certain that the evidence will prove you are innocent, but it does place a significant burden on you. A court can legally deny your request for testing if it believes that your conviction was justifiable, regardless of what a new DNA test might show.¹⁵

The New York law is unusual in that it allows you to request DNA testing as part of your Article 440 motion to vacate judgment (request a new trial).¹⁶ Not all states allow you to combine the request for DNA testing and the request for a new trial in the same motion. You may find that the law in your state is more complex. For instance, some states have different deadlines, called “statutes of limitations,” for filing a motion for a new trial and for requesting post-conviction DNA testing.¹⁷ The deadline to request a new trial may have passed even though your opportunity to request DNA testing is still available. Yet, many states have not codified a statute of limitations.¹⁸ Also, some states have 12. See People v. Kellar, 218 A.D.2d 406, 410, 640 N.Y.S.2d 908, 910 (3d Dept. 1996) appeal dismissed and remanded, People v. Kellar, 89 N.Y.2d 948, 678 N.E.2d 464 (1997) (finding that there is an implied due diligence requirement for DNA testing because there should not be a second chance for those who failed to take advantage of DNA testing before trial); People v. Sterling, 6 Misc. 3d 712, 719, 787 N.Y.S.2d 846, 851 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 2004) (noting that CPL 440.10(1)(g) contains a due diligence requirement for introducing newly discovered evidence, and that this requirement must apply to post-conviction DNA testing as well).

13. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a)(a) (Consol. 2015 McKinney).

14. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a)(a) (Consol. 2015 McKinney); see also People v. Tookes, 167 Misc. 2d 601, 604–606, 639 N.Y.S.2d 913, 915–916 (N.Y.S. Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1996) (finding that there was not a reasonable probability that the verdict would have been different even with DNA evidence because (1) there was no case for mistaken identity, (2) there was clear evidence of rape, and (3) available biological specimens were unlikely to have helped defendant’s case, given the unclear results of blood and saliva tests, the defendant’s earlier failure to pursue an enzyme analysis, and the unknown age of the recovered sperm).

15. See, e.g., People v. Smith, 245 A.D.2d 79, 79, 665 N.Y.S.2d 648, 649 (1st Dept. 1997) (finding that, for first degree rape and related crimes, post-conviction DNA tests would not have shown with reasonable probability that the defendant was innocent where (1) fact that defendant was not the source of semen was consistent with victim’s testimony that she had intercourse with her boyfriend shortly before rape and that she did not know whether defendant ejaculated; (2) evidence of guilt was overwhelming; and (3) there was no claim of mistaken identity); People v. De Oliveira, 223 A.D.2d 766, 767–768, 636 N.Y.S.2d 441, 443 (3d Dept. 1996) (finding defendant not entitled to DNA testing because it was unlikely that results of DNA testing would change his second degree murder conviction where (1) it was undisputed that victim was sexually active about the time of her murder, (2) there was no evidence that the killing was part of a sexual encounter, and (3) there was no critical testimony that could be seriously called into question by test results).

16. For more information on Article 440, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

17. Compare ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. 13-4240(a) (2015) (allowing the motion to occur at any time), with A.C.A. ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-112-202 (2015) (requiring that the petitioner file the motion for the performance of fingerprinting in a “timely fashion.” There is a rebuttable presumption of timeliness if the motion is made within thirty-six months of the conviction date).

18. See CAL. PENAL CODE § 1405 (Deering 2015); IOWA CODE § 81.10 (West 2015); TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 64.01–.05 (West 2015).

stricter requirements for granting a request for DNA testing than for granting a motion for a new trial (or vice versa).

Because there is such variation among state laws, you must look carefully at your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute. When deciding whether to request post-conviction DNA testing, consult both the statute governing motions for a new trial and the case law, if any, governing post-conviction DNA testing in your state.¹⁹

When filing your motion, it is important that you know which pieces of evidence you want tested, show that you understand your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute, and explain why you believe you meet every requirement set out by that statute. You should write out your state's entire post-conviction DNA testing statute in your motion, then go through each requirement of the statute separately and show how the facts of your case meet each requirement. If you clearly identify the pieces of evidence you want tested, explain why you are seeking post-conviction DNA testing, and explain how you meet all the requirements of your state's DNA testing statute, your motion will have a better chance of succeeding.

(b) Possible Constitutional Rights

Until recently, it was unclear whether there was a right to DNA testing under the U.S. Constitution. However, in a case called District Attorney's Office for Third Judicial District v. Osborne, the Supreme Court held that people incarcerated in state and federal prisons do not have a constitutional right to post-conviction DNA testing.²⁰ According to the Court, state legislatures may decide whether to allow prisoners access to DNA testing.²¹ However, an incarcerated person who has

19. The following lists all the state laws governing post-conviction DNA testing, in alphabetical order of the states: Alabama: ALA. CODE § 15-18-200 (LexisNexis 2015); Alaska: ALASKA STAT. §§ 12.73.010–.090 (2015); Arizona: ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-4240 (LexisNexis 2015); Arkansas: ARK. CODE ANN. §§ 16-112-201–208 (2015) (LexisNexis 2015); California: CAL. PENAL CODE § 1405 (Deering 2015); Colorado: COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 18-1-411–416 (2015) (West 2015); Connecticut: CONN. GEN. STAT. § 54-102kk (2015); Delaware: DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 4504 (2015); District of Columbia: D.C. CODE ANN. § 22-4133 (LexisNexis 2015); Florida: FLA. STAT. ANN. § 925.11 (LexisNexis 2015); FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.853 (2009); Georgia: GA. CODE ANN. § 5-5-41 (2015); Hawaii: HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 844D-121–133 (LexisNexis 2015); Idaho: IDAHO CODE ANN. § 19-4902 (2015); Illinois: 725 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/116-3 (LexisNexis 2015); Indiana: IND. CODE ANN. §§ 35-38-7-1–19 et seq. (LexisNexis 2015); Iowa: IOWA CODE § 81.10 (2015); Kansas: KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-2512 (2015); Kentucky: KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 422.285, 422.287 (LexisNexis 2015); Louisiana: LA. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 926.1 (2015); Maine: ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 15, §§ 2136–2138 (2015); Maryland: MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. PROC. § 8-201 (LexisNexis 2015); Massachusetts: MASS. ANN. LAWS ch. 278A, § 3 (LexisNexis 2015); Michigan: MICH. COMP. LAWS SERV. § 770.16 (LexisNexis 2015); Minnesota: MINN. STAT. ANN. §§ 590.01–.06 (West 2015); Mississippi: MISS. CODE ANN. § 99-39-9 (2015); Missouri: MO. ANN. STAT. § 547.035 (LexisNexis 2015); Montana: MONT. CODE ANN. § 46-21-110 (2015); Nebraska: NEB. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 29-2101, 29-4120 to -4126 et seq. (LexisNexis 2015); Nevada: NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 176.0917–.0919 (LexisNexis 2015); New Hampshire: N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 651-D:1–D:4 (LexisNexis 2015); New Jersey: N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2A:84A-32a (West 2015); New Mexico: N.M. STAT. ANN. § 31-1A-2 (LexisNexis 2015); New York: N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30 (Consol. 2015); North Carolina: N.C. GEN. STAT. § 15A-269 (2015); North Dakota: N.D. CENT. CODE § 29-32.1-15 (2015); Ohio: OHIO REV. CODE ANN. §§ 2953.71–2953.75 (LexisNexis 2015); Oklahoma: OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 22, §§ 1360, 1371.1, 1371.2 (West 2015); Oregon: OR. REV. STAT. ANN. § 138.690 (West 2015); Pennsylvania: 42 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN. § 9543.1 (LexisNexis 2015 West2015); Rhode Island: R.I. GEN. LAWS §§ 10-9.1-10–10-9.1-12 (2015); South Carolina: S.C. CODE ANN. § 17-28-90 (2014); South Dakota: S.D. CODIFIED LAWS ANN. §§ 23-5B-1–23-5B-17 (LexisNexis 2015); Tennessee: TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 40-30-110, TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 40-30-301–313 (2015); Texas: TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 64.01–.05 (LexisNexis, 2015); Utah: UTAH CODE ANN. § 78B-9-301 to -304 et seq. (LexisNexis 2015); Vermont: VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, §§ 5561–5570 (2015); Virginia: VA. CODE ANN. § 19.2-327.1 (2015); Washington: WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 10.73.170 (LexisNexis 2015); West Virginia: W. VA. CODE ANN. § 15-2B-14 (LexisNexis 2015); Wisconsin: WIS. STAT. ANN. §§ 974.02, .06, .07 (West 2015); Wyoming: WYO. STAT. ANN. §§ 7-12-303–305 (West 2015). For information about the difference between statutes and cases, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

20. Dist. Attorney's Office for Third Judicial Dist. v. Osborne, 557 U.S. 52, 73–74, 129 S. Ct. 2308, 2323, 174 L. Ed. 2d 38, 55 (2009).

21. Dist. Attorney's Office for Third Judicial Dist. v. Osborne, 557 U.S. 52, 62, 129 S. Ct. 2308, 2316, 174 L. Ed. 2d 38, 48 (2009) (stating that figuring out how to use DNA testing is a task that “belongs primarily to the legislature.”).

been denied DNA testing under a state's post-conviction DNA testing statute may still bring a Section 1983 lawsuit to challenge the constitutional adequacy of the state's DNA testing statute.²²

(c) Federal Prisoners and the Federal Post-Conviction DNA Testing
Statute: The Justice for All Act of 2004

On October 30, 2004, the Justice for All Act²³ was signed into law. This law gives incarcerated people the right to request post-conviction DNA testing, but it applies only to people incarcerated in federal prison.²⁴ If you are a state incarcerated person, you must use your state's post-conviction DNA testing statute listed in Footnote 19 (see Part B(1)(a) of this Chapter).

The Justice for All Act works exactly like a state post-conviction DNA statute, but it only applies if you are serving time for a federal crime. It states the rules and procedures for people incarcerated in federal prison who are serving a prison or death sentence and applying for DNA testing.²⁵ To qualify for DNA testing, the Act requires that:

- (1) The applicant assert, under penalty of perjury, that they are “actually innocent” of the federal offense for which they are imprisoned or on death row, or, in death penalty cases, that they are “actually innocent” of another offense, if being exonerated of this offense would give them the right to a reduced sentence or a new sentencing hearing (where the other offense is a state offense, the applicant must show that there is no adequate remedy under the applicable state law for DNA testing, or that the applicant has exhausted the remedies available under state law); and
- (2) The specific evidence that is to be tested must not have been previously tested, unless a newer and more reliable method of testing is being requested; and
- (3) The proposed DNA testing may produce new evidence raising a reasonable probability that the applicant did not commit the offense; and
- (4) The applicant provides a current DNA sample for comparison with existing evidence.²⁶

22. A person incarcerated in a state prison may pursue post-conviction DNA testing in a Section 1983 action if he can prove that the applicable state DNA testing statute violates the incarcerated person's procedural due process rights and is therefore unconstitutional. Skinner v. Switzer, 562 U.S. 521, 531–536, 131 S. Ct. 1289, 1297–1300, 179 L. Ed. 2d 233, 242–46 (2011) (finding that the person incarcerated in state prison properly used Section 1983 to challenge the constitutionality of the Texas DNA statute). Though the Supreme Court did not establish any explicit requirements for state DNA testing statutes, federal courts have used the Alaska statute relating to proceedings for post-conviction relief (Alaska Stat. § 12.72.010 (2015)) as a reference point. If a state's statute is as or less strict than the Alaska statute, then it appears the court will find the testing procedure constitutional. See, e.g., In re Smith, 349 F. App'x 12, 15–16 (6th Cir. 2009) (unpublished) (finding an incarcerated person's due process claim “untenable because Michigan's [DNA testing] scheme is more comprehensive than the state procedures sanctioned by the Osborne Court.”); see also Tevlin v. Spencer, 621 F.3d 59, 71 (1st Cir. 2010) (upholding the constitutionality of Massachusetts's post-conviction procedure because it is no more restrictive than the Alaska statute upheld by the Supreme Court in Osborne); Thompson v. Rundle, 393 F. App'x 675, 679–680 (11th Cir. 2010) (unpublished) (upholding the constitutionality of Florida's post-conviction DNA testing procedure because it contains similar requirements and limitations imposed by other DNA-testing statutes including the Alaska statute upheld by the Supreme Court in Osborne); McKithen v. Brown, 626 F.3d 143, 153–154 (2d Cir. 2010) (finding New York's provision for post-conviction DNA testing constitutional because it is less stringent than the Alaska statute considered in Osborne).

23. See Justice for All Act, available at <http://www.ovc.gov/publications/factsheets/justforall/fs000311.pdf>; <http://www.justice.gov/usao-nh/programs/victim-witness-assistance-program/justice-all-act-2004> (last visited Feb. 17, 2019).

24. 18 U.S.C. § 3600(a).

25. 18 U.S.C. § 3600.

26. 18 U.S.C. § 3600(a)(1)(A)–(B), 3600(a)(3)(A)–(B), 3600(a)(8)–(9).

You should file for DNA testing within three years of your conviction. If you do not, your motion requesting DNA testing will be considered late, and you will have to show that you had a specific reason (“good cause”) for filing late.²⁷

The government is not allowed to destroy DNA evidence from a federal criminal case while the defendant remains in prison, unless: (1) a court has denied a motion for DNA testing, (2) the defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived their right to DNA testing, (3) the defendant was notified after their conviction became final that the evidence might be destroyed and did not file a motion for DNA testing within 180 days of notification, or (4) the evidence has already been tested and the results determined that the defendant was the source of the DNA evidence. Also, if the evidence is large or bulky, the government may preserve only a representative sample.²⁸

One important word of caution: If you assert your innocence and the DNA testing results are “inculpatory,” (demonstrating that you committed the offense in question), the court can hold you in contempt. If you are convicted of making false assertions, your term of imprisonment will be extended by at least three years. Additionally, you may be denied good conduct credit that you were otherwise entitled to.²⁹

However, if the evidence excludes you as the source of the DNA evidence, then you can petition for a new trial. The new trial will be granted if the DNA test results, considered with all other evidence in the case (whether introduced at trial or not), establish by compelling evidence that a new trial would result in your acquittal.³⁰ Also, if you are incarcerated in federal prison, you may file a motion for a new sentencing hearing if evidence of an offense was admitted during a federal death sentencing hearing and exoneration of that offense would entitle you to a reduced sentence or to a new sentencing proceeding.³¹

2. Motion for a New Trial Based on Newly Discovered Evidence

Once you have succeeded in your motion to secure DNA evidence, received the DNA testing you asked for, and obtained results that point to your innocence, it is time to file a motion for a new trial. Each state, and the federal government, allows you to file a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. Because DNA technology is so new and is continuously improving, the results of DNA analysis may be considered “newly discovered evidence,” even if the substance being analyzed is not itself newly discovered.

Every jurisdiction has a test that its courts apply in deciding whether to grant a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. In the federal system, courts traditionally ask five questions to determine whether to grant a defendant’s motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence:³²

- (1) Was the evidence available before the trial?

27. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600(a)(10)(A)–(B) (If you do not file within three years of your conviction, there is a presumption that your motion is late. That presumption can be rebutted (proven wrong) by showing (1) that you did not file earlier due to incompetence (incompetence in this situation means that there is reasonable cause to believe you suffered from a mental disease or defect that made you unable to understand the legal charges against you or to assist properly in your defense); (2) that the DNA evidence to be tested is newly discovered; or (3) the appeal is not only based on your claim of your innocence and that denying the appeal would be a obvious injustice; or (4) that you had “good cause” for the delay). See also The Death Penalty Information Center, Summary: The Innocence Protection Act of 2004, available at <http://www.deathpenaltyinfo.org/article.php?scid=40&did=1234#subA> (last visited Sept. 23, 2018).

28. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600A(a), 3600A(c)(1)–(5).

29. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600(f)(2)(B)(i), 3600(f)(2)(b)(iii), 3600(f)(3).

30. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600(g)(2).

31. Innocence Protection Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600(g)(2)(B).

32. In federal courts, Rule 33 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure authorizes a request for a new trial. Rule 33 allows the court to grant a new trial on defendant’s motion if “the interest of justice so requires.” FED. R. CRIM. P. 33(a).

- (2) Could it have been discovered before the trial through the exercise of due diligence?³³
- (3) Is the evidence “material” (relevant) to the issue you raise in your motion?
- (4) Is the evidence merely “cumulative” (does it only support other similar evidence already admitted at trial) or “impeaching” (does it contradict other evidence admitted at trial)?
- (5) Would the evidence probably change the trial’s result if a new trial were granted?³⁴

State courts, including New York courts,³⁵ use similar tests to decide whether to grant a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence. While courts are bound by their test, they generally have some discretion to decide whether to grant a new trial. Motions for new trials are extraordinary, so courts do not grant them freely, and appellate courts rarely reverse a lower court’s decision to deny a new trial.

Most states, as well as the federal government, limit the period of time after your conviction during which you can file a motion for a new trial.³⁶ These time limits, called “statutes of limitations,” are based on the idea that evidence becomes less reliable over time. If time has expired for you to file your motion for a new trial, you will have to pursue other post-conviction remedies (such as seeking a writ of habeas corpus, discussed in Section 3 below), which may not have time limits.

To file your motion on time, you need to establish that you have newly discovered evidence. Depending on your jurisdiction, you may be able to establish this if biological evidence from the crime for which you were convicted still exists, and:

- (1) DNA testing was never performed on it;
- (2) DNA analysis was performed, but the results were not admitted in court (because, for example, DNA testing was not regarded as reliable at the time of your trial); or
- (3) DNA analysis was performed, but improved methods of DNA testing are now available.

Your motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence (and/or your request for DNA testing) may be denied if you pleaded guilty at your trial. New York law does not explicitly bar people who pleaded guilty from requesting DNA testing, but New York courts have held that those who have admitted their factual guilt when they pleaded guilty have waived their right to a new trial based on newly discovered evidence.³⁷ You should consult both your state’s statutes and case law to determine whether a guilty plea prevents you from seeking a new trial based on DNA evidence.

33. In this context, “due diligence” means that you and/or your attorney should have been able to find the evidence had you looked for it. There should be a reason why you were not able to find the evidence before trial, and you should make this reason known to the court.

34. See John A. Glenn, Annotation, What Constitutes “Newly Discovered Evidence” Within Meaning of Rule 33 of Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure Relating to Motions for New Trial, 44 A.L.R. FED. 13 (1979); see also United States v. Carlone, 603 F.2d 63, 66–67 (8th Cir. 1979) (using this standard to deny a new trial when a newly discovered defense witness claimed that F.B.I. agents asked him to plant weapons and drugs in the defendant’s home); Pitts v. United States, 263 F.2d 808, 810–811 (9th Cir. 1959) (going through all five questions to show that evidence submitted by the defense would not meet any of the standards, even if it had been newly discovered); United States v. Bertone, 249 F.2d 156, 160 (3d Cir. 1957) (rejecting motion for a new trial based on testimony from newly available witnesses because the witnesses were available and known by the defendant during trial); United States v. Marachowsky, 213 F.2d 235, 238–239 (7th Cir. 1954) (applying a similar test to the five-question test to reject three witnesses newly brought by the defense to secure a new trial).

35. See People v. Priori, 164 N.Y. 459, 472, 58 N.E. 668, 672 (N.Y. 1900) (using a six-step test to deny the defendant’s motion for a new trial, and splitting question four of the federal test into two separate questions about cumulative and impeaching evidence).

36. See Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 410–411, 113 S. Ct. 853, 865–866, 122 L. Ed. 2d 203, 223 (1993) (finding that while some states required filing a motion within weeks of conviction, some provide a time limit of one, two, or three years, and a few states have no time limit). Since Herrera, the federal statute of limitations for filing a motion based on new evidence was extended from two to three years. See FED. R. CRIM. P. 33(b)(1) for time required to file ‘newly discovered evidence’.

37. See People v. Jackson, 163 Misc. 2d 224, 226, 620 N.Y.S.2d 240, 241 (Sup. Ct. Broome Cnty. 1994)

3. Habeas Corpus Relief

It might be possible for you to get post-conviction relief by petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus, but it is rare.³⁸ A habeas corpus writ is a court's written order demanding that an incarcerated person be brought before the court to see whether his imprisonment or detention is illegal. Unlike most post-conviction DNA cases in which motions are made to find evidence, it is assumed you already have the evidence to prove yourself innocent in habeas cases.³⁹ So, this remedy is not available unless DNA testing has already been done on the biological evidence from the crime scene.

You can bring a federal habeas petition by claiming "actual innocence."⁴⁰ This idea is based on Herrera v. Collins, in which the Supreme Court left open the possibility that "a truly persuasive [post-trial] demonstration of 'actual innocence'" in a capital case might lead to relief if the state did not provide any way to present such a claim.⁴¹ It is very hard to demonstrate "actual innocence,"⁴² but if you are able to meet this high standard, you can bring the habeas claim even if state or federal law would have normally not allowed the filing. In House v. Bell, the Supreme Court decided that in some cases where new evidence would have been likely to create a reasonable doubt about a person incarcerated in state prison's conviction, that individual may file for a federal habeas corpus writ, even if the laws of the state where he was convicted would have normally not allowed a federal habeas filing.⁴³

In connection with habeas review, you may find success by using the "Brady obligation" (also known as the "Brady material doctrine").⁴⁴ Under this rule, the prosecution in a criminal case must reveal any strong evidence that may help prove your innocence. Thus, you may have a claim for habeas corpus relief if: (1) evidence was subjected to DNA testing; (2) the prosecution withheld the results of that test from you; and (3) the results may have helped to prove your innocence at trial.

(finding that because the defendant had already admitted his guilt and also waived his right to confront those that accused him, his subsequent application to defend himself against those accusers based on newly discovered evidence was denied).

38. See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for more information on habeas corpus petitions.

39. If you are already bringing a petition for habeas corpus on other grounds, then you can also request DNA testing. However, because a petition for habeas corpus is a difficult route to take to seek testing, it is only recommended if you are already filing a habeas petition on other grounds. See Cherrix v. Braxton, 131 F. Supp. 2d 756, 767, 775–776 (E.D. Va. 2001) (defending decision to order DNA testing on previously tested material due to technological advances and the principle that newly-discovered DNA evidence would "illuminate" federal habeas claim that a conviction is potentially unconstitutional). See also Thomas v. Goldsmith, 979 F.2d 746, 749–750 (9th Cir. 1992) (requiring the state to turn over DNA evidence that is favorable to the incarcerated person in order to allow the person to try and prove his innocence and overcome any state court procedures that block his habeas claim).

40. In re Davis, 557 U.S. 952, 953–954, 130 S. Ct. 1, 1–3, 174 L. Ed. 2d 614, 614–615 (2009) (Stevens, J., concurring) (suggesting ways habeas relief could be granted for claims of actual innocence).

41. Herrera v. Collins, 506 U.S. 390, 417, 113 S. Ct. 853, 869, 122 L. Ed. 2d 203, 227 (1993) (talking about the potential power of a demonstration of actual innocence that might alter the outcome of a case).

42. You have to show that it is "more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have found [you] guilty beyond a reasonable doubt." House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 536–537, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2067–2077, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21 (2006) (quoting Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836).

43. House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 535–537, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2076–2077, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21 (2006) (holding that incarcerated people can bring habeas petitions if their "actual innocence" claim is very compelling, even if state or federal law would otherwise not have allowed it); see also McQuiggin v. Perkins, 133 S. Ct. 1924, 1928, 185 L. Ed. 2d 1019, 1027 (2013) (holding the same).

44. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that the prosecution, if asked, cannot hold back evidence that is relevant to guilt or punishment); United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 110, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2401, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 353–354 (1976) (holding that, when evidence is obviously very valuable to the defense, the prosecution must share that evidence even if not asked). The Agurs standards used to determine when evidence must be disclosed are no longer good law, but the idea behind them still is. See, e.g., Smith v. Cain, 132 S. Ct. 627, 630, 181 L. Ed. 2d 571, 574 (2012) (explaining that under Brady, the prosecution must share evidence that is favorable to the defense if it is relevant to the defendant's guilt or punishment). See Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus," for information on the Brady duty.

The prosecution is required to give you DNA evidence, but only if it exists. The Supreme Court had ruled that states do not have a constitutional duty to perform DNA tests on evidence or to preserve evidence so that it can be tested.⁴⁵ In 2004 Congress passed the Justice for All Act of 2004.⁴⁶ The Justice for All Act imposes uniform rules for the preservation of evidence for DNA testing in federal crimes.⁴⁷ However, the Act specifically states that it cannot be used as a basis for a federal habeas corpus claim.⁴⁸

C. Legal Assistance for Those Seeking Post-Conviction DNA Testing

If you do not have a lawyer and want to seek post-conviction DNA testing, there are many not-for-profit organizations—usually called “innocence projects”—that might be able to help you. These organizations are often forced to choose some cases over others that may be just as worthy because they receive huge numbers of requests. You may want to consider contacting multiple organizations for help.

Appendix A (below) lists organizations that may help you use DNA evidence to prove your innocence. To have one of these organizations consider your case, you should mail a brief summary of the facts of your case and a list of the evidence used against you. Your case must involve biological evidence (semen, blood, saliva, skin, sweat, or hair). If possible, you should indicate what evidence you want to test, why it would be important to your case, and the last known location of that evidence (if you include this information, it may help the attorneys get back to you faster). Include your full name, mailing address, and prison identification number.

D. Conclusion

If you believe DNA can prove your innocence, you should pursue the legal options summarized in the sections above. The legal options differ depending on whether you are in a state or federal prison. Appendix A provides a list of organizations with a lot of experience in helping incarcerated people seek post-conviction DNA testing. These organizations may be able to help you.

45. See Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988) (holding that, unless a defendant can show bad faith, a state’s failure to preserve evidence so that it can be tested does not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment). See also Illinois v. Fisher, 540 U.S. 544, 545, 124 S. Ct. 1200, 1200, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1060, 1064 (2004) (citing Youngblood to overturn a dismissal of criminal charges because evidence was destroyed following normal police procedures).

46. Justice for All Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600A.

47. Justice for All Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600A.

48. Justice for All Act of 2004, 18 U.S.C. § 3600A(g).

APPENDIX A

PROJECTS THAT MAY OFFER ASSISTANCE IN OBTAINING DNA TESTING—BY STATE

Alaska

Alaska Innocence Project
P.O. Box 201656
Anchorage, AK 99520
Phone: 907-279-0454
E-mail: info@alaskainnocence.org
<http://www.alaskainnocence.org/>

Alabama

Georgia Innocence Project
2645 North Decatur Road
Decatur, GA 30033
Phone: 404-373-4433
<http://www.georgiainnocenceproject.org/>

Arizona

Arizona Justice Project
c/o Arizona State University
Mail Code 4420
411 North Central Avenue, Suite 600
Phoenix, AZ 85004-2139
Phone: (602) 496-0286
E-mail: info@azjusticeproject.org
<http://azjusticeproject.org/>

Northern Arizona Justice Project

Department of Criminal Justice
Northern Arizona University
P.O. Box 15005
Flagstaff, AZ 86011
Phone: 928-523-7028
<http://nau.edu/arizona-innocence-project/>

Arkansas

Midwest Innocence Project
605 West 47th Street, Suite 222
Kansas City, MO 64112
Phone: 816-221-2166
Email: office@TheMIP.org
<http://themip.org/>

California (Northern)

Northern California Innocence Project
Santa Clara University School of Law
900 Lafayette Street, Suite 105
Santa Clara, CA 95050
Phone: 408-554-4790
Fax: 408-554-5440
E-mail: ncip@scu.edu
<http://law.scu.edu/ncip/>

California (Southern)

California Innocence Project
California Western School of Law Institute for Criminal Defense Advocacy
225 Cedar Street
San Diego, CA 92101
Phone: 619-525-1485
Fax: 619-615-1443
<http://californiainnocenceproject.org/>

Loyola Law School Project for the Innocent

Loyola Law School
919 Albany Street
Los Angeles, California 90015
Phone: 213-736-8141

Colorado

Colorado Innocence Project
Colorado Law School
Wolf Law Building, 404 UCB
Boulder, Colorado 80309-0404
Phone: 303-492-2640
Fax: 303.492.4587
E-mail:
ColoradoInnocenceProject@colorado.edu
<http://www.colorado.edu/law/academics/clinics/korey-wise-innocence-project>

Connecticut

Connecticut Innocence Project
2275 Silas Deane Highway
Rocky Hill, Connecticut 06067
Phone: 860-258-4940
E-mail: info@innocenceproject.org
<http://www.ct.gov/ocpd/site/default.asp>

New England Innocence Project

160 Boylston Street, #2
Boston, MA 02116
Phone: 617-830-7685
E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org
<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>

DelawareOffice of the Public Defender

Carvel State Building
820 North French Street, 3rd floor
Wilmington, DE 19801
Phone: 302-577-5160

District of ColumbiaMid-Atlantic Innocence Project

George Washington School of Law
2000 H Street NW
Washington, DC 20052
Phone: 202-994-4586
Email: cfiscella@exonerate.org
<http://www.exonerate.org/>

FloridaInnocence Project of Florida, Inc.

1100 East Park Avenue
Tallahassee, FL 32301
Phone: 850-561-6767
Fax: 850-561-5077
<http://www.floridainnocence.org/>

University of Miami Law Innocence Clinic

3000 Biscayne Blvd, Suite 100
Miami, FL 33137
Phone: 305-284-8115
E-mail: umwrongfulconvictions@gmail.com

GeorgiaGeorgia Innocence Project

2645 North Decatur Road
Decatur, GA 30033
Phone: 404-373-4433
<http://www.georgiainnocenceproject.org/>

HawaiiHawai'i Innocence Project

University of Hawai'i School of Law
2515 Dole Street
Honolulu, HI 96822
Phone: 1-808-956-6547
Fax: 1-808-443-0554
E-mail: innocenceprojecthawaii@gmail.com
<http://www.innocenceprojecthawaii.org/>

IdahoIdaho Innocence Project

Boise State University
c/o Biology Department
1910 University Drive
Boise, ID 83725-1515
Phone: 208-426-4219
Fax: 208-426-1040
<https://innocenceproject.boisestate.edu/>

IllinoisCenter on Wrongful Convictions

Northwestern University School of Law
375 East Chicago Avenue
Chicago, IL 60611
Phone: 312-503-2391
Fax: 312-503-8977
<http://www.law.northwestern.edu/legalclinic/wrongfulconvictions/>

Illinois Innocence Project

Institute for Legal and Policy Studies
University of Illinois at Springfield
One University Plaza
MS Public Affairs Center 451
Springfield, IL 62703-5407
Phone: 217-206-6569
E-mail: innocenceproj@uis.edu
<http://www.uis.edu/illinoisinnocenceproject/>

IndianaWrongful Conviction Clinic at Indiana University

Indiana University School of Law
Wrongful Conviction Clinic – Suite 111
530 West New York Street
Indianapolis, IN 46202-3225

IowaInnocence Project of Iowa

19 South 7th Street
Estherville, Iowa 51334
<http://www.iowainnocence.org/>

Midwest Innocence Project

605 West 47th Street, Suite 222
Kansas City, MO 64112
Phone: 816-221-2166
Email: office@TheMIP.org
<http://themip.org/>

KansasMidwest Innocence Project

605 West 47th Street, Suite 222
Kansas City, MO 64112
Phone: 816-221-2166
Email: office@TheMIP.org
<http://themip.org/>

KentuckyKentucky Innocence Project

Linda A. Smith, Directing Attorney
Department of Public Advocacy
100 Fair Oaks Lane, Suite 301
Frankfort, KY 40601
Phone: 502-564-8006
Fax: 502-564-7890
<http://dpa.ky.gov/kip/>

LouisianaInnocence Project New Orleans

Case Review Manager
Innocence Project New Orleans
4051 Ulloa Street
New Orleans, LA 70119
Fax: 504-943-1905
E-mail: info@ip-no.org
<http://www.ip-no.org/>

MaineNew England Innocence Project

160 Boylston Street, #2
Boston, MA 02116
Phone: 617-830-7685
E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org
<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>

MarylandMid-Atlantic Innocence Project

George Washington University Law School
2000 H Street, NW
Washington, DC 20052
Phone: 202-994-4856
E-mail: cfiscella@exonerate.org

University of Baltimore Innocence Project Clinic

1420 North Charles Street
Baltimore, MD 21201
Phone: 410-837-6543
Fax: 410-837-4776

MassachusettsNew England Innocence Project

160 Boylston Street, #2
Boston, MA 02116
Phone: 617-830-7685
E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org
<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>

Committee for Public Counsel Services Innocence Program

21 McGrath Highway, 2nd floor
Somerville, MA 02143
Phone: 617-623-0591
<https://www.publiccounsel.net/pc/innocence-program/>

MichiganCooley Innocence Project

WMU-Cooley Law School
300 S. Capitol Avenue
P.O. Box 13038
Lansing, MI 48933
Phone: 517-334-5764
E-mail: babelca@cooley.edu
http://www.cooley.edu/clinics/innocence_project.html

Michigan Innocence Clinic

University of Michigan Law School
625 South State Street
Ann Arbor, MI 48109-1215
Phone: 734-763-9353
Fax: 734-764-8242
<http://www.law.umich.edu/clinical/innocenceclinic/>

Michigan State Appellate Defender Office – Wrongful Conviction Unit

Suite 3300 Penobscot Building
645 Griswold Street
Detroit, MI 48226
Phone: 313-256-9883
Fax: 313-965-0372

Minnesota

Minnesota Innocence Project
1536 Hewitt Avenue, MS-D2204
St. Paul, MN 55104
Phone: 651-523-3152
Fax: 651-523-3042
<http://www.ipmn.org/>

Mississippi

Innocence Project New Orleans*
Case Review Manager
Innocence Project New Orleans
4051 Ulloa Street New Orleans, LA 70119
Fax: 504-943-1905
E-mail: info@ip-no.org
<http://www.ip-no.org/>
* South Mississippi Counties only

The George C. Cochran Innocence Project*

P.O. Box 1848
University, MS 38677-1848
Phone: 662-915-5207
<http://innocenceproject.olemiss.edu/>
*North Mississippi Counties only

Missouri

Midwest Innocence Project
605 West 47th Street, Suite 222
Kansas City, MO 64112
Phone: 816-221-2166
Email: office@TheMIP.org
<http://themip.org/>

Montana

Montana Innocence Project
P.O. Box 7607
Missoula, MT 59807
Phone: 406-544-6698
<http://www.mtinnoceproject.org/>

Nebraska

Nebraska Innocence Project
P.O. Box 24183
Omaha, NE 68124-0183
E-mail: neinnocenceproject@gmail.com
<http://www.nebraskainnocenceproject.org/>

Midwest Innocence Project

605 West 47th Street, Suite 222
Kansas City, MO 64113
Phone: 816-221-2166
Email: office@TheMIP.org
<http://themip.org/>

Nevada

Rocky Mountain Innocence Center
358 South 700 East, Box B235
Salt Lake City, UT 84102
Phone: 801-355-1888
E-mail: contact@rminnocence.org
<http://rminnocence.org/>

New Hampshire

New England Innocence Project
160 Boylston Street, #2
Boston, MA 02116
Phone: 617-830-7685
E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org
<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>

New Jersey

Centurion Ministries
1000 Herrontown Road
Princeton, NJ 08540
Phone: 609-921-0334
Fax: 609-921-6919
<http://www.centurionministries.org/>

New Mexico

New Mexico Innocence and Justice Project
University of New Mexico School of Law
1117 Stanford Avenue
Albuquerque, NM 87131-0001
Phone: 505-277-2146
<http://lawschool.unm.edu/ijp/index.php>

New YorkInnocence Project

40 Worth St., Suite 701

New York, NY 10013

Phone: 212-364-5340

Fax: 212-364-5340

E-mail: info@innocenceproject.org<http://www.innocenceproject.org/>New York Law School Post-ConvictionInnocence Clinic

New York Law School

Legal Services

185 West Broadway

New York, NY 10013

Phone: 212-431-2813

The Exoneration Initiative

233 Broadway, Suite 2370

New York, NY 10279

Phone: 212-965-9335

Fax: 212-965-9375

E-mail: info@exi.org<http://exi.org/>North CarolinaNorth Carolina Center on Actual Innocence

PO Box 52446, Shannon Plaza Station

Durham, NC 27717-2446

Phone: 919-489-3268

Fax: 919-489-3285

E-mail: admin@nccai.org<http://www.nccai.org/>Wrongful Convictions Clinic

Duke University Law School

Box 90362

Durham, NC 27708

Phone: 919-613-7241

Fax: 919-613-7262

<https://law.duke.edu/wrongfulconvictions/>North Carolina Innocence InquiryCommission

Administrative Office of the Courts

NC Innocence Inquiry Commission

P.O. Box 2448

Raleigh, NC 27602

Phone: 919-890-1580

Fax: 919-890-1937

Email: nciic@nccourts.org<http://www.innocencecommission-nc.gov/>North DakotaMinnesota Innocence Project

1536 Hewitt Avenue, MS-D2204

St. Paul, MN 55104

Phone: 651-523-3152

Fax: 651-523-3042

<http://www.ipmn.org/>OhioLois and Richard Rosenthal Institute for Justice: Ohio Innocence Project

University of Cincinnati College of Law

P.O. Box 210040

Cincinnati, OH 45221

Phone: 513-861-2946

Fax: 513-556-1236

<http://www.law.uc.edu/oip>Wrongful Conviction Project

Office of the Ohio Public Defender

Attn: Project Director, Joe Bodenhamer

250 East Broad Street, Suite 1400

Columbus, Ohio 43215

Phone: 614-466-5394

Fax: 800-686-1573

E-mail: wrongfulconviction@opd.ohio.govhttp://opd.ohio.gov/Trial-Services/Wrongful-Conviction-Project/OklahomaOklahoma Innocence Project

800 N. Harvey Avenue

Oklahoma City, OK 73102

Phone: 405-208-6161

E-mail: innocence@okcu.edu<http://innocence.okcu.edu/>

Oklahoma Indigent Defense System

DNA Forensic Testing Program

P.O. Box 926

Norman, OK 73070

Phone: 405-801-2601

OregonOregon Innocence Project

P.O. Box 5248

Portland, Oregon 97208

Phone: 503-944-2270

E-mail: info@oregoninnocence.org<http://www.oregoninnocence.org/>PennsylvaniaPennsylvania Innocence Project

Temple University

Beasley School of Law

1515 Market Street, Suite 300

Philadelphia, PA 19102

Phone: 215-204-4255

E-mail: innocenceprojectpa@temple.edu<http://innocenceprojectpa.org/>Puerto RicoPuerto Rico Innocence Project

Universidad Interamericana de Puerto Rico

Facultad de Derecho

PO Box 70351

San Juan, PR 00936-70351

Phone: 787 751-1912 ext. 2000

Rhode IslandNew England Innocence Project

160 Boylston Street, #2

Boston, MA 02116

Phone: 617-830-7685

E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>South CarolinaInnocence Project

40 Worth St., Suite 701

New York, NY 10013

Phone: 212-364-5340

Fax: 212-364-5341

<http://www.innocenceproject.org/>South DakotaMinnesota Innocence Project

1536 Hewitt Avenue, MS-D2204

St. Paul, MN 55104

Phone: 651-523-3152

Fax: 651-523-3042

<http://www.ipmn.org/>TennesseeInnocence/Wrongful Convictions Clinic

University of Tennessee College of Law

Suite 83

1505 W. Cumberland Ave.

Knoxville, Tennessee 37996-1810

Phone: 865-974-2331

Fax: 865-974-6782

<http://law.utk.edu/clinics/innocence/>TexasInnocence Project of Texas

1511 Texas Ave

Lubbock, Texas 79401

Phone: 806-744-6525

Fax: 806-744-6480

Email: info@ipoftexas.org<http://www.ipoftexas.org/>Texas Innocence Network

100 Law Center

Houston, TX 77204-6060

Email: CJI@uh.edu<http://texasinnocencenetwork.com/>Texas Center for Actual Innocence

University of Texas School of Law

727 East Dean Keeton Street

Austin, TX 78705

<https://law.utexas.edu/tcai/>Thurgood Marshall School of Law Innocence Project

3100 Cleburne Street

Houston, TX 77004

Phone: 713-313-1139

http://www.tsulaw.edu/centers/eci/featured/innocence_project.html/

UtahRocky Mountain Innocence Center

358 South 700 East, Box B235

Salt Lake City, UT 84102

Phone: 801-355-1888

E-mail: contact@rminnocence.org

<http://rminnocence.org/>

VermontNew England Innocence Project

160 Boylston Street, #2

Boston, MA 02116

Phone: 617-830-7685

E-mail: intake@newenglandinnocence.org

<http://www.newenglandinnocence.org/>

VirginiaMid-Atlantic Innocence Project

George Washington University Law School

2000 H Street, NW

Washington, DC 20052

Phone: 202-994-4856

E-mail: cfiscella@exonerate.org

<http://www.exonerate.org/>

Innocence Project at UVA School of Law

580 Massie Rd.

Charlottesville, VA 22903

Phone: 434-924-3732

<http://www.law.virginia.edu/html/academics/practical/innocenceclinic.htm>

WashingtonInnocence Project Northwest

University of Washington School of Law

William H. Gates Hall, P.O. Box 85110

Seattle, WA 98145-1110

Phone: 206-616-8792

<http://www.ipnw.org/>

West VirginiaInnocence Project

West Virginia University College of Law

P.O. Box 6130

Morgantown, WV 26506

Phone: 304-293-7249

<http://wvinnocenceproject.wvu.edu/>

WisconsinWisconsin Innocence Project

Frank J. Remington Center

University of Wisconsin Law School

975 Bascom Mall

Madison, WI 53706-1399

Phone: 608-265-1160

Fax: 608-263-3380

<http://law.wisc.edu/fjr/clinicals/ip/>

WyomingRocky Mountain Innocence Center

358 South 700 East, Box B235

Salt Lake City, UT 84102

Phone: 801-355-1888

E-mail: contact@rminnocence.org

<http://rminnocence.org/>

CHAPTER 12

APPEALING YOUR CONVICTION BASED ON INEFFECTIVE ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

A. Introduction

Many incarcerated people appeal their convictions based on a claim of “ineffective assistance” of counsel. A successful claim of ineffective assistance requires two things. First, your lawyer must have performed so badly that they failed to follow professional standards while representing you.¹ Second, there must be a “reasonable probability” that your lawyer’s poor representation negatively affected the outcome of your case.² The right to effective counsel comes from the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution. If you are in New York State, Article I, Section 6 of the New York State Constitution also protects the right to effective assistance of counsel.³ There are different reasons that counsel can be found ineffective, and there are different ways to appeal your conviction based on the claim that your counsel was ineffective. This Chapter summarizes how to bring these claims, but other JLM chapters, listed in Footnote 3, can give you more detailed information.

B. Ways to Claim Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

There are three general ways to attack your conviction: direct post-conviction appeal, state post-conviction appeal, and a federal and/or state habeas corpus claim. Other JLM Chapters cover each of these topics in more depth.⁴ In New York, if you are appealing your conviction based on ineffective assistance of counsel that occurred during your trial, you should do this by first raising your claim (1)

1. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 694 (1984) (“The proper measure of attorney performance remains simply reasonableness under prevailing professional norms.”).

2. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 698 (1984). It is important to note that the “outcome” that might be negatively affected by attorney ineffectiveness is not limited to the trial outcome. For example, you might claim that your lawyer’s ineffectiveness caused you to proceed to trial when you should have accepted a plea, or to accept a plea when you should have gone to trial. See Lafler v. Cooper, 556 U.S. 156, 174, 132 S. Ct. 1376, 1391, 182 L. Ed. 2d 398, 414 (2012) (holding that there was a reasonable probability that the defendant would have accepted a guilty plea and received a lower minimum sentence but for his counsel’s deficient performance). Or you might claim that your lawyer’s ineffectiveness caused you to not accept a plea deal that you otherwise might have accepted. See Missouri v. Frye, 566 U.S. 134, 150, 132 S. Ct. 1399, 1411, 182 L. Ed. 2d 379, 393 (2012) (“There appears to be a reasonable probability Frye would have accepted the prosecutor’s original offer of a plea bargain if the offer had been communicated to him, because he pleaded guilty to a more serious charge, with no promise of a sentencing recommendation from the prosecutor.”).

3. Even if you do not live in New York, your state’s constitution may also provide the right to effective counsel. Regardless of whether your state’s constitution has a provision regarding the right to counsel, the 6th and 14th Amendments of the U.S. Constitution give you a federal right to effective counsel.

4. Review the following Chapters of the JLM for more information: Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence” (direct appeals); Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence” (state post-conviction appeals); Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus” (federal habeas corpus claims); and Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan” (state habeas corpus claims).

in your direct appeal in state court,⁵ and then (2) in your federal habeas corpus petition.⁶ If you are filing a claim in New York State court there may not be enough facts in the record to let the court review an ineffectiveness claim on appeal. In these situations, you should also file an Article 440 motion in New York State court.⁷ It is important to note that there is no Sixth Amendment right to counsel before you are actually charged with a crime, so you can only claim that your lawyer was ineffective after charges were brought against you (and not before that point).⁸

You have the right to have effective counsel during a direct post-conviction appeal, which is your first appeal after your conviction.⁹ A finding that you had ineffective counsel during your first appeal can lead to a “de novo” (new) appeal and, sometimes, a reversal of your conviction.¹⁰ If you are appealing your conviction based on ineffective counsel during your first appeal, you should file the appropriate post-conviction motion in your state court, or file a federal habeas corpus petition in federal district court. To file an ineffective appellate counsel claim in New York State court, you must

5. In New York, an ineffective assistance claim that is based only on the trial record must be made on direct appeal. See People v. Love, 57 N.Y.2d 998, 1000, 443 N.E.2d 486, 487, 457 N.Y.S.2d 238, 239 (1982) (quoting People v. Jones, 55 N.Y.2d 771, 773, 431 N.E.2d 967, 968, 447 N.Y.S.2d 242, 243 (1981)) (“Here . . . we cannot conclude that defendant’s counsel was ineffective simply by reviewing the trial record without the benefit of additional background facts that ‘might have been developed had an appropriate after-judgment motion been made’ pursuant to CPL 440.10.”); People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 853, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978) (stating that “[g]enerally, the ineffectiveness of counsel is not demonstrable on the main record, but in this case it is”); People v. Terry, 44 A.D.3d 1157, 1159, 845 N.Y.S.2d 145, 147 (3d Dept. 2007) (holding that defendant must raise his ineffective assistance claim on direct appeal rather than in an Article 440 motion because defendant’s allegations could have been raised on direct appeal, citing CPL 440.10(2)(b)). However, ineffective assistance of counsel claims are “generally not reviewable on direct appeal” when they involve facts outside the scope of the record and must first be brought through a CPL 440.10 motion so that the facts may be sufficiently developed for review. People v. Medina-Gonzalez, 116 A.D.3d 519, 520, 983 N.Y.S.2d 554, 556 (1st Dept. 2014).

6. See, e.g., Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 697–698, 106 S. Ct. 2052, 2070, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 700 (1984) (stating that the “principles governing ineffectiveness claims should apply in federal collateral proceedings as they do on direct appeal or in motions for a new trial” and that a state court’s finding of effective assistance is “not a finding of fact binding on the federal court to the extent stated by 28 U. S. C. § 2254(d).”).

7. For claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel, an Article 440 motion, not a state habeas corpus petition, is the appropriate procedural method in New York State. See Chapter 20 of the JLM, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” for further discussion of Article 440. A state habeas corpus petition may be the appropriate procedure in other states. See, e.g., Corzo v. State, 806 So. 2d 642, 645 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2002) (“The general rule is that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel may not be raised on direct appeal.”)

8. Moran v. Burbine, 475 U.S. 412, 431, 106 S. Ct. 1135, 1146, 89 L. Ed. 2d 410, 427 (1986) (holding that “the Sixth Amendment right to counsel does not attach until after the initiation of formal charges”); People v. Claudio, 83 N.Y.2d 76, 80–81, 629 N.E.2d 384, 386, 607 N.Y.S.2d 912, 914 (1993) (holding the right to effective counsel under both the U.S. Constitution and the New York State Constitution does not attach until the start of adversarial judicial proceedings). However, note that some state constitutions grant broader rights to counsel than the U.S. Constitution. See, e.g., People v. McCauley, 645 N.E.2d 923, 929, 163 Ill. 2d 414, 423–424, 206 Ill. Dec. 671, 677 (1994) (giving a broader reading to article 1, section 10 of the Illinois Constitution than the 5th Amendment right against self-incrimination as discussed in Moran v. Burbine). Also, you have a right to counsel under the 5th Amendment if you are interrogated while in custody. See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 469, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1625, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 721 (1966) (“[T]he right to have counsel present at the interrogation is indispensable to the protection of the Fifth Amendment privilege under the system we delineate today.”). But that right may not include the right to effective counsel. See Sweeney v. Carter, 361 F.3d 327, 333 (7th Cir.) (“[T]he Supreme Court has not mentioned effective assistance of counsel (in the Strickland sense) and the Fifth Amendment in the same breath, let alone set forth a clearly established right to that effect.”).

9. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 396, 105 S. Ct. 830, 836, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 830 (1985) (establishing that the defendant’s 14th Amendment right to effective counsel during trial extends to a first appeal).

10. See, e.g., McHale v. United States, 175 F.3d 115, 119–121 (2d Cir. 1999) (reinstating appeal upon finding that appellate counsel’s ineffectiveness caused dismissal of original appeal).

file a “coram nobis motion”¹¹ in the court where the first appeal was filed,¹² but you should note that each state has its own state post-conviction appeals procedure.¹³

If your direct post-conviction appeal fails, you may make additional appeals—referred to as state post-conviction appeals. You should note, however, there is no federal constitutional right to counsel for these additional appeals; that right only applies on direct appeal. Therefore, the U.S. Constitution does not grant you the right to raise a claim of ineffective counsel in state post-conviction proceedings.¹⁴ However, even though the federal constitution does not grant this right, some states do grant the right to counsel in state post-conviction proceedings, and some states allow courts to require effective counsel in state post-conviction proceedings when it is in the interest of justice.¹⁵ If you are in a state that gives you a right to counsel in state post-conviction proceedings, you may also have a right to effective representation in those hearings.¹⁶

You must raise your ineffective counsel claims within the proper time and with the proper procedures. If your claim is not raised during the proper time and with the proper procedures, it could be dismissed. In federal court, and in many states, you should not raise an ineffective assistance claim on direct appeal because the trial record usually does not contain enough information to evaluate the claim. Instead, you should make the claim in a collateral (separate) proceeding, allowing the trial court to hear testimony specifically about the adequacy of your representation. In such a collateral proceeding, you can also argue that the lawyer for your appeal was ineffective for not raising an ineffectiveness claim regarding your trial lawyer. If you had the same lawyer at trial and on direct appeal, failure to raise an ineffectiveness claim on direct appeal does not prevent you from raising the claim in a post-conviction proceeding.¹⁷ But in some states like New York, an ineffective assistance

11. A “coram nobis motion” is a motion to restore you to a pre-conviction status, alleging a wrongful conviction.

12. See People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 509 N.E.2d 318, 323, 600, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 628 (1987) (holding that a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel must be filed “in the appellate tribunal which considered the primary appeal.”).

13. In most states, ineffective appellate counsel can be raised as part of your state post-conviction motion, but you should check your state’s laws. See, e.g., State v. Davis, 894 N.E.2d 1221, 1224, 119 Ohio St. 3d 422, 425 2008 Ohio 4608, ¶ 13 (2008) (holding Ohio statute requires ineffective appellate counsel claims be made only to the state appellate court, rather than to the trial court in a post-conviction petition). For information on coram nobis motions, see Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.”

14. See Martinez v. Ryan, 566 U.S. 1, 9, 132 S. Ct. 1309, 1315, 182 L. Ed. 2d 272, 282 (2012) (holding that a federal habeas court may only excuse a failure to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim in state post-conviction proceedings in “narrow” circumstances); see also Murray v. Giaratano, 492 U.S. 1, 7–10, 109 S. Ct. 2765, 2768–2771, 106 L. Ed. 2d 1, 9–11 (1989) (holding that the right to effective counsel at trial and during the initial appeal does not apply to discretionary state post-conviction proceedings).

15. For example, the Alaska post-conviction statute provides for counsel in one post-conviction appeal. See Alaska Stat. § 18.85.100(c) (2009). Florida does not provide a statutory right, but the court may determine in the interest of justice whether, given the facts of the case, the incarcerated person should have the assistance of counsel. See State v. Weeks, 166 So. 2d 892, 897 (Fla. 1964) (“Each case must be decided in the light of 5th Amendment Due Process requirements.”). You should research your state’s post-conviction laws and relevant case law to see if such a right exists in your state.

16. See, e.g., Lozada v. Warden, 613 A.2d 818, 821–824, 223 Conn. 834, 838–843 (1992) (finding that a statutory right to counsel on a habeas petition encompassed right to effective counsel, which could be vindicated by means of a second habeas petition); Moore v. Commonwealth, 199 S.W.3d 132, 139 (Ky. 2006) (reinstating appeal from denial of post-conviction relief, on grounds that statutory right to post-conviction counsel included right to competent counsel, but cautioning that “[o]ur holding . . . should not be construed as sanctioning” the filing of a subsequent post-conviction motion based on previous post-conviction counsel’s ineffectiveness).

17. Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 504, 123 S. Ct. 1690, 1694, 155 L. Ed. 2d 714, 720 (2003) (holding “that an ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding . . . whether or not the petitioner could have raised the claim on direct appeal”); see also United States v. Martinez, 136 F.3d 972, 979 (4th Cir. 1998) (“A [federal] defendant can raise the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel . . . by a collateral challenge pursuant to [federal habeas corpus].”); People v. Dor, 132 Misc. 2d 568, 569–570, 505 N.Y.S.2d 317, 319 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 1986) (holding that, in an Article 440 motion, a defendant cannot claim that can be decided based on the trial record alone must be made in the direct appeal.¹⁸ In those cases, you are barred from raising it in a post-conviction motion.¹⁹ Be sure to check the laws in your state for the proper procedure.

Note that claiming ineffective assistance of counsel means that you give up some of your attorney-client confidentiality privileges with that attorney.²⁰ This means that once you file an ineffective counsel claim against your lawyer, your lawyer can then sometimes reveal information about your case that otherwise would be kept secret. For example, your lawyer could cooperate with the prosecution by turning over case files, or even testifying for the prosecution against you.

make further attacks on “any issues that were raised or could have been raised in the appeal,” but could claim ineffective assistance, which is “an issue that could not possibly be raised in an appeal by the same counsel”).

18. In a New York claim, courts have said that an Article 440 motion is usually the correct way to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 853–854, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149–1150, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978) (“Generally, the ineffectiveness of counsel is not demonstrable on the main record Consequently, in the typical case it would be better, and in some cases essential, that an appellate attack on the effectiveness of counsel be bottomed on an evidentiary exploration by collateral or post-conviction proceeding brought under CPL 440.10.”); see also People v. Medina-Gonzalez, 116 A.D. 3d 519, 520, 983 N.Y.S.2d 554, 556 (1st Dept. 2014) (finding the record insufficient to resolve the issue of counsel’s ineffectiveness and explaining that a defendant seeking to bring ineffective assistance of counsel claims where the record is insufficient must use the CPL 440.10 motions to expand the record before the court can consider the issue). If matters outside of the trial record must be examined, such as reasons for counsel’s actions, New York courts require you to raise an ineffective counsel claim in an Article 440 motion, rather than in a motion to set aside the verdict or in a direct appeal. See People v. Love, 57 N.Y.2d 998, 1000, 443 N.E.2d 486, 487, 457 N.Y.S.2d 238, 239 (1982) (rejecting a claim for ineffective assistance of counsel but suggesting that the court might have found otherwise, if defendant had introduced additional evidence following an Article 440 motion); People v. Monroe, 52 A.D.3d 623, 623, 860 N.Y.S.2d 564, 565 (2d Dept. 2008) (“To the extent that the defendant’s claim of ineffective assistance of counsel . . . [goes beyond] the record, . . . it may not be reviewed on direct appeal.”); People v. Bagarozzy, 182 A.D.2d 565, 566, 582 N.Y.S.2d 424, 425 (1st Dept. 1992) (“The appropriate vehicle by which to allege ineffective assistance of counsel grounded in allegations referring to facts outside of the trial record is pursuant to CPL 440.10, where matters . . . [beyond] the record may be considered.”); People v. Garcia, 187 A.D.2d 868, 868, 590 N.Y.S.2d 565, 566 (3d Dept. 1992) (rejecting an ineffective assistance of counsel claim because the new evidence that defendant wished to introduce was not properly submitted under an Article 440 motion). You can use an Article 440 motion to raise claims that are based on information in the record, but in such a case you must have first made the claim in your direct appeal. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(b)–(c) (McKinney 2009). See Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” for an additional explanation of barred claims, and Chapter 20 of the JLM, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” for more on how to file an Article 440 motion.

19. See, e.g., Nixon v. Epps, 405 F.3d 318, 323 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding that a Mississippi statute, requiring defendant to raise ineffective assistance claim on direct review when he uses a different counsel, created an “adequate and independent” procedural default when defendant failed to comply on direct appeal); Guinan v. United States, 6 F.3d 468, 471 (7th Cir. 1993); Alston v. Donnelly, 461 F. Supp. 2d 112, 123 (W.D.N.Y. 2006) (“[W]here the record is sufficient to allow appellate review of a[n ineffective assistance of counsel] claim, the failure to raise that claim on appeal precludes subsequent collateral review.”); People v. Jossiah, 2 A.D.3d 877, 877, 769 N.Y.S.2d 743, 743 (2d Dept. 2003) (per curiam) (“[Since the] record . . . clearly presented sufficient facts from which the defendant could have raised his [ineffective assistance claim] . . . on direct appeal, it could not be raised on the CPL 440.10 motion.”). But see Hartman v. Bagley, 492 F.3d 347, 357–358 (6th Cir. 2007) (holding that although Ohio’s statute provided “adequate and independent” grounds to bar ineffective assistance claims in collateral proceedings, it did not apply to defendant’s claim that relied on information outside of the trial record).

20. MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT 1.6(b)(5) (AM. BAR ASS’N 2004) (allowing a lawyer to “reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary . . . to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer’s representation of the client”); STANDARDS FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE § 4-9.6(d) (AM. BAR ASS’N 4th ed. 2015) (“Defense counsel whose conduct in a criminal case is drawn into question is permitted to testify concerning the matters at issue, and is not precluded from disclosing the truth concerning the matters raised by his former client, even though this involves revealing matters which were given in confidence.”). Note that this is not a complete waiver of confidentiality and does not allow for complete disclosure.

C. How to Prove Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

As discussed above, there is a federal right to effective counsel and, in many states, a separate state right as well. The federal and New York State standards for ineffective counsel are discussed below. If you were convicted in a state other than New York, you should research your state's constitution and laws to find out whether there is a different state standard for ineffective assistance of counsel that you can argue was not met at trial.²¹ You should always raise ineffective assistance of counsel as a federal constitutional claim, even if you are also claiming a violation of state guarantees to effective assistance of counsel. This is because if you do not present the claim as a federal constitutional violation at this point, you may not be able to do so in a later federal habeas corpus petition.²²

1. The Federal Standard

The standard for ineffective assistance of counsel under the U.S. Constitution is the same no matter where you are. There are three ways you can make an ineffective counsel claim under federal law: you can claim (1) that your lawyer was actually ineffective, (2) constructively ineffective, or (3) that he had a conflict of interest that caused him to be actually ineffective. Each claim requires you to prove different things, which are detailed below.

(a) Actual Ineffectiveness: The Strickland Test

To claim that your lawyer was actually ineffective, you must pass the two-part Strickland test.²³ The first part of this test, the “deficient performance” prong, requires you to prove that your lawyer’s performance was “deficient.”²⁴ For this part, the court decides whether your lawyer’s representation fell below an “objective standard of reasonableness.”²⁵ This means the court looks to see if your lawyer acted in a way that most other lawyers would think is acceptable. Since this standard can apply differently in different situations, you must identify the specific things your lawyer did that were so bad that you were effectively deprived of your right to counsel.²⁶ You cannot simply say that you had a bad lawyer or that your lawyer did not do enough to help you. You must point to the specific things your lawyer did poorly—or did not do at all, like failing to cross examine a witness at all—and show that these failures made their representation of your case fall below the professional standards for lawyers.

If the court finds your lawyer’s representation fell below this objective standard of reasonable lawyering (that it was deficient), you will have satisfied the first part of the Strickland test. The court will then apply the second part of the Strickland test. The second part, the “prejudice prong,” requires

21. For more information on legal research, see JLM, Chapter 2, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

22. For more information on filing a federal habeas corpus claim, see JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus.”

23. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (establishing federal standard for ineffective assistance of counsel); see also Knowles v. Mirzayance, 556 U.S. 111, 123, 129 S. Ct. 1411, 1420, 173 L. Ed. 2d 251 (2009) (finding counsel’s decision not to pursue insanity defense was not deficient or prejudicial because it was reasonable to believe that the defense would fail).

24. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (describing “deficient performance” prong).

25. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984). These basic professional standards could include, but are not limited to: a duty of loyalty, a duty to avoid conflicts of interest, a duty to advocate the defendant’s cause, a duty to consult with defendant on important decisions and to keep defendant informed of important developments during the prosecution, and a duty to use the level of skill and knowledge that make the trial truly adversarial. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688–689, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 694 (1984) (outlining these duties but noting that they “neither exhaustively define the obligations of counsel nor form a checklist for judicial evaluation of attorney performance”).

26. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 690, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2066, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 695 (1984) (stating that in deciding an ineffectiveness claim, a judge will look at the reasonableness of counsel’s conduct based on facts of the particular case, viewed at the time of the counsel’s conduct).

you to prove there is a “reasonable probability that, but for counsel’s unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different.”²⁷ This means that you not only have to point out what your lawyer did wrong, but you also have to show that your lawyer’s actions hurt you and possibly changed the outcome of your case. You can only win on an ineffective counsel claim if you can satisfy both parts of the test.²⁸ You should remind the court that the Supreme Court has specifically said that the “prejudice prong” requires you to show only a “reasonable probability” of a different result, and you do not have to prove that your lawyer’s errors “more likely than not altered the outcome” of your trial.²⁹

Ineffective counsel claims are some of the most difficult claims to plead successfully because of the second part of the Strickland test. Courts usually do not find that an attorney’s behavior affected a trial so strongly that the outcome is unreliable. When you are making an ineffective counsel claim, you should ask the court to consider the total effect of all of your lawyer’s errors.³⁰ Try to find cases where defendants successfully made claims based on facts similar to yours and argue your claim in a similar way. Unfortunately, for every successful ineffective counsel claim, there are many others that do not win. So, be aware of recent cases that work against you and try to point out how those cases are different from your case.

(b) Constructive Ineffectiveness: The Cronic Standard

If you cannot establish that your lawyer was actually ineffective under the Strickland test (above), the second type of ineffective assistance of counsel claim available under the U.S. Constitution is a “constructive denial” of assistance claim as described in United States v. Cronic.³¹ You can claim constructive ineffective assistance if the circumstances of your trial were so unfair that ineffective assistance and prejudice can be presumed.³² This means that under the Cronic standard, unlike the Strickland test, you do not have to prove that there was actual prejudice. This is important because, 27. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 698 (1984); see also Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 691, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2066, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 696 (1984) (holding that “[a]n error by counsel, even if professionally unreasonable, does not warrant setting aside the judgment of a criminal proceeding if the error had no effect on the judgment”); Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 534, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2542, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 493 (2003) (“In assessing prejudice [in a capital case], we reweigh the evidence in aggravation against the totality of available mitigating evidence.”); Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 390–391, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1511–1512, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416 (2000) (holding that analysis of the prejudice prong should focus solely on whether there was reasonable probability that but for counsel’s errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different).

28. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 700, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2071, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 702 (1984) (holding that “[f]ailure to make the required showing of either deficient performance or sufficient prejudice defeats the ineffectiveness claim”).

29. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 693, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2067, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 697 (1984).

30. See, e.g., Ray v. Thomas, Civil Action No. 11-0543-WS-N, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138780, at *239–240 (S.D. Ala. Sept. 26, 2013) (unpublished) (explaining that a petitioner may raise a cumulative error claims if he raises them early enough), aff’d sub nom. Ray v. Ala. Dept. of Corr., 809 F.3d 1202 (11th Cir. 2016); Lundgren v. Mitchell, 440 F.3d 754, 770 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating that in determining prejudice under the Strickland test, the “Court examines the combined effect of all acts of counsel found to be constitutionally deficient, in light of the totality of the evidence in the case”). But see Stalnaker v. Bobby, 589 F. Supp. 2d 905, 915 n.8 (N.D. Ohio 2008) (noting that while the Supreme Court precedent has not held that distinct constitutional claims can be cumulated to grant habeas relief, 6th Circuit precedent has considered whether the cumulative effects of all acts of counsel are constitutionally deficient in ineffective assistance of counsel claims).

31. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658–660, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2046, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 667 (1984) (recognizing potential for constructive denial where performance of counsel deprived defendant of a fair trial by not subjecting witnesses to effective cross-examination).

32. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 661, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2048, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 669 (1984) (noting that “surrounding circumstances [may] make it so unlikely that any lawyer could provide effective assistance that ineffectiveness ... [may be] properly presumed without inquiry into actual performance at trial”); see also Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 57–58, 53 S.Ct. 55, 60, 77 L.Ed. 158, 164 (1932).

as mentioned above, having to show prejudice under the second part of Strickland are often difficult to prove to a court.

The Cronic standard applies in three situations.³³ First, prejudice may be presumed if you were completely denied counsel during a “critical stage” of your trial—meaning that you had no counsel present at all.³⁴ Second, you can claim ineffective assistance under Cronic if your lawyer “entirely fails to subject the prosecution’s case to meaningful adversarial testing.”³⁵ Your lawyer’s failure to test the state’s case must have been “complete,” meaning she put up no opposition whatsoever.³⁶ Third, you can also make a Cronic claim if the circumstances of your trial made it highly unlikely that any lawyer could have provided effective assistance to you.³⁷ If your case falls within this third situation, you do not have to prove that your lawyer’s trial performance was deficient.

(c) Conflict of Interest

In addition to actual and constructive ineffectiveness claims, you can also argue that your lawyer provided ineffective assistance due to a conflict of interest. To establish that your lawyer had a conflict of interest, you must show that she had an actual conflict of interest that “adversely affected” her work.³⁸ For example, a conflict of interest can exist when one lawyer represents more than one co-defendant for the same crime.³⁹ The conflict must be actual, not just potential. This means that your 33. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 659–662, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2047–2048, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 668–670 (1984) (describing cases in which ineffective assistance and prejudice may be presumed); see also Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 695–698, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1850–1852, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 927–929 (2002) (recognizing Cronic’s holding that prejudice may be presumed in the three situations identified).

34. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 659, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2047, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 668 (1984); see, e.g., Wright v. Van Patten, 552 U.S. 120, 125–126, 128 S. Ct. 743, 746–747, 169 L. Ed. 2d 583, 588–589 (2008) (per curiam) (holding counsel’s participation in plea hearing by speakerphone should not be treated as complete denial of counsel); Rickman v. Bell, 131 F.3d 1150, 1156–1160 (6th Cir. 1997) (affirming judgment of ineffective assistance where counsel had abandoned defendant’s interests by repeatedly expressing contempt for client at trial and portraying client as crazy and dangerous, effectively acting as a second prosecutor); Javor v. United States, 724 F.2d 831, 833–834 (9th Cir. 1984) (finding prejudice inherent when counsel slept through much of the trial). But see Tippins v. Walker, 77 F.3d 682, 684–687 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding ineffective assistance claim should be judged under Strickland when counsel slept through the trial).

35. United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 659, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2047, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 668 (1984).

36. Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 697–698, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1851–1852, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 928–929 (2002) (holding counsel’s failure to produce mitigating evidence and waiver of closing argument did not constitute a complete failure to test the prosecutor’s case and that Strickland applied rather than Cronic). This is a difficult standard to meet. For example, counsel’s decision to concede guilt in a capital trial and focus instead on the sentencing phase, even though his client entered a “not guilty” plea, is not automatically a complete failure to subject the prosecution’s case to adversarial testing. Compare Florida v. Nixon, 543 U.S. 175, 189, 125 S. Ct. 551, 561, 160 L. Ed. 2d 565, 579 (2004) (“The Florida Supreme Court’s erroneous equation of [counsel’s] concession strategy to a guilty plea led it to ... [wrongly apply the Cronic standard] in determining whether counsel’s performance ranked as ineffective assistance.”), with State v. Carter, 14 P.3d 1138, 1148, 270 Kan. 426, 441 (2000) (finding a “breakdown in the our adversarial system of justice” when counsel premised defense on defendant’s guilt against his client’s wishes).

37. Compare Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 56–58, 53 S. Ct. 55, 59–60, 77 L. Ed. 158, 164–165 (1932) (finding a denial of effective counsel when defendants, who were “young, ignorant, illiterate, [and] surrounded by hostile sentiment,” were tried for a capital offense, and when defense counsel was designated only minutes before their trials began and thus had no opportunity to investigate the facts or to prepare), with United States v. Cronic, 466 U.S. 648, 658–667, 104 S. Ct. 2039, 2046–2051, 80 L. Ed. 2d. 657, 667–673 (1984) (rejecting defendant’s constructive ineffective assistance argument based on counsel’s lack of experience in criminal law or jury trials, and 25-day preparation time).

38. Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 350, 100 S. Ct. 1708, 1719, 64 L. Ed. 2d 333, 348 (1980); see also United States v. Iorizzo, 786 F.2d 52, 57–58 (2d Cir. 1986) (applying Cuyler and finding that defendant’s trial counsel had a conflict of interest because he had previously represented the state’s key witness on a related matter and failed to effectively cross examine this witness after the trial judge had told counsel that he might encounter ethical problems if he pursued certain lines of questioning).

39. A conflict of interest may also arise in other situations, including: if your lawyer represented a lawyer must have taken some action, or refrained from acting in some way, which harmed you and benefited the other person.⁴⁰ You do not have to show prejudice if your lawyer had an actual conflict of interest that adversely affected you; instead, prejudice is presumed.

2. New York State Standard

In addition to your federal right to effective counsel, New York state courts have said that you are entitled to “meaningful representation” under Article I, Section 6 of the New York State Constitution.⁴¹ This means that in New York, you must show that your lawyer’s failures harmed you so much that you did not have meaningful representation at trial.⁴² Meaningful representation does not mean that your attorney made no mistakes. It means that your lawyer provided good enough representation to satisfy the court that you were properly represented.⁴³

3. Using a Claim of Ineffectiveness to Save a Procedurally Defaulted Claim

Ineffective assistance of counsel claims can be very useful because they can allow you to present claims that would otherwise be prohibited. As the various Chapters on attacking your conviction explain, many issues must be “preserved” in order to be appealed.⁴⁴ Usually, if you or your lawyer did not raise certain issues during your trial, you cannot raise them on appeal because they were not “preserved.” But, even if an issue was never raised and preserved during your trial, it can often still government or defense witness in a related trial, if the victim was a client of your lawyer, or if your lawyer collaborated or had a connection with the prosecution. See, e.g., Perillo v. Johnson, 205 F.3d 775, 808 (5th Cir. 2000) (finding actual conflict existed when counsel represented a co-defendant cooperating with the state as witness against the accused); United States v. O’Leary, 806 F.2d 1307, 1315 (7th Cir. 1986) (holding actual conflict existed when counsel was prosecutor’s campaign manager for State’s Attorney election, and counsel colluded with prosecutor and a police officer to get defendant to retain him because it would be good for the campaign).

40. See, e.g., Burger v. Kemp, 483 U.S. 776, 783–785, 107 S. Ct. 3114, 3120–3121, 97 L. Ed. 2d 638, 650–651 (1987) (holding that petitioner failed to show actual conflict when his lawyer’s partner was appointed to represent co-defendant, because “defendants may actually benefit from the joint efforts of two partners who supplement one another in their preparation”); Edens v. Hannigan, 87 F.3d 1109, 1116 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding actual conflict of interest existed when counsel made no effort to present a defense for client because it would have harmed co-defendant); Burden v. Zant, 24 F.3d 1298, 1305–1307 (11th Cir. 1994) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel, representing two co-defendants, made an agreement with the prosecutor that one co-defendant would testify against the other in exchange for not prosecuting that co-defendant); Dawan v. Lockhart, 31 F.3d 718, 721–722 (8th Cir. 1994) (finding ineffective counsel where a public defender also represented co-defendant who had pleaded guilty and made statements tying the client to the crime).

41. People v. Baldi, 54 N.Y.2d 137, 147, 429 N.E.2d 400, 405, 444 N.Y.S.2d 893, 898 (1981) (“So long as the evidence, the law, and the circumstances of a particular case, viewed in totality and as of the time of the representation, reveal that the attorney provided meaningful representation, the constitutional requirement will have been met.”).

42. If you are in a state other than New York, your state may have an independent source for the right to effective counsel and/or a different standard for proving ineffective counsel. You should research successful ineffective counsel claims in your state and look at what standard the courts use.

43. See People v. Benevento, 91 N.Y.2d 708, 712, 697 N.E.2d 584, 587, 674 N.Y.S.2d 629, 632 (1998) (holding that the New York State Constitution guarantees meaningful but not perfect representation, and that representation does not have to be “errorless”) (quoting People v. Aiken, 45 N.Y.2d 394, 398, 380 N.E.2d 272, 274, 408 N.Y.S.2d 444, 447 (1978)); see also People v. Droz, 39 N.Y.2d 457, 462, 348 N.E.2d 880, 882–883, 384 N.Y.S.2d 404, 407 (1976) (finding improper representation where a lawyer failed to adequately prepare for trial, did not communicate with his client in a timely manner, made almost no attempt to contact potential witnesses, and neglected to study the record); but see People v. Young, 116 A.D.2d 922, 923, 498 N.Y.S.2d 667, 669 (3d Dept.) (noting that the standards from People v. Baldi and People v. Droz only apply to ineffective assistance during trial; evaluation of attorney performance is measured differently when the defendant has entered a guilty plea).

44. See JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” regarding preservation of claims; JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” regarding errors of record in the trial; and JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” regarding procedural default.

be raised as part of an ineffective counsel claim.⁴⁵ In other words, the fact that your lawyer did not raise certain issues during trial can be used as evidence that he did not effectively represent you.

Ineffective assistance claims are also useful in “procedural default” situations. “Procedural default” happens when your claim is kept out of federal court because you have not followed all the procedures in your state. In procedural default situations, federal courts will not hear your claim because you did not follow state procedures. If your claim has been procedurally defaulted, you can often raise it as an ineffective counsel claim instead.⁴⁶ For example, you can argue that the jury was selected in a racially discriminatory manner because your lawyer failed to object. In addition, if any court has held that you have a procedurally defaulted claim, you can argue that your lawyer’s ineffectiveness was the “cause” of the default.⁴⁷ As a general rule of thumb, if you are raising a claim for the first time that should have been raised earlier, you should allege that you did not raise the claim earlier because your attorney was ineffective.

To include a prohibited claim (a claim that is not preserved or is procedurally defaulted) in an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, you must state the issue by saying your lawyer was ineffective for not properly arguing your claim. For example, if the wrong jury instructions were given at trial, but that claim is prohibited because it was not raised at trial or “preserved,” you can claim that your attorney was ineffective for not objecting to the jury instructions. Remember, you still must prove that your attorney’s mistake deprived you of your right to counsel because it negatively affected your trial. This means you must show both that (1) by not objecting to the instructions, your attorney performed below the standard attorneys are judged by; and (2) by not objecting, your attorney lost a chance to argue a claim that would have succeeded.

Here is an example of how to include a prohibited claim in an ineffective counsel claim. Suppose you believe that your jury was selected in a racially discriminatory manner, but this issue was not raised at trial or on direct appeal and is now prohibited. You can follow these possible steps:

- (1) Argue that your lawyer failed to object to the way in which the jury was selected and also failed to select a racially unbiased jury. Argue that your lawyer’s failure to correct or object to the discriminatory jury selection fell below the reasonable standard of performance for attorneys;
- (2) Argue that this failure of your attorney meant that you had a racially biased jury and, because of the circumstances of your case, you were denied a fair trial as a result of this jury selection error. Since there is a chance the outcome of your case would have been different, your lawyer’s failure to object to or raise this claim resulted in prejudice.

To summarize, your lawyer was ineffective because his performance fell below the standard of objective reasonableness for attorneys. By not objecting to the racially discriminatory way in which the jury was selected, the lawyer negatively affected the outcome of your case.

Below is a checklist for incorporating a barred claim into an ineffective counsel claim:

- (1) Identify the prohibited claim. Make sure the claim cannot be raised directly for procedural reasons;
- (2) Determine whether the claim is prohibited because of your lawyer’s ineffectiveness. Did your lawyer not raise the issue at trial? Did your lawyer say or do something at trial that

45. In Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 384–385, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2587–2588, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 325–326 (1986), for example, the trial court refused to rule on the defendant’s motion to suppress evidence because counsel’s motion was untimely. The defendant nonetheless ultimately obtained a hearing on the merits of the suppression motion by raising a claim that his trial counsel was ineffective for failing to make a timely suppression motion.

46. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 382–383, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2587, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 324 (1986) (finding that the usual rules regarding procedural default do not apply to Sixth Amendment ineffective assistance claims, since, without effective assistance, the incarcerated person has been unconstitutionally deprived of their liberty).

47. See JLM, Chapter 13 for an additional explanation of prohibited claims.

decreased your chance of winning on the issue? Did your lawyer fail to raise the issue on direct appeal?⁴⁸ and

- (3) Argue that the claim is only prohibited because of your lawyer's ineffectiveness. Then show that if your lawyer had not been ineffective in this way, this claim would have succeeded. Remember you must plead both the "deficient performance" prong and the "prejudice" prong of the Strickland test. This means you must both (a) point out the specific failures of your lawyer and (b) show that your lawyer's failures to correct or address the issues hurt your case.

Note that in addition to re-framing the barred claim as an ineffective counsel claim, you should still raise the claim separately, alleging that counsel's ineffectiveness constitutes "cause and prejudice" for any procedural default.⁴⁹

D. Common Ineffective Assistance of Counsel Claims

Below are some of the most common ineffective counsel claims that have succeeded. This does not mean that these claims are always successful or that this list includes every possible ineffective counsel claim. When you plead these claims, be sure to check the case law in your state.

- (1) Counsel is not qualified to practice law;⁵⁰
- (2) Counsel had a conflict of interest;⁵¹
- (3) Counsel failed to investigate⁵² or perform certain pretrial functions;⁵³
- (4) Counsel failed to properly select a jury;⁵⁴

48. Jackson v. Leonardo, 162 F.3d 81, 84–87 (2d Cir. 1998) is an excellent example of how to turn a procedurally barred claim into a successful claim of ineffectiveness. In Jackson, the Court of Appeals held that the defendant's double jeopardy claim was procedurally barred, but granted relief on the defendant's claim that his appellate counsel was ineffective for failing to raise the double jeopardy claim.

49. See, e.g., Williams v. Anderson, 460 F.3d 789, 799–801 (6th Cir. 2006) (finding that appellate counsel's ineffectiveness in raising trial counsel ineffectiveness claim on direct appeal constituted "cause and prejudice" for the procedural default that it caused).

50. See United States v. Novak, 903 F.2d 883, 890 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that "counsel" does not include an individual who presents himself as a lawyer but obtains admission to the bar under false pretenses). See also Solina v. United States, 709 F.2d 160, 167–169 (2d Cir. 1983) (requiring reversal where defendant was unaware that counsel was unlicensed to practice law in any state, and "the lack of such authorization stemmed from failure to seek it or from its denial for a reason going to legal ability, such as failure to pass a bar examination, or want of moral character"); but see Waterhouse v. Rodriguez, 848 F.2d 375, 382–383 (2d Cir. 1988) (framing rule to exclude situation where licensed attorney is unknowingly disbarred during trial).

51. See the discussion in Part C(1)(c) of this Chapter.

52. See Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 535–538, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2542–2544, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 493–495 (2003) (finding decision of counsel not to expand investigation of petitioner's life history for mitigating evidence beyond pre-sentence investigation report and department of social services records fell short of prevailing professional standards and amounted to ineffective assistance); Appel v. Horn, 250 F.3d 203, 215–218 (3d Cir. 2001) (finding counsel's failure to investigate or prepare for the petitioner's competency determination violated his right to effective assistance and merited granting habeas corpus relief); People v. LaBree, 34 N.Y.2d 257, 259–261, 313 N.E.2d 730, 731–732, 357 N.Y.S.2d 412, 413–415 (1974) (finding ineffective assistance based on counsel's inadequate investigation and preparation); see also Henry v. Poole, 409 F.3d 48, 65–67 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding counsel's failure to investigate led counsel to present alibi defense for the wrong date and helped an prosecution's otherwise weak prosecution case).

53. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 385–391, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2588–2591, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 326–329 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel failed to conduct any pretrial discovery and failed to file timely motion to suppress illegally seized evidence); Gersten v. Senkowski, 426 F.3d 588, 609–615 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that attorney's failure to seek medical expert consultation for the defense or to investigate critical government evidence constituted ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Donovan, 184 A.D.2d 654, 654–656, 585 N.Y.S.2d 70, 71–72 (2d Dept. 1992) (ordering a new trial for ineffective assistance of counsel after attorney did not move to suppress certain evidence and failed to conduct an adequate investigation before the trial).

54. See Johnson v. Armontrout, 961 F.2d 748, 755–756 (8th Cir. 1992) (finding ineffective assistance where

- (5) Counsel failed to pursue defenses available to defendant;⁵⁵
- (6) Counsel did not properly advise defendant about a plea;⁵⁶
- (7) Counsel did not advise non-citizen defendant of possible deportation risks of a guilty plea;⁵⁷
- (8) Counsel failed to use important evidence or testimony at trial;⁵⁸ evidence showed that at least two jurors were biased, and counsel failed to request removal of those jurors for cause); Hollis v. Davis, 912 F.2d 1343, 1350–1352 (11th Cir. 1990) (finding ineffective assistance where trial counsel failed to challenge the racial composition of a jury chosen in 1959 when African-Americans were systematically excluded from the list of potential jurors).

55. See Wilcox v. McGee, 241 F.3d 1242, 1246 (9th Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel failed to move at a second trial to dismiss an indictment barred by double jeopardy); Jackson v. Leonardo, 162 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that appellate counsel's failure to raise the obvious double jeopardy claim constituted ineffective assistance); DeLuca v. Lord, 77 F.3d 578, 590 (2d Cir. 1996) (determining that counsel's failure to pursue an extreme emotional disturbance defense constituted ineffective assistance when a reasonable probability existed that a jury would have found this defense persuasive and would have reduced defendant's liability from second degree murder to first degree manslaughter). However, defense counsel does not have to pursue defenses that she believes are futile, even if it is the only defense available and there is nothing to lose by pursuing it. See Knowles v. Mirzayance, 556 U.S. 111, 123–128, 129 S. Ct. 1411, 1420–1422, 173 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262–265 (2009).

56. The Supreme Court in Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 57, 106 S. Ct. 366, 370, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 209 (1985), held that the two-prong Strickland standard is “applicable to ineffective-assistance claims arising out of the plea process.” Hill claimed his guilty plea was induced by false information about his parole eligibility. The Court held that if a defendant claims that he pleaded guilty because of ineffective assistance of counsel, the second prong of the Strickland test would be satisfied by showing “a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, he would not have pleaded guilty and would have insisted on going to trial.” Hill v. Lockhart, 474 U.S. 52, 59, 106 S. Ct. 366, 370, 88 L. Ed. 2d 203, 210 (1985); see also Meyers v. Gillis, 142 F.3d 664, 666–670 (3d Cir. 1998) (finding the Strickland test satisfied and granting habeas relief where defendant's attorney claimed that defendant would be eligible for parole after seven years, though law required mandatory life sentence without possibility of parole); United States v. Hansel, 70 F.3d 6, 8 (2d Cir. 1995) (finding counsel provided ineffective assistance in plea bargaining when counsel failed to inform defendant that charges against him were time-barred and defendant would not have otherwise pleaded guilty). Courts have extended this reasoning to the “reverse-Hill” claim where a defendant claims that counsel's ineffectiveness caused the defendant to proceed to trial when there is a reasonable probability that, if correctly advised, the defendant would have accepted a plea offer. See Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 139–142 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that a reasonable probability that the defendant would have accepted a plea if counsel effectively advised him constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel); United States v. Gordon, 156 F.3d 376, 380–382 (2d Cir. 1998) (finding that the large disparity between the defendant's actual maximum sentence under the Sentencing Guidelines and the maximum sentence represented by defendant's attorney indicated that a reasonable probability existed that the proceedings would have gone differently if defendant's counsel had properly advised him); but see Purdy v. United States, 208 F.3d 41, 46–48 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that although attorney should inform each client of the probable costs and benefits of accepting a plea bargain, he need not actually advise client whether to plead guilty or not). Normally, your lawyer is not required to advise you about the collateral consequences of a guilty plea. “Collateral consequences” refers to the effects of a guilty plea that are not a direct result of the plea. For example, if you lose your job because of a guilty plea, that is considered a collateral consequence. In some jurisdictions, however, if your lawyer provides incorrect information about collateral consequences, it may be considered ineffective assistance of counsel. See, e.g., United States v. Couto, 311 F.3d 179, 182–188 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that counsel's misrepresentation regarding the deportation-related consequences of defendant's plea constituted ineffective assistance). However, you should check the law in your state because some states do not allow ineffective assistance claims for collateral consequences, even if your attorney has given you awful advice.

57. The Supreme Court, in Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356, 374, 130 S. Ct. 1473, 1486, 176 L. Ed. 2d 284, 299 (2010), held that a defense attorney committed ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to inform the attorney's client that his guilty plea would lead to automatic removal (deportation) from the country and that he need not worry about the immigration consequences of his plea constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. Thus, counsel must advise non-citizen clients about the deportation risks of a guilty plea. See also Lee v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 1958, 1969, 198 L. Ed. 2d 476 (2017) (explaining that the duty to inform non-citizen clients of the immigration consequences of a guilty plea extends to situations where the non-citizen client would almost certainly be found guilty and thus deportable if he went to trial).

58. See Lindstadt v. Keane, 239 F.3d 191, 201–204 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance in part because trial counsel made no effective challenge to the only physical evidence of sexual abuse, which consisted of expert testimony based on unnamed studies, which were essentially unchallenged at trial and disputed by other easily available published studies); Pavel v. Hollins, 261 F.3d 210, 216–226, 228 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance where trial counsel did not prepare a defense, failed to call two important fact witnesses, and did not call a medical expert); Brown v. Myers, 137 F.3d 1154, 1156–1158 (9th Cir. 1998) (finding ineffective assistance when counsel failed to investigate and present testimony supporting petitioner's alibi); Tosh v. Lockhart, 879 F.2d 412, 414–415 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding defense counsel's failure to try to find alibi witnesses was ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Jenkins, 68 N.Y.2d 896, 897, 501 N.E.2d 586, 586–587, 508 N.Y.S.2d 937, 937–938 (N.Y. 1986) (finding that failure to use crucial evidence, if due solely to attorney's incorrect assumption of its inadmissibility, may be so prejudicial as to be ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Riley, 101 A.D.2d 710, 711, 475 N.Y.S.2d 691, 692–693 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding failure to impeach prosecution witnesses with available records of prior testimony contributed to ineffective assistance of counsel).

- (9) Counsel failed to object to improper use of evidence at trial;⁵⁹
- (10) Counsel failed to request proper jury instructions;⁶⁰
- (11) Counsel failed to object to improper jury instructions;⁶¹

59. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 385–87, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2588–90, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 326–27 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance when counsel failed to move to suppress evidence because of counsel's failure to investigate); Tomlin v. Myers, 30 F.3d 1235, 1237–1239 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding counsel ineffective for failure to move to suppress lineup identification evidence); People v. Wallace, 187 A.D.2d 998, 998–999, 591 N.Y.S.2d 129, 130 (4th Dept. 1992) (finding attorney's failure to object to admission of evidence was ineffective assistance); People v. Riley, 101 A.D.2d 710, 711, 475 N.Y.S.2d 691, 692–693 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding failure to object to inadmissible hearsay evidence, and lack of preparation, and the pursuit of a highly prejudicial cross-examination constituted ineffective assistance).

60. See, e.g., People v. Norfleet, 267 A.D.2d 881, 883–884, 704 N.Y.S.2d 146, 148 (3d Dept. 1999) (finding ineffective assistance where counsel failed to seek jury instructions for lesser offense); People v. Wiley, 120 A.D.2d 66, 67–68, 507 N.Y.S.2d 928, 929 (4th Dept. 1986) (holding that an attorney who fails to request an alibi charge may be found ineffective).

61. See Cox v. Donnelly, 432 F.3d 388, 390 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that counsel's repeated failure to object to erroneous jury instruction constituted ineffective counsel); Everett v. Beard, 290 F.3d 500, 513, 515–516 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that counsel performed deficiently by failing to object on due process grounds to jury instruction which incorrectly permitted jury to convict defendant of first degree murder even if his accomplice intended to cause the death of the victim); Gray v. Lynn, 6 F.3d 265, 269, 271–272 (5th Cir. 1993) (finding counsel fell below objective standard of reasonable assistance, thereby providing ineffective assistance, where counsel failed to object to erroneous jury instructions regarding elements of first degree murder).

- (12) Counsel failed to present or argue an appeal,⁶² or to present a meritorious issue (one that was likely to be successful) on appeal;⁶³ and
- (13) Counsel's conduct at trial was simply so bad that it was ineffective.⁶⁴

E. Conclusion

Ineffective assistance of counsel can be a very useful claim for incarcerated people who had inadequate legal representation at trial or on direct appeal. It can also be useful for incarcerated people who face procedural problems with some of their appellate claims. When you bring your ineffective counsel claim, it is important to check the relevant Chapters of the JLM and other sources to make sure you are using the right procedure. Your ineffective counsel claim will have a better chance of success if you make sure to show the court all the specific reasons why your lawyer performed poorly and all of the ways in which this inadequate representation prejudiced the outcome of your case.

62. See Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999–1000 (2000) (finding that defendant was entitled to effective assistance of counsel when deciding whether to file a notice of appeal, but he must “demonstrate that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel’s deficient failure to consult with him about an appeal, he would have timely appealed” that he must show a reasonable probability that, but for he would have filed the appeal); Garcia v. United States, 278 F.3d 134, 137–138 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel incorrectly advised defendant on the record that he could not appeal and district court confirmed that advice); United States v. Phillips, 210 F.3d 345, 348, 50–53 (5th Cir. 2000) (finding that counsel’s failure to appeal an obstruction of justice sentencing enhancement constituted ineffective assistance); Castellanos v. United States, 26 F.3d 717, 718 (7th Cir. 1994) (when a defendant tells his lawyer to appeal, and the lawyer does not file an appeal by the court’s deadline, the lawyer commits ineffective assistance of counsel); United States v. Peak, 992 F.2d 39, 41–42 (4th Cir. 1993) (finding that counsel’s failure to file for appellate review when requested by defendant deprives defendant of 6th Amendment right to assistance of counsel even if he would have not been likely to win on appeal); United States v. Horodner, 993 F.2d 191, 195–196 (9th Cir. 1993) (finding failure to file timely appeal constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel which prejudiced the defendant if the defendant did not agree to waive the appeal); Bonneau v. United States, 961 F.2d 17, 18–2019, 22–23 (1st Cir. 1992) (finding that where attorney never filed an appeal despite multiple time extensions, ineffective assistance of counsel denied the defendant his constitutionally guaranteed opportunity to appeal); People v. Stokes, 95 N.Y.2d 633, 638–639, 744 N.E.2d 1153, 1156, 722 N.Y.S.2d 217, 220 (2001) (finding defendant’s right to appellate counsel was not adequately fulfilled because appellate counsel’s brief contained no reference to the evidence or to defense counsel’s objections at trial and made clear that counsel did not act like an advocate on behalf of the client); People v. Vasquez, 70 N.Y.2d 1, 3–4, 509 N.E.2d 934, 935, 516 N.Y.S.2d 921, 922 (1987) (finding that defense counsel denied the defendant effective assistance of counsel by characterizing the points defendant wished to raise on appeal in an appellate brief as being “without merit”).

63. See, e.g., Ballard v. United States, 400 F.3d 404, 407–410 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding appellate counsel ineffective for failing to raise meritorious argument that sentence enhancement by judge violated right to jury trial).

64. This kind of general argument is very hard to make successfully. Your claim must include specific information about why your counsel’s conduct was not acceptable. See Tippins v. Walker, 77 F.3d 682, 6886–6890 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding ineffective assistance where attorney slept through substantial portions of the trial such that judge interrupted proceedings to reprimand attorney); Burdine v. Johnson, 262 F.3d 336, 339–341 (5th Cir. 2001) (finding ineffective assistance because counsel was unconscious during substantial portions of trial, leaving the petitioner without representation during critical stages of the trial); People v. Huggins, 164 A.D.2d 784, 786–887, 559 N.Y.S.2d 720, 721–722 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding ineffective assistance where attorney was an alcoholic who had once been disbarred for twenty years and was confused and inattentive at trial).

CHAPTER 13

FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains an important right—the writ of habeas corpus. Habeas corpus is guaranteed by the Constitution to incarcerated people in federal custody whose arrest, trial, or actual sentence violated a federal statute, treaty, or the U.S. Constitution. Because the Constitution is the only federal law that governs state criminal procedures, if you are incarcerated in state custody, you must show a violation of the U.S. Constitution for your habeas petition to succeed. As an incarcerated person (regardless of whether you are in state or federal prison), you can challenge your conviction or sentence by petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus in federal court. By petitioning for a writ, you are asking the court to determine whether your conviction or sentence is illegal. A writ of habeas corpus can be very powerful because if the court accepts your argument, the court can order your immediate release, a new trial, or a new sentencing hearing. This Chapter will teach you more about federal habeas corpus and how to petition for it. Part A will introduce and explain a few basic concepts about federal habeas. The rest of the Chapter will go into more detail. Please note that the term, “federal habeas corpus,” refers to habeas corpus in a federal court. Though subject to different rules, incarcerated people in both state or federal custody may petition for a federal writ of habeas corpus.

1. What Is Habeas Corpus?

Habeas corpus is a kind of petition that you can file in federal court to claim that your imprisonment violates federal law.² The term “federal law” includes not only federal statutes, but also U.S. treaties and the U.S. Constitution. Whether you are incarcerated in state or federal custody, a federal habeas petition claims that your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law. This would be true if any aspect of your arrest, trial, or actual sentence violated a federal statute, treaty, or the U.S. Constitution. If you believe that your imprisonment violates federal law, you can file a habeas petition regardless of whether your trial was in state court or federal court, and regardless of whether you are in a state prison or a federal prison. However, as you will learn in this Chapter, incarcerated people in state custody and incarcerated people in federal custody will have to go through different processes for filing habeas petitions. People incarcerated in state custody may also find it more difficult than incarcerated people in federal custody to win a habeas claim. In both cases, a federal habeas petition claims that your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law.

It is important to understand what a habeas petition is not. A habeas petition is not a “direct appeal” of your conviction. A direct appeal asks the state or federal appeals court (the court above the trial court in which you were convicted) to review the objections you or your lawyer made during the trial. To learn more about direct appeals, read JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.” Federal habeas is a “collateral appeal,” which is different from a direct appeal. A direct appeal challenges the merits of the judgment, but a collateral appeal challenges the procedure leading to the judgment. When you file a habeas petition, you are claiming that a mistake that violated federal law was made during your trial or sentencing. You will probably base this claim on evidence that you did not present at your trial. You can only make a habeas claim in federal court after making other appeals.

* This Chapter was revised by Bridget Kennedy based on earlier versions by Archana Prakash, Edward Smock, Jennifer H. Lin, Reena Sandoval, Allison Rutledge-Parisi, Miriam Lefkowitz, William Duffy, and Mark Sanders. Special thanks to Carrie Ellis, Ryan Marks, and Ronald Tabak.

2. A habeas challenge is a civil action, not a criminal action. It is an action that you bring against the government. Therefore, in habeas petitions, the incarcerated person is often referred to as the “plaintiff,” “petitioner,” or “complainant.” For clarity, this Chapter often refers to the incarcerated person bringing the habeas petition as the “defendant.”

If you are incarcerated for a state crime and lose your direct appeal, your state will have another procedure you can follow to challenge your conviction. This procedure is usually called either “state post-conviction proceedings” or “state habeas corpus.” State habeas corpus is the same thing as a state post-conviction appeal; it is a remedy provided by the state in which you were convicted, and is based on that state’s statutes.³ It is important to remember that state post-conviction proceedings and federal habeas corpus are entirely different claims.

If you are incarcerated in state custody, you will need to “exhaust” your state remedies before being able to file a federal habeas petition. This means that you can only file a federal habeas petition if you have already lost your state direct appeal and your state post-conviction proceedings. In your federal habeas petition, you can ask the federal court to review the claims that you brought in your direct appeal and your post-conviction proceedings in state court. However, in your federal habeas petition, you can only include claims that are based on federal law (federal statutes, treaties, or the U.S. Constitution).

If you are incarcerated in federal custody, you will not file a state post-conviction proceeding. If you lose your direct appeal in federal court, you will be able to file a federal habeas petition right away. This Chapter will often discuss state proceedings. If you are an incarcerated person in federal custody, you should keep in mind that discussions of state proceedings in this Chapter do not apply to you unless the Chapter specifically says that they do.

2. What Will This Chapter Teach You?

Part B (“The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Argument”) will teach you about the basic elements of claims you can bring in a habeas petition and how the courts will treat your claims. Since most habeas petitions include claims of constitutional violations, Section 1 explains the portions of the U.S. Constitution that you are most likely to rely on in your habeas petition. Section 1 also tells you how to discover a habeas claim in your arrest, trial, or sentence. Appendix C lists examples of successful habeas claims. These concrete examples should help you prepare your own petition. Section 2 explains how the court evaluates your claim. Section 2 will teach you how to know which standard the courts use and how to show the court that your rights were violated. Section 3 teaches you how to show the court that the violation of your rights affected your conviction or sentence. Section 3 also discusses the harmless error rule. Section 4 explains the special standard of review that federal courts must use when they review habeas claims brought by people incarcerated in state custody.

Part C (“What You Cannot Raise In Your Habeas Petition”) tells you what violations or issues you cannot complain about in your habeas petition because the writ of habeas corpus is designed to only allow you to obtain relief in specific situations. Section 1 explains that you generally cannot bring habeas petitions that claim Fourth Amendment violations. Sections 2 and 3 discuss laws that are passed after your trial, called new laws. Section 2 discusses what a new law is and explains that you normally cannot bring habeas claims based on new laws. Section 3 explains the exceptions to this rule—the situations in which you can include claims based on a new law in your habeas petition.

Part D (“Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus”) explains the basic requirements of your habeas petition, including that you be in custody, have exhausted state remedies, are not in procedural default, have filed within the proper time limit, and that your petition is not successive.

3. For more information about state post-conviction proceedings, you can look at JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” and JLM, Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.” State post-conviction proceedings for Florida, New York, and Texas are described in JLM, Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Texas.” Remember, state habeas proceedings are the same as state post-conviction proceedings. In this Chapter, the term “state post-conviction proceedings” will be used to refer to both. The term “habeas” will only be used to refer to federal habeas corpus.

Part E (“The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus”) discusses the basic mechanical process surrounding habeas law: (1) when to file, (2) where to file, (3) against whom to file, (4) how to file, (5) what to expect after you file, and (6) how to appeal.

Part F (“How to Get Help from a Lawyer”) discusses, as the title suggests, how to get help from a lawyer for your habeas petition. Even though you are entitled to a lawyer during your trial and direct appeals, you are not entitled to have a lawyer to help with your habeas petition. However, you should still try to get help from a lawyer if you can.

Appendix A is a chart of the appeals process, from your trial through your federal habeas petition. Appendix B provides a checklist you can refer to when putting together your federal habeas corpus petition. Appendix C lists examples of successful habeas claims.

3. When Do People File Habeas Petitions?

Usually incarcerated people file their federal habeas petitions after they have finished their direct appeals and state post-conviction proceedings:

Direct Appeal → State Post-Conviction Appeal → Federal Habeas Claim

Because you are entitled to a lawyer during your direct appeal, you should always file a direct appeal before filing anything else. If you lose your direct appeal, you have to decide whether to file a state post-conviction appeal. You do not have to file a state post-conviction appeal, but most people do in order to meet the “exhaustion” requirement. Exhaustion means that you have to give the state court the chance to hear all of the claims you will raise in your habeas petition first. If you did not raise a claim in your direct appeal, you must file the claim with the state court in a post-conviction appeal before you can file the claim in your federal habeas petition. Because you will often want to raise issues in habeas that you were unable to raise on direct appeal, you must raise them first in your state post-conviction proceeding. Exhaustion is an important requirement, and is discussed in more detail in Part D(2) (“Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal”) below.

After your direct appeal, you might find, or your lawyer might point out to you, errors that occurred during your trial that you did not know about at the time of your direct appeal. These errors may be based on outside information not in your trial transcript. If you want to bring these claims in your federal habeas petition and you are incarcerated in state custody, you must first go to state court and file a state post-conviction appeal with these claims. Then, if you are denied relief, you can bring a federal habeas petition. Your federal habeas petition will be filed after you finish all your state appeals (direct and collateral). There are strict timelines that apply to habeas petitions after you finish your state appeals, discussed in Part D(4) (“Time Limit”) below.

4. Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?

You can find all of the laws covering federal habeas corpus in 28 U.S.C. §§ 2241–66. Section 2241 is the habeas corpus statute, which gives courts the authority to release incarcerated people who are being held in violation of the Constitution. Sections 2242 and 2253 deal with issues relating to a habeas petition, such as evidence and appeals issues. There are additional statutes that apply separately to people in state and federal custody, in Sections 2254 and 2255 respectively.⁴ When an incarcerated

4. The differences between petitions filed by those in state custody and by those in federal custody are mostly procedural, not substantive. This means that regardless of whether you are incarcerated in state or federal custody, if you are discussing substantive issues, you may use cases brought under either 28 U.S.C. § 2255 or under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 as authority in your petition. See Davis v. United States, 417 U.S. 333, 344, 94 S. Ct. 2298, 2304, 41 L.Ed.2d 109 (1974) (“No microscopic reading of § 2255 can escape either the clear and simple language of § 2254 authorizing habeas corpus relief ‘on the ground that (the prisoner) is in custody in violation of the . . . laws . . . of the United States’ or the unambiguous legislative history showing that § 2255 was intended to mirror § 2254 in operative effect.”); United States v. Bendolph, 409 F.3d 155, 163 (3d Cir. 2005) (“[T]o provide guidance to the district courts, as well as to avoid confusion, we . . . should treat § 2255 motions and § 2254 petitions the same absent sound reason to do otherwise.”); Miller v. New Jersey Dept. of Corr., 145 F.3d 616, 619 n.1 (3d Cir. 1998) (“[W]e have followed the practice, whenever we decide an AEDPA issue that arises under § 2254 and the same holding would analytically be required in a case arising under § 2255, or vice versa, of so informing the district person in state custody brings a habeas petition, he brings it under 28 U.S.C. § 2254.⁵ When an incarcerated person in federal custody brings a habeas petition, he brings it under 28 U.S.C. § 2255.⁶ In some circumstances, an incarcerated person in federal custody may bring a habeas action directly under 28 U.S.C. § 2241,⁷ without using Section 2255. Additionally, in cases where the defendant faces the death penalty, special procedures in 28 U.S.C. §§ 2261–66 may be used if the state meets certain standards. See Part F (“How to Get Help from a Lawyer”) of this Chapter for more information. There are also special rules governing procedures for filing and litigating habeas corpus cases. These can be found in the rules that govern each statute, called the “Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts,” and the “Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings in the United States District Courts.”⁸ The Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (“AEDPA”) also affects federal habeas corpus law.⁹ These laws change often, and courts often decide cases changing the interpretation of these laws. So, you should Shepardize the cases included in this Chapter before relying on them.¹⁰

5. Three Rules to Know Before Filing

Habeas corpus law is very complex. Different courts follow different rules. You will need to research cases in your district to understand how your district follows each rule. You should use this Chapter as a general guide to direct more specific research. You should try to get a lawyer,¹¹ but if you cannot, you should not give up on your habeas claim. Although it may seem confusing at first, courts.”). In this Chapter, the procedural differences are discussed as they arise, and you should pay careful attention to them.

5. You are incarcerated in state custody if you are imprisoned for committing a state crime. You are incarcerated in federal custody if you are imprisoned for violating a federal law. Most crimes, including murder and theft, are state crimes. Some crimes, including kidnapping and drug-related offenses, may be federal crimes. If you are detained by a tribal court, you are in neither state nor federal custody. To bring a habeas claim, incarcerated people in the custody of a tribal court should use 25 U.S.C. § 1303. This Chapter does not address habeas petitions by incarcerated people of a tribal court. Because tribes are not subject to the same provisions of the Constitution that states and the federal government are, if you are incarcerated in tribal custody, you should do outside research to find out how habeas law applies to you. A few cases dealing with habeas claims by petitioners in tribal custody are United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 124 S. Ct. 1628, 158 L. Ed. 2d 420 (2004); Poodry v. Tonawanda Band of Seneca Indians, 85 F.3d 874 (2d Cir. 1996); Wetsit v. Stafne, 44 F.3d 823 (9th Cir. 1995).

6. Technically, 28 U.S.C. § 2255 is not a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, but it has the same effect. Therefore, it is still referred to as a habeas petition.

7. Note that the restrictions in § 2241(e) denying federal court jurisdiction to detainees determined to be “enemy combatants” were found to be unconstitutional. Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723, 792, 128 S. Ct. 2229, 2274, 171 L. Ed. 2d 41, 93 (2008).

8. In the United States Code (“U.S.C.”), the rules immediately follow the individual statute.

9. Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, Pub. L. No. 104-132, 110 Stat. 1214 (1996) (codified as amended in scattered sections of 28 U.S.C. and 21 U.S.C.). The changes this law made to the habeas statutes are all incorporated into later versions of the applicable statutes in title 28 of the United States Code. If you have a recent copy of the United States Code or recent supplements to the Code, the habeas statutes will contain the AEDPA changes. Such statutes include 28 U.S.C. §§ 2244, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2261–2266 and 21 U.S.C. § 848.

10. By using LexisNexis and Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

11. Part F of this Chapter (“How to Get Help from a Lawyer”) gives more information on how to get a lawyer for your habeas petition. In most cases, you are not entitled to a lawyer and have to convince the court to give you one. If the court denies your request, you can write your own habeas petition and ask for a lawyer again after the court has seen your petition. However, if you are an incarcerated person on death row, you are entitled to a lawyer under 18 U.S.C. § 3599(a)(2). At least one of your lawyers must have been able to practice before the relevant court for at least five years, and must have at least three years of experience in felony cases in that court. 18 U.S.C. § 3599(b). In McFarland v. Scott, 512 U.S. 849, 859, 114 S. Ct. 2568, 2574, 129 L. Ed. 2d 666, 676, the Supreme Court held that incarcerated people on death row can request counsel before filing a habeas petition and that the court should appoint such counsel.

after reading this Chapter, federal habeas corpus will be easier to understand. Read this Chapter very carefully, and try to understand the rules. Before you read the rest of this Chapter, there are three important rules to be aware of:

(a) File Your Petition Within One Year of the End of Your Direct Appeal.

If you file a state post-conviction appeal, the one-year deadline will be extended while your case goes through the state post-conviction process. This deadline and extension will be discussed at greater length in Part D(4) (“Time Limit”) of this Chapter. It is important for you to remember that time matters, and that you must pay attention to the different time requirements.

(b) Present Any and All Claims You Bring in a Federal Court to the State Court First.

This is called “exhaustion” and is discussed more fully in Part D(2) (“Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal”) of this Chapter. The point of this requirement is to give state courts a chance to correct any violations of federal law that occurred during your trial before you complain to a federal court in your habeas petition. So, if you do not ask the state court for relief first, the federal court will not address your claims.

(c) Be Aware that It Is Almost Impossible to File More than One Habeas Petition.

Courts are very strict about this rule. Therefore, except for in very limited cases, you only have one chance to get your habeas petition right. This means that you have to meet all the deadlines, follow all the court procedures correctly, and include all the necessary information in your first habeas petition. If you make a mistake or miss deadlines, you probably will not be able to ask for habeas relief again. For more information about this, see Part D(5) (“Successive Petitions”) of this Chapter.

6. Plea Agreements May Affect Habeas Corpus Relief

If your conviction was based on a plea, habeas relief may not be available to you. Some federal courts, including the Tenth Circuit and the Middle District of Pennsylvania, have found that if a defendant agreed to serve his sentence without protest, a successful post-conviction challenge such as a habeas petition violates the plea agreement. In some instances, these courts have ruled that, by appealing their sentence, defendants effectively threw away their plea arrangements. In such cases, the courts later convicted them under the charges previously dropped by the agreements.¹² In other words, if your conviction was a part of a plea agreement, your habeas relief may violate that previous arrangement. If the court voids that plea agreement as part of your habeas relief, the prosecutor can try to convict and imprison you under another charge that had been dropped under the plea arrangement. In short, you may still end up in jail on another charge.¹³

12. See United States v. Bunner, 134 F.3d 1000, 1002–1005 (10th Cir. 1998) (concluding that the defendant’s challenge of the plea agreement breaks the contract, so the charges that were dismissed by the plea agreement can be reinstated); United States v. Viera, 931 F. Supp. 1224, 1228–1229 (M.D. Pa. 1996) (same). But see United States v. Sandoval-Lopez, 122 F.3d 797, 802 (9th Cir. 1997) (determining that defendant did not break plea bargain contract by vacating conviction because plea agreement prohibited attacks on the sentence, not the conviction); United States v. Gaither, 926 F. Supp. 50, 51–52 (M.D. Pa. 1996) (holding that defendant did not breach plea agreement by moving to vacate his conviction); DiCesare v. United States, 646 F. Supp. 544, 548 (C.D. Cal. 1986) (holding that government is still bound by obligations in plea agreement when defendant’s conviction was vacated because of intervening change in law). See also United States v. Midgley, 142 F.3d 174, 179 (3rd Cir. 1998) (holding that defendant’s successful challenge of plea agreement did not entitle the government to equitable tolling of the limitations period for charges dismissed under plea agreement).

13. However, the state may be prevented from reinstating charges against you if (1) the statute of limitations has run on the dismissed charges, (2) you already served a substantial part of the sentence you received as part of the plea agreement, and (3) you did not agree to waive the statute of limitations defense in your plea agreement. See Rodriguez v. United States, 933 F. Supp. 279, 281–283 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (ruling that, based on a new court ruling, the conviction should be dropped and that the other charges dropped by the plea agreement cannot be reinstated as defendant could not be returned to her position prior to the plea agreement,

But, at least one federal district court in New York has held that habeas relief does not violate prior plea agreements. The Southern District of New York has granted habeas relief and still held valid the previous plea arrangements. The court held that, after the federal court releases you based on a successful habeas petition, no prosecutor can try to convict you for charges that were dropped by the prior plea agreements.¹⁴ The Ninth Circuit has also held that a grant of habeas relief does not entitle the court to set aside the entire plea agreement and let the State re-prosecute charges that had been dropped as part of the agreement.¹⁵ If you signed a plea agreement and are challenging the validity of your conviction on only one of multiple counts, you should probably assume that the court will set aside the invalid conviction and re-sentence you on the remaining crimes for which you pleaded guilty.

7. Can You Petition for Someone Else in Governmental Custody?

Filing a habeas petition for someone else is often allowed. The petitioner (the person who files the habeas petition) is called a “next friend” and may be a relative, friend, or lawyer. To be allowed to file a petition as a “next friend” in court, you must establish that (1) the incarcerated person cannot bring the petition himself and (2) you are truly dedicated to the best interests of the incarcerated person. Sometimes the courts may require that you have some significant relationship with the incarcerated person.¹⁶ In addition, courts seek proof that the next friend is in a better position to file the petition than the incarcerated person.¹⁷ In general, filing a habeas petition for a competent adult incarcerated person is not allowed if it goes against his wishes.¹⁸ However, courts usually permit parents to petition on behalf of their underage children who are in governmental custody.¹⁹ having already served more than half her sentence; distinguishing this case from other cases where the dropped charges could be reinstated). But see United States v. Myers, No. 96 C 5725, 91 CR 463-5, 1996 U.S. Dist LEXIS 18464 at *1 (N.D. Ill. Dec. 3, 1996) (unpublished) (holding that, after vacating a conviction, a court may resentence the defendant for other convictions that were unchallenged).

14. Rodriguez v. United States, 933 F. Supp. 279, 281–283 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (ruling that the conviction should be dropped based on a new court ruling and that the other charges dropped by the plea agreement cannot be reinstated as defendant could not be returned to her position prior to the plea agreement, having already served more than half her sentence; distinguishing this case from other cases where the dropped charges could be reinstated). But see Gordils v. United States 943 F. Supp. 346, 3513–54 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (holding that after a defendant successfully challenges a conviction for carrying a firearm during a drug crime, the resentencing court has jurisdiction to enhance the sentence for the other unchallenged counts). It is important to note that the Second Circuit has not addressed this issue, and that New York district courts are not in agreement about this case. You will need to examine the cases in your district to see whether this ruling is accepted there.

15. United States v. Barron, 172 F.3d 1153, 1158–1160 (9th Cir. 1999) (holding that a defendant seeking to set aside a conviction for conduct that was innocent under a statute neither breached the plea agreement nor repudiated the agreement and that, as a result, the district court could only vacate the judgment and resentence the defendant on the counts of conviction that still stood, not those counts that had been dropped).

16. See Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 163–164, 110 S. Ct. 1717, 1727, 109 L. Ed. 2d 135, 150 (1990) (noting that the two prerequisites for next friend standing are (1) providing an adequate explanation, such as mental incompetence or disability as to why the real party in interest cannot appear on his own behalf, and (2) showing that the “next friend” is truly dedicated to the best interests of the person on whose behalf he seeks to litigate and has some significant relationship with the real party in interest).

17. See Demosthenes v. Baal, 495 U.S. 731, 735, 110 S. Ct. 2223, 2225, 109 L. Ed. 2d 762, 766 (1990) (per curiam) (holding that though the incarcerated person’s parents filed a petition for him, he was competent to represent his own interests and therefore his parents’ petition must be dismissed); Lonchar v. Thomas, 58 F.3d 588, 588–589 (11th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (denying next friend petition because incarcerated person was competent and did not want a habeas petition filed, but allowing a next friend petition where incarcerated person is incompetent).

18. See In re Zettlemoyer, 53 F.3d 24, 28 (3d Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (denying next friend petition brought by both incarcerated person’s former counsel and his mother because incarcerated person competently chose to waive his right to file habeas petition, but not questioning lawyer’s ability to proceed on an incompetent incarcerated person’s behalf).

19. See Amerson v. State of Iowa, Dept. of Human Serv., 59 F.3d 92, 93 n.3 (8th Cir. 1995) (concluding that although a child was placed with the state department of human services, the child’s mother “was, and still is, a

B. The Fundamental Elements of a Federal Habeas Corpus Argument

This part of the Chapter will give you an idea of what types of claims you can make in a habeas petition and how to prove you are entitled to relief. It is important to remember that if you are incarcerated in state custody, you must present any claim in your habeas petition to the state court first. This requirement, called exhaustion, will be discussed in Part D(2) (“Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal”).

In arguing for federal habeas relief, you will try to show that you are being held in prison illegally because you have been wrongfully convicted in violation of your rights. Because the Constitution is the only federal law that governs state criminal procedures, habeas claims by people incarcerated in state custody must claim a violation of the Constitution. People incarcerated in federal custody may claim violations of other federal laws. The Constitution does not describe in detail what your set of constitutional rights includes. The U.S. Supreme Court interprets the Constitution, which means it defines constitutional rights and violations in the cases it decides.

To argue that you deserve federal habeas relief, you will first need to show which of your federal rights were violated. Section 1 of this Part explains how to find constitutional violations. Appendix C gives many examples and cases to reference. Once you have identified at least one possible violation, you will need to identify the standard the court uses to determine whether the action violated your rights. Section 2 explains both how to find the standard the court uses for your violation and how to show the court that the standard was met.

However, just showing that your rights were violated is not enough to get federal habeas relief. You must also show that the violation of your rights harmed you by having a “substantial effect” on the outcome of your trial. Section 3, therefore, explains how to show the court that the error had a substantial effect on your trial (in other words, that the violation of your rights was not a “harmless” error).

If you are incarcerated in federal custody, once you have shown that your rights were violated and that the violation substantially harmed your trial, you will have shown that you deserve habeas relief. However, there are many specific procedures that you must follow to successfully file for habeas corpus. These procedures are discussed in Part D (“Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus”).

If you are incarcerated in state custody showing that your federal rights were violated and that the violation substantially harmed your trial is not enough to be granted habeas relief in federal court. As a person incarcerated in state custody, you have another very important element to prove in your habeas petition: that the state appellate court was unreasonable in finding either that your rights were not violated or that the outcome of your trial was not affected by the violation. This “unreasonableness” requirement is called the “standard of relief,” and it is a very hard standard to meet. It is discussed in detail in Section 4 of this Part. In sum, in order for you, as a person incarcerated in state custody, to obtain federal habeas relief, you must show that your rights were violated, that the violation was not harmless, and that the state court’s ruling that either 1) your rights weren’t violated and/or 2) any violation was harmless, was unreasonable.

1. Examples of Constitutional Violations

To obtain a writ of habeas corpus, you must show the court that you are in custody in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States.²⁰ You cannot claim that your custody violates the state constitution or state laws because federal habeas corpus relief is only granted if your federal rights have been violated. You can satisfy this requirement by showing that the police, prosecutor, defense counsel, or judge acted (or failed to act)—during your arrest, trial, or sentencing—in a way that proper next friend to bring this petition on behalf of [the child], notwithstanding termination of her parental rights . . .”).

20. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(a). Because there are no federal laws that regulate state criminal proceedings, as a person incarcerated in state custody you must prove that your custody violates the U.S. Constitution. Remember, you can raise state constitutional violations in your petition, but only if they amount to a denial of your rights under the federal Constitution.

violated your constitutional rights. Your constitutional rights can be found in the amendments to the Constitution. Habeas petitions often claim violations of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments.

Below is a list designed to give you a very general idea of what rights these amendments guarantee. A more detailed list in Appendix C gives some examples of habeas claims in violation of these amendments. It is hard to understand what these rights mean in real situations without looking at cases. You should look over the list below. If you think one of these amendments contains a right that may have been violated in your case, refer to the list in Appendix C of this chapter. Locate the amendment you believe was violated in Appendix C, and then read the cases in the footnotes to get a better idea of how courts understand the amendment. Also, carefully read the examples in Appendix C to see if you experienced anything similar to the violations listed there. Remember, these are just general lists, which means that the examples provide only a few of the things found to violate the Constitution. You may have experienced a violation that is not mentioned here and still may be able to get habeas corpus relief.

(a) The Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments

Fourth Amendment: This is the right to be free from unlawful search or seizure. This Amendment is why the police need to have warrants, or probable cause, to search you or take your property.

Fifth Amendment: This Amendment has more than one right in it. First, it has the right to be tried before a grand jury for certain crimes.²¹ Second, it has the right to be tried only once for any specific crime. Being tried more than once for the same crime is called “double jeopardy” and is not legally allowed. Third, it has the right to be free from self-incrimination. This right means that you do not have to disclose evidence that would help the people prosecuting you, which is why you do not have to speak to the police or be a witness in your own trial. Fourth, the Fifth Amendment has the right to due process. Due process basically means a fair procedure, but the courts have identified many elements under the right to due process.

Sixth Amendment: This Amendment also has several rights in it, which apply to your right to a jury trial. First, it has the right to a speedy and public trial. Second, it has the right to an impartial jury.²² Third, it has the right to have your trial in the state and district where the crime occurred. Fourth, it has the right to be told the crime with which you are charged. Fifth, it has the right to confront witnesses against you and to be able to obtain witnesses for your side. Sixth, it has the right to have the assistance of a lawyer.

Eighth Amendment: This is the right to be free from excessive bail, excessive fines, or cruel and unusual punishment.

Fourteenth Amendment: This Amendment again guarantees the right to due process (for an explanation of due process, see the explanation of the Fifth Amendment, above). However, this Amendment applies specifically to states. It makes the rights in the Constitution apply to both federal trials and state trials.

If you are incarcerated in state custody, remember that you may only raise violations of the Constitution and its amendments in your habeas petition. If you are incarcerated in federal custody, you may raise violations of the Constitution and its amendments or violations of federal criminal law.²³

21. This amendment gives you the right to be indicted by a grand jury before you must prove your case against a trial jury. “This amendment guarantees that prosecutions for serious crime may be instituted only by indictment; indictment serves to apprise the accused of charges against him so that he may adequately prepare his defense and to describe the crime with which he is charged with sufficient specificity to enable him to protect against future jeopardy for the same offense.” U.S. v. Haldeman, C.A.D.C.1976, 559 F.2d 31, 181 U.S. App. D.C. 254 (D.C. Circ. 1976), certiorari denied, 97 S. Ct. 2641, 431 U.S. 933, 53 L. Ed. 2d 250, rehearing denied, 97 S. Ct. 2992, 433 U.S. 916, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1103.

22. An impartial jury means you have the right to a jury whose members have not made up their minds on your guilt or innocence before hearing your case and who decide your case fairly. “Constitutional standard of fairness requires that a state defendant have a panel of impartial, indifferent jurors.” Murphy v. Florida, 95 S. Ct. 2031, 421 U.S. 794, 44 L. Ed. 2d 589 (1975).

23. See Title 18 of the United States Code for information on federal criminal law.

2. Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations

Once you have found at least one possible violation that you think occurred, you will need to identify the standard the court will use to determine whether or not that violation happened. A standard is a rule or a test that sets out the requirements a defendant must meet in order to prove to the court that a violation occurred. Most courts use a standard that is “well-established,” and some may have multiple standards.²⁴

After you have identified the applicable standard, you will need to show the court that this standard was met in your case in order to convince the court that a violation of your rights occurred. You do this by demonstrating to the court that the facts of your case match the requirements set out in the standard. This Section will explain how you find the standard and how to show the court that the violation in your case meets that standard.

After you have proven that the standard was met (that you have suffered a violation), you will still need to show that the violation harmed you. To show harm, you will need to convince the court that the violation may have negatively affected the outcome of your trial (discussed in Part B(3) of this Chapter). Also, if you are incarcerated in state court, you will need to show that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that the violation occurred. If the state court ruled there was a violation but it did not harm you, you will need to show that its finding of “no harm” was unreasonable or contrary to federal law (discussed in Part B(4) of this Chapter).

(a) Finding the Standard the Court Uses for Your Violation

To find the standard the court will use to judge your claim, you have to look at past cases in which a habeas petitioner raised the same claim. If you are complaining about a violation from the list in Appendix C, you should check the cases that appear in the relevant footnotes. When you read these cases, you will be able to get an idea of the test the court will use to judge whether a violation has occurred in your case. The court will usually say something like: “To prove a violation, the court should look to the following,” “To prove a violation has occurred, the petitioner needs to satisfy the following requirements,” or “In order to show the right was violated, petitioner has to meet the following test.” This exact language does not appear in every case, but it gives you an idea of the language for which to look to find the standard. Once you find the test used by the courts for the claim you are making, your next step is to figure out if there is any way to argue that your claim meets the test.

Here is one example of a violation and its standard. At your trial, you have a constitutional right to an effective attorney. If you had a bad trial lawyer, you might have a claim that he or she did not represent you effectively at trial. This claim is called an “ineffective assistance of counsel” claim, and it argues a violation of the Sixth Amendment. The case Strickland v. Washington sets out the standard for this type of violation.²⁵ In Strickland, the court established a two-part test (now called the Strickland test) to determine whether your right to effective counsel was violated.

Under the first part, a court evaluates whether your lawyer’s representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness by considering all the circumstances under prevailing (current)

24. For example, if you are arguing that your confession was obtained involuntarily in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, you must meet the standard of proving that you confessed because your will was overtaken. Miller v. Fenton, 474 U.S. 104, 110–112, 106 S. Ct. 445, 449–451, 88 L. Ed. 2d 405, 411–412 (1985). As another example, if you are arguing that you were denied your Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial, you must meet the standard of showing that there was a delay in your trial, that it occurred for no good reason, that you asked for a speedy trial, and that the delay prejudiced you. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972). For a final example, if you are arguing that you were not given counsel during interrogation or discussions with police officers while in custody in violation of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments, you must meet the standard of proving that you did not waive that right voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently. Brewer v. Williams, 430 U.S. 387, 403, 97 S. Ct. 1232, 1242, 51 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1977).

25. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 701, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2071 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 702 (1984) (affirming the denial of defendant’s claim that his lawyer’s advice at and before his death sentencing hearing constituted ineffective assistance of counsel that would require reversal of conviction or sentencing).

professional norms.²⁶ This means that the court will determine the reasonableness of what you are claiming that your attorney did, or failed to do, while representing you.²⁷

Under the second part of the Strickland test, the court will determine whether you were prejudiced as a result of your lawyer's unreasonable representation.²⁸ Prejudice is an important concept in habeas. It means that there is a "reasonable probability"²⁹ that the result of your trial would have been different, and more favorable to you, if the violation (in this example, your lawyer's ineffective representation) had not occurred.³⁰

To meet the standard required to show ineffective assistance of counsel, you must satisfy both parts of the Strickland test.³¹ These two parts are: (1) that your lawyer acted unreasonably and (2) that his or her actions prejudiced you.

Other constitutional violations will have different standards that you meet in order to persuade the court that a violation occurred. There are so many different tests that the JLM cannot explain all of them. However, you can begin to learn about the standards that matter to you by reading and *Shepardizing*³² the cases cited in the footnotes, especially those in Appendix C.

26. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–694 (1984).

27. Note that it is possible that, even if your lawyer made mistakes or failed to provide you with the best representation, the court may still find you have received reasonable representation. That is, the court may find that the representation you received was still above the standard the court uses to determine what is reasonableness. See, e.g., Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 702, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1854, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 931 (2002) (holding that, when counsel is faced with a tough choice, even if his or her decision was arguably mistaken, the court reviewing that decision because of a habeas petition must start with "a 'strong presumption' that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance") (quoting Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 689, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 694 (1984)). Note that a habeas corpus appeal involving the same parties, Bell and Cone, was heard by the Supreme Court in 2009. The holding of that decision does not affect the holding of this one.

28. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–694 (1984).

29. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 698 (1984) (holding that the appropriate test for prejudice is that "there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different," and defining "reasonable probability" as "a probability sufficient to undermine confidence in the outcome").

30. United States v. Lilly, 536 F.3d 190, 197 (3d Cir. 2008) (affirming the denial of an incarcerated person's habeas petition based upon ineffective assistance of counsel by finding that the incarcerated person was not prejudiced by following his attorney's advice to waive a jury trial because the court found that the prosecution offered sufficient evidence for a jury to convict the incarcerated person even if he had had a jury trial).

31. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–694 (1984). Though many incarcerated people may claim ineffective assistance of counsel, proving it is difficult. In Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 369–370, 113 S. Ct. 838, 842–843, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180, 188–189 (1993), trial counsel failed to raise an objection at sentencing, but the Supreme Court held that this was not enough to meet the Strickland "prejudice" test because the defendant must show both that the outcome would have been different and that the defendant was deprived of a fundamentally fair trial with a "reliable result." However, in Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2000), the Supreme Court limited the effect of Lockhart on the Strickland test. In this case, the Supreme Court held that failure to develop mitigating evidence during a capital sentencing hearing, which included severe childhood neglect and abuse, borderline mental retardation, and a favorable prison record, violated the standard of Strickland v. Washington. Additionally, the court held that, by applying the standard in Lockhart to this claim, the Virginia Supreme Court had erred by expanding the scope of when Lockhart applies. The Court stated that Lockhart applies in situations where the ineffectiveness of counsel does not deprive the defendant of a substantive or procedural right to which the defendant is entitled by law. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 391–393, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1512–1514, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416–418 (2000); see also Stallings v. United States, 536 F.3d 624, 628 (7th Cir. 2008) (vacating and remanding to the district court a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel to determine whether there was "prejudice" as defined by Strickland—that is, whether the outcome at the district court level would have been different had counsel raised those claims).

32. By Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

(b) Showing the Court Your Rights Have Been Violated

Once you have identified the standard that must be satisfied to prove your violation, you will need to show the court that your situation meets that standard. You must explain how your federal rights were violated in the court proceedings being challenged. To get federal habeas relief, the facts must support each violation you claim. For example, if you claim that your right to counsel was violated, you should use the *Strickland*³³ standard. Under the Strickland standard, you must show (1) that you had a right to counsel at the time,³⁴ and (2) that adequate counsel was not provided. If you do not tell the court about the facts³⁵ of the violation and how they relate to the relevant standard, your allegations will not entitle you to relief and your claim may be dismissed.³⁶ Remember to give as many details about the violation as you can, but make sure that the facts that you choose to include are relevant to the violation. If a statement relevant to the violation you have claimed was made during your trial, find those exact words in the trial transcript and include them as supporting evidence in your habeas petition. Note in your petition the line and page in the transcript where the words can be found.

You may need to obtain additional information through public records and other means in order to support the facts of your case. This process is called discovery and is generally described in Chapter 8 of the JLM, “Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery.” While a non-capital habeas petitioner is usually not entitled to discovery, you may obtain discovery under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure by showing “good cause” that it is needed.³⁷ You can show good cause when the facts you are alleging, if correct, would entitle you to habeas relief.³⁸

33. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984). For a discussion of habeas petitions based on a violation of your right to counsel, see Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

34. If, for example, a statement you gave to an agent of the prosecution (police, marshals, jailers, bailiffs, etc.) was used against you at trial and you are claiming that the statement was illegal because you did not have counsel present, you must first show that you had a right to counsel at the time the information was given to that agent. See United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274–275, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 124–125 (1980) (holding that the prosecution’s use of a statement made by defendant to an undercover informant after the defendant was indicted violated his 6th Amendment right to counsel); Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 205–206, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1202–1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250 (1964) (ruling that an incarcerated person’s statements to a government informant, where a situation was intentionally created to induce incriminating statements after the incarcerated person’s indictment and without counsel, should not be admitted at trial because it violated his right to counsel). But see Illinois v. Perkins, 496 U.S. 292, 299, 110 S. Ct. 2394, 2399, 110 L. Ed. 2d 243, 253 (1990) (ruling that a defendant’s 6th Amendment rights are not violated by admission of confession he made to undercover agent while in jail because no charges had been filed on the subject of the confession and there was no right to counsel).

35. Courts refer to these facts as “elements” of the violation.

36. See McFarland v. Scott, 512 U.S. 849, 860, 114 S. Ct. 2568, 2574, 129 L. Ed. 2d 666, 676 (1994) (O’Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (“[T]he habeas petition, unlike a complaint, must allege the factual underpinning of the petitioner’s claim.”). Note that a dissenting opinion is an opinion disagreeing with the majority opinion. Where a dissenting opinion disagrees with the majority opinion of the court, it does not have the force of law. It can be influential, however, and provide you some ideas on how to distinguish your case from the law and facts in the majority opinion. A concurring opinion agrees with the basic holding of the majority opinion, but may decide the case on different grounds, or provide alternative explanations for the basis of the holding. Again, concurring opinions can sometimes be very influential and provide different arguments that might help your case, but they do not have as much weight or persuasive force as majority opinions.

37. See Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 6, 28 U.S.C. § 2254; Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, Rule 6, 28 U.S.C. § 2255; Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 908–909, 117 S. Ct. 1793, 1799, 138 L. Ed. 2d 97, 106 (1997) (holding that the petitioner made a sufficient factual finding of “good cause” as required by Habeas Corpus Rule 6(a) to entitle him to discovery).

38. See Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 908–09, 117 S. Ct. 1793, 1799, 138 L. Ed. 2d 97, 106 (1997) (finding that it is the duty of the courts to provide the necessary facilities and procedures for an adequate inquiry if petitioner’s allegations when fully developed may demonstrate that the petitioner is entitled to relief); United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456, 468–470, 116 S. Ct. 1480, 1488–1489, 134 L. Ed. 2d 687, 701–702 (1996) (explaining what a defendant alleging racially discriminatory prosecutorial practices must do to establish entitlement to discovery); United States v. Bass, 536 U.S. 862, 863–864, 122 S. Ct. 2389, 2391–2392, 153 L. Ed.

3. The Harmless Error Rule

(a) General

Once you have established that there was a violation, you will also need to show that you were actually harmed by the violation. When you present your habeas petition, the State will likely argue that even though a violation occurred, the violation did not actually harm you in your trial, and therefore was a “harmless error.” If the court finds that the violation did not cause “actual prejudice” to your case, it will conclude that the error was harmless, and habeas relief will not be granted.³⁹

While the “actual prejudice” standard applies to all federal habeas claims, people incarcerated in state custody will also need to overcome the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act (“AEDPA”) standard. AEDPA limits federal courts’ ability to grant habeas relief when reviewing claims from people incarcerated by the state. This standard is described in further detail in Section (h) below.

(b) The State will likely say that the error was harmless in a clear and timely manner

While you will likely have to overcome the State’s defense that the error was harmless, the court will not automatically assume that the State has made this argument. Rather, the State must come forward and affirmatively plead (come forward and say) that the violation was a “harmless error.”⁴⁰ This is called “raising the ‘harmless error’ issue” or “raising the ‘harmless error’ defense.” If the prosecution does not raise the harmless error issue in a clear and timely manner, it is “waived” (lost), and the court will assume that the violation caused you actual harm. This generally means that the State must raise the “harmless error” defense in its response to your habeas petition.⁴¹ Ultimately, however, it is likely that the State will raise this defense, so you should be sure to explain in your petition how the error harmed you and show how it affected the jury’s decision-making.

(c) Standard of review

The “standard of review” is the level that the trial court’s error must reach in order for the habeas court to overturn its verdict. To determine whether the error was harmless, courts will generally ask whether the error “had a substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury’s verdict.”⁴² In other words, the court will ask whether the error substantially influenced the jury’s decision that you were guilty, either by keeping you from defending yourself or by convincing them of your guilt. If the court finds that it did, it will likely grant habeas relief. If, on the other hand, the court finds that it had only a “slight effect” on the jury, no relief will be granted.⁴³ The only 2d 769, 771–772 (2002) (reaffirming the Armstrong requirements to show entitlement to discovery and adding that raw statistics about overall arrest and charge patterns say nothing about charges brought against similarly situated defendants).

39. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 623, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1713 (1993). This test is sometimes referred to as the Kotteakos test. Before Brecht, the Kotteakos test had been the test used in federal habeas proceedings of people incarcerated in federal custody to determine whether a non-constitutional error was harmless. In Brecht, the court applied the Kotteakos test to all violations including constitutional violations. See Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946).

40. See United States v. Dominguez Benitez, 542 U.S. 74, 81 n.7, 124 S. Ct. 2333, 2339 n.7, 159 L. Ed. 2d 157, 167 n.7 (2004) (stating that using the Brecht standard means that the government has “the burden of showing that constitutional trial error is harmless”); Sanders v. Cotton, 398 F.3d 572, 582 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that the harmless error rule was waived because the state did not raise it in district court); Holland v. McGinnis, 963 F.2d 1044, 1057–1058 (7th Cir. 1992) (holding that the state waived the harmless error defense by waiting until oral argument before the Court of Appeals to present the defense).

41. RANDY HERTZ AND JAMES LIEBMAN, FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE (7th ed., 2016) (citing Miller v. Stovall, 608 F.3d 913, 926–927 (6th Cir. 2010) (“Joining other courts that have considered the question, we now hold that a State waives harmless error when it fails to raise the issue in its response to the habeas petition in federal district court.”)).

42. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 623, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1711 (1993).

43. Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946).

exception to this is if your petition is subject to the AEDPA standard (if you are incarcerated in state custody), which is described in further detail in Section (h) below.

(d) Burden of proof and degree of certainty

The State “bears the burden” of demonstrating that the error was harmless.⁴⁴ This means that, if the State cannot come forwards and convince the judge that the error was harmless, relief must be granted. The key question is: how certain must the judge be that the error caused you actual harm in order to grant relief? How certain the judge must be is called the “degree of certainty.” It is helpful to think of the required degree of certainty along a spectrum, from “possible” that the error was harmful at the low end, to “beyond a reasonable doubt” at the high end. In Davis v. Ayala, the Court notes that it is not enough for you to show that there was a “reasonable possibility” that the error was harmful.⁴⁵ On the other hand, it is not necessary for you to prove that the error was harmful beyond a reasonable doubt, or even that it was “more probable than not” that it was harmful.⁴⁶

Instead, the minimum threshold that courts will use is the “grave doubt” standard, which is somewhere towards the middle of that spectrum. This test says that if the judge reviewing your case is in “grave doubt,” meaning he cannot decide if an error had a “substantial and injurious effect,” then he must find that the error was not harmless.⁴⁷ In other words, if in the judge’s mind, the matter is ties and he is unsure whether the error is harmless or not, he must rule in your favor (that the state has not met its burden of proof). Since the State bears the burden of proving that the error was harmless, the judge must grant you relief in this case.⁴⁸ Of course, any degree of certainty above this threshold (for instance, if the judge believes it is “highly likely” that the error was harmful) will also win you relief. However, anything below this threshold (for instance, if there is merely a “reasonable possibility” that the error was harmful) will not be sufficient.

(e) Factors to be considered

Judges are likely to consider the context when making a harmless error determination. Factors that might be considered are:⁴⁹

- (1) The nature of the right you claim has been violated;
- (2) How much violations of that right are likely to affect the jury’s deliberations;
- (3) What is at stake;
- (4) The phase of the trial that was affected by the error;
- (5) The seriousness of the violation;
- (6) The centrality of the error to the case (how big of a role the error played in your trial);
- (7) The frequency of the violation during trial,
- (8) Whether the error resulted in the exclusion or omission of evidence that could have influenced the jury’s deliberations or whether the absence of that evidence misled the jury about the facts;

44. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2187, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323 (2015) (“in the absence of the ‘rare type of error’ that requires automatic reversal, relief is appropriate only if the prosecution cannot demonstrate harmlessness.”)

45. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2198, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323 (2015).

46. RANDY HERTZ & JAMES LIEBMAN, FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE 1819 (7th ed., 2016).

47. O’Neal v. McAninch, 513 U.S. 432, 436, 115 S. Ct. 992, 994, 130 L. Ed. 2d 947, 952 (1995) (“When a federal judge in a habeas proceeding is in grave doubt about whether a trial error of federal law had ‘substantial and injurious effect or influence in determining the jury’s verdict,’ that error is not harmless. And, the petitioner must win.”). However, the federal judge does not need to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the error was harmless. See Fry v. Pliler, 551 U.S. 112, 121–22, 127 S. Ct. 2321, 2328, 168 L. Ed. 2d 16, 24 (2007) (holding that a court must assess the prejudicial impact of state court’s constitutional error under the “substantial and injurious effect” standard regardless of whether the state appellate court applied the “harmless beyond a reasonable doubt” standard).

48. O’Neal v. McAninch, 513 U.S. 432, 435, 115 S. Ct. 992, 994, 130 L. Ed. 2d 947, 952 (1995).

49. RANDY HERTZ & JAMES LIEBMAN, FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE 1828–1846 (7th ed., 2016).

- (9) If there were multiple errors, the total effect of the errors; and
- (10) Whether the court failed to give “curative instructions” or took other remedial measures to prevent the error from substantially affecting the jury’s deliberations.⁵⁰

Additionally, if your case involves evidence that should not have been admitted, the court will look how much:

- (1) The prosecutor emphasized improper evidence in his closing argument or the judge emphasized improper evidence in jury instructions,
- (2) The improperly admitted evidence was likely to influence the jury’s deliberations, and
- (3) The improperly admitted evidence was not the same as other evidence that was lawfully presented to the jury.

(f) Examples of “harmless error” cases

Below are examples of errors that courts have found to be harmless (cases where the petitioner could not win relief because the error did not harm him). Keep in mind that similar errors will not always be held harmless, as the context of the error (all of the factors listed above) mattered to the court’s decision in these cases. Errors were found to be harmless:

- (1) When the defendant alleged the prosecutor used racial discrimination in selecting the jury, and the state court did not allow the defendant or his attorney to attend the later scheduled hearing on this matter, nor provide transcripts of the hearing.⁵¹
- (2) When the defendant’s right to cross-examine the victim was limited, but not completely denied.⁵²
- (3) When the trial court failed to issue a jury instruction on unlawful imprisonment as a lesser included offense to kidnapping in a felony murder case.⁵³
- (4) When the federal trial court failed to inform the defendant of his right to appeal his conviction, but the defendant was already aware of this right.⁵⁴
- (5) When the trial court admitted evidence that was obtained in violation of the defendant’s Fifth Amendment rights, but the evidence was unrelated to the charges the defendant was appealing.⁵⁵

The following are some situations where courts have found errors to be not harmless (the petitioner could win relief because the error harmed him):

50. Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750, 762, 66 S. Ct. 1239, 1246, 90 L. Ed. 1557 (1946). Brecht also included an exception, stating that a deliberate and especially serious error, or one combined with a pattern of prosecutorial misconduct, might warrant habeas relief even if it did not “substantially influence” the jury’s verdict. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 638 n.9, 113 S. Ct. 1710, 1722 n.9, 123 L. Ed. 2d 353, 373 n.9 (1993); see also Duckett v. Mullin, 306 F.3d 982, 993 n.3 (10th Cir. 2002) (finding that misconduct of the prosecutor does not put error into Brecht’s “footnote nine exemption”); Hardnett v. Marshall, 25 F.3d 875, 879–880 (9th Cir. 1994) (holding that the key consideration to whether the Brecht “footnote nine exemption” will be applicable is whether the integrity of the proceeding was so infected that the entire trial was unfair). As of 2015, however, no court has found for a defendant based on these details.

51. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2207, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323 (2015). (“The most that Ayala can establish is that reasonable minds can disagree about whether the prosecution’s fears [concerning jury selection] were well founded, but this does not come close to establishing “actual prejudice” under Brecht.”).

52. Pettitway v. Vose, 100 F.3d 198, 202 (1st Cir. 1996) (finding that a trial judge’s limitation of the defendant’s right to cross-examine the victim in a child molestation sexual assault case did not have a “substantial and injurious” effect because other evidence in the case was so overpowering).

53. Villafuerte v. Stewart, 111 F.3d 616, 624–625 (9th Cir. 1997) (stating that the lower court’s error did not have a “substantial or injurious” effect on the verdict and adding that the error “was at most harmless and more likely irrelevant”).

54. Peguero v. United States, 526 U.S. 23, 24, 119 S. Ct. 961, 963, 143 L. Ed. 2d 18, 22 (1999) (holding that no harm is caused when a district court fails to advise a defendant of his right to appeal if the defendant knew of his right, and ruling that the court’s error did not entitle defendant to habeas relief).

55. United States v. Suarez, 263 F.3d 468, 484 (6th Cir. 2001).

- (1) When the defense attorney represented two defendants charged with possession of drugs. Both defendants wanted to assert that someone else owned the drugs. The two defendants had conflicting interests because they each may have argued that the other defendant was guilty as part of their defense strategy. The error was not harmless because the attorney had a conflict of interest when he represented the habeas petitioner.⁵⁶
- (2) When a juror lied about his background to get on the jury and made numerous comments that called into doubt the juror's objectivity.⁵⁷
- (3) When the trial court allowed testimony from a co-defendant about his understanding of the defendant's knowledge of fraudulent behavior. The appellate court reversed, finding the admission of this testimony was not harmless error because the testimony related to the case's "central disputed issue" and because of the government's weak case. The testimony of the co-defendant was found to be "vitally important."⁵⁸

(g) Structural Errors

In a few situations, the court will make an exception to the harmless error rule and will automatically assume that you were harmed because of the nature of the violation. These violations are called "per se prejudicial," or "structural errors."⁵⁹ Structural errors are errors that the court will always consider to have violated your right to a fair trial. Therefore, these errors are not subject to the harmless error rule, and you do not have to prove to the court that you were actually harmed.⁶⁰ Structural errors include:⁶¹

- (1) the total denial of the right to counsel,⁶²
- (2) the denial of the right to an impartial judge,⁶³
- (3) unlawful discrimination in the grand jury selection process,⁶⁴

56. McFarland v. Yukins, 356 F.3d 688, 713–714 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that the court's error was prejudicial where the defendant "was forced, over her objection, to go to trial with counsel who was actively representing a co-defendant").

57. The juror in question lied about having a prior felony conviction, which made him ineligible to serve as a juror in California. Green v. White, 232 F.3d 671, 677–678 (9th Cir. 2000).

58. United States v. Kaplan, 490 F.3d 110, 123–124 (2d Cir. 2007).

59. A court rarely finds a violation per se prejudicial. If you find a case where a court described the violation you are claiming as a per se prejudicial violation, a structural violation, or an automatic reversal violation, you should cite the case and show the court how your violation is similar and why it deserves the same treatment as the violation described in that case. Here are some examples of when courts have found violations per se prejudicial: Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999 (2000) (finding per se prejudice when the petitioner is effectively denied the right to an appeal due to ineffective assistance of counsel); Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 647, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1588, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 914 (1997) (finding per se prejudice when the trial judge is not impartial); Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 695–696, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1851, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 927 (2002) (finding per se prejudice when petitioner is denied counsel at a "critical stage" of the proceedings).

60. See Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 310, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1265, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 332 (1991) ("[S]tructural defect[s] affect[] the framework within which the trial proceeds, rather than simply...error[s] in the trial process.").

61. This list is not complete. There are other instances where the court will find the error per se prejudicial (a structural error), and your federal appeals court may include more instances than the Supreme Court.

62. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S. Ct. 792, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799 (1963) (upholding a habeas petition due to Florida's refusal to grant assistance of counsel in a criminal proceeding).

63. But see Richardson v. Quarterman, 537 F.3d 466, 478 (5th Cir. 2008) (denying a habeas petition alleging that a judge had to remove himself from a murder prosecution because the appearance of bias arising from his wife's acquaintance with the victim was only a harmless error and not a structural error requiring automatic reversal).

64. Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 262–264, 106 S. Ct. 617, 623, 88 L. Ed. 2d 598, 609 (1986) (upholding a habeas petition alleging that the defendant was denied equal protection because blacks were systematically excluded from the grand jury that indicted him).

- (4) the denial of the right to self-representation at trial,⁶⁵
- (5) the denial of the right to a public trial,⁶⁶ and
- (6) giving flawed jury instructions in a case where the jury must find guilt beyond a reasonable doubt to find the defendant guilty.⁶⁷

While the court does occasionally find that a structural error has occurred, these cases are rare. Therefore, you should always show the court how you suffered actual harm, even if you believe that a structural error occurred. You should only use the argument that a violation was structural to strengthen your argument that you were harmed by the violation.⁶⁸

(h) AEDPA

As mentioned, the “substantial or injurious effect” standard does not always apply in federal courts when the court is reviewing a state court’s determination that an error was harmless. Generally speaking, if you are a person incarcerated by the state, the federal court will apply the AEDPA standard when reviewing your habeas claim. Specifically, AEDPA states that, if the state court adjudicated your habeas claim on the merits of your case, then the federal court cannot grant relief unless the state court’s decision was unreasonable.⁶⁹ This means that if the state court held that the constitutional error in your case was harmless, your habeas petition will have to convince the federal court that the state court’s decision that the violation was harmless was unreasonable.⁷⁰ Federal courts will generally hold that a state court decision was not unreasonable “if fair-minded jurists could disagree on its correctness.”⁷¹ This task is more difficult than just convincing a court that the error caused harm.

To learn more about the standard that AEDPA imposes for federal habeas review of state court decisions (including whether or not it applies to your case), see Part B(4) of this Chapter.

65. McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 177–178, n.8, 104 S. Ct. 944, 950–951, n.8, 79 L. Ed. 2d 122, 133, n.8 (1984) (denying a habeas petition alleging that the court-appointed standby counsel interfered with the defendant’s presentation because he was allowed to make his own appearances); see also Johnstone v. Kelly, 808 F.2d 214, 218 (2d Cir. 1986) (“[V]iolation of a defendant’s right to proceed pro se requires automatic reversal of a criminal conviction.”).

66. Waller v. Georgia, 467 U.S. 39, 104 S. Ct. 2210, 81 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1984) (holding that the closure of an entire suppression hearing to the public violated the defendant’s right to a public trial).

67. United States v. Allen, 406 F.3d 940, 944 (8th Cir. 2005) (citing Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279, 309, 111 S. Ct. 1246, 1264, 113 L. Ed. 2d 302, 331 (1991)); see also Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 8, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 1834, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35, 45 (1999) (noting structural errors subject to automatic reversal are (1) a complete denial of counsel, (2) biased trial judge, (3) racial discrimination in selection of grand jury, (4) denial of self-representation at trial, (5) denial of public trial, and (6) defective reasonable-doubt instruction).

68. For example, after you show the court that the error was harmful, you might say, “Even if this error were harmless, I would still be entitled to relief because the error was a per se prejudicial violation that affected my substantial rights.” See, e.g., Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 7, 119 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 144 L. Ed. 2d 35, 46 (1999) (stating that there is a “limited class of fundamental constitutional errors that...are so intrinsically harmful as to require automatic reversal (i.e., ‘affect substantial rights’) without regard to their effect on the outcome”).

69. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2198, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323 (2015) (citing AEDPA, 28 U. S. C. §2254(d)). An unreasonableness standard means that the court will only look at whether the lower court’s decision was unreasonable. This means that if the lower court did not find a constitutional error, but the reviewing court does find a constitutional error, the reviewing court cannot reverse the lower court’s decision unless the lower court was unreasonable in not finding an error.

70. See Mitchell v. Esparza, 540 U.S. 12, 18, 124 S. Ct. 7, 12, 157 L. Ed. 2d 263, 271 (2003) (“[The federal court] may not grant [a] habeas petition . . . if the state court simply erred in concluding that the State’s errors were harmless; rather, habeas relief is appropriate only if the [state court] applied harmless-error review in an ‘objectively unreasonable’ manner.”) (quoting Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 75–77, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1174, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 158 (2003)).

71. Davis v. Ayala, 135 S. Ct. 2187, 2199, 192 L. Ed. 2d 323, 334 (2015) (citing Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 101, 131 S. Ct. 770, 786, 178 L. Ed. 2d 624, 640 (2011) (quoting Yarborough v. Alvarado, 541 U.S. 652, 664, 124 S. Ct. 2140, 2149, 158 L. Ed. 2d 398, 407 (2004))).

4. AEDPA Standard of Relief: Showing the Federal Court that the State Court Was Incorrect in Refusing to Grant You Relief⁷²

If you are a person incarcerated by the state, once you have shown the court that your rights were violated and the violation was harmful, you will also need to convince the federal court that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that your rights were violated or that the violation did not harm you when it reviewed your habeas petition. In some cases, where the state court ruled on both of these elements, you will have to show the federal court that the state court was incorrect on both counts. (Remember, you must present your claims to a state court first, so you will only be filing a federal habeas petition if the state court has denied you relief).

In 1996, AEDPA altered 28 U.S.C. § 2254 and set a new “standard of review” for habeas relief for people incarcerated by the state court. A standard of review is the test that the federal court will use to decide whether to overrule the state court’s decision denying you relief. Under AEDPA, you must prove that the state court decision rejecting your habeas petition was either “contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States,”⁷³ or that it was based on an “unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding.”⁷⁴ This is a very high standard and it is not easy to prove. The federal courts do not like to overturn state court decisions. This means that to get federal habeas relief, you cannot just show the federal court that the state court was wrong—you must show that the state court’s ruling was “unreasonable” or “contrary” to the Supreme Court’s interpretation of federal law.

How the federal court will apply the AEDPA standard of review will depend on how the state court handled your state collateral attack.⁷⁵ If the state court made a determination about certain issues, then the federal court will apply the AEDPA standard of review to the state court’s decision-making process. The federal court will look to see if the state court’s decision was “unreasonable” or “contrary” to the Supreme Court’s interpretation of the law. In addition to demonstrating that the state court’s decision-making process was incorrect, you still need to provide facts that show that the state court’s ultimate determination was incorrect as well.

For example, if the state court rejected your collateral attack because it found that a constitutional violation did not occur, and it did not discuss the issue of harmless error, then the AEDPA standard of review will only apply to proving the constitutional violation. Showing that the state court was incorrect will be subject to the AEDPA standard of review, so you will have to prove that the state court was “unreasonable” or “contrary” to the Supreme Court’s interpretation of federal law. In order to do this, you must do two things: (1) show the federal court that the state court was incorrect in failing to find that the violation occurred; (2) show the federal court that a constitutional violation occurred by showing the standard used by the state court was met as discussed in Part B(2) of this Chapter.

If the state court did not rule on the next element of the habeas petition, harmless error, then you will not need to apply the AEDPA standard of review to the harmless error issue. In this example, because the state court never ruled on the harmless error issue, the federal court will look at the harmless error issue “de novo”, which means that the federal court will look at the issue as if it was the first time the issue was raised. The federal court will not consider whether the state court’s decision

72. The standard of review discussed in this Section only applies to people incarcerated in state custody. For people incarcerated in federal custody, appellate courts review questions of law de novo, and questions of fact for clear error. This means that reviewing courts will apply their own judgments to questions of law, but “the factual findings of [the courts] are presumed to be correct.” Smith v. Mann, 173 F.3d 73, 76 (2d Cir. 1999) (citing Nelson v. Walker, 121 F.3d 828, 833 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting Green v. Scully, 850 F.2d 894, 900 (2d Cir. 1998)); see, e.g., Dorsey v. Chapman, 262 F.3d 1181, 1185, n. 4 (11th Cir. 2001) (stating that a factual finding in an ineffective assistance of counsel claim is accorded a presumption of correctness).

73. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

74. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(2).

75. Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 97–104, 131 S. Ct. 770, 783–787, 178 L. Ed. 2d 624, 638–642 (2011). See Part A(1) of this Chapter for an explanation of “collateral attack.”

was unreasonable. This would mean an easier or less stringent standard of review. If, on the other hand, the state court found that a violation occurred, but that it was harmless, the federal court will apply AEDPA's unreasonableness standard of review to the harmless error issue. Also, the state court may have found that there was no constitutional violation but may have ruled on the harmless error issue anyway. Because in such a situation the state court ruled on both elements of the habeas petition, the federal court has to apply the AEDPA unreasonableness standard of review to both elements.

Sometimes people incarcerated by the state present habeas claims to federal courts that have not been previously presented to state courts. This happens when the claim falls under one of the exceptions to the 'exhaustion rule'. You should see Part D(2) of this Chapter below for a discussion of the state exhaustion rule. In these rare circumstances, the AEDPA standard of review will not be used at all. If your claim falls under one of the exceptions to the exhaustion rule, you only need to show the federal court that your rights were violated and that the violation affected the outcome of the trial. Once you have shown this, you will have completed the substantive part of your habeas claim. However, there are still many procedural issues you will have to address to be granted habeas relief. These procedural issues are discussed below in Part D ("Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus") of this Chapter.

Assuming the state court has ruled on your claim, it will be subject, at least in part, to the AEDPA standard of review. This Section discusses this standard in more detail. Subsection (a) of this Section will discuss how to use the first AEDPA test—"contrary to, [or an] unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law as determined by the Supreme Court." Subsection (b) will discuss the second AEDPA test—"unreasonable determination of facts in light of the evidence presented." To give your petition the best chance of success, you should always argue that your situation meets both the "contrary" standard and the "unreasonable application" standard.

- (a) "Contrary to, or involv[ing] an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court"⁷⁶

The Supreme Court explained this test in Williams v. Taylor.⁷⁷ In Williams, the petitioner claimed his attorney had provided ineffective assistance of counsel. The Court held that Mr. Williams had shown his counsel's performance was ineffective and went on to consider whether habeas relief should be granted under this standard.⁷⁸ The Court first held that to be successful, a petitioner must show that the claimed violation was based on federal law that was clearly established by the Supreme Court at the time the state court decided these claims. This means that before the court will consider your claim, you must show that the law you are relying on is not new and that the Supreme Court itself has reviewed the law at some point in the past.⁷⁹ Most of the examples of constitutional violations listed above are not new laws and would be considered for relief. There are some very limited exceptions that allow new law to be used. To learn more about these exceptions read Part C(3) ("Exceptions to the New Laws Rule") of this Chapter.

If you can show that you are relying on clearly established federal law, your next step is to show either that the state or trial court's decision was contrary to that federal law, or that the state or trial court applied the law in an unreasonable manner. Remember, the point of the federal habeas petition is to give the federal court a chance to correct a wrong decision by the state or trial court.

76. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

77. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 384–390, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1508–1511, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 412–416 (2000).

78. In determining that Mr. Williams' counsel was ineffective, the Court found that Mr. Williams had met the Strickland standard. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687–688, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064–2065, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693–694 (1984). Mr. Williams showed a violation of clearly established federal law and/or the Constitution, found the right standard, and showed the Court that he had suffered harm from this violation. To learn more about the Strickland standard, see Part B(2) of this Chapter. For a discussion of the "clearly established" standard, see Part B(1) of this Chapter. To learn how to find the correct standard, see Part B(2) of this Chapter, and for an explanation of how to establish that a violation caused harm, see Part B(3) of this Chapter.

79. For an explanation of how to establish that the law you are relying on is not new, see Part C(2) ("New Laws: The Teague Rule") of this Chapter.

(i) “Contrary” Standard

The first way to show that the court’s decision was wrong is to show that the court’s decision was contrary to (conflicting with) clearly established federal law.⁸⁰ This is a difficult standard to prove. In Williams, the Court held that the contrary standard meant that habeas relief is deserved if the court “applies a rule that contradicts the governing law set forth in [its] cases.”⁸¹ This means that the court must have either applied the wrong standard in a case or interpreted the standard incorrectly. For example, in a case on ineffective assistance of counsel, the Strickland standard governs.⁸² If the court applied a standard that was different from the Strickland standard, then it has applied a standard “contrary” to clearly established law. In this case, relief may be appropriate. Likewise, if the court interpreted the Strickland standard incorrectly, then the decision would also be contrary to federal law, and relief could be granted.⁸³ However, it is difficult to persuade an appeals court that a state court applied the law in a contrary way.⁸⁴

The other way to show that your state court’s decision was contrary to federal law is to show that the Supreme Court considered a case very similar to yours, and it reached a different conclusion from the one reached by your state court.⁸⁵ This means that if you can find a Supreme Court case with similar facts to your case, and the state court ruled differently from the Supreme Court, you might be entitled to relief.⁸⁶ This only applies when you are able to point to a case with similar enough facts.

In order to show that the decision rejecting your claim was contrary to federal law under this part of the test, you must do one of three things: you must (1) show that the court relied on the wrong standard in determining whether a violation had occurred;⁸⁷ (2) show that the court chose the right standard, but then applied it incorrectly to your case; or (3) point to a Supreme Court case with similar facts and claims to your case, in which the Supreme Court ruled differently from how the state court in your case ruled. Put another way, to prove that you deserve relief under this “contrary” standard

80. It is important to note that dicta (plural of dictum) are not considered clearly established federal law. Only Supreme Court holdings are considered law clearly established by the Supreme Court. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 412, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1523, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 429 (2000).

81. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 405, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1519, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 425 (2000) (O’Connor, J., concurring).

82. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693, 698 (1984) (declaring that the standard for establishing ineffective assistance of counsel is whether the attorney’s performance was objectively reasonable and whether deficient performance prejudiced the defense). To learn more about the Strickland standard, see Part B(2) of this Chapter.

83. In Williams, the Court found that the state court decision was contrary to federal law because the court used the test for ineffective assistance of counsel found in Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 366, 113 S. Ct. 838, 841, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180, 187 (1993), instead of the Strickland standard, which should have been used. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 391, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1512, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 416–417 (2000); Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 688, 694, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 2068, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693, 698 (1984).

84. See, e.g., Bell v. Cone, 535 U.S. 685, 693, 122 S. Ct. 1843, 1849, 152 L. Ed. 2d 914, 926 (2002) (noting that AEDPA “modified a federal habeas court’s role in reviewing state prisoner applications in order to prevent federal habeas ‘retrials’ and to ensure that state-court convictions are given effect to the extent possible under the law”).

85. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 406, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1519–1520, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 426 (2000) (“A state-court decision will also be contrary to this Court’s clearly established precedent if the state court confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a decision of this Court and nevertheless arrives at a result different from our precedent.”); see also Ram Dass v. Angelone, 530 U.S. 156, 165–166, 120 S. Ct. 2113, 2119–2120, 147 L. Ed. 2d 125, 135–136 (2000) (stating that “a state court acts contrary to clearly established federal law if it applies a legal rule that contradicts our prior holdings or if it reaches a different result from one of our cases despite confronting indistinguishable facts.”).

86. See Cockerham v. Cain, 283 F.3d 657, 663 (5th Cir. 2002) (finding jury instructions were contrary to federal law because the same instructions had been found to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in Cage v. Louisiana, 498 U.S. 39, 41, 111 S. Ct. 328, 329, 112 L. Ed. 2d 339, 342 (1990)).

87. To find out what standard the court should have applied, see Part B(2) (“Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations”) of this Chapter.

you must point to a violation of a federal right,⁸⁸ identify the standard that applies to that violation,⁸⁹ show the court that the violation in your case meets that standard,⁹⁰ and then argue that the state court used the wrong standard or applied the standard incorrectly to the facts in your case.

(ii) Unreasonable Application Standard

If the state court used the correct standard and was not contrary to federal law in deciding to reject your claim of a federal rights violation, you may still be able to get relief under the second part of the test. This part of the test applies either if the state court used the right standard but applied it to the facts of your case in an unreasonable (unfair) way, or if the state court did not use the correct standard for your violation.⁹¹ There are times when this standard will overlap with the “contrary to” standard,⁹² and you should always argue that your case meets both standards. To show that the state court decision was an unreasonable application of federal law, you have to show that the state court was “objectively unreasonable” in the way it applied the standard.⁹³ Here, “objectively unreasonable” means that the standard was applied to your case in an unfair way, or that the wrong standard was used unfairly.

You should show that there is specific Supreme Court case law that requires the state court to reach a result that it did not reach. State courts will follow Supreme Court case law depending on how similar, specific, and recent the case law is.⁹⁴ You will strengthen your argument that the state court was unreasonable by showing the federal court that the Supreme Court case law was specific and required a specific outcome in your case. The Supreme Court has said that an “unreasonable” application of federal law is more than just an “incorrect” application of federal law.⁹⁵ State courts can go so far as to be “imprecise” and yet still apply the law reasonably.⁹⁶ Therefore, you cannot just show

88. See Part B(1) (“Examples of Constitutional Violations”) of this Chapter.

89. See Part B(2) (“Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations”) of this Chapter.

90. See Part B(4) (“AEDPA Standard of Getting Relief: Showing the Federal Court that the State Court Was Incorrect in Refusing to Grant You Relief”) of this Chapter.

91. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 409, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1521, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 427 (2000) (explaining that the “unreasonable application” standard is met when “a state-court decision unreasonably applies the law of this Court to the facts of a prisoner’s case”); see Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 520, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2534–35, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 484 (2003) (stating that unreasonable application of federal law is when a state court “has misapplied a ‘governing legal principle’ to ‘a set of facts different from those of the case in which the principle was announced’”) (quoting Lockyer v. Andrade, 538 U.S. 63, 76, 123 S. Ct. 1166, 1175, 155 L. Ed. 2d 144, 158 (2003)); Ramdash v. Angelone, 530 U.S. 156, 166, 120 S. Ct. 2113, 2120, 147 L. Ed. 2d 125, 136 (2000) (“The statute also authorizes federal habeas corpus relief if, under clearly established federal law, a state court has been unreasonable in applying the governing legal principle to the facts of the case. A state determination may be set aside under this standard if, under clearly established federal law, the state court was unreasonable in refusing to extend the governing legal principle to a context in which the principle should have controlled.”).

92. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 384–386, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1508–1509, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 412–413 (2000) (explaining that the two standards are not mutually exclusive and anticipating that claims will be brought that implicate both).

93. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 409–410, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1521–1522, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 428 (2000) (explaining that a showing of “objective[] unreasonable[ness]” is not defeated by the fact that one jurist has applied the law in the same manner as the state court); see also Woodford v. Visciotti, 537 U.S. 19, 24–25, 123 S. Ct. 357, 360, 154 L. Ed. 2d 279, 286 (2002) (holding that it is not enough for a federal court to find a state court applied federal law incorrectly, rather, the incarcerated person must show that the state court applied federal law “in an objectively unreasonable manner”) (emphasis added).

94. See Yarborough v. Alvarado, 541 U.S. 652, 664, 124 S. Ct. 2140, 2149, 158 L. Ed. 2d 938, 951 (2004) (concluding the more general the rule being applied, the more leeway the state courts have in making their decisions in case-by-case determinations).

95. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 410–411, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1522, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 428–429 (2000).

96. See Woodford v. Visciotti, 537 U.S. 19, 23–24, 123 S. Ct. 357, 359, 154 L. Ed. 2d 279, 285–286 (2002) (holding that while the California Supreme Court was not precise in applying the Strickland test, its decision was not unreasonable).

the federal court that the state court was wrong—you must show them something more, that it was unreasonable.⁹⁷

It is hard to define what you would need to show to prove that a state court's application of Supreme Court case law was unreasonable. You should try to show that the state court's analysis of your case and reasoning were flawed, as well as its conclusion. You should show that the court's point of view is different from how most people would see the situation, and that it would be hard for a reasonable person to understand how the state court came to its decision. If you can show a significant error in the court's reasoning, you may be able to show that its actions were unreasonable.⁹⁸

Federal Circuit court have different interpretations as to what this “unreasonable” standard means. You should check how your circuit defines “unreasonable” in this context by Shepardizing the main Supreme Court case on this point, Williams v. Taylor,⁹⁹ and finding a case in your circuit that discusses Williams.

97. See Phoenix v. Matesanz, 233 F.3d 77, 83 (1st Cir. 2000) (“We cannot say that [the state court’s] finding was objectively unreasonable, even if we might have found differently.”); Francis S. v. Stone, 221 F.3d 100, 111 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that “[s]ome increment of incorrectness beyond error is required” but “the increment need not be great”); Hameen v. Delaware, 212 F.3d 226, 235 (3d Cir. 2000) (stating that a federal court may not grant habeas relief simply because the state court applied federal law erroneously or incorrectly). See also Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 102, 131 S. Ct. 770, 786, 178 L. Ed. 2d 624, 641 (2011) (stating that a federal court may find a state court’s ruling unreasonable only “where there is no possibility fair minded jurists could disagree that the state court’s decision conflicts with this Court’s precedents”); Middleton v. McNeil, 541 U.S. 433, 437–438, 124 S. Ct. 1830, 1832–1833, 158 L. Ed. 2d 701, 707 (2004) (holding that the state court was not unreasonable when it upheld jury instructions, even though an incorrect instruction was given, because the jury was given the correct instructions at least three other times).

98. See Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 528, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 2539, 156 L. Ed. 2d 471, 489 (2003) (finding that a “clear factual error” in a state court’s analysis “highlight[ed] the unreasonableness of the court’s decision”). See also Rompilla v. Beard, 545 U.S. 374, 389, 125 S. Ct. 2456, 2467, 162 L. Ed. 2d 360, 376 (2005) (finding that the state court’s “fail[ure] to answer the considerations [the Supreme Court] ha[s] set out” amounted to an unreasonable decision on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel); Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 140 (2d Cir. 2000) (concluding that the state court’s decision was a “unreasonable application” of the test in Strickland, because it required petitioner to meet a higher standard—certainty that the results of the proceeding would have been different—to establish an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, rather than the “reasonable probability” standard required under Strickland); Washington v. Hofbauer, 228 F.3d 689, 707 (6th Cir. 2000) (concluding that the state court’s application of Strickland was objectively unreasonable where, among other things, the state court erroneously cited Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 106 S. Ct. 2464, 91 L. Ed. 2d 144 (1986) to support its incorrect conclusion that counsel was not ineffective when it failed to object to prosecutorial misconduct in the closing argument).

99. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 409–414, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1521–1524, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 427–31 (2000). The following is a list of sample cases, by circuit, interpreting the unreasonable application standard. See Byrd v. Lewis, 566 F.3d 855, 866 (9th Cir. 2009) (finding that an error in jury instructions is not “structural” when it “affects only an element of the offense, a permissible evidentiary inference, or a potential theory of conviction,” rather than “the overarching reasonable doubt standard of proof”); Jackson v. Edwards, 404 F.3d 612, 628 (2d Cir. 2005) (holding that a trial court applied the law unreasonably by not instructing the jury about a justification defense); McFarland v. Yukins, 356 F.3d 688, 714 (6th Cir. 2004) (finding that requiring the defendant to go to trial with an attorney with a conflict of interest was contrary to clearly established federal law); Miller v. Dormire, 310 F.3d 600, 604 (8th Cir. 2002) (finding that the state court’s application of the harmless error rule to defense attorney’s waiver of jury trial without defendant’s consent was contrary to clearly established federal law because federal law holds that denial of a jury trial is a “structural” error and always harmful); Brown v. Head, 272 F.3d 1308, 1313–1315 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that the lower court decision was not objectively unreasonable and noting that it is the “objective reasonableness, not the correctness per se, of the state court decision that [the reviewing court is] to decide”); Davis v. Strack, 270 F.3d 111, 133 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that the Appellate Division’s decision was “egregiously at odds with the standards of due process propounded by the Supreme Court” and fit within either the “unreasonable application” clause or the “unreasonable determinations of fact” clause); Kibbe v. Dubois, 269 F.3d 26, 37, 39 (1st Cir. 2001) (finding that the state court’s decision was objectively reasonable because it fell within “the universe of plausible, credible outcomes,” and stating that multiple contradictory, reasonable interpretations are likely when there are unresolved legal issues) (quoting O’Brien v. Dubois, 145 F.3d 16, 25 (1st Cir. 1998)); Jermyn v. Horn, 266 F.3d 257, 312 (3d Cir. 2001) (finding that defendant’s counsel had been ineffective for failing to conduct adequate investigation and that the state court’s decision to the

(b) “Unreasonable determination of facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court proceeding”

This Subsection discusses a different standard for getting habeas relief. As you will recall, Part B(4)(a) of this Chapter reviews how to get habeas relief if the state court determination of your claim rested on incorrect law or law that was unreasonably applied. This Subsection is not for when the state court gets the law wrong, but rather when the state court gets the facts of your case wrong. This means that the state court determined the right standard for your case, but (1) did not believe some of the evidence that was presented; (2) understood some of that evidence incorrectly and based a ruling on this misunderstood evidence; or (3) ignored legally relevant facts that it needed to consider in order to reach the correct result.

If the federal court decides that the state court’s understanding of the facts in your case is unreasonable and the state court based its decision on this unreasonable interpretation, then it can grant habeas relief.¹⁰⁰ On the other hand, if the federal court decides that the state court was reasonable in its determination of the facts, it cannot grant relief. A reviewing court will defer to the trial court and start with the assumption that the state court based its decision on a correct reading of the facts.¹⁰¹ It is up to you to prove that the court did not read the facts correctly because it either ignored some evidence or interpreted some evidence incorrectly. You must then prove that the state court decision would have been different if the court had properly considered and applied all of the relevant facts.

The first step is to show the federal court that there was a determination of facts—for example, at an evidentiary hearing or at credibility determinations where the court chose to believe one witness over another. You may not be able to rely on this standard for relief if no facts were determined by the state court. However, if the state court did not determine any facts, but should have, you might obtain relief by arguing that a failure to find facts at all is actually an unreasonable determination of facts.¹⁰² contrary was objectively unreasonable); Boss v. Pierce, 263 F.3d 734, 742 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that the appellate court’s decision was unreasonable and noting that to determine unreasonableness, the court asks “whether the decision is ‘at least minimally consistent with the facts and circumstances of the case’ or ‘if it is one of several equally plausible outcomes,’ . . . [and only granting habeas] if the determination is ‘at such tension with governing U.S. Supreme Court precedents, or so inadequately supported by the record, or so arbitrary’ as to be unreasonable”) (first quoting Hennon v. Cooper, 109 F.3d 330, 335 (7th Cir. 1997); then quoting Hall v. Washington, 106 F.3d 742, 749 (7th Cir. 1997); and then quoting Hall v. Washington, 106 F.3d 742, 749 (7th Cir. 1997)); Martinez v. Johnson, 255 F.3d 229, 243–245 (5th Cir. 2001) (distinguishing the objective standard of unreasonableness from the subjective “debatable among reasonable jurists” standard, and holding that the court’s decision was not objectively unreasonable because a rational trier of fact could come to the same conclusion) (quoting Drinkard v. Johnson, 97 F.3d 751, 769 (5th Cir. 1996)); Bell v. Jarvis, 236 F.3d 149, 162 n.9, 175 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that the state court’s rejection of the plaintiff’s ineffective counsel claim was not objectively unreasonable, and explicitly stating that the “unreasonable” standard should not be equated with the “clearly erroneous” standard); Thomas v. Gibson, 218 F.3d 1213, 1220 (10th Cir. 2000) (applying the Supreme Court’s distinction between erroneous and unreasonable); Hameen v. Delaware, 212 F.3d 226, 235 (3d Cir. 2000) (following Williams by requiring more than error to find unreasonableness).

100. See Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1110 n.6 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that “the state courts’ factual determinations were unreasonable” and that the defendant “rebutted the presumption of correctness of [the state courts’] findings by clear and convincing evidence.”) (citation omitted) (internal quotation marks omitted).

101. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) (“[A] determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting the presumption of correctness by clear and convincing evidence.”); see also Weeks v. Snyder, 219 F.3d 245, 258 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that the presumption of correctness applies to the state court’s implicit factual findings as well as express findings); Bottoson v. Moore, 234 F.3d 526, 534 (11th Cir. 2000) (finding that “[w]hen there is conflicting testimony by expert witnesses, as here, discounting the testimony of one expert constitutes a credibility determination, a finding of fact” to which the presumption of correctness is applied).

102. See Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 1000–1001 (9th Cir. 2004) (finding that a state court’s determination of facts is unreasonable if no finding was made and the court “should have made a finding of fact but neglected to do so”) (overruled on alternate grounds); Nunes v. Mueller, 350 F.3d 1045, 1054–1055 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding that the state court’s “factual” findings were unreasonable when the court made the findings without holding an evidentiary hearing); Mask v. McGinnis, 233 F.3d 132, 140 (2d Cir. 2000) (refusing to give the

The second step is to prove that the state court determinations of fact were unreasonable. One way to do this is to show that the fact-finding procedure the court used was inadequate.¹⁰³ This means that the court made conclusions without looking at the evidence you presented or did not consider some of the important evidence you presented. In other words, this step deals with how the state court went about making factual determinations, not what those determinations were.

The third step in proving that the state court determinations of fact were unreasonable is to show that the determinations the state court made were substantively unreasonable. This means you have to show that the state court's determination of facts was unreasonable and not at all supported by the evidence in the record.¹⁰⁴ The standard for doing this is "clear and convincing" evidence.¹⁰⁵ This means you cannot just assert that the state court determined the facts unreasonably—you actually have to demonstrate to the court, with specific examples, why the state's determination of facts was unreasonable.¹⁰⁶

C. What You Cannot Raise in Your Habeas Petition

Federal law is very particular about what you can raise as a violation of your rights in your federal habeas petition. As stated in Parts A and B of this Chapter, you must show that your imprisonment violates the U.S. Constitution, the federal laws, or the treaties of the United States. Remember, this means that you cannot discuss violations of state constitutions, state laws, or prison conditions, unless your prison condition or sentence amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.¹⁰⁷ You generally may not raise habeas complaints based on illegal search and seizure or based on new law. This section discusses these two situations, as well as the exceptions to these rules.

state court's "factual findings" a presumption of correctness because they were not factual findings but only conclusions).

103. See Caliendo v. Warden of Cal. Men's Colony, 365 F.3d 691, 698 (9th Cir. 2004) (deciding that there is no deference given to a state court's fact findings when those findings were "arrived at through the use of erroneous legal standards"); Nunes v. Mueller, 350 F.3d 1045, 1054–1055 (9th Cir. 2003) (finding that without an evidentiary hearing, there was no need to defer to the "facts" found by the state courts); Bottoson v. Moore, 234 F.3d 526, 533–536 (11th Cir. 2000) (determining that 10 days of evidentiary hearings and contradicting expert witnesses are adequate to support findings of fact); Francis S. v. Stone, 221 F.3d 100, 116 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding an "extensive" record is adequate to credit one expert witness over another).

104. See Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 240–265, 125 S. Ct. 2317, 2325–2340, 162 L. Ed. 2d 196, 214–230 (2005) (finding that the state court's finding of no racial discrimination in jury selection was an unreasonable determination of facts "in light of the evidence presented"); Miller v. Dormire, 310 F.3d 600, 603–604 (8th Cir. 2002) (determining that the state court's finding that defendant had waived his right to a jury was unreasonable when the record was "devoid of any direct testimony from [defendant] regarding his consent to waive trial by jury"); Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1109 (9th Cir. 2000) (concluding that state court's factual determination of competency was unreasonable because it was "conclusionary and not fairly supported by evidence on the record"); Thomas v. Gibson, 218 F.3d 1213, 1228–1229 (10th Cir. 2000) (determining that the court's assumption that "a murderer would not continue to inflict blows after a victim fell unconscious" to support a finding that defendant had inflicted the blows while the victim was conscious was an unreasonable factual finding because other uncontradicted evidence in the record indicated that the victim had been stabbed after death).

105. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) ("[A] determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct. The applicant shall have the burden of rebutting the presumption of correctness by clear and convincing evidence.").

106. See Fisher v. Lee, 215 F.3d 438, 446 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that petitioner failed to demonstrate to the court that the state's factual findings were unreasonable); Torres v. Prunty, 223 F.3d 1103, 1110 n.6 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that the state courts' factual determinations were unreasonable and defendant rebutted the "presumption of correctness" of the state courts' findings "by clear and convincing evidence"); Hooks v. Ward, 184 F.3d 1206, 1231 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner rebutted the presumption of correctness by demonstrating through clear and convincing evidence that the state court's conclusion, that the evidence admitted at trial was insufficient to raise a reasonable doubt as to defendant's intent to kill, was incorrect).

107. The 8th Amendment of the Constitution prohibits cruel and unusual punishment. The Supreme Court defines "cruel and unusual punishment" as the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" that is "grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime." Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 875 (1976).

1. Illegal Search and Seizure

The Fourth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution addresses searches and seizures. Evidence that is gathered in violation of the Fourth Amendment is not allowed to be introduced at trial.¹⁰⁸ Even though introducing illegally gathered evidence into trial violates federal law, the habeas court will rarely listen to complaints about this problem. The Supreme Court has created a different standard of review for this particular kind of federal violation. In Stone v. Powell, the Supreme Court held that you cannot complain about the introduction of illegally obtained evidence in a habeas petition if the state provided you with a “full and fair” opportunity to raise this error at trial and on appeal.¹⁰⁹ All courts have procedures for deciding whether there has been a “full and fair” opportunity to litigate a claim. Because different states may have different standards, you should check the law of the state where you stood trial.

In some lower courts, the “full and fair” opportunity standard is not met when: (1) the state’s procedures do not allow any petitioner in your situation to raise a claim; or (2) the procedures were used incorrectly in your case.¹¹⁰ You should focus your claims on the ways the procedures failed to let you challenge the use of illegally obtained evidence in your trial.¹¹¹ If the state court never considered this claim “on the merits” (i.e., your claim was dismissed for procedural reasons before the court heard or considered your evidence), most courts will find you were denied your “full and fair” opportunity. In other words, you can complain about an illegal search and seizure problem in your habeas petition if the court: (1) never considered whether your factual arguments were right or wrong; or (2) never considered why your factual arguments were right or wrong.¹¹²

108. The 4th Amendment of the Constitution bars illegal searches and seizure. The “exclusionary rule” says that evidence seized by the police illegally may not be introduced in the criminal trial of the victim of the unreasonable search and seizure. See Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383, 393–395, 34 S. Ct. 341, 344–345, 58 L. Ed. 652, 656 (1914) (applying the exclusionary rule only to a federal officer in a federal court); see also Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 655, 81 S. Ct. 1684, 1691, 6 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1090 (1961) (applying the exclusionary rule to states through the 14th Amendment).

109. Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. 465, 494, 96 S. Ct. 3037, 3052, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1067, 1088 (1976).

110. See Capellan v. Riley, 975 F.2d 67, 70 (2d Cir. 1992) (“Review of fourth amendment claims in habeas petitions [is] undertaken . . . : (a) if the state has provided no corrective procedures at all to redress the alleged fourth amendment violations; or (b) if the state has provided a corrective mechanism, but the defendant was precluded from using that mechanism because of an unconscionable breakdown in the underlying process.”). This standard has been adopted in other circuits. See Willett v. Lockhart, 37 F.3d 1265, 1271–1272 (8th Cir. 1994) (adopting the standard in Capellan); Palmer v. Clarke, 408 F.3d 423, 437 (8th Cir. 2005) (applying Willett and therefore the Capellan standard); see also Machacek v. Hofbauer, 213 F.3d 947, 952 (6th Cir. 2000) (finding that if a state has adequate procedural mechanisms for reviewing illegally seized evidence, the federal court may only review an illegal search and seizure claim if those mechanisms failed and the incarcerated person was prevented from litigating his claim); United States ex. rel. Bostick v. Peters, 3 F.3d 1023, 1027–1029 (7th Cir. 1993) (finding that state review of 4th Amendment claims was deficient where defendant was denied the opportunity to testify at a suppression hearing about his version of an encounter with drug enforcement officers).

111. See Capellan v. Riley, 975 F.2d 67, 71 (2d Cir. 1992) (explaining that the focus as to whether a federal court may review a 4th Amendment claim in a habeas petition is the “existence and application of the [state’s] corrective procedures,” not the outcome of those procedures) (emphasis omitted).

112. Here are three examples of cases where the federal habeas court decided that the state court failed to provide a full and fair opportunity to litigate an illegally-seized evidence claim:

(1) In United States ex. rel. Bostick v. Peters, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a conviction of drug possession. The police had searched his bags without a warrant or probable cause. The petitioner raised this issue in a pretrial hearing, but the judge told him he did not have to testify in order to make his claim. The evidence was then admitted, and the petitioner was convicted. The petitioner raised the illegal evidence claim again on appeal, but the appellate court affirmed the conviction without considering the petitioner’s claim. The petitioner then filed a federal habeas petition raising the same claim. The federal appeals court held that the petitioner was not at fault because he reasonably relied on the trial court’s ruling that his testimony was not necessary. United States ex. rel. Bostick v. Peters, 3 F.3d 1023, (7th Cir. 1993).

(2) In Agee v. White, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a murder conviction. The police had brought him to the station twice, first under illegal arrest and then voluntarily a week later. During the Defendants in New York generally have the opportunity to raise illegal search and seizure claims at several different stages during a trial. For example, the defendant may notify the judge of this problem during pretrial hearings and during the trial.¹¹³ The defendant may also raise this type of claim on appeal as long as the claim was properly preserved¹¹⁴ during the trial.¹¹⁵ Full and fair opportunity to raise claims concerning illegally gathered evidence is almost always provided. Therefore, in New York, unless something unusual occurred at your trial, you probably cannot complain about illegal search and seizure in your habeas petition.

Stone's full and fair opportunity test applies only when you claim that the trial court allowed the prosecutor to use evidence that should have been kept out under the Fourth Amendment. So far, this standard has not been applied to other constitutional claims based on amendments other than the Fourth Amendment.¹¹⁶ The Stone rule is a defense that the state can raise to your petition for habeas relief. This means that it is the state's responsibility to raise it in your habeas proceedings and state that you had a full and fair opportunity to litigate your Fourth Amendment claim. If the state does not raise the issue, the rule will not apply. Once Stone has been raised, it is your burden to prove that you did not have a full and fair opportunity to litigate your Fourth Amendment claim. However, it is unlikely that the state will fail to raise the Stone rule, so you should always be sure to show that you did not have a full and fair opportunity to raise the claim in state court. Remember that your lawyer's failure to raise a Fourth Amendment issue might also be grounds for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim.¹¹⁷ second visit, the petitioner made incriminating statements that were later admitted as evidence. At his trial and on state appeal, the petitioner argued that the information given in the second interrogation was "tainted." Both courts, however, ignored the claims. Petitioner argued in his habeas petition that he had not had a "full and fair opportunity" to present the illegal evidence claim because the appellate court ignored his argument. The habeas court agreed that the petitioner did not have a full and fair opportunity to bring this claim earlier, and therefore agreed that the claim was properly before the court in the habeas petition. But after considering the petitioner's argument, the habeas court decided that the second interrogation was not illegal because it occurred a week after the first illegal arrest and was itself voluntary. Agee v. White, 809 F.2d 1487 (11th Cir. 1987).

(3) In Riley v. Gray, the petitioner raised his claim of illegally seized evidence on appeal. The evidence had been taken under a warrant that was based on other evidence obtained in a warrantless search. The appellate court affirmed the conviction on the basis of a procedural rule without considering the facts of the illegal evidence claim. The appeals court granted habeas relief based on the same claim because an "unforeseeable application of a procedural rule" had prevented the petitioner from fully presenting his claim earlier. Riley v. Gray, 674 F.2d 522 (6th Cir. 1982).

113. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 710.40 (McKinney 2009) allows a defendant to raise this claim in a pretrial motion or at trial if the defendant was unaware of the illegal seizure.

114. To preserve your claim, you must make a motion to suppress the evidence and object to its inclusion if your motion does not succeed. See Chapter 9 of the JLM for more information on properly preserved claims.

115. O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 845, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1732, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 9 (1999) (holding that "state prisoners must give the state courts one full opportunity to resolve any constitutional issues by invoking one complete round of the State's established appellate review process"). See Part C(2) ("New Laws: The Teague Rule") of this Chapter for more information on 28 USC § 2254 and its effect on procedural default.

116. See Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 373–375, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2582–2583, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 318–319 (1986) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to claims of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to file a timely suppression motion); Rose v. Mitchell, 443 U.S. 545, 560–561, 99 S. Ct. 2993, 3002–3003, 61 L. Ed. 2d 739, 752–753 (1979) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to an equal protection claim of racial discrimination in the selection of a state grand jury foreman); Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 320–325, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2790–2792, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560, 574–577 (1979) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to claims of due process violations alleging insufficiency of evidence supporting conviction); Withrow v. Williams, 507 U.S. 680, 682–683, 113 S. Ct. 1745, 1748, 123 L. Ed. 2d 407, 413 (1993) (refusing to extend the Stone rule to a claim of Miranda violations). Miranda requires police to take certain precautions when interrogating suspects in their custody, such as informing the suspect that he has a right to remain silent. Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694 (1966).

117. Failure to raise 4th Amendment claims of illegally obtained evidence may amount to ineffective assistance of counsel if the claim of illegal evidence is meritorious and there is a reasonable probability that the defendant would not have been convicted if his 4th Amendment rights had been respected. Kimmelman v.

2. Exceptions to the New Law Rule

Although you should avoid basing your habeas petition on new law, there are some exceptions that allow you to use new law. Remember, you only need to defend your petition as not based on new law or show that your claims fit into an exception if the government raises the issue.

The first exception to the new law rule is retroactive application. If the Supreme Court makes a new law and clearly states that the law applies retroactively, the law will apply to your case even if the law was established after your conviction. For Supreme Court rulings, this will be true regardless of whether you are incarcerated in state or federal custody. Examples of retroactive laws will be given below. However, it is rare for the Supreme Court to declare a new law retroactive.

The Court in Teague v. Lane also mentions specific exceptions to the Teague rule that allow you to bring a habeas petition based on new law.¹¹⁸ It is not yet clear if these exceptions necessarily apply to people incarcerated in state custody. Although AEDPA does not explicitly mention the exceptions to the “clearly established” requirement that Teague sets out, the Supreme Court has suggested that Section 2254 of AEDPA implicitly contains the Teague retroactivity analysis.¹¹⁹ If you are incarcerated in state custody, you should research whether your district has ruled that Section 2254 of AEDPA contains exceptions and whether they are the same exceptions as in Teague. If you are an incarcerated person in a state that has not recognized the Teague exceptions, you most likely cannot use the exceptions below.

There are two exceptions to the Teague rule. The first exception includes two kinds of new law: (1) new laws prohibiting certain types of punishment, and (2) new laws decriminalizing certain behavior. The second exception is for new laws that ensure fundamental fairness at trial. If the law you are relying on is new law, and the new law fits within one of these exceptions, then you may base your habeas claim on the new law.

(a) Exception: Prohibited Punishments and Decriminalized Behavior

(i) Prohibited Punishments

You may raise a new rule of law if it bars a certain type of punishment for a certain crime or for certain defendants.¹²⁰ For example, in Ford v. Wainwright, the Supreme Court prohibited states from imposing the death penalty on insane defendants.¹²¹ In Roper v. Simmons, the Supreme Court held that incarcerated people who were under eighteen years old when their crimes were committed must not receive the death penalty.¹²² If a court decision states that the punishment you received is unconstitutional, you should raise this decision in your petition for federal habeas corpus. Because this is one of the exceptions to the “new law” rule, you can use the decision even if it is a new rule of law. In other words, even if the Court changed the law after your conviction, you can use it.

Morrison 477 U.S. 365, 375, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 2582–2583, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305, 319 (1986). See Part B(2) (“Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations”) of this Chapter for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

118. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 310–312, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1075–1076, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 355–357 (1989).

119. See Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 380 n.12, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1506 n.12, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 410, n.12 (2000) (“We are not persuaded by the argument that because Congress used the words ‘clearly established law’ and not ‘new rule,’ it meant in this section to codify an aspect of the doctrine of executive qualified immunity rather than Teague’s antiretroactivity bar.”).

120. See, e.g., Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 241, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2831, 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 211 (1990) (noting the first Teague exception applies to new rules that decriminalize an entire category of conduct, or to new rules that prohibit a certain kind of punishment for a class of defendants because of their status or offense); Penry v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302, 330, 109 S. Ct. 2934, 2953, 106 L. Ed. 2d 256, 285 (1989) (remanding case for resentencing in light of defendant’s mental disability as a mitigating circumstance).

121. Ford v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 399, 409–410, 106 S. Ct. 2595, 2602, 91 L. Ed. 2d 335, 346 (1986).

122. Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551, 568, 125 S. Ct. 1183, 1194, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1, 21 (2005).

(ii) Decriminalized Behavior

Another exception allows you to use a new rule of law if it “places ‘certain kinds of primary, private individual conduct beyond the power of the criminal law-making authority to proscribe.’”¹²³ What this means is that if the behavior for which you were convicted is no longer criminal under the new rule of law, you can use this new law to petition for habeas relief. For example, in Griswold v. Connecticut, the Supreme Court ruled that the Connecticut law against using contraception violated the constitutional right to marital privacy.¹²⁴ Therefore, the Court reversed the conviction of a Connecticut doctor who was convicted of the crime for giving advice about birth control to a married couple.¹²⁵ Like the other Teague exceptions, this exception rarely applies. For this reason, you should avoid using new rules whenever possible.

(b) Exception: Fundamental Fairness at Trial

You can also raise a new rule of law that requires the police, prosecutor, or judge to follow a procedure in order to ensure the “fundamental fairness” of your trial,¹²⁶ and “without which the likelihood of an accurate conviction is seriously diminished.”¹²⁷ To fit into this exception, the new rule has to involve a “bedrock procedural element.”¹²⁸ For example, in Gideon v. Wainwright, the Court ruled, on due process grounds, that the state needed to appoint counsel for poor defendants facing criminal charges.¹²⁹ This rule might fall under the fundamental fairness exception. By contrast, in Crawford v. Washington, the Supreme Court changed the standard for when out-of-court testimony may be allowed in trial.¹³⁰ However, the Supreme Court recently decided that the Crawford rule may not be applied retroactively.¹³¹

Keep in mind that it is rare that a new rule of law comes within the fundamental fairness exception. The Supreme Court has suggested that it believes that courts have already discovered most of the procedures essential to a fair trial and conviction.¹³² For instance, in 1988, in Arizona v. Roberson, the Supreme Court decided that police interrogation after an incarcerated person had requested a lawyer during interrogation for a separate charge violated the Constitution.¹³³ In 1990, however, the Supreme Court decided that forbidding such interrogations was not essential to the 123. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 311, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1075, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 356 (1989) (quoting Mackey v. United States, 401 U.S. 667, 692, 91 S. Ct. 1160, 1165, 28 L. Ed. 2d 404, 420 (1971)).

124. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 485–486, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 515–516 (1965).

125. See Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 486, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 1682, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510, 516 (1965); see also Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813, 815, 119 S. Ct. 1707, 1709, 143 L. Ed. 2d 985, 991 (1999) (requiring a jury to unanimously agree on which specific violations make up a continuing series of violations for conviction of a continuing criminal enterprise under 18 U.S.C. § 848, and therefore vacating a conviction in which the jury was not unanimous in deciding which specific violations were committed).

126. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 312, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1076, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 357 (1989).

127. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 313, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1077, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 358 (1989).

128. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 315, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1078, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 359 (1989).

129. Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 342–344, 83 S. Ct. 792, 795–796, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799, 804 (1963).

130. Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 68–69, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 1374, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177, 203 (2004).

131. The Court held that because the Crawford rule does not impose an “impermissibly large risk of an inaccurate conviction,” Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406, 418, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1182, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 (2007) (quoting Schriro v. Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348, 356, 124 S. Ct. 2519, 2525, 159 L. Ed. 2d 442, 451 (2004)), and does not “constitute a previously unrecognized bedrock procedural element that is essential to the fairness of a proceeding,” Whorton v. Bockting, 549 U.S. 406, 421, 127 S. Ct. 1173, 1183, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1, 14 (2007), it may not be applied to cases that occurred before the Crawford decision was made.

132. See, e.g., Beard v. Banks, 542 U.S. 406, 417, 124 S. Ct. 2504, 2513–14, 159 L. Ed. 2d 494, 506 (2004) (noting that the Court has “yet to find a new rule that falls under the second Teague exception”); Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 495, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 1264, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415, 429 (1990) (deciding that habeas petitioner's contention, that the 8th Amendment required that the jury be allowed to base its sentencing decision in a capital case upon the sympathy it felt for the defendant after hearing his mitigating evidence, did not constitute a watershed right or rule).

133. Arizona v. Roberson, 486 U.S. 675, 677–678, 108 S. Ct. 2093, 2096, 100 L. Ed. 2d 704, 710–711 (1988).

fairness of the trial or to obtaining an accurate conviction.¹³⁴ Since this “new rule” did not involve any “bedrock” procedural element, the Court concluded it could not be a basis for habeas relief for any incarcerated persons whose conviction became final before Roberson was decided. As another example, in 2005, the Supreme Court decided in United States v. Booker that the federal mandatory sentencing guidelines were unconstitutional.¹³⁵ However, several circuit courts have held that this new rule does not fit under the fundamental fairness exception and may not be applied retroactively.¹³⁶

As you have seen, the Teague exceptions are hard to meet. You should always try to base your habeas claim on old and clearly established law. If you make your claim on new law with a Teague exception, remember that even when you are basing your claim on an exception to the Teague rule, the Teague rule itself is an affirmative defense that the government must assert. You should not raise the Teague rule in your petition. Instead, you should wait to defend the government’s claim that your habeas petition is based on new law. Once the government has argued your petition is based on new law, you should defend your claim by showing the law is either not new law or fits into one of the Teague exceptions just described.

D. Procedures for Filing a Petition for Habeas Corpus

A successful habeas claim will allow the court to vacate, set aside, or correct your present sentence. However, there are strict procedural rules you must follow in order to be successful in a habeas petition. This Part explains these procedural rules.

Although this Part explains the federal habeas corpus procedures for both people incarcerated in state custody and people incarcerated in federal custody, it focuses on the process for person incarcerated in New York State custody. When the procedure differs for people incarcerated in federal custody, this Section will explain the different procedure. People incarcerated in state custody in other states will need to research their state’s procedures. However, you should still read and understand this Section, as many of the procedures will be the same in every state. People incarcerated in state custody will use 28 U.S.C. § 2254 to file a habeas claim. People incarcerated in federal custody will use 28 U.S.C. § 2255 to file a habeas claim.¹³⁷

You must prove some important conditions in your petition. These conditions are complicated and require a great deal of attention. The conditions are:

- (1) you must be in custody;
- (2) you must have exhausted all state procedures before petitioning to a federal court if you are incarcerated in state custody, or you must have given the direct appeals court a chance to hear your petition if you are incarcerated in federal custody;

134. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 416, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1218, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 357 (1990) (noting that interrogating an incarcerated person despite his request for counsel during interrogation for a separate charge might in fact increase the likelihood of an accurate conviction).

135. United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 245–246, 125 S. Ct. 738, 756–757, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621, 651 (2005) (holding that federal sentencing guidelines are recommendations and that the sentencing court can take into account a variety of factors when deciding whether to depart from the guidelines).

136. See, e.g., Lloyd v. United States, 407 F.3d 608, 611–616 (3d Cir. 2005) (determining that the rule announced in United States v. Booker was new and not subject to either Teague exception); Never Misses A Shot v. United States, 413 F.3d 781, 783–784 (8th Cir. 2005) (following other Circuits in determining that the rule announced in Booker was a new rule and not subject to either Teague exception); United States v. Bellamy, 411 F.3d 1182, 1186–1188 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding Booker rule does not apply retroactively because it is a new rule and doesn’t fall into Teague exceptions); Guzman v. United States, 404 F.3d 139, 141–144 (2d Cir. 2005) (holding Booker rule does not apply retroactively because it is a new rule and doesn’t fall into Teague exceptions); Varela v. United States, 400 F.3d 864, 867–868 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding Booker rule does not apply retroactively because it is a new rule and doesn’t fall into Teague exceptions); Humphress v. United States, 398 F.3d 855, 861–863 (6th Cir. 2005); McReynolds v. United States, 397 F.3d 479, 481 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding Booker rule does not apply retroactively because it is a new rule and doesn’t fall into Teague exceptions).

137. Occasionally, a person incarcerated in federal custody will file under 28 U.S.C. § 2241, instead of § 2255. See Part A(4) (“Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?”) for information on when a person incarcerated in federal custody would file under § 2241.

- (3) you must follow all state rules and procedures correctly before petitioning to a federal court if you are incarcerated by the state; and
- (4) the petition must be filed in federal court within a specific time frame.

These conditions are explained in detail in this Part. Section 5 of this Part will also discuss when you can file a second (“successive”) petition.

1. In Custody

When you file your petition for a writ of habeas corpus, you must be “in custody” for the conviction or sentence that you are attacking.¹³⁸ This rule makes sure that you have enough of an interest in the habeas relief.¹³⁹ This is not a difficult condition to fulfill. Courts have interpreted “in custody” broadly. Actual physical custody is not necessary. You are “in custody” as long as you are presently restrained in ways that are not shared by the general public.¹⁴⁰ You are “in custody” if you are in prison, on parole, or on probation.¹⁴¹

If you are claiming that your sentence is illegal, you do not have to be currently serving that sentence in order to meet the “in custody” requirement. You are also considered “in custody” if: (1) you are contesting a consecutive sentence that you have not yet begun to serve,¹⁴² (2) you are contesting a sentence that has been temporarily postponed because you have been released on your own recognizance,¹⁴³ or (3) you are out on bail pending trial or appeal.¹⁴⁴ In fact, you may have already

138. 28 U.S.C. § 2241(c)(1)–(3); 28 U.S.C. 2254(a)–(b); see, e.g., Carafas v. LaVallee, 391 U.S. 234, 238, 88 S. Ct. 1556, 1560, 20 L. Ed. 2d 554, 559 (1968) (noting that the federal habeas corpus statute requires that the applicant be “in custody” when the application for habeas corpus is filed); Finkelstein v. Spitzer, 455 F.3d 131, 133 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that federal courts will consider a habeas corpus petition from a state court judgment only when the petitioner’s custody is in violation of the Constitution or laws or treaties of the United States at the time his petition is filed).

139. See Hensley v. San Jose-Milpitas Mun. Ct., 411 U.S. 345, 351, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1574, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 299–300 (1973) (“The custody requirement of the habeas corpus statute is designed to preserve the writ of habeas corpus as a remedy for severe restraints on individual liberty.”).

140. See, e.g., Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236, 242–243, 83 S. Ct. 373, 376–377, 9 L. Ed. 2d 285, 290–291 (1963) (holding that petitioner, as a parolee, was in custody within the meaning of the habeas corpus statute); Harvey v. City of New York, 435 F. Supp. 2d 175, 177 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding that a petitioner who is on parole or serving a term of supervised release is “in custody” for purposes of federal habeas corpus statutes).

141. See, e.g., Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 437, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2719, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 529 (2004) (“[W]e no longer require physical detention as a prerequisite to habeas relief.”); Garlotte v. Fordice, 515 U.S. 39, 45, 115 S. Ct. 1948, 1952, 132 L. Ed. 2d 36, 43 (1995) (quoting Peyton v. Rowe, 391 U.S. 54, 67, 88 S. Ct. 1549, 1556, 20 L. Ed. 2d 426, 435 (1968)) (“[A] prisoner serving consecutive sentences is ‘in custody’ under any one of them for purposes of the habeas statute.”); Braden v. 30th Judicial Circuit Court, 410 U.S. 484, 498–499, 93 S. Ct. 1123, 1131–1132, 35 L. Ed. 2d 443, 454–455 (1973) (discussing “custody” in one state when the incarcerated person is held in another); Jones v. Cunningham, 371 U.S. 236, 239–240, 83 S. Ct. 373, 375–376, 9 L. Ed. 2d 285, 289 (1963) (noting that aliens seeking entry, persons subject to enlistment in the military, and paroled incarcerated persons are all “in custody”); Jackson v. Coalter, 337 F.3d 74, 78–79 (1st Cir. 2003) (holding that custody includes supervised probation).

142. See Peyton v. Rowe, 391 U.S. 54, 67, 88 S. Ct. 1549, 1556, 20 L. Ed. 2d 426, 435 (1968) (holding that an incarcerated person serving consecutive sentences is “in custody” under any one of them for purposes of the federal habeas corpus statute, even where he is scheduled to serve one of them); Frazier v. Wilkinson, 842 F.2d 42, 44–45 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding that habeas corpus may be used to challenge a sentence that is consecutive to a sentence currently being served where there is reason to believe that the jurisdiction that obtained the consecutive sentence will seek its enforcement).

143. See Hensley v. San Jose-Milpitas Mun. Ct., 411 U.S. 345, 351, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1575, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 300 (1973) (holding that a person is “in custody” for habeas purposes when subject to restraints and rules not shared by the general public); see also Maleng v. Cook, 490 U.S. 488, 491, 109 S. Ct. 1923, 1925, 104 L. Ed. 2d 540, 545 (1989) (per curiam) (noting that a person is in custody when “release from physical confinement . . . was not unconditional”).

144. See Lefkowitz v. Newsome, 420 U.S. 283, 286 n.2, 95 S. Ct. 886, 888 n.2, 43 L. Ed. 2d 196, 200 n.2 (1975) (noting that petitioner was recognized as “in custody” when he was released on bail pending final disposition of his case); see also United States v. Arthur, 367 F.3d 119, 121–122 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that served the sentence imposed for the conviction being challenged. You are still “in custody” as long as you are serving a sentence that is ordered to run consecutively to your challenged sentence.¹⁴⁵ In addition, you are restrained, and so “in custody,” if you must appear in court for trial and cannot leave without permission.¹⁴⁶ At least one court has extended the definition of “in custody” to minors who may suffer future collateral consequences.¹⁴⁷

2. Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal

Before filing a habeas petition, if you are incarcerated in state custody, you must “exhaust” all available state procedures that can correct your unconstitutional conviction or sentence.¹⁴⁸ To “exhaust state remedies” means you must do all that you can to get the state courts to change your conviction or sentence before you can petition a federal court. The purpose of this exhaustion requirement is to give the state courts a chance to correct any mistakes of federal law and to respect the state court’s ability to conduct judicial proceedings.¹⁴⁹ Federal habeas petitions are based on federal law. This exhaustion requirement allows the state court to correctly apply federal law before the federal court steps in. People incarcerated in federal custody do not need to meet any state court exhaustion requirements. However, people incarcerated in federal custody cannot pursue habeas remedies before they have finished the direct appeal process in federal court.

If you are incarcerated in state custody, to meet the exhaustion requirement, you must do two things: (1) give the highest court of the state an opportunity to hear your federal claims; and (2) present these claims fairly to the highest court of the state (called “fair presentation”). The following two sections discuss these two exhaustion requirements. Remember, there are very few exceptions to exhaustion, and these will be discussed below only as a brief outline. It is not safe to rely on these exceptions to exhaustion; you must exhaust state remedies for all your federal claims or you risk losing the chance to bring your federal claims!

While exhausting your claims in state court, it is important to keep in mind the one-year time limit for bringing federal habeas claims.¹⁵⁰ Your state may allow you more than one year to file the state procedures necessary to exhaust a claim, but a longer state time limit does not affect the federal time defendant who was free on bail awaiting surrender date on sentence for federal convictions for mail fraud was in custody and therefore able to seek habeas relief).

145. See Garlotte v. Fordice, 515 U.S. 39, 45–46, 115 S. Ct. 1948, 1952, 132 L. Ed. 2d 36, 43 (1995) (deciding that petitioner who is serving consecutive state sentences is “in custody” and may attack the sentence scheduled to run first, even after it has expired, until all sentences have been served).

146. See Hensley v. San Jose-Milpitas Mun. Ct., 411 U.S. 345, 348–349, 93 S. Ct. 1571, 1573–1574, 36 L. Ed. 2d 294, 298–299 (1973) (holding that a person is in custody when they are released on bail and required to return to court); see also United States v. Arthur, 367 F.3d 119, 121–122 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that defendant who was free on bail awaiting surrender date on sentence for federal convictions for mail fraud was in custody and therefore able to seek habeas relief).

147. See A.M. v. Butler, 360 F.3d 787, 790 (7th Cir. 2004) (finding that a declaration of juvenile delinquency without any further restrictions does not bar a habeas petition when the juvenile will continue to face adverse consequences stemming from that declaration); see also D.S.A. v. Circuit Court, 942 F.2d 1143, 1145–1150 (7th Cir. 1991) (holding that a minor’s release from custody did not bar consideration of habeas petition even though the sentence had already been served where underlying conviction had sufficient collateral consequences such as consideration of the conviction in future juvenile proceedings). But cf. Spencer v. Kemna, 523 U.S. 1, 14–16, 118 S. Ct. 978, 986–987, 140 L. Ed. 2d 43, 54–55 (1998) (determining that a revocation of parole, where defendant has since been released, does not have sufficient collateral consequences to warrant consideration of habeas petition).

148. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)–(c).

149. See Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509, 518, 102 S. Ct. 1198, 1203, 71 L. Ed. 2d 379, 387 (1982) (“The exhaustion doctrine is principally designed to protect the state courts’ role in the enforcement of federal law and prevent disruption of state judicial proceedings.”), abrogated in part by Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 273–279, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1532–1536, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 449–452 (2005) (allowing district courts to stay “mixed petitions,” where some claims have been exhausted and others have not).

150. For more information about time limits for bringing federal habeas claims, see Part E(1) (“When to file”) of this Chapter.

limit. You will still have only one year to file your federal petition.¹⁵¹ You must exhaust all of the claims in your habeas petition in state court first. If you fail to exhaust the process for just one of the claims in state court, and then proceed to federal court, the federal court may dismiss your entire habeas petition.¹⁵² But if your petition is dismissed, it will be dismissed without prejudice. This means that you can leave the federal court to exhaust your claims in state court. Then, once your claims are exhausted, you may resubmit your petition in federal court, and you will not be prejudiced (meaning that you won't have any legal consequences for filing your claim again) for filing a second or successive petition.¹⁵³ But most often, such a dismissal still affects your one-year time limit.

Most courts have found that a state court challenge on a specific claim will “toll”¹⁵⁴ the time limit for your entire habeas petition.¹⁵⁵ This means that, in most cases, the clock will temporarily be stopped on all the claims in your habeas petition, not just for the claims you are making in your present case. In addition, in rare circumstances, the court may issue a “stay and abeyance” order for your dismissed petition,¹⁵⁶ which means you will have a short amount of time to present your unexhausted claims to the state court while your time limit is tolled for your entire petition.¹⁵⁷ If the district court says that your petition contains exhausted and unexhausted claims, you should request a stay and abeyance and explain to the district court that you are concerned that your one-year time limit will expire before you are able to resubmit your fully exhausted petition. In some circumstances you may also be able to delete the unexhausted claims from your petition and proceed only with the exhausted claims.¹⁵⁸ You will need to decide whether proceeding in federal court immediately without the unexhausted claims is a better option than leaving to exhaust the claims in state court and risking the time limit running out for all of your claims in federal court.

(a) Opportunity for Highest State Court to Hear Your Federal Claims¹⁵⁹

Before you can petition for federal habeas corpus in federal court, you must first present each claim you want to include in your petition to the highest court in your state, either through the state

151. The Supreme Court has been strict in enforcing time limits on federal habeas petitions. See, e.g., Holland v. Florida, 560 U.S. 631, 649, 130 S. Ct. 2549, 2562, 177 L. Ed. 2d 130, 145 (2010) (holding that a court may excuse a late habeas petition only in extraordinary circumstances).

152. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (noting that courts may dismiss entire petitions in some circumstances); Rose v. Lundy, 455 U.S. 509, 518–519, 102 S. Ct. 1198, 1203, 71 L. Ed. 2d 379, 387 (1982) (requiring “total exhaustion” of claims in state courts).

153. See Part D(4) (“Successive Petitions”) of this Chapter for more information on successive petitions.

154. “Tolling” means that the running of the time period is paused. Time that is tolled does not count toward the one-year time limit. See Part E(1) (“When to file”) for more information on time limits and tolling.

155. See Sweger v. Chesney, 294 F.3d 506, 520 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that “a properly filed state post-conviction proceeding challenging the judgment tolls the AEDPA statute of limitations during the pendency of the state proceeding”); Carter v. Litscher, 275 F.3d 663, 665 (7th Cir. 2001) (“Any properly filed collateral challenge to the judgment tolls the time to seek federal collateral review”).

156. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (holding that federal courts should issue a stay and abeyance for a mixed petition if petitioner had “good cause” for failing to exhaust the unexhausted claims, the unexhausted claims are “potentially meritorious,” and there is no indication that the petitioner has engaged in tactics with the purpose of delaying the proceedings).

157. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (determining that if a stay and abeyance is issued, district courts should “place reasonable time limits on a petitioner’s trip to state court and back”). See Part E(1) (“When to file”) for more information on tolling and time limits.

158. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (“[I]f a petitioner presents a district court with a mixed petition and the court determines that stay and abeyance is inappropriate, the court should allow the petitioner to delete the unexhausted claims and to proceed with the exhausted claims if dismissal of the entire petition would unreasonably impair the petitioner’s right to obtain federal relief”).

159. The Supreme Court held that, even when a state’s appellate rules do not automatically give you the right to a hearing in your state’s highest court, you must still present all of your claims to that court in order to exhaust your state remedies. In Illinois, for example, a party must petition the Illinois Supreme Court for leave appellate process (often called “direct appeal”) or through a state post-conviction procedure (often called “collateral attack”).¹⁶⁰ The difference between a direct appeal and a collateral attack is explained more in Part A(1) (“What Is Habeas Corpus?”) of this Chapter. A key point is that you must provide the state court with the opportunity to rule on each of your claims before you submit them to federal court. It is not enough that you presented each claim just to the intermediate appellate court in your state. This process, in which you pursue all state remedies available before you can have access to federal court, is called “exhaustion.” You only have to present your federal claims to the highest state court once—you do not have to do it both on direct appeal and in state post-conviction procedures. Most states call their highest court the “State Supreme Court.” However, in New York, the “New York Supreme Court” is actually a lower court, and the “New York Court of Appeals” is the highest state court.¹⁶¹

You can present your claim to the highest state court in one of two ways. First, if you have not appealed your conviction yet and still have time to do so, you can contest your conviction through the state appellate process.¹⁶² You have a right to appeal to an intermediate appellate court.¹⁶³ If the appellate court rejects your claim, you should then “request leave”¹⁶⁴ to appeal to the state’s highest court. Whether the highest state court grants your leave to appeal and then rejects your claim, or simply denies your leave to appeal, you have satisfied the exhaustion requirement by allowing the state court a chance to rule on your claim. You do not need to petition the U.S. Supreme Court for certiorari. In other words, your petition can be reviewed by a lower federal court without having to petition the Supreme Court on direct review first,¹⁶⁵ and you do not need to pursue your claim through a state post-conviction remedy as long as that claim was raised on direct appeal.¹⁶⁶

If you missed the deadline for a direct appeal, or if you neglected to raise a claim in your direct appeal, you must pursue your claim through a state post-conviction procedure to satisfy the exhaustion requirement.¹⁶⁷ In New York, you can choose between two post-conviction remedies: an Article 440 to appeal a decision of the intermediate appellate court. Even though the granting of such a petition for review is not guaranteed, the Supreme Court held that petitioner had not exhausted his claims because the Illinois Supreme Court had not been able to review them. See O’Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 847–848, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1733–1734, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 10–11 (1999) (holding that claims not submitted to the state’s court of last resort in a petition for discretionary review are deemed to be procedurally defaulted).

160. See O’Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 847–848, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1733–1734, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 10–11 (1999) (holding that claims not submitted to the state’s court of last resort in a petition for discretionary review are deemed to be procedurally defaulted); Roberts v. LaVallee, 389 U.S. 40, 42–43, 88 S. Ct. 194, 196, 19 L. Ed. 2d 41, 44 (1967) (determining that repetitious appeals applications to state courts are not required when defendant has already exhausted his remedies to the state courts); see also Grey v. Hoke, 933 F.2d 117, 119–121 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that petitioner’s failure to specifically raise his sentencing and prosecutorial misconduct claims in state court appeals barred him from making these claims in federal habeas proceedings).

161. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for more information on the court system.

162. See Part B(1) of Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for an explanation of the time limits for appealing your conviction.

163. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for a discussion of state appeals.

164. To “request leave” means to ask for permission.

165. See, e.g., Cty. Court v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140, 149 n.7, 99 S. Ct. 2213, 2220 n.7, 60 L. Ed. 2d 777, 787 n.7 (1979) (determining that petitioner did not lose federal power of review by failing to seek certiorari from the Supreme Court).

166. See Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 350, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1059, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 386 (1989) (quoting Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 447, 73 S. Ct. 397, 402, 97 L. Ed. 469, 484 (1953)) (“[O]nce the state courts have ruled upon a claim, it is not necessary for a petitioner ‘to ask the state for collateral relief, based upon the same evidence and issues already decided by direct review.’”); see also Daye v. Attorney Gen., 696 F.2d 186, 190 n.3 (2d Cir. 1982) (“[A] petitioner need not give the state court system more than one full opportunity to rule on his claims; if he has presented his claims to the highest state court on direct appeal he need not also seek state collateral relief.”).

167. For example, if you raise a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, which is usually brought in post-conviction proceedings, rather than on direct appeal, you must bring that claim in state court post-conviction proceedings. See, e.g., Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488–489, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645–2646, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408–09 (1986) (holding that the exhaustion doctrine generally requires that a habeas petitioner raise an motion¹⁶⁸ or a petition for state habeas corpus.¹⁶⁹ You should generally use an Article 440 motion because it is the most modern and has the best-developed state post-conviction procedure.¹⁷⁰ If a New York Supreme Court (the state trial court) denies the claim presented in your Article 440 motion, you should ask for leave to appeal to an intermediate appellate division. Then, if the appellate division does not allow you to appeal, or grants leave to appeal but then rejects your claim, you still have given the highest state court an opportunity to decide your claim and you have fulfilled this part of the exhaustion requirement.¹⁷¹

(b) Fair Presentation

To exhaust your state remedies, you must “reasonably inform” the state court about your federal claim and thus provide the court with a “fair presentation” of the federal claim. This means you must clearly say that you are raising a federal claim or an alleged violation of the Constitution in your state action.¹⁷² When you file a direct appeal or collateral attack in state court, your appeal/attack must mention the same relevant facts and legal theory that you will later include in your petition for federal habeas corpus.¹⁷³ While it is important to provide both the factual basis and legal principles on which your claim relies, some courts have been flexible on the factual requirement.¹⁷⁴ It is not enough to discuss a state claim that is similar to a federal claim.¹⁷⁵ Rather, the Supreme Court has held that you must make specific references to the federal law that forms the basis of each of your claims.¹⁷⁶ Thus, the Court has held that a petitioner does not fairly present a claim if the petition or brief does not tell the state court that the claim is federal in nature.¹⁷⁷ ineffective assistance of counsel claim as an independent claim in state court before it may be raised in federal court).

168. Article 440 motions are discussed in Chapter 20 of the JLM.

169. New York State habeas corpus procedure is explained in Chapter 21 of the JLM.

170. The New York legislature designed the Article 440 motion to simplify and to combine all of the previously existing post-conviction remedies, including state habeas corpus. See Chapter 20, Part B, of the JLM for a discussion of why New York courts prefer Article 440 motions over petitions for state habeas corpus. See also Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for a discussion of exhausting your administrative remedies.

171. See Edkin v. Travis, 969 F. Supp. 139, 141 (W.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding that petitioner had exhausted all state court remedies when the New York State Court of Appeals had denied his leave to appeal).

172. See Duncan v. Henry, 513 U.S. 364, 365–366, 115 S. Ct. 887, 888, 130 L. Ed. 2d 865, 868 (1995) (per curiam) (“If state courts are to be given the opportunity to correct alleged violations of prisoners’ federal rights, they must surely be alerted to the fact that the prisoners are asserting claims under the United States Constitution.”); see also Schneider v. Delo, 85 F.3d 335, 339 (8th Cir. 1996) (noting that in order to fairly present a habeas claim in state court, the factual arguments and legal theories must be present in the state claim).

173. See Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 278, 92 S. Ct. 509, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 445 (1971) (holding that the substance of a federal habeas corpus claim must first be presented to the state courts).

174. See, e.g., Davis v. Silva, 511 F.3d 1005, 1010–1011 (9th Cir. 2008) (holding that a claim was fairly presented when the factual basis of the petitioner’s claim was not presented in a clear narrative, but could be determined from the legal materials provided, including citations to relevant cases, statutes, and regulations and a basic factual description).

175. See, e.g., Casey v. Moore, 386 F.3d 896, 911–914 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that the incarcerated person did not fairly present federal claims to state court when he only cited state cases in his appellate brief).

176. See Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71 (2004) (rejecting the idea that judges, on appeal, can find for themselves the claims based on federal law, and holding that “ordinarily a state prisoner does not ‘fairly present’ a claim to a state court if that court must read beyond a petition or a brief (or a similar document) that does not alert it to the presence of a federal claim”).

177. See Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71 (2004) (“[O]rdinarily a state prisoner does not ‘fairly present’ a claim to a state court if that court must read beyond a petition or a brief (or a similar document) that does not alert it to the presence of a federal claim.”).

These facts and legal principles must show the court that your claim rests, either entirely or partially, on the Constitution.¹⁷⁸ This puts the state court on notice that you are raising a federal claim. You may satisfy this requirement by:

- (1) Citing a specific provision of the Constitution,¹⁷⁹
- (2) Relying on federal constitutional precedents,¹⁸⁰
- (3) Alerting the state court of the claim's federal nature through your claim's substance,¹⁸¹
- (4) Claiming a particular right guaranteed by the Constitution.¹⁸²

To provide a fair presentation to the state, you must clearly show you are claiming a violation of the Constitution.¹⁸³ For example, one petitioner claimed in state court that the admission of certain evidence “infringed on his right to present a defense and receive a fair trial” but mentioned only a state evidentiary law without mentioning any federal constitutional rights.¹⁸⁴ While the petitioner's federal due process rights may have been violated, the court held that because the federal law part of his claim was not “fairly presented” to the state court, the federal court was required to dismiss his habeas

178. See Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 277–278, 92 S. Ct. 509, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 444–445 (1971) (dismissing habeas claim because petitioner failed to specify that his claim stems from the Constitution, even though he raised all of the facts of his claim in state court). You must clearly tell the state court the constitutional, and therefore, federal nature of the claim and permit the state court to decide the federal issue squarely. See Verdin v. O'Leary, 972 F.2d 1467, 1474–1475 (7th Cir. 1992) (alteration in original) (citation omitted) (quoting Dougan v. Ponte, 727 F.2d 199, 201 (1st Cir. 1984)) (“What is important is that the substance of the federal claim be presented fairly. It is incumbent on the petitioner to ‘raise the red flag of constitutional breach.’”).

179. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6–7 (1st Cir. 1994) (finding that petitioner's reference to the 6th Amendment “sufficiently alerted the state courts to the substance of the constitutional claim”); see also Daye v. Attorney Gen., 696 F.2d 186, 192 (2d Cir. 1982) (en banc) (“Obviously if the petitioner has cited the state courts to the specific provision of the Constitution relied on in his habeas petition, he will have fairly presented his legal basis to the state courts.”). But see Gray v. Netherland, 518 U.S. 152, 163, 116 S. Ct. 2074, 2081, 135 L. Ed. 2d 457, 471 (1996) (“[I]t is not enough to make a general appeal to a constitutional guarantee as broad as due process to present the ‘substance of such a claim to a state court.’”).

180. See Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987) (“[A] petitioner may satisfy the exhaustion requirement by . . . reliance on federal constitutional precedents.”); see also Abdurrahman v. Henderson, 897 F.2d 71, 73 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding that defendant's citation to Strickland v. Washington in a brief to the Appellate Division was sufficient to alert the court that defendant was raising a federal claim regarding ineffective assistance of counsel, since Strickland is the leading Supreme Court case on that issue).

181. See Gagne v. Fair, 835 F.2d 6, 7 (1st Cir. 1987) (“[A] petitioner may satisfy the exhaustion requirement by . . . presenting the substance of a federal constitutional claim in such manner that it likely alerted the state court to the claim's federal nature.”); see also Jackson v. Edwards, 404 F.3d 612, 619 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding petitioner had fairly presented his claim to the state court because “the substance of the federal habeas corpus claim [was] clearly raised and ruled on in state court” even though petitioner had failed to explicitly name it as a federal claim). In other words, if a state court rules on the substance of the federal claim, it is considered fairly presented and sufficient for federal exhaustion purposes. However, you must indicate in your petition that the state court ruled on the substance of your federal claim, and therefore, found it to be fairly presented. It is your job to alert the reviewing federal court that the state court knew of your federal claims and ruled on your federal claims. See Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 32, 124 S. Ct. 1347, 1351, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64, 71 (2004) (holding that the federal nature of the claim must be apparent from the brief or petition, not hidden in the opinion of a lower court).

182. See Scarpa v. DuBois, 38 F.3d 1, 6–7 (1st Cir. 1994) (finding that petitioner's reference to ineffective assistance of counsel “sufficiently alerted the state courts to the substance of the constitutional claim”); see also Janosky v. St. Amand, 594 F.3d 39, 44 (1st Cir. 2010) (holding that “the petitioner assiduously pursued a constitutionally focused ineffective assistance claim before all the affected state courts, thus satisfying the exhaustion requirement”).

183. See Duncan v. Henry, 513 U.S. 364, 365–366, 115 S. Ct. 887, 888, 130 L. Ed. 2d 865, 868 (1995) (“If state courts are to be given the opportunity to correct alleged violations of prisoners' federal rights, they must surely be alerted to the fact that the prisoners are asserting claims under the United States Constitution.”).

184. Johnson v. Zenon, 88 F.3d 828, 830–831 (9th Cir. 1996).

petition.¹⁸⁵ While you do not need to cite the Constitution word for word,¹⁸⁶ you must be specific in showing why the claim is federal.¹⁸⁷ You should be as specific as possible in explaining the violation of a federal law to the state court.

Federal courts generally say state remedies are exhausted when you have fairly presented a claim one time to the highest state court.¹⁸⁸ For example, if you raised a particular claim on direct appeal to the highest state court, you do not have to raise it again in state post-conviction proceedings.¹⁸⁹ In short, be sure that you present the same factual arguments and legal theories regarding a federal claim in both your state claims and federal habeas claims, and be sure to state that you are raising a federal claim.

So, what do you do if you discover new evidence about your claim or learn more of the law concerning your claim after presenting your claim to the state court? You can, and should, strengthen your claim by adding this new factual and legal material to your federal petition. Explain to the court that you are only supplementing your pending claim, not adding a new claim. This may also help by giving you more time to file your habeas petition.¹⁹⁰ However, be aware that supplementing a federal petition with new information may lead to the dismissal of your original habeas claim. If the new information that you wish to include in your habeas petition was not presented to the state courts, and state relief is now available to you, then the federal courts will probably dismiss your federal claim.¹⁹¹

It is important to remember to go to state court first in order to exhaust all claims before filing in federal court. If you file first in federal court, go back to exhaust, and then try to amend the federal petition, you risk having the petition dismissed as untimely. Remember, you have a one-year time limit to file your federal habeas petition. Furthermore, your state petition could be your only opportunity to have a judge thoroughly review your claims on the merits. AEDPA, a federal law dealing with federal habeas corpus claims, only allows federal courts to overturn state court decisions in rare circumstances. AEDPA forbids federal courts from granting a writ of habeas corpus unless the state court's consideration of your claims was "contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law" or if the decision was based on an "unreasonable determination of the facts."¹⁹²

185. Johnson v. Zenon, 88 F.3d 828, 830–831 (9th Cir. 1996).

186. See Picard v. Connor, 404 U.S. 270, 277–278, 92 S. Ct. 509, 513, 30 L. Ed. 2d 438, 445 (1971) (quoting Daugharty v. Gladden, 257 F.2d 750, 758 (9th Cir. 1958) ("[W]e do not imply that respondent could have raised the equal protection claim only by citing 'book and verse on the federal constitution.'").

187. See Beauchamp v. Murphy, 37 F.3d 700, 704 (1st Cir. 1994) (emphasizing that in reviewing for exhaustion, the substance of the fair presentment of the federal issue is more important than the form of the presentment).

188. See O'Sullivan v. Boerckel, 526 U.S. 838, 838, 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1729, 144 L. Ed. 2d 1, 9 (7th Cir. 1999) ("State prisoners must give the state courts one full opportunity to resolve any constitutional issues by invoking one complete round of the State's established appellate review process.").

189. However, if you raise a claim for the first and only time in a petition for discretionary review to a state appellate court, you will not meet the exhaustion requirement. See Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 349–351, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1059–1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 385–387 (1989) (stating that presentation of a new claim to a state's highest court on discretionary review does not constitute "fair presentation" for purposes of determining that claim's exhaustion).

190. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(D). See Part (D)(3)(b)(iii) ("Time Limit") of this Chapter for more information on the one-year time limit in which you must file your federal habeas corpus petition. The time limit may also run from the time that new facts could have been discovered through due diligence.

191. See, e.g., Graham v. Johnson, 94 F.3d 958, 970–71 (5th Cir. 1996) (determining that, even though the state waived the exhaustion requirement, the petitioner's extensive new evidence was mostly factual and needed to be presented to state courts).

192. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1)–(2). The standard that federal courts use to review habeas petitions is contained here. For more information about this standard, see Part B(4) ("Standard for Getting Relief") of this Chapter.

(c) Exceptions to Exhaustion

There are few narrow exceptions to the exhaustion requirement. First, you do not need to go to state court if state remedies are unavailable or ineffective.¹⁹³ For example, in North Carolina, a state statute did not allow a defendant who had been convicted to raise an issue in a post-conviction proceeding if he could have raised the issue earlier.¹⁹⁴ Since the state statute did not allow him to raise the issue, there was no state remedy available to him. Because there was no state remedy, the exhaustion requirement did not apply, and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the defendant was not barred from seeking habeas corpus relief.¹⁹⁵ In another case, a court found that state remedies were ineffective to protect the rights of an incarcerated person because he would be raising the same constitutional issue to the state supreme court that a fellow incarcerated person had already raised and lost.¹⁹⁶ In this situation, bringing the same issue before the court would most likely be unsuccessful and would have wasted the resources of the state system. So, the court ruled that he did not need to exhaust his state court remedies.¹⁹⁷

Another exception to the exhaustion requirement may occur after an unusually long and unjustified delay in receiving a ruling in state court.¹⁹⁸ Some federal courts do not require exhaustion when the state courts have unconstitutionally delayed hearing the incarcerated person's appeal for a few years or more.¹⁹⁹ Finally, in at least one case, exhaustion of state remedies was not required because the incarcerated person's jury misconduct claim needed to be heard as soon as possible because it hinged on the testimony of a juror who was elderly, somewhat incompetent, and in poor health.²⁰⁰

Despite these exceptions, federal courts do not usually excuse the exhaustion requirement; they expect the state courts to deal with all of your claims. And even if a court excuses your failure to exhaust state remedies, you will likely end up with another problem known as "procedural default."²⁰¹ In one case, a person incarcerated in New York state custody was found to have exhausted state remedies even though he did not clearly raise the issue on direct appeal.²⁰² In this case, New York

193. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(1)(B).

194. Stem v. Turner, 370 F.2d 895, 897 (4th Cir. 1966).

195. Stem v. Turner, 370 F.2d 895, 897–898 (4th Cir. 1966).

196. Evans v. Cunningham, 335 F.2d 491, 492–494 (4th Cir. 1964).

197. Evans v. Cunningham, 335 F.2d 491, 492–494 (4th Cir. 1964).

198. See Lowe v. Duckworth, 663 F.2d 42, 43 (7th Cir. 1981) (holding that if the lower federal court determined that the state court delay of over three and a half years was not justified, state court remedies were to be considered exhausted and the lower federal court was required to hear the merits of the habeas corpus petition); Dozie v. Cady, 430 F.2d 637, 638 (7th Cir. 1970) (holding that if the lower federal court determined that the state court's seventeen-month delay was not justified, state court remedies were to be considered exhausted and the lower federal court was required to hear the merits of the habeas corpus petition).

199. Federal courts have not required exhaustion when the state courts have unconstitutionally delayed hearing the incarcerated person's appeal. The delay must be unusually long in order to fit within this exception. It is unlikely that a one-year delay would be enough to waive the exhaustion requirement, but a two-year delay might be. See Harris v. Champion, 15 F.3d 1538, 1556 (10th Cir. 1994) (determining that a "delay in adjudicating a direct criminal appeal beyond two years from the filing of the notice of appeal gives rise to a presumption that the state appellate process is ineffective"); Calhoun v. Farley, 913 F. Supp. 1218, 1221 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (holding that sufficient time had passed to excuse the need for exhausting state remedies where no action had been taken by the state or by the incarcerated person for almost two years on his petition for post-conviction relief); Geames v. Henderson, 725 F. Supp. 681, 685 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) (finding that a delay of three and a half years is excessive when the "[c]ourt views the issues on appeal as no more complex than in most criminal appeals").

200. Simmons v. Blodgett, 910 F. Supp. 1519, 1524 (W.D. Wash. 1996) ("Because petitioner's ability to prove his claim continues to diminish rapidly over time, and is at risk of being lost, justice requires that his habeas petition be heard expeditiously").

201. Procedural default is explained in Part D(3) ("Procedural Default") of this Chapter.

202. The incarcerated person filed a petition for federal habeas corpus on the ground that his confession was involuntary, even though he had not raised the issue of voluntariness on direct appeal. However, he was found to have adequately exhausted his state remedies because the judge had indirectly ruled on that issue through an evidentiary determination. Quartararo v. Mantello, 715 F. Supp. 449, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 1989), aff'd, 888 F.2d 126, 126 (2d Cir. 1989).

state law did not allow the incarcerated person to raise a claim in a collateral attack (Article 440 motion) if he failed to raise the claim on direct appeal in state court.²⁰³ Since the incarcerated person did not raise the claim in a collateral attack, he did not have any other remedies in state court. The federal court therefore excused his failure to exhaust the claim. However, the federal court will probably still bar his habeas petition because he committed procedural default by failing to raise the claim on direct appeal as required by state law.²⁰⁴ So even though this failure helped the incarcerated person avoid the exhaustion requirement, the same failure could still prevent him from getting his writ of habeas corpus.²⁰⁵ In short, you should not rely on exceptions to the exhaustion requirement because they are rarely granted.

(d) What Happens If You Do Not Exhaust State Remedies

If you present your claim to a federal court before you have exhausted all of your state remedies, the court may still look at the merits of your claim. However, you are taking a risk if you do this: if the court believes that your claim is without merit, it may deny you relief once and for all, even though you have not finished presenting your claim to the lower courts.²⁰⁶ Otherwise, the court will reject your petition for not exhausting state remedies, either with or without looking at the merits. You will need to finish presenting it to the state courts in order to fulfill the exhaustion requirement. This Subsection describes what you should do if a federal court dismisses your petition without prejudice due to the fact that you have not exhausted your state remedies. When this happens, you can still exhaust your claim in state court.

Upon dismissal, first you should check to see if the state has waived the exhaustion requirement in your case.²⁰⁷ A federal court will never assume that the state waived the exhaustion requirement in your case just because the state did not insist on exhaustion.²⁰⁸ There must be a clear statement by an authorized state attorney saying that the exhaustion requirement in your case has been waived; otherwise, there is no waiver.

If the state has not given you a waiver, you must return to state court and seek relief there. Remember the one-year time limit! To ensure that your claims will not later be barred from federal review because of the limitations period, you can ask the federal district court to hold your habeas petition in “abeyance” (delay the federal proceeding) while you return to state court to exhaust your state remedies. You should explain to the federal court that you are concerned that you will pass the statute of limitations, so you want a “stay and abeyance” order to make sure that you will be able to return to federal court after exhausting your state remedies. You also have to offer to dismiss your unexhausted claims in federal court.²⁰⁹ Often, courts issue a stay and abeyance order that will allow 203. See Quartararo v. Mantello, 715 F. Supp. 449, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 1989), aff’d, 888 F.2d 126, 126 (2d Cir. 1989) (holding that “[b]ecause there are no remedies available for petitioner to exhaust, the petition is not subject to dismissal even if petitioner had otherwise failed to exhaust his state remedies.”). See Chapter 20 of the JLM for a discussion of N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(c).

204. See Daye v. Attorney Gen. of New York, 696 F.2d 186, 190 n.3 (2d Cir. 1982) (en banc) (explaining that failure to comply with a state rule, resulting in a procedural default that bars, under state law, the subsequent assertion of a challenge to the conviction, may also preclude federal habeas through the doctrine of procedural forfeiture unless the petitioner can demonstrate that there was “cause” for his failure to comply with the state procedure and that “prejudice” resulted).

205. See, e.g., Castille v. Peoples, 489 U.S. 346, 351–52, 109 S. Ct. 1056, 1060, 103 L. Ed. 2d 380, 386–87 (1989) (stating that a claim must be fairly presented in a procedural context to the state courts to meet the exhaustion requirement).

206. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(2).

207. “Waived” means “decided not to apply.” A state waiver of a requirement means that you do not have to fulfill the requirement.

208. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b)(3); see Lurie v. Wittner, 228 F.3d 113, 123 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that state waivers of exhaustion are disfavored and that such a waiver must be made expressly).

209. Pliler v. Ford, 542 U.S. 225, 230–31, 124 S. Ct. 2441, 2445, 159 L. Ed. 2d 338, 347 (2004) (describing the Ninth Circuit’s procedure for granting a stay and abeyance, under which the unexhausted claims are you to return to state court to exhaust remedies without fear of the one-year limitations period running out.²¹⁰ Without cause for equitable tolling (see the explanation of tolling in Part D(3)(b)(iii) of this Chapter), the court is not required to warn a pro se litigant that his federal claims would be time-barred upon his return to federal court if he opted to dismiss the petitions without prejudice and return to state court to exhaust all of his claims.²¹¹

If the time limit to raise the unexhausted claim in state court has run out, look for an exception to the exhaustion requirement.²¹² Because such exceptions are rarely successful, you should use this argument only as a last resort. If the time limit has not run out even after the federal court has dismissed your petition without prejudice for lack of exhaustion, file as quickly as possible in state court. This way, tolling will apply.²¹³ Once you re-file in state court and satisfy the exhaustion requirement, you can still re-file a federal habeas petition in federal court if the limitations have not run out. (Requesting a stay and abeyance order beforehand will ensure that your time has not run in federal court.) This petition—which follows your earlier petition that was dismissed by the district court without prejudice—will not count as a successive habeas petition and will not be subject to dismissal for that reason.²¹⁴

The strict timelines that AEDPA imposes on habeas petitions make it very difficult for your habeas petition to succeed if you failed to exhaust state remedies within the one-year time limit. Therefore, it is important to make sure you understand this, and that you have complied with the two requirements of exhaustion: (1) you have given the highest state court an opportunity to hear your claim, and (2) you have fairly presented each claim by identifying the facts and the federal law supporting it to the highest state court.

3. Procedural Default

If you are a person incarcerated in state custody and you present a habeas claim to the federal court that has not been presented to the state court, your claim may be in “procedural default,”²¹⁵ and the federal court will be barred from hearing your claim.²¹⁶ If you are a person incarcerated in federal custody and include a claim in your habeas petition that was not a part of your direct appeal to a federal court of appeals, your claim may be in procedural default. As a person incarcerated in federal custody, you can avoid procedural default by raising every habeas claim in your direct appeal. In some circumstances, you may be required to have raised the claims at your trial (for example, by making dismissed, resolved in state court, and then re-added to the pending federal court claims that were already exhausted).

210. Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (directing that federal courts should issue a stay and abeyance for a mixed petition if petitioner had “good cause” for failing to exhaust the unexhausted claims, the unexhausted claims are “potentially meritorious,” and there is no indication that the petitioner has engaged in tactics with the purpose of delaying the proceedings); see, e.g., Anthony v. Cambra, 236 F.3d 568, 574 (9th Cir. 2000) (agreeing to consider petitioner’s proper federal habeas claim as if it had been filed on the date that he originally filed an improper claim because the district court had incorrectly dismissed the original claim for having both unexhausted and exhausted claims, instead of allowing petitioner to resubmit his claim with only the exhausted claims, as was customary in that circuit).

211. Pliler v. Ford, 542 U.S. 225, 231, 124 S. Ct. 2441, 2446, 159 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (2004).

212. See Part D(2)(c) (“Exceptions to Exhaustion”) of this Chapter.

213. Tolling is discussed in Part D(3)(b)(iii) (“Time Limit”) of this Chapter.

214. See Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 478, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1601, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 551 (2000). This issue is further discussed in Part D(4) (“Successive Petitions”) of this Chapter.

215. “Procedural default” is a concept that requires a person incarcerated in state custody to present his habeas corpus claim to a state court in compliance with state procedural rules. If he does not, he will be barred from presenting his claim to federal court on appeal. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 (b)(1),(c).

216. See United States ex rel. Redding v. Godinez, 900 F. Supp. 945, 948–950 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (finding procedural default where petitioner did not raise claims during direct appeal, during state petition for post-conviction relief, or during state petition to appeal from denial of post-conviction relief); see also House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 522, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2068, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 12 (2006) (“Out of respect for the finality of state-court judgments federal habeas courts, as a general rule, are closed to claims that state courts would consider defaulted.”).

appropriate objections) to be able to raise the claims in your direct appeal.²¹⁷ People incarcerated in state custody can avoid procedural default by raising every claim in state court. In many cases, people incarcerated in state custody will be required to have raised claims at trial, through motions or objections, in order to raise the claims on direct review.²¹⁸ People incarcerated in state custody must be certain to raise all claims in all state collateral proceedings, too.²¹⁹

(a) State Procedural Rules and Procedural Default

If you are incarcerated in state custody, your claim can also be in procedural default if you raised your claim to a state court that refused to review the merits of the claim due to a state procedural rule. This often occurs when incarcerated persons fail to pursue their claim in a timely manner.²²⁰ People incarcerated in state custody are not allowed to bring habeas claims in federal court if those claims were not reviewed on the merits in state court because the petitioner did not follow a state procedural rule.²²¹ But if a state procedural rule prevents you from bringing a claim in state court, and the state court ignores the rule and reviews the merits of your claim anyway, a federal court cannot later refuse to review your claim based on the state procedural rule.²²²

217. Some kinds of claims do not have to be raised at trial to be validly raised on direct appeal. For example, you may bring an ineffective assistance of counsel claim in a § 2255 motion even if you did not raise the issue on direct appeal. See Massaro v. United States, 538 U.S. 500, 504, 123 S. Ct. 1690, 1694, 155 L. Ed. 2d 714, 720 (2003) (holding that “an ineffective-assistance-of-counsel claim may be brought in a collateral proceeding under § 2255, whether or not the petitioner could have raised the claim on direct appeal.”); see also 28 U.S.C. § 2255.

218. Before your trial ends, you must object to any errors that occurred at trial in order to preserve these issues for review on appeal. See Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 90–91, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 2508, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594, 610 (1977) (describing how the “contemporaneous-objection rule” encourages the proceedings to be “as free of error as possible,” so criminal defendants should make their objections known if they think the trial court has deprived them of any federal constitutional rights). Otherwise, states like New York will consider only those appellate issues involving a violation of fundamental principles of law. For example, if the prosecutor at your trial in New York made inflammatory closing remarks that prejudiced the jury, but your lawyer did not object to this error at trial, you cannot raise this error on direct appeal. New York courts probably will not see prejudicial remarks by a prosecutor as a violation of fundamental principles of law. Thus, if you did not object to the prosecutor’s comments during trial, you probably cannot raise this issue on direct appeal or through an Article 440 motion (New York law gives courts discretion in refusing to accept 440 motions). See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2009). See Chapter 20 of the JLM for more information about Article 440. Therefore, you will also be unable to raise the issue in your federal habeas petition. However, always remember that if your attorney was responsible for failing to object, you may have an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. See JLM Chapter 9 and Chapter 12 for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

219. In New York, you cannot raise claims in a post-conviction proceeding that you neglected to raise on direct appeal. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(c) (McKinney 2009). See also Anderson v. Harless, 459 U.S. 4, 7–8, 103 S. Ct. 276, 278, 74 L. Ed. 2d 3, 7–9 (1982) (rejecting habeas relief because the incarcerated person’s constitutional argument had never been presented to, or considered by, the state court); Smith v. Duncan, 411 F.3d 340, 350 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that the habeas claim was procedurally defaulted because the claim had not been fairly presented to the state court). If your lawyer failed to object to a prosecutor’s prejudicial remarks, and you were therefore barred from raising this issue on appeal, you are also barred from raising the issue in a habeas corpus petition. Remember, though, that ineffective assistance of counsel claims can be raised for the first time in a post-conviction proceeding, and your lawyer’s failure to raise objections in court may be grounds for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. See JLM, Chapters 9 and 12, for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims.

220. See O’Sullivan v. Boerckle, 526 U.S. 838, 848 119 S. Ct. 1728, 1734 144 L. Ed.2d 1, 11 (1999) (concluding that petitioner who had failed to file an appeal with state supreme court in a timely fashion barred federal habeas review); Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 749, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2564, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991) (holding that petitioner’s failure to file a timely notice of appeal under state law barred further federal habeas review).

221. See Harris v. Reed, 489 U.S. 255, 260, 109 S. Ct. 1038, 1042, 103 L. Ed. 2d 308, 315 (1989) (reaffirming that the federal court will not review a federal issue if the state court’s judgment is based on an independent and adequate state law ground).

222. See, e.g., Freeman v. Attorney General, 536 F.3d 1225, 1231 (11th Cir. 2008) (discussing how, as an exception to the general rule of procedural default, when a state ignores the procedural bar, a federal court cannot

4. New Laws: The Teague Rule²²³

You also cannot raise a federal habeas claim based on new law.²²⁴ This means that if the Supreme Court decides a rule, test, or standard in a case that is decided after your direct review was complete, you generally may not rely on this new law as a basis for habeas relief. This rule comes from the case *Teague v. Lane*²²⁵ and is therefore called the Teague Rule. The Teague Rule applies to people incarcerated in federal and state institutions. However, people incarcerated in state custody have an additional requirement that they must meet. People incarcerated by the state are subject to AEDPA, which says that state decisions can only be reversed if they were “contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly established Federal law, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States.”²²⁶ This section discusses the requirement for people incarcerated in state custody that the law be “clearly established,”²²⁷ in addition to the requirement from Teague that habeas petitioners cannot rely on new law.²²⁸ If you are a person incarcerated in federal custody petitioning for habeas corpus, the AEDPA requirement that a law be “clearly established” does not apply to you, but the Teague Rule does.

These two standards (that the law is clearly established and that the law may not be new) mean almost the same thing. One important difference is that people incarcerated in federal custody can use cases from the federal district in which they were convicted to show that the law they are relying on is “not new” (even if the Supreme Court has not dealt with the law), while people incarcerated in state custody can only use cases from the U.S. Supreme Court since they need to show that the law is “not new” by showing that it is “clearly established” by the Supreme Court.²²⁹ This Section will address both standards at the same time. It is helpful to keep in mind that you only need to defend your petition as not based on new law if the government argues that it is.

(a) Difference between the Teague Rule and the AEDPA “Clearly Established” Rule

The fact that there are different rules for deciding what is new law for people incarcerated in federal custody and for people incarcerated in state custody can be confusing. It may be helpful for you to understand the different rules in the following way. Both people incarcerated in federal custody and people incarcerated in state custody cannot base their habeas petitions on new law. However, the definition of a new law is different for people incarcerated in federal custody and for people incarcerated in state custody. For people incarcerated in federal custody, only the Teague Rule defines what is a new law. For people incarcerated in state custody, AEDPA defines a new law as a law that apply the bar on the state’s behalf and the federal court must then hear the claim (citing Peoples v. Campbell, 377 F.3d 1208, 1235 (11th Cir. 2004) and Davis v. Singletary, 119 F.3d 1471, 1479 (11th Cir.1997)).

223. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–310, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–1075, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–356; 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

224. Although a federal habeas petitioner cannot use a new rule as grounds for his petition, the courts can use a new rule to deny a habeas petition. Lockhart v. Fretwell, 506 U.S. 364, 372, 113 S. Ct. 838, 844, 122 L. Ed. 2d 180, 191 (1993) (holding that the retroactivity rule in Teague does not apply to federal habeas petitioners).

225. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–310, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–1075, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–356 (1989).

226. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

227. For more information on the “contrary to or involving an unreasonable application” requirement of 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1), see Part B(4)(a) of this Chapter.

228. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 308–310, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1074–1075, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–256 (1989).

229. See Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 412, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 1523, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389, 430 (2000) (“With one caveat, whatever would qualify as an old rule under our Teague jurisprudence will constitute ‘clearly established Federal law. . .’”). The one “caveat,” or exception, is 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1), which restricts the source of clearly established law to the Supreme Court’s jurisprudence. You may be able to use non-Supreme Court federal court precedent to support your claim that the Supreme Court law was clearly established when your case was tried or to show whether the state court applied the law reasonably. See Dulhaime v. Ducharme, 200 F.3d 597, 600 (9th Cir. 1999).

has not been “clearly established” by Supreme Court case law. The differences between these two definitions of new law are discussed below.

Under Teague, new law is a rule of law that was not in force at the time of your trial and direct appeals.²³⁰ Under AEDPA, new law is law that is not “clearly established.”²³¹ Only people incarcerated in state custody are subject to the requirement that any law used in a habeas petition must be “clearly established” by the Supreme Court. This requirement was established by AEDPA and changed the way that federal habeas law is applied to people incarcerated by the state.

The final date for when a law begins to be considered “new law” differs depending on whether you are using the Teague Rule or the “clearly established” requirement of AEDPA. For the Teague Rule, the law you rely on must have been established by the time your conviction becomes final. The date your conviction becomes final is usually when the Supreme Court refuses to hear your appeal (the date the Supreme Court denies your writ of certiorari).²³²

As mentioned above, people incarcerated in state custody must show that a law is not new by proving that it is “clearly established” by Supreme Court case law. In contrast, people incarcerated in federal custody may use cases from the federal district in which they were convicted or the application federal circuit court of appeals to show that a law is not new.

(b) What Is New Law

There is no specific formula that the courts use to determine what is “new law” under the Teague Rule. Instead, the courts look at many factors. Because the courts use similar factors to determine whether law is clearly established, this section will not distinguish between the Teague Rule and the “clearly established” rule. However, you should keep in mind the differences between the two rules explained in the previous section. If the law you are relying on had not been clearly stated in another court case when your conviction became final, the courts may still find that the law was clearly established if it was dictated by previously decided cases, known as “precedent.” That means if a previously decided case requires a certain outcome in your case, even if a case exactly like yours has not yet been decided, the courts will consider the rule you are relying on to be established. For a rule of law to be dictated by precedent, and therefore not new law, the precedent does not have to explicitly state the rule of law. If precedent implies the rule of law, and a case that was decided after your conviction became final simply articulates the previously implied rule, that rule is already clearly established.²³³ Although dictum (the part of a judge’s opinion that does not count as a decision about the particular case that the judge is deciding) is not considered law, it may be used as support that an implied rule of law had been clearly established before it was actually stated.²³⁴

For example, in Teague, the prosecutor used “peremptory challenges” to keep all Black potential jurors off the jury (peremptory challenges are used by lawyers to disqualify potential jurors without giving any reason). The all-white jury then convicted the Black defendant of murder. Two and a half years after the defendant’s conviction, the Supreme Court ruled in a different case that a defendant

230. See Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 301, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1070, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 354–356 (1989).

231. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1).

232. See Stringer v. Black, 503 U.S. 222, 227, 112 S. Ct. 1130, 1135, 117 L. Ed. 2d 367, 376–377 (1992) (“Subject to two exceptions, a case decided after a petitioner’s conviction and sentence became final may not be the predicate for federal habeas corpus relief unless the decision was dictated by precedent existing when the judgment in question became final.”). If you do not file for certiorari from the Supreme Court, your conviction becomes final when your time for filing a petition for certiorari has elapsed. Caspari v. Bohlen, 510 U.S. 383, 390, 114 S.Ct. 948, 953 127 L. Ed. 2d 236, 246 (1994).

233. See Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 484–485, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 1038–1039 145 L. Ed. 2d 985, 999–1001 (2000) (finding that a newly articulated rule “breaks no new ground” because the court’s earlier decisions implicitly established the rule); Ryan v. Miller, 303 F.3d 231, 248 (2d Cir. 2002) (explaining that for a right to be clearly established, the Supreme Court must have acknowledged it, but “it need not have considered the exact incarnation of that right or approved the specific theory”).

234. See Gibbs v. Frank, 387 F.3d 268, 277 n.6 (3d Cir. 2004) (noting that because Supreme Court dictum “offers guidance about how the Supreme Court reasonably interprets its previous decision,” it is “relevant to determining whether a state court decision reasonably applies Supreme Court precedent”).

can prove a prima facie case of racial discrimination by showing that he is a member of a racial group and that the prosecutor used peremptory challenges to remove jury members of that racial group at the trial.²³⁵ The Teague defendant asked the habeas court to apply the second case to his trial. The Supreme Court ruled that the petitioner could not apply the second case because it was a “new rule of law.”²³⁶ That is, the second decision was not required by any prior cases.

A rule of law is considered “new” even if it is based in part on earlier cases. The Supreme Court has found that a law is “new” if lower courts disagree significantly about the question before the Supreme Court ruling.²³⁷ Unfortunately if you are in this situation, the law will usually be called “new.”²³⁸ If “debate among reasonable minds”²³⁹ is possible as to whether the law is clearly established, it is considered new law.

Consider the following four examples of the Supreme Court rejecting habeas relief because the petitioner’s habeas claim was based on new law:

- (1) In Saffle v. Parks,²⁴⁰ the petitioner sought habeas relief because, at his trial, the judge had instructed the jury to “avoid any influence of sympathy.”²⁴¹ The petitioner argued that this instruction was unconstitutional because it made the jury ignore evidence that mitigated the petitioner’s guilt (to mitigate means to make the petitioner less responsible for his actions or less guilty). The Supreme Court decided that even though the instruction was based on earlier cases, the earlier cases did not say how the court should ask the jury to listen to mitigating evidence. So the instruction violated a new rule, not a previously established one. Thus, the Court denied habeas relief.
- (2) In Butler v. McKellar,²⁴² petitioner sued four years after his murder conviction was finalized. Relying on another case Arizona v. Roberson, he said the police had violated his Constitutional rights by interrogating him about a murder after he had requested a lawyer on a separate charge.²⁴³ The Supreme Court rejected his petition because the Roberson case announced a “new” rule of law a couple of years after his conviction. His lawyer argued that the Roberson rule was not a new rule because it was decided based on an earlier case, Edwards v. Arizona,²⁴⁴ which was decided before his conviction became final. The Supreme Court did not agree that Roberson was determined by Edwards because the Edwards rule covered interrogations on the same charge while the Roberson rule covered interrogations on separate charges. The Court concluded no one could have predicted the Edwards rule would extend to the situation in Roberson. Thus, Roberson announced a new rule of law that the petitioner could not rely on.

235. Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 91–92, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1720–1721, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69 (1986).

236. Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 310, 109 S. Ct. 1060, 1075, 103 L. Ed. 2d 334, 356 (1989).

237. See Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 415, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1217, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1990) (explaining that a rule is new if there is a “significant difference of opinion on the part of several lower courts that had considered the question previously”).

238. Marc M. Arkin, The Prisoner's Dilemma: Life In The Lower Federal Courts After Teague V. Lane, 69 N.C. L. REV. 371, 401 (1991) (noting Butler broadened the definition of novelty so that “virtually every rule becomes ‘new’”).

239. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 415, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1217, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1990).

240. Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415 (1990).

241. Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 486, 110 S. Ct. 1257, 1259, 108 L. Ed. 2d 415, 422 (1990).

242. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347 (1990).

243. Butler v. McKellar, 494 U.S. 407, 415, 110 S. Ct. 1212, 1217, 108 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1990) (citing Arizona v. Roberson, 486 U.S. 675, 108 S. Ct. 2093, 100 L. Ed. 2d 704 (1988)) (stating that a suspect who has requested counsel is not subject to further interrogation until counsel has been made available to him and that this request extends to police-initiated interrogation in a later investigation).

244. Edwards v. Arizona, 451 U.S. 477, 484–485, 101 S. Ct. 1880, 1884–1885, 68 L. Ed. 2d 378, 386 (1981) (holding that a defendant who had requested counsel during an interrogation but confessed the next day during another interrogation for the same offence had not waived his right to counsel).

- (3) In Sawyer v. Smith, the petitioner had been convicted of murder and sentenced to death. At his trial, the prosecutor had told the jury that if they sentenced him to death “you yourself will not be sentencing [the petitioner] to the electric chair.”²⁴⁵ A year after the petitioner’s conviction was final, the Supreme Court ruled in *Caldwell v. Mississippi*²⁴⁶ that a prosecutor can’t make remarks like that which reduce the jury’s sense of responsibility for the capital sentencing decision. The Sawyer petitioner asked the court to apply the Caldwell rule to his conviction. He argued that the Caldwell case did not create a “new rule” of law because earlier cases made the rule predictable. The Supreme Court disagreed and ruled that the Caldwell rule was a “new rule of law” because it was not foreseeable based on earlier cases.²⁴⁷
- (4) In Caspari v. Bohlen,²⁴⁸ the Supreme Court explained the three steps the habeas court must take to see if the Teague rule applies. First, the court must find out the date on which the petitioner’s conviction and sentence became final. Second, it must decide whether the trial court would have discovered the rule from earlier cases. Third, if the rule is “new,” meaning the trial court would not have taken it from earlier cases, then the habeas court must decide if the petitioner falls into one of the exceptions to the Teague rule. (For a discussion of those exceptions, see Part C(3) (“Exceptions to the New Law Rules”) below).

To summarize, the law you use cannot be new law, but it can be applied in a new way. Some rules will apply to many different fact situations. It is not necessary for the court to look at your exact fact situation and apply a rule of law to it. It is only necessary that the general legal principle which deals with your fact situation has been established.²⁴⁹ Although you should show the court that the law you are relying on is not new law, you should not actually mention the Teague standard in your habeas petition, even if you are making a claim based on an exception to the Teague standard. You do not need to argue that your habeas petition is not based on new law unless the government brings it up. Since the government is very likely to raise the Teague rule, you should be well prepared to show the court the rule of law in question was not new law at the time your conviction became final.

If you are in procedural default, you can try to use the “independent and adequate state grounds” doctrine to avoid procedural default.²⁵⁰ You can get out of procedural default if the procedural rule the state court used to deny you a hearing on the merits was (1) not “independent” of federal law, or (2)

245. Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 230, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2825, 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 203 (1990) (holding that the Caldwell rule that prosecutors may not make remarks that diminish the jury’s sense of responsibility in capital cases was a new rule and did not apply retroactively).

246. Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320, 329, 105 S. Ct. 2633, 2639, 86 L. Ed. 2d 231, 239 (1985) (finding that where, in a capital case, a prosecutor makes statements to the sentencing jury that diminish the jury’s sense of responsibility, the heightened requirements of the 8th Amendment are not met and the sentence of death cannot stand).

247. Sawyer v. Smith, 497 U.S. 227, 237, 110 S. Ct. 2822, 2829 111 L. Ed. 2d 193, 208 (1990).

248. Caspari v. Bohlen, 510 U.S. 383, 390, 114 S. Ct. 948, 953, 127 L. Ed. 2d 236, 246 (1994) (holding that, at the time of petitioner’s conviction, a rule barring evidence of prior convictions for sentencing purposes did not yet exist).

249. See Hart v. Attorney Gen., 323 F.3d 884, 892 n.16 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that, when confronting issues such as the voluntariness of a confession, where the rule of law will have to be applied on a case-by-case approach, it is “acceptable to derive clearly established federal law from . . . general principles”).

250. See Dretke v. Haley, 541 U.S. 386, 392, 124 S. Ct. 1847, 1851–1852, 158 L. Ed. 2d 659, 668 (2004) (discussing the general principle that federal courts will not disturb state court judgments based on adequate and independent state law procedural grounds); Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 729–730, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2553–2554, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 655–656 (1991) (stating that the Supreme Court will not review a question of federal law decided by a state court if the decision of that court rests on a state law ground that is independent of the federal question and adequate to support the judgment); Hoffman v. Arave, 236 F.3d 523, 530 (9th Cir. 2001) (stating that “so long as the dismissal relies on a state law ground that is independent of the federal question and adequate to support the judgment, it will be insulated from federal review.”). See, e.g., Fox Film Corp. v. Muller, 296 U.S. 207, 210, 56 S. Ct. 183, 184, 80 L. Ed. 158, 159 (1935) (affirming the non-reviewability of the state law decision in a breach of contract action for leasing motion-picture films).

not “adequate” (in other words, good enough) to bar federal review of the claim. These are hard standards to meet but the terms are further described below.

(i) Showing the State Procedural Rule Is Not “Independent” of Federal Law

To show that the procedural rule the state court used was not independent of federal law, you must show that the state law is connected with federal law and not entirely separate from federal law.²⁵¹ State law is connected with federal law if judges must answer questions about federal law in order to decide the question of state law.²⁵² For example, if a state procedural rule says that when fundamental or constitutional errors of federal law are made, the claim is not considered untimely and can be reviewed, then the state court judges have to decide questions of federal law—the constitutional issue—before deciding if the state procedural rule applied to your case.²⁵³ If the procedural rule the state court used to deny your claim was not entirely separate from federal law, you can try to argue that the procedural rule is not “independent” of federal law and it should not stop the habeas court from reviewing your claim.

(ii) Showing the State Procedural Rule Was Not “Adequate” to Bar Federal Review

When you argue that your default of a state procedural rule is not an adequate (good enough) reason to deny review of your federal habeas petition, you are arguing that the state rule is unfair, interferes with enforcement of your federal rights, or is not applied consistently. Therefore, the state rule is not an adequate reason to bar review of your claim.²⁵⁴ Some common ways to argue that a state procedural rule is not adequate to bar review of your federal claims are:

251. See Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 74–75, 105 S. Ct. 1087, 1092, 84 L. Ed. 2d 53, 60–61 (1985); see also Boyd v. Scott, 45 F.3d 876, 880 (5th Cir. 1994) (finding that state court decision was “interwoven with federal law, and did not express clearly that its decision was based on state procedural grounds”).

252. See Stewart v. Smith, 536 U.S. 856, 860, 122 S.Ct. 2578, 2581, 153 L.Ed.2d 762, 767 (2002) (stating that when resolving a matter of state procedural rules depends on a federal constitutional ruling, the state law ruling is not independent of the federal ruling).

253. See Cooper v. Neven, 641 F.3d 322, 327 (9th Cir. 2011) (stating that state procedural rules must be both independent and adequate in order to bar federal habeas review); La Crosse v. Kernan, 244 F.3d 702, 706–707 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that the state’s “untimeliness” rule did not constitute “independent” state grounds because at the time the petitioner defaulted his claim, the rule had a “fundamental constitutional error exception” that involved a ruling on federal law); Johnson v. Gibson, 169 F.3d 1239, 1249 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner’s claim was not procedurally defaulted because “Oklahoma courts do review such claims for fundamental error—a review that necessarily includes review for federal constitutional error,” so procedural bar was not independent of federal law); Jones v. Jerrison, 20 F.3d 849, 854 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that although petitioner failed to bring an objection at trial, the state courts may review for plain error); Bradley v. Meachum, 918 F.2d 338, 343 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that a state waiver rule that resulted in procedural default of petitioner’s claim is not “independent of federal law” because, under Connecticut law, “procedural waiver cannot bar a defendant’s challenge ‘involv[ing] his constitutional right to a fair trial,’ and the state court had to first decide whether the petitioner received the constitutionally-required fair trial).

254. For a Supreme Court case that held that the state’s procedural rule was not adequate to bar federal habeas review, see Lee v. Kemna, 534 U.S. 362, 366, 122 S. Ct. 877, 880, 151 L. Ed. 2d 820, 830 (2002). See also Monroe v. Kuhlman, 433 F.3d 236, 245 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding state court’s application of the contemporaneous objection rule to a situation where jurors viewed evidence during the trial without the judge present inadequate to bar federal review of the claim); Cotto v. Herbert, 331 F.3d 217, 247 (2d Cir. 2003) (finding New York Court of Appeals’ application of the contemporaneous objection rule to a situation where there was no cross-examination of a witness who testified at petitioner’s trial, and whose out-of-court identification of petitioner was admitted at trial through testimony of police officers, was inadequate to bar federal habeas review of this claim).

- (1) The state's rule is not "firmly established," "consistently applied," or "strictly or regularly followed;"²⁵⁵
- (2) The state procedural rule did not provide you with a reasonable opportunity to have your federal claim heard in state court because the rule frustrates (interferes with) the enforcement of federal rights or is unreasonably hard to meet and has the effect of frustrating federal rights;²⁵⁶

255. See Smith v. Texas, 550 U.S. 297, 313, 127 S. Ct. 1686, 1697, 167 L. Ed.2d 632, 644 (2007) ("As a general matter, and absent some important exceptions, when a state court denies relief because a party failed to comply with a regularly applied and well-established state procedural rule, a federal court will not consider that issue."); Ford v. Georgia, 498 U.S. 411, 424, 111 S. Ct. 850, 857, 112 L. Ed. 2d 935, 949 (1991) (holding that state procedural rules "not strictly or regularly followed" may not bar federal review); see also Johnson v. Mississippi, 486 U.S. 578, 587, 108 S. Ct. 1981, 1987, 100 L. Ed. 2d 575, 585 (1988); James v. Kentucky, 466 U.S. 341, 348–349, 104 S. Ct. 1830, 1835, 80 L. Ed. 2d 346, 353 (1984) (holding that only state procedures that are "firmly established and regularly followed ... can prevent implementation of federal constitutional rights."); Barr v. City of Columbia, 378 U.S. 146, 149, 84 S. Ct. 1734, 1736, 12 L. Ed. 2d 766, 769 (1964) ("[S]tate procedural requirements which are not strictly or regularly followed cannot deprive us of the right to review."); Sayre v. Anderson, 238 F.3d 631, 634 (5th Cir. 2001) (asserting that a state ruling that petitioner had procedurally defaulted claims would not bar federal review when the rule was not usually applied to defendants in petitioner's position); Romano v. Gibson, 239 F.3d 1156, 1170 (10th Cir. 2001) (asserting that state procedural rule was not adequate because state court applied the rule inconsistently in the cases of two co-defendants charged and tried together); Moore v. Ponte, 186 F.3d 26, 32–33 (1st Cir. 1999) (stating that procedural default resulting from defendant's violation of the contemporaneous objection rule does not bar federal review because state courts have overlooked the requirement in cases like petitioner's); Gosier v. Welborn, 175 F.3d 504, 507 (7th Cir. 1999) (asserting that state procedural rule was an inadequate bar to federal habeas corpus review because state courts applied the rule inconsistently and incompatibly); Clayton v. Gibson, 199 F.3d 1162, 1171 (10th Cir. 1999) (stating that default did not bar federal review because the state procedural rule was adopted after the default supposedly occurred and could not have been firmly established); Forgy v. Norris, 64 F.3d 399, 402 (8th Cir. 1995) (pointing out a previous holding that "unexpected state procedural bars are not adequate to foreclose federal review of constitutional claims."); Morales v. Calderon, 85 F.3d 1387, 1393 (9th Cir. 1996) (stating that California's state habeas time limits were not an adequate and independent state grounds to support procedural default where the time limits were not clear, well-established, and consistently applied prior to petitioner's filing of his first state habeas petition); Cochran v. Herring, 43 F.3d 1404, 1409 (11th Cir. 1995) (finding no bar to federal habeas review even though petitioner did not raise Batson claim on direct appeal because Alabama courts have not consistently applied a procedural bar to these types of cases), modified, 61 F.3d 20 (11th Cir. 1995); Grubbs v. Delo, 948 F.2d 1459, 1463 (8th Cir. 1991) ("If a state applies its rule inconsistently, we are not barred from reaching the federal law claim.").

256. See Sivak v. Hardison, 658 F.3d 898, 906 (9th Cir. 2011) (finding that state's filing deadline was "uniquely harsh" and therefore, inadequate to prevent federal review); Hoffman v. Arave, 236 F.3d 523, 531 (9th Cir. 2001) ("[I]f a state procedural rule frustrates the exercise of a federal right, that rule is 'inadequate' to preclude federal courts from reviewing the merits of the federal claim."); Mapes v. Coyle, 171 F.3d 408, 429 (6th Cir. 1999) (asserting that state procedural ground for denial of petition was not "adequate" because rulings resulted in "erroneous ... refus[al] to consider" petitioner's ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claims); Jackson v. Shanks, 143 F.3d 1313, 1318–1319 (10th Cir. 1998) (determining that state procedural rule procedurally barring claims not raised on direct appeal cannot be applied to ineffective assistance of counsel claims because doing so would "deprive [petitioner] of any meaningful review of his ineffective assistance of counsel claim"); Morales v. Calderon, 85 F.3d 1387, 1390 (9th Cir. 1996) (determining that federal habeas review was not barred due to procedural default because California timeliness rule was so unclear that it did "not 'provide ... the habeas petitioner with a fair opportunity to seek relief in state court'" (quoting Harmon v. Ryan, 959 F.2d 1457, 1462 (9th Cir. 1992))); Wheat v. Thigpen, 793 F.2d 621, 624–625 (5th Cir. 1986) (stating that state rules not regularly followed prevented the "implementation of federal constitutional rights."); Williams v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1129, 1131–1132 (8th Cir. 1989) (stating that violation of a "new [state] rule designed to thwart assertion of federal rights" is not an adequate bar to federal habeas review); Walker v. Engle, 703 F.2d 959, 967 (6th Cir. 1983) (holding that notions of comity do not require deference to state court decisions where procedural bars that had no foundation in state law were applied) (abrogated on other grounds).

- (3) The procedural rule required you to object to the error before you could realize that the error occurred, or that the rule was applied in your case in a way that you could not have anticipated;²⁵⁷ or
- (4) You tried to raise a claim, and even though you did not follow the rule exactly, the way you tried to bring up the claim served the same purpose as the state rule.²⁵⁸

If you have procedurally defaulted a claim, you can try to use the “independent or adequate state grounds” body of law to get around the procedural default. Remember, you have to show either that the state procedural rule is not independent of federal law or that the rule is not adequate to bar federal review.

(c) Exceptions to Procedural Default

If your claim is in procedural default, there are limited circumstances in which the federal court may still review your claim. These circumstances apply to people in both state and federal prisons. The court will review your claim if you satisfy either the (1) “cause and prejudice” test or the (2) “fundamental miscarriage of justice” test.²⁵⁹ The courts rarely find either of these, so you should not depend on either of these exceptions to the procedural default rule.²⁶⁰ You should work hard to avoid procedural default by first raising all of your claims in state court if you are incarcerated in state custody or on direct federal appeal if you are incarcerated in federal custody.

(i) Cause and Prejudice Test

The “cause and prejudice” test is a defense to procedurally defaulted claims. That means that if your claim is procedurally defaulted, the federal habeas court may still review your claim if you can prove that you had “cause” for not following the procedure and experienced “prejudice.” To pass this test you must: (1) show cause (in other words, give a good reason for why you failed to follow the state procedural rule, or failed to present the claim in your direct appeal if you are in a federal prison); and 257. See Beuk v. Houk, 537 F.3d 618, 634 (6th Cir. 2008) (“A habeas petitioner can show cause where he failed to raise a constitutional issue because it was ‘reasonably unknown to him’ at the time”); Gonzales v. Elo, 233 F.3d 348, 353–354 (6th Cir. 2000) (determining that the state rule that barred post-conviction review of claims not raised on direct appeal was inadequate to bar federal review of the claim because the rule was adopted after the petitioner’s direct appeal was complete); Barnett v. Hargett, 174 F.3d 1128, 1135 (10th Cir. 1999) (determining that state procedural rules deeming claims raised under Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348, 116 S. Ct. 1373, 134 L. Ed. 2d 498 (1996) as barred if not raised on direct appeal cannot be applied to cases in which the direct appeal occurred before the Cooper decision); United States ex rel. Duncan v. O’Leary, 806 F.2d 1307, 1314 (7th Cir. 1986) (determining that petitioner did not default by not raising his ineffective assistance of counsel claim under state law because disagreement between the federal and state courts over the proper standard was such that petitioner could not have known about the claim and could not have been said to waive it); but see Perri v. Director Dept. of Corrections, State of Ill., cv, 451 (7th Cir. 1987) (finding that a state court’s determination of whether or not an incarcerated person had waived a constitutional right was a question of fact entitled to a presumption of correctness).

258. See Albuquerque v. Bara, 628 F.2d 767, 772–773 (2d Cir. 1980) (holding that “substantial compliance” with the state procedural rule is enough to overcome procedural default).

259. Two of the main cases on this issue are Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 84–85, 90–91, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 2505, 2508, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606–607, 610 (1977) and Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2565, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991). These exceptions were reaffirmed after the passage of AEDPA in Edwards v. Carpenter, 529 U.S. 446, 451, 120 S. Ct. 1587, 1591, 146 L. Ed. 2d 518, 524 (2000) (“We ... require a prisoner to demonstrate cause for his state-court default of any federal claim, and prejudice therefrom, before the federal habeas court will consider the merits of that claim ... The one exception to that rule ... is the circumstance in which the habeas petitioner can demonstrate a sufficient probability that our failure to review his federal claim will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.”).

260. See, e.g., United States v. Mabry, 536 F.3d 231, 243 (3d Cir. 2008) (holding there was no miscarriage of justice from petitioner’s claim that he did not fully understand what the phrase “miscarriage of justice” meant in his waiver of collateral and direct appeals in his guilty plea, because he had not satisfactorily identified any non-frivolous ground, had not produced any substantial appealable issues, and had failed to allege appealable issues that fell outside the terms of his waiver).

(2) show prejudice (that your case would have come out differently if you had been able to present your claim of constitutional violation).²⁶¹

The cause and prejudice standard can be the greatest obstacle you must overcome to obtain federal habeas review. Since the Supreme Court announced the standard in 1977,²⁶² federal courts have thrown out thousands of habeas petitions for failing to meet the standard. Therefore, you must think carefully and creatively about how to satisfy or get around the “cause and prejudice” standard.

a. Showing Cause

Showing “cause” for not following procedure is not easy. Generally, cause must be based on an outside factor that prevented you from avoiding a procedural mistake.²⁶³ Situations that courts consider “cause” include:

- (1) State officials prevented you from following the state procedural rule.²⁶⁴ For example, at your trial, a state officer led you to believe that a constitutional violation had not occurred, when in fact it had. In this case, the officer’s actions would be “cause” for why you did not object to the violation at trial. The court will allow you to argue this claim.²⁶⁵
- (2) State officials purposely lied about material information.²⁶⁶ For example, when a state tells you that all Brady material (exculpatory material) has been turned over to you, when in reality it has not been, you cannot be expected to be able to present this evidence—since you did not know about it.²⁶⁷ The fact that the state lied to you establishes a cause for failure to investigate that the court may consider.

261. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 755, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672 (1991) (holding that where petitioner had no independent constitutional right to counsel on appeal in state proceedings, his claim of ineffective counsel in state habeas petition did not constitute “cause” under the “cause and prejudice” standard); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 129, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1572–1573, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 801 (1982) (reaffirming that any incarcerated person bringing a constitutional claim to the federal court after a state procedural default must demonstrate cause and actual prejudice) (abrogated on other grounds). See also Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1, 11–13, 104 S. Ct. 2901, 2908–2909, 82 L. Ed. 2d 1, 11–13 (1984) (affirming habeas relief, because state law did not allow for constitutional review of the jury’s instructions on burden of proof at the time of trial, and the incarcerated person was prejudiced, because he may not have been convicted had the jury been instructed correctly); but see Prihoda v. McCaughtry, 910 F.2d 1379, 1386 (7th Cir 1990) (stating that a change in law cannot be “cause” under the Teague Rule). It is important to note that the new laws issues discussed in Part C(2), “New Laws: The Teague Rule,” would still apply and may bar relief, even if procedural default were overcome in this situation.

262. Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 84–85, 90–91, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 2505, 2508, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606–607, 610 (1977).

263. See Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 696, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1275, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1192–1193 (2004) (“The ‘cause’ inquiry, we have also observed, turns on events or circumstances ‘external to the defense.’” (citing Amadeo v. Zant, 486 U.S. 214, 222, 108 S. Ct. 1771, 1776, 100 L. Ed. 2d 249, 260 (1988))).

264. Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408 (1986) (determining that “some interference by officials” would constitute “cause” (citing Brown v. Allen, 344 U.S. 443, 486, 73 S. Ct. 397, 422, 97 L. Ed. 469, 504 (1953))).

265. See Strickler v. Greene, 527 U.S. 263, 283, 119 S. Ct. 1936, 1949, 144 L. Ed. 2d 286, 303 (1999) (holding that petitioner had shown cause for not raising a Brady claim in state court since the prosecutor had withheld evidence and the petitioner had relied on the prosecution’s open file policy as fulfilling the prosecutor’s duty to disclose, but also finding that petitioner did not show prejudice); see also Forman v. Smith, 633 F.2d 634, 641 (2d Cir. 1980) (reversing grant of habeas petition, but affirming the principle that, if a police officer made a misleading statement that obscures an opportunity to develop a federal constitutional violation claim, such statement would be “cause” for not raising the claim on direct appeal).

266. Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 695–696, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1274–1275, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1192–1193 (2004) (holding that, where prosecutors had lied and concealed information regarding a paid informant, the petitioner had made a showing of cause for not raising a Brady claim in prior proceedings).

267. See, e.g., Banks v. Dretke, 540 U.S. 668, 693, 124 S. Ct. 1256, 1273, 157 L. Ed. 2d 1166, 1191 (2004) (determining that because the prosecution persisted in hiding evidence and falsely representing that it had complied fully with its Brady disclosure obligations, the petitioner “had cause for failing to investigate, in state post-conviction proceedings”).

- (3) The legal basis of your constitutional claim was not reasonably available to you (or to your lawyer) at the time of your trial.²⁶⁸ In other words, a federal court will excuse your failure to object to an incident that occurred at your trial, if you can show that you could not have known from the case law existing at the time of your trial that the incident was a constitutional violation. Unfortunately, most attempts to show cause in this way are unsuccessful.²⁶⁹ You will not show “cause” by just claiming any of the following things: that your attorney was unaware of the claim;²⁷⁰ that your attorney believed it would be useless to raise the claim because the state court had rejected the claim before;²⁷¹ or that your attorney overlooked the claim.²⁷²
- (4) By failing to follow the state procedural rule (for example, failing to object at trial, failing to bring an appeal in time, etc.), your attorney provided you with “[i]neffective assistance of counsel.”²⁷³ Remember that you must exhaust your claim of ineffective assistance of counsel in the state courts before presenting the claim to the federal court as cause for why you failed to follow a state procedural requirement.²⁷⁴

It is important to understand that the reasons listed above are not the only possible ones: there may be other reasons in your specific case that would persuade a court to find that you have “cause.” By “Shepardizing” both *Wainwright*²⁷⁵ and *Coleman*²⁷⁶ and researching this issue, you will discover other reasons that courts have found “cause.”²⁷⁷

You should also be aware of various claims that the courts have determined do not constitute “cause.” The following list includes only a few possibilities:

268. See Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1, 16, 104 S. Ct. 2901, 2910, 82 L. Ed. 2d 1, 15 (1984) (holding that, where well-settled law in the state placing the burden of proof on the defendant for self-defense and lack of malice could be challenged as unconstitutional under a new Supreme Court decision, the “novelty” of such a claim was proper cause for failing to raise the claim on direct appeal).

269. See, e.g., Fernandez v. Leonardo, 931 F.2d 214, 216–217 (2d Cir. 1991) (finding no cause where the law was unsettled on the claim raised in the habeas petition but where the defense should have known to raise the objection nonetheless). In addition, even if you succeed in arguing that you had “cause” for not raising the constitutional error in your appeal, because you could not have known at the time of your trial that a constitutional error had occurred, the court could decide that this error still cannot be considered because of the Teague case, which says you cannot make an argument that raises a “new” rule of law. See Part C(2), “New Laws: The Teague Rule,” of this Chapter for more information.

270. See Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 134, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1575, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 804 (1982) (“Where the basis of a constitutional claim is available, and other defense counsel have perceived and litigated that claim, the demands of comity and finality counsel against labeling alleged unawareness of the objection as cause for a procedural default.”).

271. See Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 130, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1573, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 802 (1982) (“If a defendant perceives a constitutional claim and believes it may find favor in the federal courts, he may not bypass the state courts simply because he thinks they will be unsympathetic to the claim.”).

272. See Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408 (1986) (“We think, then, that the question of cause for a procedural default does not turn on whether counsel erred or on the kind of error counsel may have made.”).

273. Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 408–409 (1986). But see Tsirizotakis v. Le Fevre, 736 F.2d 57, 62–63 (2d Cir. 1984) (rejecting defendant’s attempt to show cause by alleging ineffective assistance of counsel).

274. See Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 488–489, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2645–2646, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 409 (1986) (expressing that the exhaustion doctrine “generally requires” the claim for ineffective assistance of counsel to be presented independently in state court). In New York, exhaustion of the ineffective assistance of counsel claim is done through an Article 440 motion (for more information on Article 440 motions, see Chapter 20 of the JLM).

275. Wainwright v. Sykes, 433 U.S. 72, 97 S. Ct. 2497, 53 L. Ed. 2d 594 (1977).

276. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640 (1991).

277. By Shepardizing, you can also make sure that the law has not changed. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

- (1) Claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, if you did not have a constitutional right to counsel at that proceeding.²⁷⁸
- (2) Claims that there are important facts that were not fully developed in the trial court, if you failed to develop the facts due to your own or your attorney's neglect.²⁷⁹
- (3) Claims that rely on evidence that could have been reasonably available to you at the trial or on direct appeal.²⁸⁰ It is not enough to argue that you failed to make the claim earlier because you had not yet discovered the evidence. You have to show that you could not have discovered the evidence, even if you had tried. For example, if the prosecutor purposely withheld evidence from the defense counsel at trial, that might show cause.²⁸¹

b. Showing Prejudice

The Supreme Court has not explained the meaning of “prejudice” as thoroughly as “cause.” In United States v. Frady, the Court explained the meaning of “prejudice” by stating that “prejudice” requires that you show errors at your trial “worked to [your] actual and substantial disadvantage, infecting [your] entire trial with error of constitutional dimensions.”²⁸² Prejudice is a high standard for you to meet because the federal court will measure the effect of any violation you raise in the context of your whole trial.²⁸³ You should Shepardize the Frady case to see if courts in your jurisdiction have explained what types of errors show prejudice. For example, the Second Circuit has stated in *dicta*²⁸⁴ that it would find prejudice if a New York trial court accepted a defendant's guilty plea without holding a hearing on the defendant's competency when required to do so by state law. Such an error, the Second Circuit stated, would “infec[t]” the conviction and violate due process.²⁸⁵

278. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 754, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672 (1991) (“[I]t is not the gravity of the attorney's error that matters, but that it constitutes a violation of petitioner's right to counsel.”). But see Martinez v. Ryan, 566 U.S. 1, 9, 132 S. Ct. 1309, 1315, 182 L. Ed. 2d 272, 282 (2012) (“This opinion qualifies Coleman by recognizing a narrow exception: Inadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review collateral proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner's procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.”).

279. See Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 5 n.2, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1717 n.2, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 326 n.2 (1992) (rejecting a rule that would require an evidentiary hearing for habeas corpus cases where the state court hearing did not adequately develop the material facts “due to petitioner's own neglect”).

280. McCleskey v. Zant, 499 U.S. 467, 498, 111 S. Ct. 1454, 1472, 113 L. Ed. 2d 517, 547 (1991).

281. Fairchild v. Lockhart, 979 F.2d 636, 640 (8th Cir. 1992).

282. United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152, 170, 102 S. Ct. 1584, 1596, 71 L. Ed. 2d 816, 832 (1982) (emphasis omitted); see McCoy v. Newsome, 953 F.2d 1252, 1261–1262 (11th Cir. 1992) (applying the Wainwright standard, the court determined that the errors at trial did not actually and substantially disadvantage the defense, so the defendant was not denied fundamental fairness).

283. U.S. v. Kleinbart, 27 F.3d 586, 591 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (holding that the incarcerated person failed to show prejudice even though the judge did not properly instruct the jury regarding an element of the crime because the jury was otherwise informed of the element).

284. For a definition of dictum (the singular form of dicta), see Appendix V of the JLM, “Definitions of Words Used in the JLM.”

285. See Silverstein v. Henderson, 706 F.2d 361, 368 n.13 (2d Cir. 1983). In Silverstein, the petitioner sought habeas relief from a sentence for armed burglary on the grounds that he was mentally retarded and had not understood his guilty plea. The Second Circuit granted habeas relief despite the fact that the petitioner had not raised this claim on direct appeal. The court found that applying the procedural default rule to an incompetent defendant was unconstitutional, and, therefore, it was unnecessary to apply the “cause and prejudice” test. In a footnote, the court remarked that even if procedural default applied, the defendant would be entitled to a hearing concerning the cause for his failure to raise the issue of competence on direct appeal. See also Pearson v. Secretary, 273 Fed. Appx. 847, 850, (11th Cir. 2008) (holding that an incarcerated person raising a claim of cause and prejudice or miscarriage of justice based on the fact that he was proceeding pro se does not establish either of the exceptions to the procedural bar).

The “cause and prejudice” test is very difficult to meet.²⁸⁶ Do not rely on this excuse if another one is available to you.

(i) Fundamental Miscarriage of Justice

Another exception to procedural default is the “miscarriage of justice” exception. This exception is also difficult to meet, and you should not rely on this exception to get out of procedurally defaulted claims if you have another exception available to you. This exception usually works only if you can show that “failure to consider the claims [that are procedurally defaulted] will result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice.”²⁸⁷ Although the Supreme Court has not clearly said what a fundamental miscarriage of justice is, the Court in Schlup v. Delo, suggested that this exception requires a defendant to persuade the court of his “actual innocence.”²⁸⁸ If you use this exception, you are claiming that you are innocent and that your innocence is the reason that the court should consider your constitutional claim, even if it is in procedural default.²⁸⁹

To meet the requirements for the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception, you must present new evidence showing that you are innocent. This evidence must not have been presented at trial.²⁹⁰ You must show that with this new evidence, it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have convicted you.²⁹¹ This new evidence also must not be barred by the Federal Rules of Evidence. However, persuasive evidence of actual innocence that may not have been admissible in trial can be

286. Some incarcerated people have tried to avoid the “cause and prejudice” standard by arguing that the standard should not apply in death penalty cases. See, e.g., Smith v. Murray, 477 U.S. 527, 538–539, 106 S. Ct. 2661, 2668, 91 L. Ed. 2d 434, 447 (1986). Some incarcerated people have argued that the standard should not apply to constitutional errors, such as faulty jury instructions, which directly affect a jury’s finding of guilt at trial. See, e.g., Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 129, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1572–1573, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 801 (1982). Other incarcerated people have argued that the standard should not apply to procedural defaults that occurred on appeal (such as failure to raise a particular claim on appeal), and not at trial. See, e.g., Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 491–492, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2647, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 410–411 (1986). The Supreme Court, however, has rejected all of these arguments. In addition, the Court has ruled that the “cause and prejudice” standard applies even in cases where you have defaulted on not only one but all of your federal constitutional claims, since you failed to file a notice of appeal within the required time. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 749–751, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2564–2565, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 668–670 (1991).

287. Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 750, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2565, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 669 (1991) (reaffirming that the “fundamental miscarriage of justice” exception applies to procedurally defaulted claims). See also Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 496, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2649, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 413 (1986) (“[W]here a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent, a federal habeas court may grant the writ even in the absence of a showing of cause for the procedural default.”); Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 135, 102 S. Ct. 1558, 1575–1576, 71 L. Ed. 2d 783, 805 (1982) (stating that in some cases “cause” and “prejudice” will include the correction of a fundamentally unfair incarceration).

288. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 321–322, 115 S. Ct. 851, 864, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 832–833 (1995).

289. If you are claiming that you are innocent and should be set free, meaning there was not enough evidence to convict you, the standard is much higher, and you should refer to Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 324, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2791–2792, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560, 576–577 (1979) (holding that an incarcerated person can show that there was insufficient evidence to convict him “if it is found that upon the record evidence [produced] at the trial no rational trier of fact could have found proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt”) (abrogated on other grounds). Remember that AEDPA created a stricter standard of review, so the Jackson standard will likely be applied in an even stricter fashion than described in the Court’s decision.

290. See Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 324, 327–328, 115 S. Ct. 851, 865, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 834, 836–837 (1995) (stating that the new evidence does not have to be evidence that would be admissible at trial).

291. In Murray v. Carrier, 477 U.S. 478, 496, 106 S. Ct. 2639, 2649, 91 L. Ed. 2d 397, 413 (1986), the Court first stated the standard for a fundamental miscarriage of justice and said an incarcerated person must show “a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of one who is actually innocent” in order to meet the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception. In Schlup, the Court explained that this standard requires the defendant to “show that it is more likely than not that no reasonable juror would have found petitioner guilty beyond a reasonable doubt” if the constitutional error had not occurred. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836 (1995). In House v. Bell, 547 U.S. 518, 539, 126 S. Ct. 2064, 2078, 165 L. Ed. 2d 1, 22–23 (2006), the Supreme Court determined that AEDPA’s higher standard of review does not apply in cases where there is a claim of actual innocence.

considered by the court in considering this claim.²⁹² If you can meet these standards, the court will consider your barred claims. The idea is that if you can convince the court that you are innocent, it will then look at the errors in your trial, even though it is normally barred from doing so, in order to make sure that a fundamental miscarriage of justice did not occur.

Finally, the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception can be used to challenge a procedurally defaulted claim if a constitutional violation has probably resulted in the conviction of someone who is “actually innocent” of a death sentence.²⁹³ To be “actually innocent” of the death penalty means that you are innocent of the elements of the crime that pushed your sentence from a murder sentence to a capital murder sentence. To prove this claim, you must show by clear and convincing evidence that, if the constitutional violation had not occurred, no reasonable juror would have found that you were eligible for the death penalty.²⁹⁴ This standard is difficult to meet, and you should not rely on it to get around a procedurally defaulted claim. Remember that this standard does not apply if you are claiming that you are “actually innocent” of the murder for which you were convicted and sentenced to the death penalty. Instead, in that instance the same standard applies as when you are attempting to show your “actual innocence” of any other crime under the fundamental miscarriage of justice exception.²⁹⁵

(ii) Time Limit

Time is an issue that may complicate the preparation of your habeas petition. People in both state and federal prisons have a one-year time limit for filing federal habeas petitions.²⁹⁶ This time limit applies even if the state’s post-conviction timeline is more than a year. Therefore, you must file both your state post-conviction petition and your federal habeas petition (if you are unsuccessful in your state petition) within the one-year time limit. Otherwise, the time runs out on your federal habeas petition, and you will be barred from seeking federal habeas review. Once you file the state post-conviction motion, however, your timeline for filing the federal habeas petition will be “tolled,” which means that your time limit for filing the federal habeas petition will be extended for as long as the time it takes for the state to consider your motion.²⁹⁷

Generally, the one-year timeline will start on the day your case becomes “final”²⁹⁸ following direct review.²⁹⁹ Remember, the end of your direct review (not the end of your post-conviction appeals or any other proceeding) triggers the date when your case becomes final. Your case will generally become

292. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 327–328, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836–837 (1995).

293. See, e.g., Dugger v. Adams, 489 U.S. 401, 410 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 1211, 1217 n.6, 103 L. Ed. 2d 435, 445 n.6 (1989) (stating that a court may grant a writ even in the absence of a showing of cause for procedural default, but only in an “extraordinary” case).

294. Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 347–350, 112 S. Ct. 2514, 2523–2525, 120 L. Ed. 2d 269, 284–287 (1992) (holding that the court must find that but for the alleged constitutional error, the sentencing body could not have found any aggravating factors, and thus the petitioner was ineligible for the death penalty). But see Busby v. Davis, 892 F.3d 735, 755 (5th Cir. 2018) (citing McQuiggin v. Perkins, 569 U.S. 383, 359–396, 133 S. Ct. 1924, 185 L. Ed.2d. 1019 (2013) (holding that Sawyer was decided before the passage of the federal AEDPA statute, limiting the application of the actual innocence test to “a first petition for federal habeas relief” and barring its application in second or successive habeas petitions, as in Sawyer)).

295. Schlup v. Delo, 513 U.S. 298, 326–327, 115 S. Ct. 851, 867, 130 L. Ed. 2d 808, 836 (1995).

296. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (people in federal prisons). However, if you are in state prison convicted of the death penalty and your state qualifies as an opt-in state (meaning that, in exchange for providing competent counsel, the state can take advantage of faster resolution of federal habeas claims), your time limit is much shorter than one year.

297. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) (people in state prisons).

298. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (people in federal prisons).

299. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (people in federal prisons).

final when United States Supreme Court proceedings on direct review are completed,³⁰⁰ or, if you do not file for certiorari,³⁰¹ on the date when time expires for filing a petition for certiorari.³⁰²

However, there are three special circumstances that can extend the time you have to file your federal habeas petition:

- (1) If the state or federal government creates an impediment (obstruction or blockage) in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States that prevents you from filing the application or motion, you have one year after the unconstitutional or illegal impediment is removed to file your federal habeas petition;³⁰³
- (2) If the Supreme Court announces a new retroactive legal right on which your habeas petition can be based, the petition is due one year from the announcement;³⁰⁴ or
- (3) If new facts become discoverable that were not discoverable before the one-year time limit, even with due diligence, your habeas petition is due one year from when the facts became discoverable through due diligence.³⁰⁵

300. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(1) (people in federal prisons).

301. “Certiorari,” or a “writ of certiorari,” is an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

302. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(A) (people in state prisons); Clay v. United States, 537 U.S. 522, 532, 123 S. Ct. 1072, 1079, 155 L. Ed. 2d 88, 97 (2003) (“[F]or federal criminal defendants who do not file a petition for certiorari with [the Supreme Court] on direct review, § 2255’s one-year limitation period starts to run when the time for seeking such review expires.”).

303. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(B) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(2) (people in federal prisons). The unconstitutional or illegal impediment must be created by the state. An example of an unconstitutional impediment is the withholding of exculpatory evidence (evidence favorable to the defendant) in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963). See, e.g., Edmond v. U.S. Attorney, 959 F. Supp. 1, 4 (D.D.C. 1997) (determining that, for petitioner claiming that the government is holding exculpatory evidence, the one-year limitation does not begin until the receipt of the evidence). Another example of a state-created impediment is inadequate prison libraries. See, e.g., Whalem/Hunt v. Early, 233 F.3d 1146, 1148 (9th Cir. 2000) (remanding case for evidentiary hearing on whether petitioner’s claim that an unconstitutional impediment existed because of lack of information in the prison law library may be upheld). The State can also create an impediment by interfering with your filing, for example, if prison officials place you in segregation and take away your legal materials. See United States v. Gabaldon, 522 F.3d 1121, 1126 (10th Cir. 2008) (finding pro se habeas petition from person in federal prison should not have been dismissed by district court because state interfered with his filing by placing him in segregation and confiscating his legal materials). But see Monroe v. Beard, 536 F.3d 198, 210 (3d Cir. 2008) (finding confiscation of incarcerated person’s legal materials by prison officials did not violate constitutional rights because the incarcerated person did not allege actual injury nor did he provide evidence that confiscation was constitutionally unreasonable where there was a legitimate interest in stopping him from filing fraudulent claims and the decision to confiscate materials was rationally related to this interest; and also noting due process only requires post-deprivation process for return of confiscated materials).

304. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(C) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(3) (people in federal prisons). See, e.g., United States v. Adams, No. 90–00431–08, 1996 U.S. Dist. Lexis 8875, at *5 n.2 (E.D. Pa. June 24, 1996) (unpublished) (noting that petitioner has one year from the date the right was initially recognized by the Supreme Court). Exactly when the one year ends depends on the circuit in which you are filing. See Haugh v. Booker, 210 F.3d 1147, 1150 (10th Cir. 2000) (noting that the circuits disagree as to whether the one-year period starts when the new right is announced, or when the court holds it to be retroactive on collateral claims). However, note that the Supreme Court understood AEDPA to mean that the one year runs from the date a new right was recognized, not the date the right was made retroactive. See Dodd v. United States, 545 U.S. 353, 357, 125 S. Ct. 2478, 2482, 162 L. Ed. 2d 343, 349–350 (2005).

305. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1)(D) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f)(4) (people in federal prisons). See, e.g., Dobbs v. Zant, 506 U.S. 357, 358–359, 113 S. Ct. 835, 836, 122 L. Ed. 2d 103, 107 (1993) (holding that when petitioner’s habeas claim, which had been rejected by lower courts, was being reviewed by the federal circuit court, petitioner was allowed to supplement his record with a trial transcript because the delay in locating the transcript had been substantially caused by the state’s mistake). For a more recent case discussing the concept of “due diligence” in prison settings, see Wims v. United States, 225 F.3d 186, 190–191 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that the district court erred in dismissing habeas petition filed 17 months after conviction became final because the time delay was reasonable).

The date on which your one-year timeline starts is called the “triggering date.” If more than one triggering date affects your case, you will have to apply within one year of the latest date of the above three options.³⁰⁶ But you should try to file within a year of the earliest triggering date, because it will often be difficult to show that a later triggering date applies to your case.

If you have multiple claims in your petition and the claims do not all have the same triggering date, you should try to file within one year of the earliest triggering date. If the time limit runs out on one of your claims, the court will probably not hear the claim even if your habeas petition also includes other claims with later triggering dates.³⁰⁷ For example, imagine that your conviction became final on January 1, and then on March 1 the Supreme Court announced a new retroactive legal right (a right that, when announced, applies to past cases as well as future ones) that applies to you. The triggering date for any claims that you have that are related to your trial is January 1, and the triggering date for the claim that you have that is based on the new Supreme Court case is March 1. You should file a habeas petition that contains all of your claims by January 1 of the following year. If you file in February, the court will hear your claim based on the new Supreme Court case, but will probably not hear any of the claims related to your trial.

The time limit for habeas petitions is very strict, but most federal courts have allowed the statute of limitations to be “tolled” (meaning that the time limit is put on hold) under certain circumstances. Tolling occurs while your state post-conviction appeal is pending, as long as you filed the petition correctly.³⁰⁸ This means that if you have filed the state post-conviction petition in the proper court, with all the paperwork submitted properly, and within the time allowed by state law,³⁰⁹ then the time that the state court spends considering your petition will not count against your one-year time limit. However, your time does not toll while a federal court is considering your petition.³¹⁰ As discussed above, because your time does not toll while a federal court reviews your petition, if the federal court

306. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (people in state prisons); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f) (people in federal prisons).

307. The Third and Sixth Circuits have held that each claim in a habeas petition must satisfy the one-year time limit, and claims not satisfying that time limit will be dismissed. Bachman v. Bagley, 487 F.3d 979, 984 (6th Cir. 2007); Fielder v. Varner, 379 F.3d 113, 118–120 (3d Cir. 2004). The Eleventh Circuit has held that, as long as at least one claim in a habeas petition satisfies the one-year time limit, the court can hear all claims in the petition, even if some of those claims would otherwise be untimely. Walker v. Crosby, 341 F.3d 1240, 1245 (11th Cir. 2003). The majority of district courts confronting the issue have rejected Walker and concluded that any individual claim in a habeas petition should be dismissed if it does not satisfy the time limit. See Khan v. United States, 414 F. Supp. 2d 210, 216 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (declining to address the untimely claims in a habeas petition that also contained a timely claim based on a newly recognized right); Murphy v. Espinoza, 401 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1052 (C.D. Cal. 2005) (stating that “this Court must assess the timeliness of an inmate’s [habeas] claims on a claim-by-claim basis”). But see Ferreira v. Dept. of Corr., 494 F.3d 1286, 1289 (11th Cir. 2007) (discussing and upholding Walker as valid precedent); Shuckra v. Armstrong, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4408, at *12–13 (D. Conn. March 21, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that where a habeas petition contains at least one timely claim, other claims cannot be dismissed for untimeliness).

308. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) (explaining that the limitations period is tolled during “the time . . . which a properly filed application for State post-conviction or other collateral review with respect to the pertinent judgment or claim is pending”); Artuz v. Bennett, 531 U.S. 4, 8, 121 S. Ct. 361, 364–65, 148 L. Ed. 2d 213, 218 (2000) (holding that a state post-conviction motion is “properly filed” even if the motion is procedurally barred, as long as the “delivery and acceptance [of the papers] are in compliance with the applicable laws and rules governing filings”). The Artuz Court also noted that these rules usually include the form of the document, the time limits on its delivery, the place it must be filed, and the filing fee.

309. See Allen v. Siebert, 552 U.S. 3, 7, 128 S. Ct. 2, 4, 169 L. Ed. 2d 329, 334 (2007) (holding that a petition for post-conviction relief rejected by the court as untimely is not “properly filed” under 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(2) and thus does not toll the one-year limitation, even though an affirmative defense of the state’s statute of limitations may still be available).

310. See Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 172, 121 S. Ct. 2120, 2124, 150 L. Ed. 2d 251, 258 (2001) (holding that properly filed federal habeas petitions do not toll the one-year deadline). In this case, Walker’s state conviction became final in April 1996, and he filed a habeas petition that was dismissed in July 1996. In May 1997 he tried to file another federal habeas petition, and the Court held that this petition was time-barred because the time he was waiting for the decision on his first federal habeas petition did not stop the clock on the one-year timeline.

dismisses your petition without prejudice, you may not be able to re-submit your habeas petition to the federal court before the one-year deadline. In some extreme situations, you may qualify for “equitable tolling” (a situation where the time is not counted against you). Time that is “equitably tolled” does not count against your one-year time limit. However, equitable tolling is only available when “‘extraordinary circumstances’ beyond the petitioner’s control make it impossible to file a petition on time.”³¹¹

Think of the time limit as a stopwatch with one year on its face. Once the direct review of your case becomes final, the clock starts ticking. If you are incarcerated in a state prison, when an Article 440 motion or state post-conviction petition is filed in state court, the clock is stopped. Once the state court decides the case and all other appeals are completed,³¹² the clock starts ticking again, and a habeas petition must be filed in federal court before the one year is up. Note that the clock does not reset to one year. Rather, the only time remaining is what was left when the Article 440 motion or state habeas petition was filed in state court.

5. Successive Petitions³¹³

It is difficult to file more than one federal habeas corpus petition. It is important to file your habeas petition properly and completely the first time. You may not raise a habeas claim a second time after it has been adjudicated (decided by a judge) on the merits.³¹⁴ There are a few instances when you may bring new claims in a second habeas petition, but these instances are very limited. It is difficult to show the court that your claim falls into one of the exceptions where petitioners are allowed to file a second petition.

If your first petition was insufficient for one of a few reasons, the courts will allow you to file a new petition without considering the new petition successive. The following are the situations for which the courts will not consider your second petition successive:

311. See Rhines v. Weber, 544 U.S. 269, 277–278, 125 S. Ct. 1528, 1535, 161 L. Ed. 2d 440, 452 (2005) (noting that in extraordinary circumstances the court may issue a stay so that the petitioner may have the opportunity to present his claim without the time limit running out). See also Pace v. DiGuglielmo, 544 U.S. 408, 418, 125 S. Ct. 1807, 1814, 161 L. Ed. 2d 669, 679 (2005) (holding that habeas petitioner has the burden of establishing that he pursued his rights diligently and that some extraordinary circumstance stood in his way of filing within the time limit for equitable tolling to be proper). This is often a very high burden. For example, in the Third Circuit, the court rejected an equitable tolling argument when the petitioner was never informed that the state supreme court had denied his petition, even though his lawyer had been informed, since the lawyer never informed the petitioner. The court held attorney error was not sufficient to establish an extraordinary circumstance. LaCava v. Kyler, 398 F.3d 271, 275–276 (3d Cir. 2005). Courts also may allow equitable tolling of the statute of limitations to allow you to file a state exhaustion petition and an amended federal post-exhaustion petition.

312. Most courts have held that any time used to file a petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court after state post-conviction proceedings does not continue to toll the clock. See Stokes v. Dist. Attorney, 247 F.3d 539, 542 (3d Cir. 2001) (holding that the 90-day period during which a certiorari petition may be filed does not toll the statute of limitations); Snow v. Ault, 238 F.3d 1033, 1035 (8th Cir. 2001) (affirming that the limitations period is not tolled for those 90 days); Rhine v. Boone, 182 F.3d 1153, 1155 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding that the limitations period for filing a habeas petition was not tolled while defendant was seeking an appeal to the Supreme Court).

313. “Successive” means the one after. In other words, any petitions you file after your first one are considered “successive.”

314. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(1). Section 2244 applies to all petitioners filing under §§ 2241, 2254, and 2255, which includes all state and federal habeas petitioners. You may consider reading the text of 28 U.S.C. § 2244 in full to better understand the restrictions on successive petitions. See Burton v. Stewart, 549 U.S. 147, 153–154, 127 S. Ct. 793, 796–797, 166 L. Ed. 2d 628, 633–635 (2007) (instructing the district court to dismiss incarcerated person’s petition and finding that since the person had not made a motion in the court of appeals for an order authorizing the district court to consider the application, the application was thus a “second or successive” habeas application that he did not have authorization to file).

- (1) If you failed to exhaust your state remedies, and your first petition is dismissed to allow you to exhaust your state remedies, your second petition, once all the claims are exhausted, is not considered successive.³¹⁵
- (2) If your first petition is rejected for failure to pay the filing fee or for mistakes in form, the second, corrected petition is not considered successive.³¹⁶
- (3) If the first petition you filed was mislabeled as a Section 2255 petition, but actually was a Section 2241 petition that challenged the execution instead of the validity of the sentence, the court will not bar (dismiss) your second petition for being successive.³¹⁷
- (4) If your second petition challenges parts of the judgment that came about as the result of an earlier, successful petition, the court will not bar that second petition.³¹⁸ In this case, you must obtain authorization to file a second petition.³¹⁹

In some cases, even if the court deems a second petition to be successive, it may still allow you to proceed with your submission. However, exceptions to the general prohibition on successive petitions are rare and difficult to meet. The court will only consider a successive petition in extraordinary situations where you are raising a “new” claim in a second petition for federal habeas relief. The exceptions for “new” claims are different for people in state and federal prisons.

If you are incarcerated in a state prison, these are the exceptions to the general prohibition on successive petitions:

- (1) Your new claim rests on a “new” and previously unavailable rule of constitutional law that the Supreme Court has deemed is applicable retroactively “to cases on collateral appeal.”³²⁰ This means, the Supreme Court has recently clarified or made a rule of constitutional law and noted that it applies, even to cases that were decided before they made the rule. See Part C(2) of this Chapter, “New Laws: The Teague Rules.”

315. See Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 478, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1601, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 551 (2000) (deciding that “a habeas petition which is filed after an initial petition was dismissed without adjudication on the merits for failure to exhaust state remedies is not a ‘second or successive’ petition as that term is understood in the habeas context”); Carlson v. Pitcher, 137 F.3d 416, 420 (6th Cir. 1998) (affirming that “a habeas petition filed after a previous petition has been dismissed on exhaustion grounds is not a ‘second or successive petition’”); Camarano v. Irvin, 98 F.3d 44, 46 (2d Cir. 1996) (per curiam) (“Application of the gatekeeping provisions to deny a resubmitted petition in cases such as this would effectively preclude any federal habeas review and thus, would conflict with the doctrine of writ abuse, as understood both before and after Felker. . . . To foreclose further habeas review in such cases would not curb abuses of the writ, but rather would bar federal habeas review altogether.”). See Part D(2), “Exhaustion of State Remedies and Direct Appeal,” of this Chapter for more information on exhaustion.

316. See O'Connor v. United States, 133 F.3d 548, 550 (7th Cir. 1998) (asserting that a petitioner’s “returned” petition will not be considered an “initial petition”); Benton v. Washington, 106 F.3d 162, 164 (7th Cir. 1996) (finding that petitioner’s failure to pay a filing fee is not to be considered an “unsuccessful petition” and therefore the subsequent petition is not considered “successive”).

317. See Chambers v. United States, 106 F.3d 472, 474–475 (2d Cir. 1997). See Part A(4) of this Chapter, “Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus,” for more information on when people in federal prison would use § 2241 instead of § 2255.

318. See, e.g., In re Taylor, 171 F.3d 185, 187–188 (4th Cir. 1999) (holding that petitioner’s motion is not “second or successive” where petitioner seeks to raise only those issues that originated at the time of re-sentencing, after his first petition had been granted).

319. Burton v. Stewart, 549 U.S. 147, 157 127 S. Ct. 793, 799, 166 L. Ed. 2d 628, 637 (2007) (holding that where petitioner did not obtain authorization to file a second petition challenging the same judgment, the court lacked jurisdiction to hear it).

320. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(2)(A). This provision only applies to you if the Supreme Court has announced a new right since your case was decided and has explicitly said that this new right would apply to cases that have already been decided. Tyler v. Cain, 533 U.S. 656, 662, 121 S. Ct. 2478, 2482, 150 L. Ed. 2d 632, 642 (2001) (allowing successive habeas petition if the claim relies “on a new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral review by the Supreme Court, that was previously unavailable”).

- (2) Your new claim relies on facts that you could not have discovered earlier, even with “due diligence.”³²¹ Additionally, these facts combined with the other facts already on the record establish by “clear and convincing”³²² evidence that “but for”³²³ the constitutional error that you are challenging, no reasonable juror would have found you guilty of the offense with which you were charged.³²⁴ See Part D(3)(B)(ii) of this Chapter, “Fundamental Miscarriage of Justice.”

If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, these are the exceptions to the general prohibition:

- (1) A recent Supreme Court decision announces a retroactive legal right (a right that, when announced, applies to past cases as well as future ones) that was not available when you filed your first petition.³²⁵ In these cases, you do not need to show “the likelihood of innocence.” If, after the rejection of your first petition, the Supreme Court announces that a particular new law will be applied to all future and prior cases, you can submit a second petition on the same claims. In these cases, you do not need to show that ignoring the new law will harm you in some way.³²⁶
- (2) The combination of the “newly discovered evidence” with other facts on the record will provide “clear and convincing” evidence that, in the absence of a trial court’s error, the jury would have found you not guilty.³²⁷ In these cases, you need to show that the error caused by the court’s violation of the Constitution, federal laws, or treaties is not simply “harmless.”

Note that even if you can prove any of the above exceptions, other procedural difficulties could still keep you from filing a second request for habeas relief. In order to file a second petition in federal district court, you need to get permission from a panel of three federal circuit court judges. Upon your request, the panel of three judges will review your papers and make a decision within thirty days about whether or not they will allow your special second petition.³²⁸ If the court decides not to review your papers, then you cannot appeal their decision and, thus, you cannot file a second petition.

Because the rules are so strict, you should be careful when you are filing your petition for the first time. Be sure you include all the facts and do not assume that you will have a second chance if you get something wrong or if you do not follow a procedural rule correctly. The new law in AEDPA was meant to be harsh, and it is.³²⁹

E. The Mechanics of Petitioning for Federal Habeas Corpus

This Section explains the basic process surrounding habeas law: (1) when to file, (2) where to file, (3) whom to file against, (4) how to file, (5) what to expect after you file, and (6) how to appeal.

321. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(A)(ii). “Due diligence” means “good effort.”

322. “Clear and convincing evidence” is a standard between “preponderance of evidence” and “beyond a reasonable doubt.” According to the “clear and convincing evidence” standard, you must show that it is highly likely that the new facts would have changed the outcome of your trial. However, you do not have to show that the new facts definitely would have changed the outcome of your trial.

323. “But for,” in this context, means “without.”

324. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(B).

325. 28 U.S.C. § 2255(h)(2).

326. People in federal prison may be able to bring habeas claims by filing a § 2241 habeas motion even when the new law is not constitutional. To do this, the new law must meet a few conditions: (1) the new law must be substantive, and it must now deem the “criminal” conduct for which the petitioner was convicted no longer “criminal”; and (2) the new law must have been passed after the petitioner’s direct appeal, and before the first habeas motion. See In re Jones, 226 F.3d 328, 333–334 (4th Cir. 2000). See also Part A(4), “Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus,” of this Chapter for more information on when people in federal prison should bring § 2241 petitions.

327. 28 U.S.C. § 2255(h)(1).

328. 28 U.S.C. § 2244(b)(3)(D).

329. See Felker v. Turpin, 518 U.S. 651, 654, 116 S. Ct. 2333, 2335, 135 L. Ed. 2d 827, 834 (1996) (finding AEDPA’s new restrictions on successive habeas corpus petitions constitutional).

1. When to File

You must file your writ for habeas corpus in federal district court within one year after your case becomes “final.”³³⁰ This is very important; if you miss this time limit, you will probably not be allowed to bring a federal habeas claim. The time limit is discussed in detail in Part D(3) of this Chapter, “Time Limit.”

If you are filing pro se,³³¹ you should file the following three documents within the one-year time limit: (1) a habeas petition,³³² (2) an application for appointment of counsel, and (3) an application for a stay (in death penalty cases only).³³³

2. Where to File

If you are incarcerated in a state prison, you may have a choice of federal courts in which to file your petition. You may file your petition in either the district court of the district where you are imprisoned, or in the district court of the district in which you were convicted.³³⁴ For some people, this may be the same district. For others, these may be two different districts.

There are several advantages to filing in the district court where you were convicted. First, the records of your trial and sentencing are located there. Second, it is likely that additional evidence or witnesses that you may wish to produce for the court can be found there. Third, if you were convicted in a city and are now imprisoned in a small town or rural area, more qualified attorneys may be available to you in the district where you were convicted. On the other hand, if you already have an attorney, it may be easier for a local attorney to travel to your prison to discuss the case with you. In that case, you may choose to file in the district court of the place where you are now imprisoned. In any case, regardless of where you file, the court in which you file will likely transfer your case to the district where you were convicted if the court decides that a transfer is proper.³³⁵

If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, you do not have a choice of where to file your habeas petition. You must file your petition in the district in which you were convicted and sentenced.

3. Whom to File Against

If you are a person incarcerated in state custody filing a Section 2254 petition, or a person incarcerated in federal custody filing under Section 2241,³³⁶ you need to name a respondent on your petition. If you are a person incarcerated in federal custody filing under Section 2255, you do not need to name a respondent on your petition.³³⁷

As a person incarcerated in state custody, your habeas petition is a civil, not a criminal, action. You can think of a habeas petition as a lawsuit—but instead of suing for money or damages, you are suing for a new trial, or for your release from imprisonment. Therefore, you cannot file a petition to the court; you must file a petition against the person currently responsible for detaining you. The person you file the petition against is called the “respondent.” The respondent will be the person who

330. See 28 U.S.C. § 2244(d)(1) (people in state prison); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(f) (people in federal prison).

331. “Pro se” means that you are appearing in court by yourself and are not represented by a lawyer.

332. Remember to raise all possible claims, as long as you can support them with factual details and explanations about how the violation of your rights harmed you by affecting the outcome of your trial.

333. A “stay” means a temporary court-ordered stop of the judicial proceeding.

334. 28 U.S.C. § 2241(d).

335. 28 U.S.C. § 2241(d).

336. If you are filing under 28 U.S.C. § 2241, the guidelines for your respondent will be similar to those for people in state prison filing under § 2254. See Part A(4), “Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus,” of this Chapter for information on when people in federal prison should use § 2241.

337. This is because a § 2255 motion, unlike a § 2241 or § 2254 petition, is technically a criminal procedural motion. So, the respondent remains the party that prosecuted you—the United States.

has control over your custody.³³⁸ So, the person you name as the respondent will depend on the type of custody you are under.³³⁹

Generally, the person who has control over your custody and whom you should name as the respondent is the warden of your prison or the chief officer in charge of state penal institutions.³⁴⁰ However, there are a few situations where you should name a different party as respondent. If you are not currently in custody, but are challenging a future custodial sentence, you should name the attorney general of the state that will have custody over you.³⁴¹ If you are not under physical custody of the state,³⁴² you should name as respondent the person who has legal control over your custody.³⁴³ For example, if you are on parole, you should name the parole officer and the supervising agency, such as the parole board, as the respondents.³⁴⁴

4. How to File

To begin a habeas proceeding, you need to obtain a petition form for a writ of habeas corpus. You should write to the clerk of the federal district court in which you plan to file and request this form.³⁴⁵ If you are incarcerated in a state prison, you should request the standard form for a petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 for a writ of habeas corpus.³⁴⁶ If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, request a standard form for a 28 U.S.C. § 2255 motion.³⁴⁷ The clerk should send the form to you free of charge.³⁴⁸ Sample blank forms for 28 U.S.C. § 2254 petitions and 28 U.S.C. § 2255 motions are in the United States Code (“U.S.C.”) following each statute’s rules.³⁴⁹

338. This is called the “immediate custodian rule.” Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 435, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2717, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 527 (2004).

339. See Part D(1), “In Custody,” of this Chapter for more information on custody.

340. “[T]he state officer having custody of the applicant [shall] be named as respondent.” Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(a), 28 U.S.C. § 2254 advisory committee’s note to 2004 amendment. You should name either the warden or officer based on who has “custody” over you. If you are unsure, you should name both the warden and the officer as respondents.

341. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, Rule 2(a), 28 U.S.C. § 2254 advisory committee’s note to 2004 amendment.

342. See Part D(1), “In Custody,” of this Chapter for more information on custody.

343. See Rumsfeld v. Padilla, 542 U.S. 426, 439, 124 S. Ct. 2711, 2720, 159 L. Ed. 2d 513, 530 (2004) (“[I]dentification of the party exercising legal control only comes into play when there is no immediate physical custodian with respect to the challenged ‘custody.’”).

344. See Hogan v. Hanks, 97 F.3d 189, 190 (7th Cir. 1996) (“If the petitioner is on parole, the parole board or equivalent should be named [as respondent].”).

345. For a list of federal district court addresses, see Appendix I at the end of the JLM.

346. Rules Governing § 2254 Cases 2(d) (requiring federal district courts to supply incarcerated people with forms for habeas corpus petitions). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

347. Rules Governing § 2255 Proc., 2(c). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

348. Rules Governing § 2255 Cases, 2(c). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

349. Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, available at <https://www.ca4.uscourts.gov/docs/pdfs/ao241.pdf?sfvrsn=10> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019); Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, available at <https://www.ca4.uscourts.gov/docs/pdfs/ao243.pdf?sfvrsn=8> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019). Note that these are citations to blank sample forms, and should be attached to the rules governing these statutes. If you have trouble locating these in your library, check with the federal district court clerk. Note that the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, 2(d) and the Rules Governing § 2255 Proc., 2(c), state that individual districts may alter the exact format

The form will ask for a lot of information. The information requested includes the facts on which you base your claims, your custody status, the state court proceedings in which you exhausted your claims, the citations and results of any other federal habeas petitions, and the relief you seek.³⁵⁰ The petition or motion must also include all the grounds of relief available to you, the facts supporting each of your claims, and the relief you are requesting.³⁵¹ In providing this information, keep the following nine steps in mind.

(d) Write Plainly

Do not worry about using legal terminology with which you are uncomfortable. The court will not penalize you for not using formal legal terms. And, if you misuse legal phrases, you may confuse the court and prevent the judge from understanding your claim. Be sure to write as clearly as possible and to check your reasoning, grammar, and spelling.

(e) Tell the Facts

The most important thing you can do in your petition is to tell the court the relevant facts. Judges usually know the law but rarely know the facts of your case. If you have facts that relate to your legal claims—for example, that the government withheld a ballistics report from your trial lawyer—you should tell the court. Factual details you think are unimportant may be important to the court.

(f) Proofread

Ask someone you trust to read over your papers. Sometimes it is difficult to evaluate your own arguments. A fresh set of eyes can catch gaps in your reasoning or grammatical mistakes you might have missed.

(g) Argue Truthfully and Rely on the Law

Remember your audience. You are writing to a federal judge and his legal assistants. Federal judges and their assistants often have a great deal of experience handling habeas petitions, so you should not try to trick them or lie to them. Also, do not make a plea for mercy. Instead, you should appeal to a judge's sense of fairness by making an argument that the government has convicted or sentenced you unfairly. To do this, you should use the legal standards and information provided earlier in this Chapter and found through your own research.

(h) Provide Copies of Parts of the Record

Throughout the criminal justice process, you have probably received many papers like subpoenas, briefs, judgments, and transcripts. These papers make up the record of your case and are often helpful to a court reviewing your claim. Include copies of as much of the record as you can and point out the relevant parts of the record in your legal argument. If you are missing some of the record or do not have access to a copy machine, ask the court to get the relevant parts of the record from the trial court or the prosecution. If possible, identify the important parts of the record as specifically as you can. For example, do not simply say that the judge asked impermissible questions at your trial; instead, state (if possible) what those questions were and the transcript page numbers where the questions appear.

of the form, but both the forms the court uses and the sample forms should have the same substance. Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

350. ADMIN OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS, FORM AO 241, PETITION FOR RELIEF FROM A CONVICTION OR SENTENCE BY A PERSON IN STATE CUSTODY (2017), available at https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/AO_241_0.pdf (last visited Mar. 1, 2019); ADMIN OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS, FORM AO 243, MOTION TO VACATE, SET ASIDE, OR CORRECT A SENTENCE BY A PERSON IN FEDERAL CUSTODY (2017), available at https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/AO_243_0.pdf (last visited Mar. 1, 2019).

351. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 note (R. GOVERNING § 2254 CASES IN THE U.S. DIST. CTS. 2(c)(1)-(3)); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 note (R. GOVERNING § 2255 CASES IN THE U.S. DIST. CTS. 2(b)(1)-(3)).

(i) Provide Citations

Statutes, administrative rules, and judicial opinions often have citations explaining where they can be found. Whenever possible, give citations to the laws and cases that apply to your factual situation. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” to learn how to find these laws and cases and how to give citations. You do not have to give citations,³⁵² but they may help the judge make his or her decision efficiently. If you know only a part of the citation, like the name of a case, you should include that part. If you do not know the citation, do not include it and do not worry about it. Try not to include long lists of cases in your petition (“string cites”). Instead, use the best ones for your case. If a lot of cases say the same thing, pick the most recent decision from the highest court and cite it.

(j) Present All Possible Claims

As discussed in Part D(5) (“Successive Petitions”) of this Chapter, you probably have only one chance to submit a federal habeas petition. Thus, in your habeas petition, you should include any and all the claims that are supported by the facts of your case and by the law.

(k) Sign, Date, and Copy

After you complete the form, you must sign it.³⁵³ In addition, date the petition and/or swear to the date that it was given to a prison official to be mailed.³⁵⁴ Then, make three copies of the completed petition so that you have four in total. You must send the original and two copies to the clerk of the court.³⁵⁵ Keep the remaining copy for your own records.

(l) Pay Your Filing Fee

For people incarcerated in state custody and people incarcerated in federal custody filing 28 U.S.C. § 2241 petitions, the filing fee for a habeas petition is five dollars.³⁵⁶ If you cannot afford the fee, you should ask the clerk of the court for an “in forma pauperis” application.³⁵⁷ This application seeks the court’s permission to proceed in the manner of a poor person by not paying court fees and costs.³⁵⁸ In addition to completing the in forma pauperis form, you must write and sign an application of 352. See Jones v. Jerrison, 20 F.3d 849, 853 (8th Cir. 1994) (“No statute or rule requires that a petition identify a legal theory or include citations to legal authority.”).

353. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254 note (R. GOVERNING § 2254 CASES IN THE U.S. DIST. CTS. 2(c)(5)); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 note (R. GOVERNING § 2255 CASES IN THE U.S. DIST. CTS. 2(b)(5)).

354. Petition for Relief From a Conviction or Sentence By a Person in State Custody, p.16, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2254 Motion to Vacate, Set Aside, or Correct a Sentence By a Person in Federal Custody, p.13, 28 U.S.C. fol. § 2255. It is important to note the date because the petition may not arrive at the court until a long time after you have given it to prison officials to be mailed. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(d); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3(d) (stating that a petition is considered on time as long as it enters the prison internal mailing system on or before the last day of filing). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

355. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(a); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3(a). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

356. 28 U.S.C. § 1914(a).

357. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(a)(2). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

358. ADMIN OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS, FORM AO 240, APPLICATION TO PROCEED IN DISTRICT COURT WITHOUT PREPAYING FEES OR COSTS (SHORT FORM) (2010), available at https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/ao240_0.pdf (last visited Mar. 1, 2019).

indigence.³⁵⁹ You must also provide a certificate from your prison warden stating how much money is in your prison account.³⁶⁰ When you have prepared the in forma pauperis form, the application of indigence, and the prison account certificate, you should make copies of them for your own records and send the originals to the clerk of the court. If the clerk accepts your application, you will not have to pay the filing fee or any other costs arising in your habeas proceeding.

People incarcerated in federal custody filing a motion under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 do not have to pay a filing fee.³⁶¹ However, all people incarcerated in federal custody should still complete the in forma pauperis form, discussed above, because it will be helpful to have the form on file in case the judge chooses to appoint you counsel.³⁶² Additionally, if you are a person incarcerated in federal custody filing 28 U.S.C. § 2241 petitions³⁶³ or a person incarcerated in state custody filing 28 U.S.C. § 2254³⁶⁴ petitions and you do not file the in forma pauperis application discussed above, you will have to pay the filing fee.

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) requires incarcerated persons to make full or partial payment of the application fee for civil suits. When the PLRA was first passed, it raised a question about whether habeas petitioners would be required to pay filing fees regardless of their in forma pauperis status.³⁶⁵ However, federal courts of appeal have held that the requirements set out in the PLRA do not apply to incarcerated persons filing habeas corpus petitions.³⁶⁶

5. What to Expect After Filing

After you have filed your petition, you can expect the court to issue one or more of the following: (a) a dismissal, (b) an order to show cause, and/or (c) an evidentiary hearing. Generally, the court must conduct an evidentiary hearing if you “alleged facts, which, if found to be true, would have entitled

359. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(a)(2)(requiring an affidavit that the incarcerated person is unable to pay the filing fee in accordance with 28 U.S.C. § 1915). See also 28 U.S.C. § 1915 (stating general requirements for proceedings in forma pauperis). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

360. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(a)(2). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

361. See 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3 advisory committee’s note (“There is no filing fee required of a movant under these rules.”). Note that this is a citation to an Advisory Committee Note to the Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, available at <http://uscode.house.gov/view.xhtml?req=granuleid:USC-prelim-title28-section2255&num=0&edition=prelim> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

362. See 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 3 advisory committee’s note (stating that affidavit for an in forma pauperis form will still be attached to the form provided for a § 2255 motion in case the movant will need the form at a later stage). Note that this is a citation to an Advisory Committee Note to the Rules Governing Section 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, available at <http://uscode.house.gov/view.xhtml?req=granuleid:USC-prelim-title28-section2255&num=0&edition=prelim> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

363. 28 U.S.C. § 1915 (general guidelines on proceedings in forma pauperis). For more information on when people incarcerated in federal custody should use 28 U.S.C. § 2241 instead of § 2255, see Part A(4), “Which Laws Apply to Federal Habeas Corpus?,” of this Chapter.

364. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 3(a). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

365. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e. Please see Chapter 14 of the JLM for a full discussion of the PLRA.

366. See, e.g., United States v. Levi, 111 F.3d 955, 956, 324 U.S. App. D.C. 196, 197 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (per curiam) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings); Smith v. Angelone, 111 F.3d 1126, 1129–1131 (4th Cir. 1997) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings); Reyes v. Keane, 90 F.3d 676, 678 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that the PLRA filing fee provisions do not apply to habeas proceedings).

[you] to habeas relief.”³⁶⁷ In other words, the court is supposed to give you the benefit of the doubt and assume the truth of your alleged facts when deciding whether to look at the evidence in an evidentiary hearing. However, the court may make its decision without you present.³⁶⁸

(a) Dismissal

After you file your habeas request, the judge may dismiss your entire petition. The judge will do so if it appears on the face of your petition that you are not entitled to relief—that is, even assuming your claims are true, habeas law does not give you any relief.³⁶⁹ For instance, the court will dismiss your claim if, in your federal habeas petition, you complain about a harmless error. The court may also reject your claim if the facts of your case on the record are not fully developed (in other words, if you have not fully stated that you have a federal claim), or if it is clear that your petition was not filed within the one-year time limit.

(b) Order to Show Cause

If the judge decides that, assuming the truth of your claim, you may have a case, he or she will issue an “order to show cause” to the person who has you in custody.³⁷⁰ If you are a person incarcerated in state custody, this person is probably the superintendent of your prison.³⁷¹ If you are a person incarcerated in federal custody, this person is the United States Attorney (the prosecutor) in charge of your case.³⁷² The “order to show cause” directs the warden or attorney to state why the judge should not issue a writ of habeas corpus.³⁷³ The warden or attorney must then reply by filing an “answer”

367. See Ciak v. United States, 59 F.3d 296, 307 (2d Cir. 1995) (requiring an evidentiary hearing where petitioner alleged trial counsel abandoned defense strategy because of conflict of interest); see also Shaw v. United States, 24 F.3d 1040, 1043 (8th Cir. 1994) (dismissing habeas petition in order to allow district court to complete discovery on whether trial counsel failed to use exceptions to rape shield law); United States v. Blaylock, 20 F.3d 1458, 1465–1469 (9th Cir. 1994) (requiring evidentiary hearing where defendant claimed counsel’s failure to inform defendant of government’s plea offer constituted ineffective counsel); Gov’t of V.I. v. Weatherwax, 20 F.3d 572, 580, 29 V.I. 410, 424 (3d Cir. 1994) (requiring evidentiary hearing where defendant claimed counsel’s failure to seek voir dire constituted ineffective counsel because, if true, claim would be grounds for habeas corpus relief); Frazer v. United States, 18 F.3d 778, 781, 784–785 (9th Cir. 1994) (entitling incarcerated persons to evidentiary hearing unless files and record of the case conclusively show that the incarcerated person is not entitled to relief).

368. See 28 U.S.C. § 2243 (people incarcerated in state custody do not have to be present when the court is only dealing with issues of law); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(c) (people incarcerated in federal custody do not have to be present at the hearing determining a § 2255 motion).

369. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 4 (“If it plainly appears from the petition and any attached exhibits that the petitioner is not entitled to relief in the district court, the judge must dismiss the petition”); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

370. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 4 (“If the petition is not dismissed, the judge must order the respondent to file an answer, motion or other response.”); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

371. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 2(a) (“If the petitioner is currently in custody under a state-court judgment, the petition must name as respondent the state officer who has custody”). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

372. 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b) (“If the motion is not dismissed, the judge must order the United States attorney to file an answer, motion, or other response.”). Note that this is a citation to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings in the United States District Courts, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

373. The state attorney or a district attorney will usually represent the warden. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 4; 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 4(b). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States within a time limit fixed by the court,³⁷⁴ and must supply you with a copy of his answer.³⁷⁵ If you object to any statement of fact in the answer, you need to challenge the statements in a document known as a “traverse.”³⁷⁶

(c) Evidentiary Hearing

For people incarcerated in state custody, under AEDPA, the court reviewing your habeas petition is required to assume the facts as found by the state court.³⁷⁷ This means that the habeas court must make its judgment on your habeas petition based on the version of the facts that your trial court found to be true. However, after receiving the petition, answer, and traverse, the habeas court may choose to hold an evidentiary hearing on facts that were not fully developed in state trial court.³⁷⁸ Facts that are not fully developed are those that are still in dispute. The habeas court’s decision to hold a hearing may depend on why the facts were not developed in the trial court. Whether a hearing will be held may be affected by (1) whether some error for which you are responsible prevented the development of the facts, or (2) whether the state’s error prevented the factual development.

6. Petitioner’s Error

For people incarcerated in state custody, if you or your lawyer failed to fully develop the facts in state court, this is referred to as a “petitioner’s error.” AEDPA has severely limited the opportunities

District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

374. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5(b); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 5(b). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

375. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5 advisory committee’s note (“Rule 5 does not indicate who the answer is to be served upon, but it necessarily implies that it will be mailed to the petitioner”). Note that this is a citation to an Advisory Committee Note to the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <http://uscode.house.gov/view.xhtml?req=granuleid:USC-prelim-title28-section2254&num=0&edition=prelim> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

376. A “traverse” is your way of denying any important facts claimed by the warden. Under Rule 5 following § 2254 and § 2255, you may submit a “reply” in response to the other side’s answer within a time fixed by the judge. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 5(e); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 5(d). Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

377. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(1) (“a determination of a factual issue made by a State court shall be presumed to be correct.”).

378. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8 advisory committee note (stating that the judge may hold an evidentiary hearing where the material facts of the case are in dispute (citing Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293, 319)); 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d) specifies the circumstances under which a hearing is mandatory. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8 advisory committee’s note. Note that this is a citation to an Advisory Committee Note to the Rules Governing Section 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, available at <http://uscode.house.gov/view.xhtml?req=granuleid:USC-prelim-title28-section2254&num=0&edition=prelim> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

Regardless of whether you are incarcerated in state or federal custody, the federal district court may designate a magistrate to conduct hearings on your petition. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b). After the hearing, the magistrate judge must file their findings of facts and recommendations with the court, and then mail you a copy. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b). You must serve and file written objections to the magistrate’s findings and recommendations within 14 days of receiving the magistrate’s proposals. 28 U.S.C. § 2254 r. 8(b); 28 U.S.C. § 2255 r. 8(b). While Rule 8(b) states only that you “may” file written objections, you should always file written objections if you disagree with any of the magistrate’s findings or recommendations. Note that these are citations to the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases in the United States District Courts, and to the Rules Governing § 2255 Proceedings for the United States District Courts, both are available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 10, 2019).

for evidentiary hearings in this situation. The rule states that you must show two things in order to receive an evidentiary hearing: cause and innocence.³⁷⁹

You can show cause in one of two ways:

- (1) By showing you are now relying on a retroactive right newly recognized by the Supreme Court,³⁸⁰ or
- (2) By showing you are now relying on newly discovered facts that could not be uncovered earlier during the state proceedings through “due diligence” (reasonable effort).³⁸¹

In addition to showing cause, you must also show innocence. You can show innocence if the “facts underlying [your] claim would be [enough] to establish by clear and convincing evidence that but for the constitutional error, no reasonable fact-finder would have found [you] guilty of the underlying offense.”³⁸² In other words, you must prove that, if the constitutional error you are alleging had never happened, a “reasonable” juror would have found you innocent of the crime of which you were convicted.

If you show both cause and innocence will you be granted an evidentiary hearing to further develop your facts. However, if you cannot show cause and innocence, the court will proceed with the facts as they appear in the state court record. Petitioner’s error is difficult to show if you made a mistake presenting your case. If the lack of factual development was caused by your error, the court will probably not grant you an evidentiary hearing. The possibility of not getting an evidentiary hearing explains why it is so important for you to investigate and raise all the facts supporting all your constitutional claims in state court. It is also why you must ask the state court to appoint an investigator and all the experts you need to help you discover and identify facts supporting your constitutional claims. Be sure to also request discovery of documents, and always request an evidentiary hearing at which you can present your witnesses and evidence and can prove your claims. If you do not request discovery of documents in state court, the cause and innocence standard means that you may not be able to request discovery of documents in your habeas court. Because the cause and innocence standard also makes it unlikely that the habeas court will give you an evidentiary hearing, you should request an evidentiary hearing in state court so that you can develop all of the facts necessary for your habeas petition.

379. The statute does not use the terms cause or innocence, but does require that you provide the court with a reason, based either on new law or facts, to hear your claim, as well as prove your likely innocence. See 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2); see also McQuiggin v. Perkins, 569 U.S. 383, 396, 133 S. Ct. 1924, 1934, 185 L. Ed. 2d 1019, 1033 (2013) (“Under AEDPA, a petitioner seeking an evidentiary hearing must show diligence and, in addition, establish her actual innocence by clear and convincing evidence.”).

380. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(A)(i). This means that you are relying on a right that, even though it was recognized after your trial, can be applied to past situations like yours.

381. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(A)(ii). For a case providing an example of evidence not previously discoverable through “due diligence,” see Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435 (2000). In that case, the Supreme Court held that, in order to obtain an evidentiary hearing in federal court, the petitioner had to show he exercised due diligence in trying to develop the facts in state court. If the petitioner could show he was “diligent in developing the record and presenting, if possible, all claims of constitutional error,” but the facts remained inadequately developed regardless, the petitioner may be entitled to a federal evidentiary hearing. Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 437, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1491, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 452 (2000). Additionally, the requirement of due diligence does not depend on whether the efforts were successful, but on whether “the prisoner made a reasonable attempt, in light of the information available at the time, to investigate and pursue claims in state court.” Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 435, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1490, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 451 (2000). The Court also held that “in the usual case ... the prisoner, [must] at a minimum, seek an evidentiary hearing in state court in the manner prescribed by state law.” Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 420, 437, 120 S. Ct. 1479, 1490, 146 L. Ed. 2d 435, 452 (2000); see also Dobbs v. Zant, 506 U.S. 357, 359, 113 S. Ct. 835, 836, 122 L. Ed. 2d 103, 107 (1993) (finding that a trial transcript may not be excluded for delay in its being discovered where the delay mostly was a result of the state’s error).

382. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2)(B); see Sawyer v. Whitley, 505 U.S. 333, 345, 112 S. Ct. 2514, 2522, 120 L. Ed. 2d 269, 283–284 (1992) (citing the “actual innocence” exception, but not allowing an exception based solely upon a showing of additional mitigating evidence that related only to the discretionary decision between the death penalty and life imprisonment).

7. State's Error

If the state or the state court prevented the development of facts in your case, you will receive a mandatory hearing. The Supreme Court has listed six situations in which state errors require the federal court to hold an evidentiary hearing:³⁸³

- (1) The merits of the factual dispute were not resolved in the state hearing,
- (2) The state's factual determination is not fairly supported by the record as a whole,
- (3) The state court's fact-finding procedure did not adequately provide a full and fair hearing,
- (4) There is a substantial allegation of newly discovered evidence,
- (5) The material facts were not adequately developed at the state court hearing,³⁸⁴ or
- (6) The state judge did not afford the applicant a full and fair hearing for any reason.

Remember that these situations afford you a hearing only if the state or the court was at fault for not developing the facts during the state proceedings.

8. How to Appeal

If you filed a petition for habeas corpus in federal district court and your petition was denied, you may appeal to the appropriate United States Court of Appeals (also called the circuit court).³⁸⁵ Because AEDPA has severely restricted the opportunity to file a second or successive petition for habeas relief, the opportunity to appeal your first petition is even more important. Be sure to follow the procedures correctly. You must file a notice of appeal in the district court within thirty days of the district court judgment.³⁸⁶ You must be sure to file on time because it is unlikely the circuit court will grant an extension.³⁸⁷

An appeal is not mandatory, and you do not have an automatic right to appeal a denial of your habeas petition. In order to appeal you must get permission by obtaining a "certificate of appealability" from a federal district judge or circuit court judge.³⁸⁸ You do this by filing an application for a certificate of appealability with your notice of appeal in district court.³⁸⁹ If the district court denies your request for a certificate of appealability entirely, you may request one from the appeals court by filing an 383. Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293, 313, 83 S. Ct. 745, 757, 9 L. Ed. 2d 770, 786 (1963), overruled on other grounds by Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 5–6, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1717–18, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 326–327 (1992).

384. Under Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, federal courts will not provide an evidentiary hearing to a habeas petitioner who had an adequate opportunity to develop the relevant facts in state court proceedings unless the petitioner can show (1) cause for failure to develop the facts and that that failure resulted in actual prejudice to petitioner; or (2) he can show that a fundamental miscarriage of justice would result from not having an evidentiary hearing. Keeney v. Tamayo-Reyes, 504 U.S. 1, 11–12, 112 S. Ct. 1715, 1721, 118 L. Ed. 2d 318, 330–331. But see Rhoden v. Rowland, 10 F.3d 1457, 1460 (9th Cir. 1993) (remanding for an evidentiary hearing because, unlike the petitioner in Tamayo-Reyes, petitioner here took all steps possible to develop a record of prejudice). Note that the standards of both Townsend and Keeney were superseded by the passage of the AEDPA in 1996.

385. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(a).

386. 28 U.S.C. § 2107(a).

387. Even though getting an extension is hard, Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 4(a)(5)(A) allows federal courts to extend the time for filing if you can show excusable neglect or good cause. Fed. R. App. P. 4(a)(5)(A)(ii). For example, in Mendez v. Knowles, 556 F.3d 757, 764–67 (9th Cir. 2009), the court granted an extension based on excusable neglect, when the defendant's mailed habeas petition arrived to the court a day late. The court believed it was permissible to grant an extension because it would not prejudice the other party, the defendant acted in good faith when he filed the petition for an extension, and the delay was only for one day and had no impact on the judicial proceedings. Note that these are still very narrow circumstances, and different courts may be more or less open to granting extensions.

388. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(1); see, e.g., Hogan v. Zavaras, 93 F.3d 711, 712 (10th Cir. 1996) (refusing to issue a certificate of appealability because the plaintiff failed to show a substantial denial of a constitutional right).

389. 28 U.S.C. § 2253.

application for a certificate of appealability with that court's clerk.³⁹⁰ If the district court grants a certificate for only some of your claims, you may ask the court of appeals to include additional claims the district court did not specify.³⁹¹

The circuit judge will permit an appeal only upon a "substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right."³⁹² To satisfy this "substantial showing" standard, you must specify the issue(s) involved in the violation of your federal constitutional rights.³⁹³ Be sure to ask for a certificate of appealability on every issue you want to appeal. Your appeal will be limited to those issues on which the certificate is granted.

Some of the "appealable issues" that have been accepted in the past are listed below:

- (1) Even if the parties consent, does a magistrate judge have the authority under 28 U.S.C. § 636 and Article III of the Constitution to make a final judgment in a habeas corpus case?³⁹⁴
- (2) Did the trial court deny you the right to confront witnesses?³⁹⁵
- (3) Did the prosecutor commit a Brady violation concerning blood-testing evidence?³⁹⁶
- (4) Did the prosecutor commit a Brady violation by withholding witness statements at trial that were favorable to your case?³⁹⁷
- (5) Was your confession coerced by police beatings?³⁹⁸
- (6) Was your trial counsel constitutionally ineffective?³⁹⁹

If your petition was dismissed for procedural reasons, like failure to exhaust state remedies,⁴⁰⁰ a certificate of appealability will only be granted if reasonable jurors could debate whether (1) a constitutional violation occurred, and whether (2) the district court correctly dismissed your petition.⁴⁰¹ Issuing a certificate of appealability does not require showing that the appeal will succeed

390. 28 U.S.C. § 2253. If the court of appeals denies your request for a certificate of appealability, you may try to appeal this denial to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has held that it has jurisdiction to hear such appeals. Hohn v. United States, 524 U.S. 236, 247, 118 S. Ct. 1969, 1975, 141 L. Ed. 2d 242, 256 (1998).

391. See, e.g., Rule 22-1(e) of the Ninth Circuit Rules, which allows a defendant to present issues that did not appear in the application for the certificate of appealability and which submits this motion to expand the certificate of appealability to be decided by the merits panel as it sees appropriate. 9TH CIR. FED. R. APP. P. 22-1(e).

392. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2).

393. 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(3).

394. See Orsini v. Wallace, 913 F.2d 474, 476 (8th Cir. 1990) (finding that magistrate judges have authority to enter final judgment on a habeas petition where both parties consent because "Congress intended for magistrates to be authorized to conduct habeas proceedings within the limitations set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 636(c)(1).").

395. See Norris v. Schotten, 146 F.3d 314, 329-331 (6th Cir. 1998) (stating that an error in limiting cross-examination will yield a grant of habeas relief only when the error rises to the level of a "being a denial of fundamental fairness.>").

396. Norris v. Schotten, 146 F.3d 314, 334 (6th Cir. 1998) (stating that Brady principles—which require prosecutors to disclose certain evidence favorable to the defendant—only apply when prosecutors either fail to disclose evidence, or when they disclose evidence so late that it prejudices the defendant).

397. Mahler v. Kaylo, 537 F.3d 494, 503-504 (5th Cir. 2008) (reversing district court's denial of defendant's petition for habeas relief by finding that the lower court's determination that the witness statements were not material was contrary to established federal law).

398. See Nelson v. Walker, 121 F.3d 828, 832 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that the defendant satisfied the requirement of a "substantial showing of a denial of a constitutional right" because the record indicated it was "debatable among jurists of reason ..." that his confession was coerced by beatings).

399. See Part B(2) ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations") of this Chapter for more information on ineffective assistance of counsel.

400. See Part B(5) ("Successive Petitions") of this Chapter for more information on failure to exhaust.

401. Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473, 484, 489, 120 S. Ct. 1595, 1604, 1606-1067, 146 L. Ed. 2d 542, 555, 558 (2000) (reversing district court's denial of habeas petition because defendant had shown reasonable jurists could conclude that the district court's procedural rulings were wrong). The Second Circuit applied the same standard in Matias v. Artuz, 8 F. App'x. 9, 11-12 (2d Cir. 2001).

but that reasonable jurors could debate whether the petition should have been resolved differently.⁴⁰² The inquiry does not require full consideration of the factual or legal bases presented in support of the claim,⁴⁰³ which makes getting a certificate of appealability a bit easier.

F. How to Get Help from a Lawyer

You do not have a constitutional right to a court-appointed lawyer in a federal habeas corpus proceeding. In non-capital cases, a court may provide you with a lawyer when the “interests of justice” require the court to do so.⁴⁰⁴ If you are not appointed a lawyer, your right to access the courts includes at least some access to either a law library or “jailhouse” lawyers.⁴⁰⁵ See JLM, Chapter 3, “Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court,” for more information. It is important to note that even if you are appointed counsel for your habeas petition, you do not have a right to effective assistance of counsel.⁴⁰⁶

Generally, federal courts will appoint a lawyer to represent you if one of the following is true:

- (1) Your case involves complex legal issues;⁴⁰⁷
- (2) You are mentally or physically disabled;⁴⁰⁸

402. Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 327, 123 S. Ct. 1029, 1034, 154 L. Ed. 2d 931, 944 (2003) (“A petitioner satisfies this standard by demonstrating that jurists of reason could disagree with the district court’s resolution of his constitutional claims or that jurists could conclude the issues are adequate to deserve encouragement to proceed further.”).

403. Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 336, 123 S. Ct. 1029, 1039, 154 L. Ed. 931, 950 (2003) (“This threshold inquiry does not require full consideration of the factual or legal bases adduced in support of the claims. In fact, the statute forbids it.”).

404. 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(a)(2)(B); 28 U.S.C. § 2255(g); R. Governing § 2255 Cases 6(a), 8(c), available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 9, 2019). For incarcerated persons in state custody, the court may appoint counsel for an applicant who is or becomes unable to afford counsel. Again, the decision is governed by the “interests of justice.” 28 U.S.C. § 2254(h); R. Governing § 2255 Cases 6(a), 8(c), available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 9, 2019); see also Reese v. Fulcomer, 946 F.2d 247, 263–264 (3d Cir. 1991) (describing the factors the court should consider before appointing counsel to an indigent habeas petitioner as: (1) whether the habeas claim is frivolous; (2) whether appointment of counsel will benefit the petitioner and the court; (3) the complexity of the legal or factual issues in the case; and (4) the ability of the pro se petitioner to investigate facts and present claims).

405. See Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 828, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1498, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 83 (1977) (holding that the right of access to the courts “requires prison authorities to assist inmates in the preparation and filing of meaningful legal papers by providing incarcerated persons with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law.”). See also Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351–353, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180–2181, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 617–619 (1996) (affirming the view from Bounds that incarcerated persons’ rights includes access law libraries and librarian staff, but limiting the decision by holding that incarcerated persons need to show an actual injury suffered to prove a violation of the right to access to the courts).

406. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(i) (“The ineffectiveness or incompetence of counsel during Federal or State collateral post-conviction proceedings shall not be a ground for relief in a proceeding arising under section 2254.”).

407. See, e.g., Battle v. Armontrout, 902 F.2d 701, 702 (8th Cir. 1990) (stating the district court was wrong for failing to appoint counsel because the factual and legal issues were sufficiently complex and numerous; also finding that petitioner’s imprisonment significantly hurt his ability to investigate the issues); United States ex rel. Jones v. Franzen, 676 F.2d 261, 267 (7th Cir. 1982) (holding that counsel should be appointed for complex legal issues like allegations regarding withholding evidence, admission of co-defendant’s statements, and improper jury sequestration). “Jury sequestration” is when the court orders that the jurors be isolated from the public and have limited access to outside influences, like television news or newspapers). But you should know a court won’t always appoint counsel. See Williams v. Groose, 979 F.2d 1335, 1337 (8th Cir. 1992) (refusing to appoint counsel when petitioner had assistance in his earlier judicial proceedings that raised substantially similar claims as his habeas claim).

408. See Hearn v. Dretke 376 F.3d 447, 455 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that a incarcerated person’s petition for appointment of counsel need rest only on a colorable claim of mental retardation); In re Hearn, 389 F.3d 122, 123 (5th Cir. 2004) (clarifying that even if counsel is appointed, this does not grant capital defendants a right to automatic stay of execution pending review); Merritt v. Faulkner, 697 F.2d 761, 764–766 (7th Cir. 1983) (appointing counsel to a recently blinded petitioner in a non-habeas petition that had the same requirements for

- (3) You cannot investigate key facts, or the issues in your case require expert testimony to be resolved;⁴⁰⁹
- (4) The court decides to hold a hearing to investigate the facts of your case;⁴¹⁰
- (5) The court allows you to conduct discovery;⁴¹¹ or
- (6) Your habeas petition is denied in district court but a certificate of appealability is granted in the court of appeals.⁴¹²

The federal district judge usually has full discretion in determining whether you should get assigned a lawyer for one of these reasons. This means that the appellate court normally will not overturn the district judge's decision about the appointment of counsel. However, at least one jurisdiction has made a general rule that counsel should be appointed whenever an indigent incarcerated person has a strong legal claim in a habeas petition.⁴¹³

To request a court-appointed lawyer, you must prepare a motion for appointment of counsel, a brief document stating the legal and factual reasons why the court should appoint a lawyer, and an in forma pauperis application⁴¹⁴, including the supporting documents discussed in Part E(4) of this Chapter.

You may file these papers at several different times during your habeas proceeding. For example, you may request a lawyer even before you file your petition, so that the lawyer can help you prepare the petition. Courts, however, are unlikely to appoint an attorney at this early stage because they do not know the nature or complexity of your claims. So, you may want to wait until you submit your petition or until a later stage in the proceeding, such as during discovery or a hearing, when the rules favor appointment of a lawyer because the issues become more complex.

appointment of counsel as habeas petitions). But see Phelps v. United States, 15 F.3d 735, 738 (8th Cir. 1994) (refusing to appoint counsel to a petitioner committed to a mental health institution where the court found that he was “fully capable of arguing the issues” and there was “no inference that [petitioner] was unable to understand the legal proceedings in which he was participating.”).

409. See, e.g., Battle v. Armontrout, 902 F.2d 701, 702 (8th Cir. 1990) (requiring because, among other things, petitioner's imprisonment significantly impaired his ability to investigate the issues); United States ex rel. Wissenfeld v. Wilkins, 281 F.2d 707, 715 (2d Cir. 1960) (ruling that when complex factual data must be developed and incarcerated person does not have sufficient ability or training to recognize, organize, or elicit testimony to develop such data, appointment of counsel may be necessary); Al Odah v. United States, 346 F. Supp. 2d 1, 8 (D.D.C. 2004) (determining that incarcerated person who did not have access to a law library, had an “obvious language barrier,” and were “almost certainly lack[ing] a working knowledge of the American legal system” were entitled to appointed counsel because it was “impossible” for them to investigate their claim); Lemeshko v. Wrona, 325 F. Supp. 2d 778, 788 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (finding counsel should be appointed in a habeas action where incarcerated person “has made a colorable claim, but lacks the means to adequately investigate, prepare, or present the claim.”).

410. Rule 8 (c) of the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases and of the Rules Governing § 2255 Cases require a court to appoint a lawyer if the court decides to hold a hearing to investigate the facts of your case and you are financially eligible under 18 U.S.C. § 3006A. These rules can be viewed at the follow location: <https://www.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/rules-governing-section-2254-and-section-2255-proceedings.pdf> (last visited Feb. 9, 2019). See also United States v. Duarte-Higareda, 68 F.3d 369, 370 (9th Cir. 1995) (finding court appointment of counsel mandatory for indigent applicants when evidentiary hearings are required for habeas petitions under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 or 28 U.S.C. § 2254).

411. Rule 6(a) of the Rules Governing § 2254 Cases, and of the Rules Governing § 2255 Cases suggest that a court should provide you with a lawyer if the court believes a lawyer is necessary for effective use of discovery proceedings, and you are financially eligible under 18 U.S.C. § 3006A. See Chapter 8 of the JLM, “Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery,” for a discussion of discovery.

412. See 18 U.S.C. 3006A(a)(2)(B); ADMIN. OFFICE OF THE U.S. COURTS, GUIDE TO JUDICIARY POLICY: DEFENDER SERVICES § 210.20.20 (2019), available at http://www.uscourts.gov/rules-policies/judiciary-policies/cja-guidelines/chapter-2-ss-210-representation-under-cja#a210_20 (last visited Mar. 2, 2019).

413. The court's rule extends to civil actions in general, not just habeas petitions. Hahn v. McLey, 737 F.2d 771, 774 (8th Cir. 1984) (holding that “when an indigent [person] presents a colorable civil claim to a court, the court, upon request, should order the appointment of counsel” if satisfied that the incarcerated person has made out a prima facie case).

414. An application submitted by someone who cannot afford a lawyer.

G. Conclusion

This Chapter explains the writ of habeas corpus and lays out the procedures you will need to follow to petition for the writ. Remember, your imprisonment is unlawful if your arrest, trial, or sentence violated a federal statute, treaty, or the U.S. Constitution. However, the process and standards for your habeas claim will differ depending on whether you are incarcerated in state or federal custody. If you are incarcerated in state custody, for your writ of habeas corpus to succeed, your imprisonment must violate the U.S. Constitution. In either case, a federal habeas petition claims that your imprisonment is illegal because your arrest, trial, or sentence violated federal law.

APPENDIX A:

THE NINE-STEP APPEALS PROCESS

This chart represents the steps you must take when appealing a decision as person incarcerated in state custody. The chart starts from the initial trial and goes all the way through to the habeas petition.

The first column, on the left, shows you how to make direct appeals. Box 1 is your initial trial. After this trial you make your direct appeals to the higher state courts, shown in box 2. After your direct appeals to the higher state courts, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court. This is the last step in your direct appeals process. This is shown in box 3.

The second column (the middle of the chart) represents your state post-conviction proceedings. You begin state post-conviction proceedings after your direct appeals are complete. You begin this process in the same court where your trial was. Box 4 shows the first step of a state post-conviction appeal. In box 5, you appeal to the higher state courts. Finally, in box 6, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the last step in your state post-conviction proceedings.

The final step is to begin your federal habeas corpus petition. You begin the federal habeas process after completing your direct appeals process, in the first column, and after you have completed your state post-conviction proceedings, in the second column. You start in the appropriate federal district court, shown in box 7. In box 8, you appeal to the appropriate circuit court. Finally, you appeal to the United States Supreme Court in box 9.

You can always ask the Supreme Court to hear your case, but it does not have to grant your request. If you do ask the Supreme Court to hear your case, it is called petitioning for a writ of certiorari. The Supreme Court will either grant your petition (hear your case) or deny your petition (refuse to hear your case). It is worth noting that the Supreme Court rarely grants these petitions. It is important to file, even if you think you might not be successful.

DIRECT APPEAL	STATE POST-CONVICTION	FEDERAL HABEAS
(1) Trial in the Court	(4) Post-Conviction in Court Where Convicted	(7) Federal District Court
↓	↓	↓
(2) Direct Appeal to State Intermediate Court and State Supreme Court	(5) Appeal to State Intermediate Court and State Supreme Court	(8) Court of Appeal (Circuit Court)
↓	↓	↓
(3) U.S. Supreme Court	(6) U.S. Supreme Court	(9) U.S. Supreme Court

APPENDIX B:

CHECKLIST FOR FIRST-TIME FEDERAL HABEAS CORPUS PETITIONERS

Before submitting your habeas petition, make sure that you can answer “yes” to each of the following questions:

For people incarcerated in state OR federal custody:

- (1) Have you tried to get help from an attorney?
- (2) Does your conviction or sentence violate the Constitution, federal law, or treaties?
- (3) Have you described how your conviction or sentence violates the Constitution, federal law, or treaties?
- (4) Have you discussed every possible violation and included a detailed explanation of the facts for each violation?
- (5) If the violation concerns the illegal search and seizure clause of the Fourth Amendment, have you shown that you were denied the opportunity to discuss this claim in the trial or appeals process?
- (6) If possible, does your petition avoid relying on “new” law (“new” laws are laws that passed after your trial; see Sections 2 and 3 of this Chapter)?
- (7) Does the violation have a substantial effect on the verdict or sentence? Was the violation not “harmless?”
- (8) Have you explained why the violation was not harmless?
- (9) Can you file your habeas petition within one year from when your case became final?
- (10) Have you written to the clerk to ask for a model form?
- (11) Have you checked your petition to see if your arguments are logical and organized and have the correct spelling and grammar?
- (12) If possible, have you asked someone to read and check your papers?
- (13) Have you made four copies of the petition and kept one for yourself?

For people incarcerated in state custody:

- (1) Are you in state custody?
- (2) Have you followed state procedures in exhausting the state remedies or have you challenged your procedural default?
- (3) Have you chosen where you will file your petition?

For people incarcerated in federal custody:

- (1) Are you in federal custody?
- (2) Have you finished your initial appeal motion to your sentencing court?

For people sentenced to the death penalty for a state criminal conviction:

- (1) Have you sought the advice of an attorney?
- (2) Have you applied for a stay of execution?
- (3) If your state meets the guidelines in Section 2261 (if your state is an “opt-in” state), can you file your habeas petition within six months of the date your conviction becomes final?

APPENDIX C:

Examples of Habeas Claims Based on the Constitution

- 1) Investigation and Policing: A witness identified you through a police line-up or photograph in which the police were (impermissibly) suggestive,⁴¹⁵ violating your Fourteenth Amendment right to due process.
- 2) Your Confession: Your confession was obtained involuntarily in violation of your Fourteenth Amendment due process rights.⁴¹⁶ In order to prove that your confession was involuntary, you must prove that your will was overborne (overtaken).⁴¹⁷ Some facts that may support a claim that your will was overborne include threats of physical violence,⁴¹⁸ threats against loved ones,⁴¹⁹ repeated coercive questioning after you indicated that you wanted to stop answering questions,⁴²⁰ fraudulent promises by police,⁴²¹ and other forms of ill treatment.⁴²²
- 3) Right to Counsel Violations: You were denied your Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights to counsel. You would claim this if (1) you were denied counsel that the State should have provided because you were indigent (poor); (2) you were denied the opportunity for new counsel when an irreconcilable difference arose between you and your appointed counsel;

415. Suggestiveness is generally determined by five factors: (1) the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime; (2) the witness' degree of attention; (3) the accuracy of the witness' prior description of the criminal; (4) the level of certainty demonstrated at the confrontation; and (5) the time between the crime and the confrontation. Manson v. Brathwaite, 432 U.S. 98, 114, 97 S. Ct. 2243, 2253, 53 L. Ed. 2d 140, 154 (1977); see also Neil v. Biggers, 409 U.S. 188, 199–200, 93 S. Ct. 375, 382, 34 L. Ed. 2d 401, 411 (1972) (discussing suggestiveness and the possible danger from police suggestiveness, but ultimately finding that the totality of circumstances showed that the suggestiveness was overcome in that case); Dickerson v. Fogg, 692 F.2d 238, 244–247 (2d Cir. 1982) (granting habeas relief because the identification was impermissibly suggestive based on the five-factor assessment). Dickerson involved both a pretrial and in-court identification. The court held that the suggestiveness of the pretrial identification must be weighed against the independent reliability of the in-court identification. Dickerson v. Fogg, 692 F.2d 238, 244 (2d Cir. 1982).

416. See Miller v. Fenton, 474 U.S. 104, 110–112, 106 S. Ct. 445, 449–451, 88 L. Ed. 2d 405, 411–412 (1985) (holding that the voluntariness of a confession is not a factual question but a legal question that requires independent consideration in a habeas proceeding, and that such a finding would therefore not be subject to the § 2254(d) presumption of correctness for state court findings of fact). In Miller, the police got a confession by questioning a suspect with a mental problem and telling him that, if he confessed, he would receive medical help instead of punishment. Miller v. Fenton, 474 U.S. 104, 106–107, 106 S. Ct. 445, 447–448, 88 L. Ed. 2d 405, 408–409 (1985).

417. See Dickerson v. United States, 530 U.S. 428, 434, 120 S. Ct. 2326, 2331, 147 L. Ed. 2d 405, 413 (2000) (affirming that when a defendant claims his confession was involuntary, the question is whether his will was overborne by the circumstances surrounding the giving of the confession).

418. See Brown v. Mississippi, 297 U.S. 278, 286, 56 S. Ct. 461, 465, 80 L. Ed. 682, 687 (1936) (stating that due process is violated when violence is used to coerce confession).

419. See Lynum v. Illinois, 372 U.S. 528, 534, 83 S. Ct. 917, 920, 9 L. Ed. 2d 922, 926 (1963) (finding that defendant's confession was involuntary because her will was overborne when the police threatened to take her young children from her if she did not confess).

420. See Kordenbrock v. Scroggy, 919 F.2d 1091, 1100 (6th Cir. 1990) (holding that portions of the confession were invalid because they were obtained after the police ignored defendant's statements that he did not want to talk and they threatened to arrest his girlfriend).

421. See United States v. Rutledge, 900 F.2d 1127, 1129–1131 (7th Cir. 1990) (holding that police are allowed to pressure, cajole, conceal facts, actively mislead, and commit minor acts of fraud, but are not allowed to feed the defendant false promises in a manner that "seriously distorts his choice" to the point where a rational decision becomes impossible).

422. See Davis v. North Carolina, 384 U.S. 737, 752, 86 S. Ct. 1761, 1770, 16 L. Ed. 2d 895, 904 (1966) (finding that where police held an incarcerated person in a cell and questioned him off and on for sixteen days with a meager diet, the incarcerated person's confession was an involuntary end product of coercive influences and therefore constitutionally inadmissible).

- (3) you were denied counsel at arraignment; (4) you did not voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waive your right to counsel during interrogation or discussions with police officers while in custody; 5) you were temporarily banned from consulting with your attorney.⁴²³ 6) you were convicted based on information provided by an informant who was “bugged” or who reported jail cell conversations between you and him in violation of the Fifth or Sixth Amendments.⁴²⁴; or 7) your lawyer provided such poor representation as to amount to ineffective assistance of counsel.
- 4) Right to Self-Representation: The trial court unreasonably denied your request to proceed pro se (as your own attorney).⁴²⁵
- 5) Your Competency: You were denied your Fourteenth Amendment right to an examination to determine whether you were competent to stand trial, whether you were competent to waive counsel, or whether you were competent to plead guilty.⁴²⁶

423. See Jones v. Vacco, 126 F.3d 408, 415–417 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that an overnight ban on petitioner’s consultation with his attorney, which was imposed when the trial judge declared an overnight recess during petitioner’s cross-examination, violated petitioner’s 6th Amendment right to counsel).

424. See Massiah v. United States, 377 U.S. 201, 206–207, 84 S. Ct. 1199, 1203, 12 L. Ed. 2d 246, 250–251 (1964) (finding that evidence from a conversation between defendant on bail and a co-defendant that was radio transmitted without defendant’s knowledge violated his 6th Amendment right to assistance of counsel); see also Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 177, 106 S. Ct. 477, 488, 88 L. Ed. 2d 481, 497 (1985) (finding that the state violated the 6th Amendment right of the defendant when they recorded conversations between him and a co-defendant who was operating as an undercover agent for the state); United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274, 100 S. Ct. 2183, 2189, 65 L. Ed. 2d 115, 125 (1980) (omitting from trial the defendant’s incriminating statements made to a paid informant who was confined in the same cell block as defendant because the government was found to have violated the defendant’s 6th Amendment right to counsel by intentionally creating a situation that was likely to induce the defendant to make incriminating statements). But see Kuhlmann v. Wilson, 477 U.S. 436, 459, 106 S. Ct. 2616, 2630, 91 L. Ed. 2d 364, 384–385 (1986) (holding that it is not a constitutional violation if the informant merely listens to the defendant without questioning or inciting him to speak); United States v. Rommy, 506 F.3d 108, 136 (2d Cir. 2007) (explaining that it could potentially not be a constitutional violation if the informant’s questions to the defendant do not stimulate discussion, but only seek to clarify information already volunteered).

425. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 818–819, 95 S. Ct. 2525, 2532–2533, 45 L. Ed. 2d 562, 572–573 (1975) (finding that the 6th and 14th Amendments provide the right to self-representation); United States v. Hernandez, 203 F.3d 614, 620–621 (9th Cir. 2000) (finding that a denial of a pro se request may be unconstitutional if the request was made before jury selection and if the request was not a delay tactic), overruled on other grounds by Indiana v. Edwards, 554 U.S. 164, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345 (2008); see also Moore v. Haviland, 531 F.3d 393, 403–404 (6th Cir. 2008) (holding that petitioner’s habeas relief was warranted because he was denied the right to proceed pro se where petitioner had requested during trial to proceed pro se and did not waive this right merely by responding to questions posed by his attorney). But see Indiana v. Edwards, 554 U.S. 164, 174–178, 128 S. Ct. 2379, 2386–2388, 171 L. Ed. 2d 345, 355–357 (2008) (holding that defendant could be denied his right to self-representation if he is deemed not competent to defend himself at trial, even if he is competent enough to stand trial). Note that this does not mean that you have a constitutional right to any counsel. The court may reject your request to have a non-lawyer, other than yourself, represent you. United States v. Gigax, 605 F.2d 507, 517 n.1 (10th Cir. 1979) (finding that the 6th Amendment does not protect the right to be represented by a lay person).

426. The Supreme Court has held that the standard of competency is the same for these three matters. That is, if a defendant is found competent to stand trial, he is necessarily competent to waive counsel and to plead guilty. Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389, 391, 402, 113 S. Ct. 2680, 2682, 2688, 125 L. Ed. 2d 321, 327, 334 (1993). The court identified the test for legal competency as “whether [the defendant] has sufficient present ability to consult with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational understanding—and whether he has a rational as well as factual understanding of the proceedings against him.” Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 171–172, 183, 95 S. Ct. 896, 904, 909, 43 L. Ed. 2d 103, 113, 119 (1975) (finding that a psychiatric evaluation was also required when, among other indications, defendant had attempted suicide during trial); see also Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348, 369, 116 S. Ct. 1373, 1384, 134 L. Ed. 2d 498, 515 (1996) (finding that a state law presuming defendant is competent unless he proves his incompetence by clear and convincing evidence violates due process); Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 385, 86 S. Ct. 836, 842, 15 L. Ed. 2d 815, 822 (1966) (holding that defendant is entitled to a competency hearing when there has been evidence presented in trial showing his insanity, since convicting an incompetent defendant violates the 14th Amendment); Johnson v. Norton, 249 F.3d 20, 22, 27–28 (1st Cir. 2001) (finding a violation of due process when the trial court did not hold a competency hearing when defendant

- 6) Your Guilty Plea: Your guilty plea was unconstitutional because you pleaded guilty involuntarily.⁴²⁷
 - (a) You pleaded guilty as part of a plea bargain agreement that was broken.⁴²⁸
 - (b) You pleaded guilty without understanding the charges against you,⁴²⁹ or language difficulties prevented you from understanding the charges against you.⁴³⁰
 - (c) You pleaded guilty without understanding the consequences of pleading guilty.⁴³¹
- 7) Timing of Conviction and Trial:

stated that he did not know “what’s going on” because he had been hit on the head and lost consciousness just before the start of trial); Bouchillon v. Collins, 907 F.2d 589, 592–594 (5th Cir. 1990) (finding that there was sufficient evidence at trial to establish a reasonable probability that defendant was incompetent at the time of a guilty plea due to post-traumatic stress disorder).

427. See Fontaine v. United States, 411 U.S. 213, 213–215, 93 S. Ct. 1461, 1462–1463, 36 L. Ed. 2d 169, 171–172 (1973) (holding that a defendant is entitled to a hearing to determine whether or not his guilty plea was voluntary even though he had declared in open court that his plea was given voluntarily and knowingly); Machibroda v. United States, 368 U.S. 487, 493–494, 82 S. Ct. 510, 513, 7 L. Ed. 2d 473, 478 (1962) (holding that petitioner was entitled to a hearing on the issue of whether his guilty plea, which was based on the prosecutor’s threats and unkept promises, was made involuntarily); Fair v. Zant, 715 F.2d 1519, 1520–1522 (11th Cir. 1983) (holding that defendant’s guilty plea was not voluntary where trial judge told defendant he could plead guilty but later withdraw his plea if he did not want to accept the sentence, but then refused to allow withdrawal of plea after sentencing); United States ex rel. Hill v. Ternullo, 510 F.2d 844, 846–847 (2d Cir. 1975) (holding that defendant was entitled to a hearing to determine whether his guilty plea was voluntary when his guilty plea was made based on his attorney’s assurances that he would receive a lesser sentence than what was allowed under state law).

428. See Santobello v. New York, 404 U.S. 257, 262–263, 92 S. Ct. 495, 499, 30 L. Ed. 2d 427, 433 (1971) (holding that when pleas rest on an implied promise or on an agreement by a prosecutor that he will make no sentencing recommendations, such promises and agreements must be fulfilled); Brown v. Poole, 337 F.3d 1155, 1160–1162 (9th Cir. 2003) (granting habeas relief and release of incarcerated person when state breached oral plea agreement that incarcerated person would only have to serve half of her 15-year sentence if she maintained a good prison record, even though prosecutor never had authority to make such a promise); Johnson v. Beto, 466 F.2d 478, 479–480 (5th Cir. 1972) (holding that if a prosecutor says he will make a sentencing recommendation in exchange for a guilty plea, but then actually recommends a harsher sentence in court, the plea bargain has been broken and defendant is entitled to resentencing or withdrawal of his guilty plea).

429. See Marshall v. Lonberger, 459 U.S. 422, 436, 103 S. Ct. 843, 852, 74 L. Ed. 2d 646, 660 (1983) (ruling that a guilty plea cannot be voluntary unless the accused has “received real notice of the true nature of the charge against him”); Henderson v. Morgan, 426 U.S. 637, 647, 96 S. Ct. 2253, 2258–2259, 49 L. Ed. 2d 108, 116 (1976) (ruling that where neither defense counsel nor the trial court had explained the elements of the offense of second degree murder to a defendant with an especially low mental capacity, the guilty plea was involuntary); United States v. Andrades, 169 F.3d 131, 134–136 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that defendant’s guilty plea was invalid because he did not understand the nature of the charges against him due to his poor education and drug addiction).

430. The Court Interpreters Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 1827–1828, requires the court to supply you with an interpreter if you do not understand English. See also United States v. Mosquera, 816 F. Supp. 168, 177 (E.D.N.Y. 1993) (setting requirements for translation in cases where the defendant does not speak English), aff’d 48 F.3d 1214 (2d Cir. 1994).

431. See Marvel v. United States, 380 U.S. 262, 262, 85 S. Ct. 953, 953, 13 L. Ed. 2d 960, 960 (1965) (ordering a rehearing to determine whether the trial judge misled the defendant about maximum possible sentence); United States ex rel. Leeson v. Damon, 496 F.2d 718, 722 (2d Cir. 1974) (reversing a conviction because the appellant did not understand that his plea could result in confinement in a reformatory for five years rather than a shorter state prison term); Jones v. United States, 440 F.2d 466, 468 (2d Cir. 1971) (ruling a defendant was entitled to a hearing on whether he was aware of the maximum possible sentence at the time of his guilty plea and, if not, whether he would have pled guilty had he known).

- (a) The statute of limitations had already run out when you were charged with the offense,⁴³² or you were charged with a federal, non-capital crime more than five years after the crime occurred.⁴³³
 - (b) You were denied your Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial.⁴³⁴
- 8) Right to be Free from Self-Incrimination: You were made to testify before a grand jury in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.⁴³⁵

432. A statute of limitations is a period of years, set by state law, after which the government cannot prosecute a suspect. Statutes of limitations vary depending on the crime with which you are charged. The clock starts running on a statute of limitations once the crime is committed. The statute of limitations cannot be waived. This time limit is different than the 6th Amendment right to a speedy trial. The right to a speedy trial does not start running until you are indicted; you can waive the right to a speedy trial right, and the court balances this right against other considerations.

433. See 18 U.S.C. § 3282 (requiring the federal government to issue an indictment within five years of the commission of a non-capital offense). There is an important new exception to this rule for crimes of sexual abuse: the government can issue a “DNA profile indictment” that contains a set of DNA identification characteristics but not the identity of the accused. It must be issued within the five-year limit, but the indictment can be modified to include the defendant’s name after the five-year limit has run. See 18 U.S.C. § 3282(b). There are many other federal laws that govern the procedure to be followed in federal criminal trials and sentencing.

434. Courts follow the guidelines set out in Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 530, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2192, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 117 (1972), to determine whether a defendant was denied his right to a speedy trial. Courts balance the conduct of the prosecution and defendant and look at these factors: (1) the length of the delay; (2) the reason for the delay; (3) whether the defendant asked for a speedy trial; and (4) whether the delay prejudiced the defendant. Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514, 533–536, 92 S. Ct. 2182, 2193–2395, 33 L. Ed. 2d 101, 118–120 (1972) (ruling that, where defendant did not want a speedy trial and was not seriously prejudiced by the delay, a five-year delay between arrest and trial did not violate defendant’s 6th Amendment rights); see also Klopfer v. North Carolina, 386 U.S. 213, 221–223, 87 S. Ct. 988, 992–993, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1, 7 (1967) (ruling that a state may not postpone prosecution for an unlimited period even when the accused remains free to go wherever he desires). But see Reed v. Farley, 512 U.S. 339, 349–352, 114 S. Ct. 2291, 2297–2299, 129 L. Ed. 2d 277, 288–290 (1994) (ruling that a violation of a federal statute that limits trial length is not necessarily a violation of the constitutional right to a speedy trial when defendant did not object to delay and showed no prejudice from the delay); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 313, 92 S. Ct. 455, 459, 30 L. Ed. 2d 468, 474 (1971) (ruling that the right to a speedy trial guaranteed by the 6th Amendment does not apply until you have been accused of a crime, which may not occur until indictment).

435. See United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564, 574–575, 96 S. Ct. 1768, 1775–1776, 48 L. Ed. 2d 212, 221 (1976) (ruling that a witness cannot be compelled to answer questions that are self-incriminating, a determination that the judge may make if necessary). But see Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 462, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 1666, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212, 227 (1972) (finding that a defendant may be forced to testify over a claim of privilege from self-incrimination when defendant has been granted immunity from use of the compelled testimony, or evidence derived from the testimony, in future criminal proceedings).

1. After you were promised immunity in exchange for testimony before a grand jury, the grand jury used your testimony against you in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.⁴³⁶
2. During trial, the prosecutor commented on your post-arrest silence in violation of your Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination;⁴³⁷ or the prosecutor made an improper summation.⁴³⁸ (A summation, or closing argument, is the argument made to the jury at the end of a trial.)
3. Statements that you made at a court-ordered competency hearing before a state-appointed psychologist or psychiatrist were used against you in violation of your Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment rights against self-incrimination.⁴³⁹

9) Access-to-Evidence Violations:

4. The prosecution withheld requested⁴⁴⁰ evidence that could have helped your case, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.⁴⁴¹
5. The state failed to preserve important evidence in your investigation.⁴⁴²
6. You were denied needed expert assistance at trial in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.⁴⁴³
7. The prosecution admitted hearsay, or out-of-court statements against you in violation of the Confrontation Clause of the Sixth Amendment,⁴⁴⁴ and the admitted hearsay did not qualify as one of the many exceptions to the hearsay rule.⁴⁴⁵

10) Witness Violations:

- (a) You were denied the right to cross-examine a witness who testified against you.⁴⁴⁶
- (b) A witness lied on the stand about having been granted leniency from the police in exchange for testifying against you.⁴⁴⁷

436. Two types of immunity may be granted to witnesses who testify before grand juries. “Transactional immunity” gives a potential defendant full immunity from prosecution for any offense related to the incident in question. “Use immunity,” on the other hand, only guarantees that the government will not use any of the information revealed in your testimony in future proceedings against you. See Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 458, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 1664, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212, 225 (1972) (ruling that a court can compel witnesses to testify simply by giving them use immunity and that the court does not also need to give transactional immunity); see also United States ex rel. Gasparino v. Butler, 398 F. Supp. 127, 129–130 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) (ruling that, in New York, use immunity is the usual kind of immunity intended and that transactional immunity must be expressly authorized by a grand jury vote). Note, however, that habeas petitions are rarely granted on these grounds.

437. See Doyle v. Ohio, 426 U.S. 610, 617–619, 96 S. Ct. 2240, 2244–2245, 49 L. Ed. 2d 91, 97–98 (1976) (holding that due process rights are violated when the prosecutor questions defendant about why he didn’t tell his story to police after Miranda warnings at time of his arrest); Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609, 85 S. Ct. 1229, 14 L. Ed. 2d 106 (1965) (ruling that a defendant’s 5th Amendment rights were violated where judge instructed the jury that they may take into account the failure of defendant to testify about evidence to indicate the truthfulness of that evidence); Gravley v. Mills, 87 F.3d 779, 790 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that a prosecutor violated due process by repeatedly making references to petitioner’s post-arrest silence; also finding that defendant had ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel had not objected to prosecutor’s comments at trial); Hill v. Turpin, 135 F.3d 1411, 1416 (11th Cir. 1998) (granting habeas corpus where prosecutor’s references to petitioner’s post-Miranda assertions of right to remain silent were “repeated and deliberate”). But see Fletcher v. Weir, 455 U.S. 603, 607, 102 S. Ct. 1309, 1312, 71 L. Ed. 2d 490, 494 (1982) (finding that it is not a constitutional violation for prosecutors to use post-arrest silence to impeach a defendant where the defendant had not been told that he had a right to remain silent); Roberts v. United States, 445 U.S. 552, 561, 100 S. Ct. 1358, 1364–1365, 63 L. Ed. 2d 622, 631 (1980) (refusing to consider petitioner’s 5th Amendment claim when he was given a harsher sentence due to his refusal to answer questions about drug suppliers because his purpose in keeping silent was not to prevent self-incrimination); Jenkins v. Anderson, 447 U.S. 231, 240–241, 100 S. Ct. 2124, 2130, 65 L. Ed. 86, 96 (1980) (finding that it is not a constitutional violation for prosecutors to use a defendant’s pre-arrest two-week silence to impeach his testimony that he had acted in self-defense); Splunge v. Parke, 160 F.3d 369, 371–373 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that prosecutor’s comment on petitioner’s post-arrest silence was not a 5th Amendment violation when not used for the purpose of impeaching petitioner at trial). Therefore, the mere fact that the prosecution or judge improperly commented on your silence will not necessarily afford you relief.

438. See Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168, 181, 106 S. Ct. 2464, 2471, 91 L. Ed. 2d 144, 157 (1986) (announcing that, where prosecutor called defendant an animal and made offensive emotional remarks, the comments were improper but did not merit relief because the comments did not “so infect the trial with unfairness as to make the resulting conviction a denial of due process”); United States v. Elias, 285 F.3d 183, 190, 192 (2d Cir. 2002) (noting that remarks of a prosecutor during summation do not amount to a due process violation unless they constitute egregious misconduct); Moore v. Morton, 255 F.3d 95, 100 n. 4, 119–120 (3d Cir. 2001) (ruling that habeas relief was appropriate when prosecutor made improper race-based comments and trial judge’s curative instructions to the jury were not adequate to ensure a fair trial, and listing in footnotes 15 and 16 cases where habeas relief was granted or denied for improper racial comments).

439. See Satterwhite v. Texas, 486 U.S. 249, 260, 108 S. Ct. 1792, 1799, 100 L. Ed. 2d 284, 296 (1988) (ruling that where defendant was not afforded right to consult with counsel before submitting to psychiatric examination, admission of testimony based on examination was a constitutional violation and not harmless error); Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454, 467–469, 101 S. Ct. 1866, 1875–1876, 68 L. Ed. 2d 359, 372 (1981) (finding that defendant’s statements in a court-ordered psychiatric examination could not be admitted at a capital trial when the defendant had not been warned of his 5th Amendment privilege against compelled self-incrimination); Buchanan v. Kentucky, 483 U.S. 402, 421–424, 107 S. Ct. 2906, 2916–2918, 97 L. Ed. 2d 336, 354–356 (1987) (ruling that the prosecution may use a psychologist’s report solely to rebut petitioner’s psychological evidence).

440. A defendant’s failure to request evidence that could have helped his case does not leave the government free of all obligations. See United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 103–108, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2397–2399, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 349–352 (1976) (finding that there are three situations in which a Brady claim might arise: (1) where new evidence revealed that the prosecution introduced trial testimony that it knew or should have known was false; (2) where the prosecution failed to obey a defense request for specific exculpatory evidence (evidence that helps to prove defendant’s innocence); and (3) where the prosecution failed to volunteer exculpatory evidence that was never requested, or requested only in a general way; and noting the existence of a duty on the part of the government in this last situation when suppression of the evidence would be “of sufficient significance to result in the denial of the defendant’s right to a fair trial”); see also United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 678–681–682, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3383, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 494 (1985) (finding that regardless of whether the request for the evidence was specific or general, favorable evidence is material, and the government violates the Constitution by suppressing such evidence “if there is a reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different”); Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 435, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1566, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 507 (1995) (finding that once a court applying Bagley has found constitutional error, there is no need for further harmless-error review).

441. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that the prosecution must turn over evidence to the defense if evidence is exculpatory, impeaching, or material). The Brady standard says that the prosecution must disclose evidence that is exculpatory (helps to prove the defendant’s innocence) or impeaching (shows one of the prosecution’s witnesses might not be believable). Exculpatory or impeaching evidence must also be material, which means that there must be a “reasonable probability that, had the evidence been disclosed to the defense, the result of the proceeding would have been different.” United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 682, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3383, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 494 (1985); see also Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 421–422, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1560, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 498 (1995) (“[B]ecause the net effect of the evidence withheld by the State in this case raises a reasonable probability that its disclosure would have produced a different result, [defendant] is entitled to a new trial.”); Pennsylvania v. Ritchie, 480 U.S. 39, 59–60, 107 S. Ct. 989, 1002–1003, 94 L. Ed. 2d 40, 58–59 (1987) (finding that a defendant has the right to ask the court to review confidential files to see if evidence is material, but the defendant does not have the right to examine the confidential files himself); United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 676, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3380, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 490 (1985) (holding that evidence impeaching a witness’ credibility falls within the Brady rule); United States v. Agurs, 427 U.S. 97, 112–114, 96 S. Ct. 2392, 2401–2402, 49 L. Ed. 2d 342, 354–356 (1976) (holding that evidence of a murder victim’s prior criminal record was not “material” and did not have to be turned over to the defense because it did not change the probability that the result of the trial would have been different); Boyette v. Lefevre, 246 F.3d 76, 93 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that a state’s non-disclosure of information relating to the witness’ ability to identify the defendant was a Brady violation because the non-disclosure seriously undermined “confidence in the outcome of the trial”); Carriger v. Stewart, 132 F.3d 463, 478–479 (9th Cir. 1997) (en banc) (finding a violation of due process when the prosecutor failed to disclose that the man whom the defendant claimed had committed the murder and who was also the prosecutor’s main witness had a long history of prior crimes, of lying to police, and of shifting blame to others, and there was evidence that he had boasted about committing the murder).

442. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that “the suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution”); Killian v. Poole, 282 F.3d 1204, 1209–1210 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that the prosecution’s failure to turn over letters in which the prosecution’s witness admitted to perjury in order to gain sentencing concessions amounted to a constitutional violation and, with other violations at trial, amounted to reversible error). But see Arizona v. Youngblood, 488 U.S. 51, 57–58, 109 S. Ct. 333, 337, 102 L. Ed. 2d 281, 289 (1988) (holding that to show a denial of due process, defendant must show that the prosecution acted in bad faith in failing to preserve evidence if the evidence is only potentially exculpatory); California v. Trombetta, 467 U.S. 479, 490–491, 104 S. Ct. 2528, 2534–2535, 81 L. Ed. 2d 413, 423 (1984) (finding that the state’s failure to retain breath samples for defendants was not a violation of procedural due process when defendants had alternative means of demonstrating their innocence); United States v. Garza, 435 F.3d 73, 75–76 (1st Cir. 2006) (ruling that the destruction of evidence is a violation of due process if the exculpatory value of the evidence was apparent before its destruction and if the evidence is of such a nature that the defendant cannot obtain comparable evidence, but finding in this situation that the violation was harmless). The case law establishing that destruction of evidence can be a constitutional violation is based on the case law that withholding evidence is a constitutional violation.

443. See Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68, 82–83, 105 S. Ct. 1087, 1096, 84 L. Ed. 2d 53, 66 (1985) (noting that when an indigent defendant shows that his sanity will be a significant factor in his defense, due process entitles the defendant to the services of a court-appointed expert to “conduct an appropriate examination and assist in evaluation, preparation, and presentation of the defense”); Schultz v. Page, 313 F.3d 1010, 1017–1018 (7th Cir. 2002) (finding that the competency evaluation ordered by the court and conducted at the time of trial was insufficient to establish defendant’s sanity at the time of the crime and that denial of defendant’s request for an evaluation of his sanity at the time of the crime violated due process where defendant had shown sanity was a significant factor at trial); Starr v. Lockhart, 23 F.3d 1280, 1287 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that the denial of petitioner’s request for appointment of a mental health expert to develop evidence of diminished capacity and mitigating circumstances violated his due process rights) abrogated on other grounds by Baldwin v. Reese, 541 U.S. 27, 124 S.Ct. 1347, 158 L. Ed. 2d 64 (2004).

444. The “Confrontation Clause” of the 6th Amendment, which protects your right to confront witnesses who testify against you, generally prohibits the prosecution from using hearsay as evidence against you at trial. Hearsay is testimony, or comments, presented at trial by someone other than the person who originally spoke. The rules on hearsay are found in the Federal Rules of Evidence, at Fed. R. Evid. 801–807, in Title 28 of the United States Code. For more information on the hearsay rules and their exceptions, see an evidence textbook or evidence treatise. See, e.g., Charles T. McCormick, McCormick on Evidence (John W. Strong et al. eds., 6th ed. 2006); Christopher B. Mueller & Laird C. Kirkpatrick, Evidence (3d ed. 2003). See also Murillo v. Frank, 402 F.3d 786, 791 (4th Cir. 2005) (admitting that hearsay statements made by another suspect during interrogation violated the 6th Amendment); Brown v. Keane, 355 F.3d 82, 87–88 (2d Cir. 2004) (finding that the admission of an anonymous 911 call was unconstitutional, despite prosecution’s argument that the call fell within the “present sense impression” exception to the 6th Amendment’s hearsay prohibition).

445. The Federal Rules of Evidence list exceptions to the hearsay rule. Fed. R. Evid. 803, 804, 807. When out-of-court statements fall within a category listed in the Federal Rules of Evidence, it is admissible as evidence despite the Confrontation Clause of the 6th Amendment. Some of the exceptions include “excited utterances” and statements for medical diagnosis. Fed. R. Evid. 803. Some out-of-court statements are not defined as hearsay and are not protected by the hearsay rule. For example, courts do not consider as hearsay any statements that are made by a co-conspirator in furtherance of a conspiracy; since such statements are not considered hearsay, they may generally be admitted as evidence. Fed. R. Evid. 801. The Supreme Court may make exceptions to the hearsay rule in addition to those listed in the Federal Rules. Fed. R. Evid. 802. See also United States v. Inadi, 475 U.S. 387, 399–400, 106 S. Ct. 1121, 1128–1129, 89 L. Ed. 2d 390, 401–402 (1986) (finding that the prosecution does not need to show that a person is unavailable to appear in court for his or her out-of-court statements to be used in a trial if the person was a co-conspirator).

446. See Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36, 68–69, 124 S. Ct. 1354, 1373, 158 L. Ed. 2d 177, 203 (2004) (ruling that a defendant must have the opportunity to confront a person giving testimonial evidence against the defendant either before or during trial, unless that person is unavailable; noting that the reliability of the person testifying is irrelevant); see also Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, 377, 128 S. Ct. 2678, 2693, 171 L. Ed. 2d 288 (2008) (holding that the uncontroverted testimony of a murder victim cannot be admitted under a theory that defendant forfeited his 6th Amendment right to confront the victim/witness because he murdered her and thereby made her unavailable to testify); Lilly v. Virginia, 527 U.S. 116, 139, 119 S. Ct. 1887, 1901, 144 L. Ed. 2d 117, 136 (1999) (finding that a defendant has a 6th Amendment right to confront an accomplice whose confession is offered as evidence against that defendant); Davis v. Alaska, 415 U.S. 308, 320, 94 S. Ct. 1105, 1112, 39 L. Ed. 2d 347, 356 (1974) (ruling that a defendant was denied his 6th Amendment right to confront and to cross-examine a

11) The Jury:

- (a) You were denied your Sixth Amendment right to a trial by a fair and impartial jury because you were denied a trial by jury.⁴⁴⁸
- (b) You were tried by a jury of fewer than six members,⁴⁴⁹ or you were convicted by a non-unanimous jury vote.⁴⁵⁰
- (c) The community where members of the jury work or live was exposed to inflammatory media accounts about your case.⁴⁵¹ witness when the state prevented the defendant from questioning a juvenile witness about the juvenile's probationary status); Howard v. Walker, 406 F.3d 114, 132–133 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that limiting a defendant's cross-examination of the state's expert witness and impeding the defendant's presentation of a counter expert witness violated the Confrontation Clause); Hill v. Hofbauer, 337 F.3d 706, 717 (6th Cir. 2003) (ruling that it is a violation of the Confrontation Clause to admit a non-testifying co-defendant's confession that implicates the defendant); Lewis v. Wilkinson, 307 F.3d 413, 420–421 (6th Cir. 2002) (finding a violation of the Confrontation Clause in a rape case when defendant was barred from cross-examining complainant about diary passages that supported a consent defense); United States ex rel. Negron v. New York, 434 F.2d 386, 389–390 (2d Cir. 1970) (holding that an inadequate translation during trial violated non-English-speaking petitioner's right to confront witnesses). But see United States v. Hendricks, 395 F.3d 173, 179 (3d Cir. 2005) (finding that defendant does not always have the right to cross-examine hearsay evidence that is not "testimonial").

447. Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154–155, 92 S. Ct. 763, 766, 31 L. Ed. 2d 104 (1972) (holding that the government has a due process duty to disclose impeachment evidence, including promises that the prosecution makes to key witnesses in exchange for their testimony); see Brown v. Wainwright, 785 F.2d 1457, 1464–1465 (11th Cir. 1986) (finding prosecutors had deliberately withheld fact that the main witness against defendant lied on the stand by saying he had not received leniency from prosecution in exchange for his testimony against defendant); see also DuBose v. Lefevre, 619 F.2d 973, 979 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding that the prosecution cannot make agreements in general terms to a witness and therefore escape the fact that it gave the witness reason to believe that his testimony would lead to favorable treatment by the State). But see Shabazz v. Artuz, 336 F.3d 154, 162–166 (2d Cir. 2003) (finding that evidence that prosecution witnesses ultimately received favorable sentencing treatment in their own cases did not alone show that prosecutor failed to disclose promises of leniency because there was no evidence that anything was promised before the witnesses' testimony).

448. U.S. CONST. amend. VI; Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 149, 88 S. Ct. 1444, 1447, 20 L. Ed. 2d 491, 496 (U.S. 1968) (applying the sixth amendment right to a trial by jury to state criminal trials because "trial by jury in criminal cases is fundamental to the American scheme of justice.") Note, however, that you may waive your right to trial by jury. There are various reasons why you may choose not to have a jury trial: you may wish to plead guilty, for instance, or you may think that the nature of your case is best decided by a judge, alone. If you waived this right, the fact that you were not tried by a jury will not be considered a violation of your Sixth Amendment rights.

449. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 228, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 1033, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234, 239 (1978) (holding that juries must consist of at least six people or else there is a 6th Amendment violation); see Williams v. Florida, 399 U.S. 78, 86, 90 S. Ct. 1893, 1898, 26 L. Ed. 2d 446, 452 (1970) (holding that refusal to impanel more than six members for the jury does not violate the defendant's 6th Amendment rights). But see People v. Dean, 80 A.D.2d 695, 696, 436 N.Y.S.2d 455, 456 (2d Dept. 1981) (granting that a defendant is denied due process of law when he is tried before a jury of six rather than 12 people if the state constitution says that "crimes prosecuted by indictment shall be tried by a jury composed of twelve persons").

450. See United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453, 456 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that a federal criminal defendant has a constitutional right to a unanimous jury verdict); see also Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813, 815, 119 S. Ct. 1707, 1709, 143 L. Ed. 2d 985, 991 (1999) (finding that the jury in a federal criminal case cannot convict unless it unanimously finds that the government has proven each element of the crime). Fed. R. Crim. P. 31(a) requires a unanimous verdict in all federal jury cases. But see McKoy v. North Carolina, 494 U.S. 433, 449–450, 110 S. Ct. 1227, 1236–1237, 108 L. Ed. 2d 369, 385 (1990) (finding that the constitutional requirement for a unanimous verdict requires only a "substantial agreement as to the principal factual elements underlying a specified offense"). See also Apodaca v. Oregon, 406 U.S. 404, 92 S. Ct. 1628, 32 L. Ed. 2d 184 (1972); Johnson v. Louisiana, 406 U.S. 356, 92 S. Ct. 1620, 32 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1972). Note that both Apodaca and Johnson, which allow convictions in state court with jury majorities of 10–2 and 9–3 respectively, apply only to certain non-capital cases.

451. See Irvin v. Dowd, 366 U.S. 717, 724–725, 81 S. Ct. 1639, 1643–1644, 6 L. Ed. 2d 751, 757–758 (1961) (holding that failure to grant change of venue, despite build-up of prejudice and a jury that was not impartial, is unconstitutional); superseded on other grounds; Woods v. Dugger, 923 F.2d 1454, 1460 (11th Cir. 1991) (finding

- (d) Members of certain racial, religious, gender, or age-based (the elderly) groups were excluded from the jury pool,⁴⁵² or the prosecutor intentionally used his or her peremptory challenges (peremptory challenges are when the prosecutor or defendant eliminates potential jurors without a reason) to remove members of a particular racial group or gender from the jury.⁴⁵³
- (e) Members of a distinct class or group, such as Black people or women, were systematically excluded from the grand jury in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.⁴⁵⁴ deprivation of a fair trial after extensive pretrial publicity and presence of uniformed prison guards in audience at trial when victim was a prison guard).

452. See Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 89, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1719, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 82–83 (1986) (holding that use of peremptory challenges to exclude African-Americans from a jury when the defendant was African-American violates the 14th Amendment's equal protection guarantee); Taylor v. Louisiana, 419 U.S. 522, 531, 95 S. Ct. 692, 698, 42 L. Ed. 2d 690, 698 (1975) (holding that sex discrimination in selection of jury violates the 6th Amendment); Smith v. Texas, 311 U.S. 128, 132, 61 S. Ct. 164, 166, 85 L. Ed. 84, 87 (1940) (holding that the 14th Amendment prohibits racial discrimination in selection of grand jury); see also Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 474, 128 S. Ct. 1203, 1206, 170 L. Ed. 2d 175, 179 (2008) (holding that the Supreme Court of Louisiana's rejection of a Batson claim was erroneous and that the prosecutor at trial improperly excluded blacks from a jury that convicted defendant of capital murder); United States v. Barnes, 520 F. Supp. 2d 510, 514 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that in order to establish a prima facie case of a violation of the fair cross-section requirement of the 6th Amendment, a defendant must show: (1) that the group alleged to be excluded is a "distinctive" group in the community; (2) that the representation of this group in venires from which juries are selected is not fair and reasonable in relation to the number of such persons in the community; and (3) that this underrepresentation is due to systematic exclusion of the group in the jury selection process); People v. Snow, 44 Cal.3d 216, 225–226 (Cal. 1987) (generally upholding principle against excluding members of a certain race from a jury); Gilmore, 103 N.J. 508, 543 (N.J. 1986) (finding a violation where prosecutor excluded members of a cognizable group—in this case, black jurors—from a jury because of prosecutor's presumption that those jurors had a group bias). Although the Supreme Court has never expressly held that religious discrimination in jury selection is unconstitutional, many lower courts have. See, e.g., United States v. Somerstein, 959 F. Supp. 592, 595 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (stating that Batson applies to religious discrimination and "only if the religion of the jurors is directly relevant to the crimes at issue" can the strike based on religion of a juror be proper); State v. Hodge, 248 Conn. 207, 240 (Conn. 1999) (stating peremptory challenges based on religious affiliation are unconstitutional).

453. See J.E.B. v. Alabama ex rel. T.B., 511 U.S. 127, 146, 114 S. Ct. 1419, 1430, 128 L. Ed. 2d 89, 107 (1994) (holding that the use of peremptory challenges to exclude members of a particular gender violates the Equal Protection Clause); Amadeo v. Zant, 486 U.S. 214, 228–229, 108 S. Ct. 1771, 1780, 100 L. Ed. 2d 249, 264 (1988) (finding prosecutor's jury selection scheme to limit number of African-Americans and women on the jury constituted serious error); Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 84, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1716, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 79 (1986) (holding that the use of peremptory challenge to exclude members of a racial group violates the Equal Protection Clause); Galarza v. Keane, 252 F.3d 630, 640 (2d Cir. 2001) (vacating denial of habeas petition since the state trial court failed to resolve the factual issue of whether it credited the prosecution's race-neutral explanations for striking potential jurors); Jordan v. Lefevre, 206 F.3d 196, 202 (2d Cir. 2000) (reversing denial of habeas petition because of lack of meaningful inquiry into the question of discrimination); Turner v. Marshall, 121 F.3d 1248, 1250 (9th Cir. 1997) (holding prosecutor's use of peremptory challenges to strike African-Americans from jury venire not justified by stated reasons). But see Smulls v. Roper, 535 F.3d 853, 859 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding that since prosecution's reasons for the strike were "credible," which was the standard—as opposed to giving "persuasive" reasons or "plausible" reasons—he was not motivated by racial discrimination).

454. See Campbell v. Louisiana, 523 U.S. 392, 398, 118 S. Ct. 1419, 1423, 140 L. Ed. 2d 551, 559 (1998) (holding that a white defendant, convicted by an all-white jury and alleging discriminatory selection of jurors, has standing to challenge whether he was convicted by means that violate due process, even though the claim is based upon exclusion of blacks from the grand jury); Vasquez v. Hillery, 474 U.S. 254, 264, 106 S. Ct. 617, 624, 88 L. Ed. 2d 598, 609 (1986) (holding that habeas relief is appropriate where blacks were systemically excluded from the grand jury that indicted petitioner); Johnson v. Puckett, 929 F.2d 1067, 1068–1069 (5th Cir. 1991) (granting black incarcerated person's habeas corpus petition where his grand jury foreman was white because petitioner had shown a prima facie claim of racial discrimination by showing that for 20 years every grand jury foreman in the county had been white, despite a 43% black population in the county). But see Hobby v. United States, 468 U.S. 339, 345–346, 104 S. Ct. 3093, 3096–3097, 82 L. Ed. 2d 260, 266–267 (1984) (holding that discrimination in grand jury foreman selection, as distinguished from discrimination in the selection of the grand jury itself, does

- (f) The jury instructions⁴⁵⁵ were unconstitutional because they did not tell the jury the prosecution must prove all crucial elements of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,⁴⁵⁶ or the instructions did not tell the jury the prosecution must overcome a presumption of innocence to convict you.⁴⁵⁷
- (g) Evidence was insufficient to sustain the jury's verdict of guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.⁴⁵⁸
- 12) The Judge: The judge was biased against you because he was corrupt and you did not bribe him.⁴⁵⁹
- 13) Your Lawyer:
 - (a) Your lawyer did not represent you effectively at trial.⁴⁶⁰ not threaten defendant's due process rights); United States v. Taylor, 154 F.3d 675, 681 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding that Vasquez is a limited ruling).

455. Jury instructions are read by the judge to inform the jury of the elements of the crime and to explain the legal standards by which the jury must weigh the evidence against you. An example of a jury instruction is to find guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt."

456. See Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510, 524, 99 S. Ct. 2450, 2459, 61 L. Ed. 2d 39, 51 (1979) (holding that the prosecution must prove every element of a crime beyond a reasonable doubt; therefore, trial court may not shift the burden of proof to defendant by instructing jury to presume intent in jury instructions); Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197, 215, 97 S. Ct. 2319, 2329, 53 L. Ed. 2d 281, 295 (1977) (holding that the state must prove every element of an offense beyond a reasonable doubt); see also Boyd v. California, 494 U.S. 370, 380, 110 S. Ct. 1190, 1198, 108 L. Ed. 2d 316, 329 (1990) (holding that in an ambiguous case the proper inquiry is "whether there is a reasonable likelihood that the jury has applied the challenged instruction in a way that prevents the consideration of constitutionally relevant evidence"); Patterson v. Gomez, 223 F.3d 959, 961 (9th Cir. 2000) (holding that jury instructions that assumed the defendant was sane at the time of offense constituted an unconstitutional shifting of the prosecution's burden of proof).

457. See Kentucky v. Whorton, 441 U.S. 786, 789, 99 S. Ct. 2088, 2090, 60 L. Ed. 2d 640, 643 (1979) (holding that a judge's refusal to instruct the jury that a defendant is innocent until proven guilty may violate the Constitution if the "totality of the circumstances" indicates that the trial was constitutionally unfair); Taylor v. Kentucky, 436 U.S. 478, 490, 98 S. Ct. 1930, 1937, 56 L. Ed. 2d 468, 478 (1978) (finding that the judge's refusal to give jury instruction that defendant is presumed to be innocent was a violation of due process).

458. See Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 318–319, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 2789, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560, 573 (1979) (ruling that a reviewing court will determine whether any rational jury, viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt). However, the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act ("AEDPA") applies a stronger standard to this determination, so a federal reviewing court must give strong deference to the state court's findings. 28 U.S.C. § 2254(d). See Part B(4) of this Chapter ("Standard for Getting Relief") for more information on how the AEDPA standard is applied. See also Juan H. v. Allen, 408 F.3d 1262, 1276 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding that evidence was insufficient to establish defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt); United States v. Desena, 260 F.3d 150, 154–156 (2d Cir. 2001) (reversing a conviction where no evidence linked the defendant to the general conspiracy charge).

459. Usually, a judge's qualifications are not considered to be a constitutional issue. However, the Due Process Clause requires "a fair trial in a fair tribunal" before a judge with no actual bias against the defendant. See Bracy v. Gramley, 520 U.S. 899, 904–905, 117 S. Ct. 1793, 1797, 138 L. Ed. 2d 97, 104 (1997) (finding a due process violation where the judge imposed excessively harsh treatment on petitioner in order to hide or to compensate for the fact that he was taking bribes and giving light sentences in other cases). Note that this is a serious charge. You must have proof that the judge was corrupt and that your sentence was unusually harsh. The Supreme Court has made it clear that there is a presumption of legitimacy to public officers' actions, and clear evidence to the contrary must be presented in order to contradict that presumption. See Nat'l Archives & Records Admin. v. Favish, 541 U.S. 157, 174–175, 124 S. Ct. 1570, 1581–1582, 158 L. Ed. 3d 319, 336 (2004) (holding that a privacy interest against the government's release of public information—photographs—is only overcome by clear evidence showing that the government engaged in some wrongdoing).

460. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (confirming that the proper standard for judging attorney performance is "reasonably effective assistance," considering all circumstances). Ineffective assistance of counsel is among the most promising habeas claims. The standard for determination of ineffective assistance of counsel is discussed in Part B(2) of this Chapter ("Standards and Tests for Claims of Violations"). Your trial counsel may have been ineffective for any number of

- (b) Your lawyer did not file an appeal although you would have wanted to file one.⁴⁶¹
- (c) Your lawyer did not represent you effectively in your direct appeal (also known as a “first appeal as of right”).⁴⁶²
- 14) The Law and Statutes:
 - (a) You were convicted under a statute that is unconstitutional.⁴⁶³ reasons. See, e.g., Kimmelman v. Morrison, 477 U.S. 365, 106 S. Ct. 2574, 91 L. Ed. 2d 305 (1986) (finding ineffective assistance of counsel where counsel conducted no pretrial discovery and failed to file a timely suppression motion against prosecution’s evidence); Cossel v. Miller, 229 F.3d 649 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the victim’s in-court identification of petitioner lacked sufficient independent reliability to be admissible, that petitioner’s counsel was ineffective for failing to object to its admission, and that the state court’s rejection of petitioner’s ineffective assistance claim was an unreasonable application of clearly established federal law); Brown v. Myers, 137 F.3d 1154, 1156–1157 (9th Cir. 1998) (ruling counsel was ineffective in failing to investigate and present available testimony supporting petitioner’s alibi); Alston v. Garrison, 720 F.2d 812, 815–816 (4th Cir. 1983) (holding defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel where counsel failed to object to evidence that defendant exercised right to remain silent); but see Wilson v. Vaughn, 533 F.3d 208 (3d Cir. 2008) (holding that defendant was not prejudiced by failure to object to evidence because the court concluded that such evidence would have been admitted even without the racketeering charge).

461. This claim is a subset of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim that was decided by the Supreme Court in Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 120 S. Ct. 1029, 145 L. Ed. 2d 985 (2000). The Supreme Court held that there is a constitutionally imposed duty on an attorney to consult with a defendant about an appeal if there is reason to believe that a rational defendant would want an appeal or that the particular defendant has reasonably demonstrated that he was interested in appealing. Additionally, the defendant must show that had he been consulted about an appeal he would have made a timely appeal. See Nnebe v. United States, 534 F.3d 87, 91–92 (2d Cir. 2008) (finding a violation of the right to effective assistance of counsel where lawyer who is appointed under statute that requires pursuing appeals to the Supreme Court fails to file petition despite requests by defendant); Restrepo v. Kelly, 178 F.3d 634, 640–641 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that failure of petitioner’s counsel to file timely notice of appeal despite repeated requests by petitioner and reassurances by counsel constituted a denial of constitutional right to effective assistance); Alston v. Garrison, 720 F.2d 812, 816 (4th Cir. 1983) (holding that “the content of an appeal is heavily controlled by counsel, and where ... the defendant’s trial lawyer also prosecuted the appeal, it is obvious that ineffective assistance of counsel is not likely to be raised at trial or to appear among the assignments of constitutional error” on appeal).

462. See Cannon v. Berry, 727 F.2d 1020, 1022 (11th Cir. 1984) (affirming writ of habeas corpus where counsel failed to file a brief on direct appeal of defendant’s murder conviction, which thus constituted ineffective assistance of counsel). Defective counsel is a ground for habeas relief only if counsel was constitutionally required. Therefore, the defective representation must have been at the trial or on direct appeal because there is no constitutional right to counsel in post-conviction proceedings. See Coleman v. Thompson, 501 U.S. 722, 755–757, 111 S. Ct. 2546, 2567–2568, 115 L. Ed. 2d 640, 672–674 (1991) (refusing to grant federal habeas relief for counsel errors in state habeas proceedings because there was no constitutional right to counsel). Still, an indigent criminal defendant is constitutionally entitled to an effective attorney in his “one and only appeal as of right,” which usually occurs in a state court of appeals. Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387, 396, 105 S. Ct. 830, 836, 83 L. Ed. 2d 821, 830 (1985) (“[A] first appeal as of right therefore is not adjudicated in accord with due process of law if appellant does not have the effective assistance of an attorney.”); Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353, 357–358, 83 S. Ct. 814, 816–817, 9 L. Ed. 2d 811, 814–815 (1963); Mason v. (holding that “where the merits of the one and only appeal an indigent has as of right are decided without benefit of counsel, we think an unconstitutional line has been drawn between rich and poor”); Mason v. Hanks, 97 F.3d 887, 902 (7th Cir. 1996) (“[W]hen we are convinced that a petitioner might well have won his appeal on a significant and obvious question of state law that his counsel omitted to pursue, we are compelled to conclude . . . that the appeal was not fundamentally fair and that the resulting affirmation of his conviction is not reliable.”). For more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see JLM, Chapter 12, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel,” and Part H in JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.”

463. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 373–374, 6 S. Ct. 1064, 1073, 30 L. Ed. 220, 227–228 (1886) (finding imprisonment of the petitioners illegal because the ordinance upon which their conviction was based violated the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment as applied); Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371, 376–377, 25 L. Ed. 717, 719 (1879) (finding that the question of the constitutionality of the laws involved was a proper ground for considering a writ of habeas corpus); Vuitch v. Hardy, 473 F.2d 1370, 1370 (4th Cir. 1973) (finding defendant doctor entitled to habeas corpus because the state abortion statute was unconstitutional).

- (b) You received a certain type of punishment, and the law now forbids this type of punishment.⁴⁶⁴
- (c) You were convicted for an act that is no longer a crime under the new law.⁴⁶⁵
- (d) A state statute cancels your provisional early release credits after you have already earned them.⁴⁶⁶
- 15) Double Jeopardy:
 - (a) You were convicted for an act that is no longer a crime under the new law.⁴⁶⁷
 - (b) A state statute cancels your provisional early release credits after you have already earned them.⁴⁶⁸
 - (c) Your conviction violates your Fifth Amendment right against “double jeopardy” because you were convicted of a crime for which you had already been tried in the same state.⁴⁶⁹
 - (d) You were convicted in a second trial after your first trial was declared a mistrial in violation of the Fifth Amendment.⁴⁷⁰
 - (e) You were tried a second time for the same offense after a reviewing court had reversed your earlier conviction on the grounds that the evidence at your first trial was insufficient to support a conviction.⁴⁷¹
- 16) Other Procedural Problems at Trial:

464. See Part C(3)(a)(i) (“Prohibited Punishments”) of this Chapter.

465. See Part C(3)(a)(ii) (“Decriminalized Behavior”) of this Chapter for further explanation.

466. See Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 447, 117 S. Ct. 891, 899, 137 L. Ed. 2d 63, 75–76 (1997) (holding retroactive cancellation, which actually increased the incarcerated person’s punishment through re-arrest, violated the Ex Post Facto Clause).

467. See Part C(3)(a)(ii) (“Decriminalized Behavior”) of this Chapter for further explanation.

468. See Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 447, 117 S. Ct. 891, 899, 137 L. Ed. 2d 63, 75–76 (1997) (holding retroactive cancellation, which actually increased the incarcerated person’s punishment through re-arrest, violated the Ex Post Facto Clause).

469. See Green v. United States, 355 U.S. 184, 190, 78 S. Ct. 221, 225, 2 L. Ed. 2d 199, 205 (1957) (determining that where jury had been instructed on first and second degree murder and convicted defendant of second degree murder with no comment on first degree charge, defendant may not be tried again for first degree murder); Dye v. Frank, 355 F.3d 1102, 1104 (7th Cir. 2004) (barring a criminal drug charge because defendant had previously been sanctioned under a state civil penalty “so punitive in purpose and effect that it constituted a criminal punishment”); Terry v. Potter, 111 F.3d 454, 459–460 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that where petitioner’s wanton murder conviction was reversed, and where the first jury was discharged without convicting him of intentional murder, petitioner could not be retried for intentional murder). Footnote 475 below describes when jeopardy attaches in a criminal trial.

470. Generally, once jeopardy “attaches” to a charge in a trial the state may not try you for that charge in another trial without violating the 5th Amendment. If there is a mistrial declared after jeopardy has attached, you may not be tried again for that charge unless you consented to the mistrial declaration or there was a “manifest necessity” for declaring the mistrial. Arizona v. Washington, 434 U.S. 497, 505, 98 S. Ct. 824, 830, 54 L. Ed. 2d 717, 728 (1978) (explaining that the prosecutor has the burden of showing this “manifest necessity”); see also United States v. Razmilovic, 507 F.3d 130, 141–142 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that double jeopardy bars a second trial where defendant initially joined in a co-defendant’s motion for mistrial but almost immediately changed his position after mistrial was to be finalized); Love v. Morton, 112 F.3d 131, 137 (3d Cir. 1997) (affirming grant of habeas relief from conviction on retrial after first trial court judge declared a mistrial soon after jury was sworn due to the judge’s inability to complete the trial and without consent from counsel). Jeopardy “attaches” to your jury trial when the jury is sworn and empaneled. See Crist v. Bretz, 437 U.S. 28, 38, 98 S. Ct. 2156, 2162, 57 L. Ed. 2d 24, 33 (1978) (holding federal double jeopardy rule, which states that jeopardy attaches after jury is sworn and empaneled, overrides a Montana state rule that jeopardy attaches after the first witness is sworn).

471. See Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 18, 91 S. Ct. 2141, 2151, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1, 14 (1978) (holding that double jeopardy prohibits a second trial after a reviewing court has found the evidence legally insufficient to justify conviction); Hudson v. Louisiana, 450 U.S. 40, 44–45, 101 S. Ct. 970, 973, 67 L. Ed. 2d 30, 34–35 (1981) (holding double jeopardy protection was violated when petitioner was prosecuted after trial judge had already granted petitioner’s motion for new trial based on insufficiency of evidence supporting guilty verdict).

- (a) You were denied the right to be present at your trial.⁴⁷²
- (b) You were prohibited from testifying on your own behalf.⁴⁷³
- (c) The court in which you were convicted did not have the power to convict you because it did not have jurisdiction.⁴⁷⁴
- (d) You were convicted without using a certain procedure that the law now says is necessary to ensure the fundamental fairness of a trial.⁴⁷⁵
- (e) An error occurred during trial that made the trial fundamentally unfair in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.⁴⁷⁶

Remember that the above list does not include every possible example. If you think you experienced a violation of your rights not listed above, try to identify what kind of right may have been violated. Look carefully through a criminal procedure handbook in your prison library. Read the amendments to the Constitution carefully. Read many cases, especially cases dealing with a situation like yours. For example, if you were convicted of drug trafficking, read other cases involving drug trafficking. Start by looking at Supreme Court cases because the Supreme Court is the strongest authority on Constitutional rights and how those rights should apply to actual cases. The Supreme Court's decisions are what all the other courts look to when they make their own decisions. If you find a case that deals with something similar to the situation you experienced, then read the cases the 472. See McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 178, 104 S. Ct. 944, 951, 79 L. Ed. 2d 122, 133 (1984) (stating that a defendant has a right to be present at all important stages of trial); Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 182–183, 95 S. Ct. 896, 909, 43 L. Ed. 2d 103, 119–120 (1975) (noting that the trial court failed to adequately determine whether the defendant waived his right to be present at trial); Larson v. Tansy, 911 F.2d 392, 396 (10th Cir. 1990) (holding that defendant's absence from the courtroom at critical junctures in his trial violated his due process rights because he was unable to provide assistance to his counsel or have a psychological impact on the jury). However, you will likely only be granted habeas relief for denial of this right if it resulted in "substantial and injurious effect." Rice v. Wood, 77 F.3d 1138, 1144 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that a writ should not be granted for petitioner's absence during the jury's announcement of a death sentence if his absence did not have a "substantial and injurious effect" on him because his absence was not a structural error); see also Sturgis v. Goldsmith, 796 F.2d 1103, 1108–09 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that petitioner's absence from his competency hearing warrants habeas relief if the absence was not harmless error).

473. See Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44, 49, 107 S. Ct. 2704, 2708, 97 L. Ed. 2d 37, 44–45 (1987) (holding that defendants have a fundamental constitutional right to testify on their own behalf); People v. Allen, 187 P.3d 1018, 1030, 44 Cal. 4th 843, 860, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183, 198 (Cal. 2008) (holding that a defendant who was found to be a sexually violent predator had a right to testify under the California and federal constitutions even though his lawyer told him not to testify). But see Taylor v. United States, 287 F.3d 658, 661–62 (7th Cir. 2002) (holding defense counsel does not have a duty to tell defendant about his constitutional right to testify).

474. See Sunal v. Large, 332 U.S. 174, 178–79, 67 S. Ct. 1588, 1591, 91 L. Ed. 1982, 1987 (1947) (finding habeas relief appropriate where (1) conviction was under a federal statute alleged to be unconstitutional, (2) federal court's jurisdiction was challenged, or (3) specific constitutional guarantees were violated); Butler v. King, 781 F.2d 486, 490 (5th Cir. 1986) (finding that defendant was entitled to federal writ of habeas corpus because state district court lacked jurisdiction over him at time of trial); Lowery v. Estelle, 696 F.2d 333, 336–38 (5th Cir. 1983). Having "jurisdiction" means that the court has the power to hear your case. If a court holds a trial without jurisdiction, it violates the Due Process Clause of the 5th or 14th Amendments. In Lowery, a Texas trial court dismissed an indictment for firearm use, and then convicted the defendant on other charges. The court violated a Texas state law that strips a court of jurisdiction over a case if it dismisses an indictment. The incarcerated person filed a habeas petition claiming that the trial court lacked jurisdiction to hold his trial. The federal court would not consider this claim for habeas corpus, however, because the petitioner had not exhausted state procedures, which means he had not raised the claim in the state courts before petitioning in federal court.

475. See Part C(3)(b) ("Exception: Fundamental Fairness at Trial") of this Chapter.

476. See Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127, 137–138, 112 S. Ct. 1810, 1816–1817, 118 L. Ed. 2d 479, 490–91 (1992) (finding that the forced administration of an antipsychotic drug to defendant may have impermissibly violated his constitutional right to receive a fair trial by compromising the substance of his testimony, interaction with counsel, and comprehension); Young v. Callahan, 700 F.2d 32, 37 (1st Cir. 1983) (finding that a trial court committed a constitutional error by requiring petitioner to sit in prisoner's block rather than at counsel's table even though there was no finding that restraint was necessary and petitioner objected). But see Moore v. Ponte, 186 F.3d 26, 36 (1st Cir. 1999) (finding no constitutional error when it appeared the court had considered security concerns in deciding to make defendant sit in prisoner's block).

court relies on to determine whether something was a violation or not. Shepardize⁴⁷⁷ the case to find lower court decisions in your district that may give you more information on how violations are interpreted in your district. You should look out for a rule or standard used to review your violation. Then, you will develop your case around how the standard or rule was violated in your arrest, trial, or sentence. (This process is explained further in Section 2 below.)

Another approach is to start by getting an idea of what a constitutional violation looks like, and then examining what happened at your arrest, trial, and sentence to determine if there was a similar error. If you can, look at a transcript of your trial and pay close attention to where your lawyer raised an objection. You should look at any records relating to your case, including pretrial proceedings. Also, speak to family members, your trial attorney, and investigators to help discover violations. If you are unable to identify a violation, federal habeas will not be able to help you.

And remember, if you can identify violations, you should list every possible violation and every instance of each violation.

477. By Shepardizing, you can make sure that the law has not changed over time. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for an explanation of how to Shepardize a case.

CHAPTER 14

THE PRISON LITIGATION REFORM ACT*

A. Introduction

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) changes various parts of the United States Code that address civil rights litigation and “in forma pauperis” (“IFP”) proceedings. Proceeding IFP means that you file a lawsuit as a poor person and thereby avoid paying many of the normal fees and costs. Overall, the PLRA is designed to make it harder for incarcerated people to file complaints in federal court.

This Chapter will tell you about the PLRA’s various provisions and court decisions applying them. It will also suggest ways you might be able to defend yourself in pro se litigation if prison officials argue that the PLRA bars or limits your lawsuit. There are important questions about the PLRA that the courts have not yet settled, so some of the information in this Chapter may need to be changed in the future.¹ As with every legal issue described in the JLM, it is important that you do your own research to make sure you have the most up-to-date information about how the PLRA affects your particular case. To learn more about how to do legal research, read Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

The PLRA makes it extremely important to be sure your legal claim is strong before you file it. Under the PLRA, even if you proceed in forma pauperis, you have to pay the full $350 filing fee (and another $450 if you wish to appeal the court’s decision) in installments. You also run the risk of getting a “strike” under the PLRA’s “three strikes” provision. Under this provision, if you have three cases dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or for failing to state a valid legal claim, you can no longer use the IFP procedure for future suits,² and you will have to pay the entire filing fee in advance without the option of paying in installments.³ A lawsuit is considered frivolous when there can be no dispute (or question) that it has no basis in either law or fact,⁴ and it is considered malicious when it is abusive of the judicial process.⁵

Part B of this Chapter talks about the PLRA’s effect on your responsibility for paying filing fees. Part C provides an overview of the PLRA’s “three strikes” provision. Part D explains the requirement that directs a court to dismiss any incarcerated person’s case that it believes is frivolous or malicious, or that fails to state a legal claim, or seeks damages from a defendant who is protected from such claims. Part E explains in detail one of the most important aspects of the PLRA: the requirement that you exhaust all administrative remedies before you will be allowed into court. Part F describes the physical injury requirement of the PLRA, which says you cannot bring a suit in federal court for mental

* This Chapter was written by John Boston of The Legal Aid Society and over time has been revised and updated by JLM staff and by John Boston. If you would like to learn more or have questions about the PLRA, you are encouraged to write to The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners’ Rights Project, 199 Water Street, New York, NY 10038.

1. Unfortunately, many significant decisions interpreting the PLRA are unreported, which means they do not appear in the Federal Reporter and Federal Supplement volumes available in prison law libraries. They are available on the Lexis and Westlaw computer services. Citations like “1999 WL 12345” are Westlaw citations. Citations like “1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19764” are Lexis citations. Some jurisdictions do not allow you to cite to these decisions, that is, use them to support your legal argument. For additional important information about unpublished cases, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research.”

2. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

3. See In re Tyler, 110 F.3d 528, 529 (8th Cir. 1997).

4. Sun v. Forrester, 939 F.2d 924, 925 (11th Cir. 1991); see also Black v. Warren, 134 F.3d 732, 734 (5th Cir. 1998).

5. Johnson v. Edlow, 37 F. Supp. 2d 775, 776 (E.D. Va. 1999).

or emotional injury without showing a physical injury.⁶ Parts G through L briefly discuss the parts of the PLRA that (1) limit the “attorney’s fees” incarcerated people can recover in a successful suit; (2) allow defendants in a suit not to respond to the incarcerated person’s complaint unless the court tells them to do so; (3) allow for proceedings that happen before the trial to be conducted by telephone or video; (4) allow the court to order the loss of earned good-time credit if it finds that your claim was filed for a malicious or harassing purpose; (5) require that any damages awarded to an incarcerated person for a loss or injury he suffered be paid directly to satisfy any restitution orders (money owed by an incarcerated person for any damages to a victim); and (6) change how injunctions can be issued and maintained.

B. Filing Fees

The PLRA requires all incarcerated people to pay court filing fees, including poor incarcerated people who haven’t been granted IFP status by a federal court. Payments may be made in installments based on the amount of money in your prison account. You may wonder why you should bother seeking IFP status if you are going to have to pay the filing fees anyway. The reason is that if you do not have IFP status, you will have to pay the entire fee before you can file the case. Also, IFP litigants can have their summonses and complaints served by officers of the court, such as the U.S. Marshals Service⁷ and can be excused from payment of some costs (though not fees) on appeal.⁸ Without IFP status, you will have to take care of service and pay appeal costs yourself.⁹

If you are seeking IFP status, you must submit certified statements¹⁰ of your prison accounts for the six months before you filed the complaint or notice of appeal.¹¹ If these submissions are delayed because prison authorities do not respond to your requests, your case will not be dismissed.¹² If prison officials fail or refuse to provide a certified statement, the court can order them to do so.¹³ District courts in various states have different procedures for acquiring the certified statements.¹⁴ You should

6. Please note that although the statute states that you cannot bring a suit without first showing a physical injury, in practice this is impossible. You will have to show your injury after you have filed your suit.

7. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(d).

8. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(c).

9. See JLM, Chapter 6, “An Introduction to Legal Documents” for information on necessary documents.

10. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(a)(2).

11. See Spaight v. Makowski, 252 F.3d 78, 79 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that the relevant time period on appeal is six months before filing the notice of appeal, not six months before moving for in forma pauperis status). As a practical matter, courts have accepted information supplied by prison officials that was a little out of date. See Jackson v. Wright, No. 99 C 1294, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3487, at *2 n.2 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 10, 1999) (unpublished) (accepting statement ending the month before the complaint was filed in light of the small amounts involved); Lam v. Clark, No. 99 C 558, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1573, at *2–3 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 10, 1999) (unpublished) (accepting account information ending three and a half weeks before the filing of the complaint, since there was a consistent pattern for the six months covered).

12. See Lawton v. Ortiz, No. 06-1167 (FSH), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66905, at *2 (D.N.J. Sept. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (granting IFP status where prisoner said officials did not respond to his requests for an account statement and other evidence showed he was indigent). In addition, a delay in submitting the financial information will not cause you to miss the statute of limitations as long as the complaint itself is submitted in time. See Garrett v. Clarke, 147 F.3d 745, 746 (8th Cir. 1998) (“[T]he prisoner should be allowed to file the complaint, and then supply a prison account statement within a reasonable time.”) (citations omitted).

13. See Stinnett v. Cook Cnty. Med. Staff, No. 99 C 1696, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4605, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 19, 1999) (unpublished) (requiring prison officials to send a certified copy of prisoner’s financial statement to the court).

14. In the New York federal courts, for example, three of the four district courts (the Southern, Western, and Northern Districts) get the certified statement directly from prison officials; prisoner plaintiffs must submit a form to the court authorizing the disclosure of this information and the payment of the fee from their prison accounts. In the Eastern District of New York, prisoners must sign such an authorization and must also get obtain the necessary forms and instructions from the clerk of the court in which you plan to bring suit.¹⁵

If you are granted IFP status, you must pay the entire fee for filing either a complaint or an appeal¹⁶ according to the following formula:

- (1) . . . The court shall assess and, when funds exist, collect, as a partial payment of any court fees required by law, an initial partial filing fee of 20 percent of the greater of—
 - (A) the average monthly deposits to the incarcerated person's account; or
 - (B) the average monthly balance in the incarcerated person's account for the 6-month period immediately preceding the filing of the complaint or notice of appeal.
- (2) After payment of the initial partial filing fee, the incarcerated person shall be required to make monthly payments of 20 percent of the preceding month's income credited to the incarcerated person's account. The agency having custody of the incarcerated person shall forward payments from the incarcerated person's account to the clerk of the court each time the amount in the account exceeds $10 until the filing fees are paid.¹⁷

Your case should not be dismissed if you cannot pay the initial fee.¹⁸ The statute says that the initial fee is to be collected “when funds exist,”¹⁹ and that incarcerated people should not be stopped from bringing suit or appealing a judgment simply because they cannot pay.²⁰ A case should not be dismissed for nonpayment without a court first determining if the incarcerated person has had the opportunity to pay.²¹ However, if you do not pay on purpose, or if you do not take the necessary steps to pay, your case is likely to be dismissed.²² Incarcerated people generally may not be stopped from filing suit simply because they owe fees from a prior action.²³ However, one federal circuit has held that incarcerated people who try to avoid paying filing fees by lying or who fail to pay fees because certification from the prison of their funds. In the certification, the prison should include the average balances for the preceding six months.

15. The addresses of the federal district courts (organized by Circuit) are provided in Appendix I of the JLM.

16. The fee for filing a federal court civil complaint is $350.00. 28 U.S.C. § 1914(a). For appeals, there is a $500.00 filing fee, plus an additional $5 fee for filing your notice to appeal. See U.S. Courts, Federal Court Fees, available at <https://www.uscourts.gov/services-forms/fees/court-appeals-miscellaneous-fee-schedule> (last visited Oct. 15, 2020). The fee for filing for habeas corpus is $5. See 28 U.S.C. § 1914, available at <https://www.law.cornell.edu/uscode/text/28/1914> (last visited Oct. 15, 2020).

17. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(1)–(2).

18. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(4); see Taylor v. Delatorr, 281 F.3d 844, 850–851 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that an incarcerated person who cannot pay the initial fee must be allowed to proceed with his case and not merely be granted more time to pay).

19. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(1).

20. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(4).

21. Redmond v. Gill, 352 F.3d 801, 804 (3d Cir. 2003) (holding that the district court abused its discretion in dismissing a case when the plaintiff failed to return an authorization form for payment of fees within 20 days, and requiring that the plaintiff be given more time); Hatchett v. Unknown Nettles, 201 F.3d 651, 652 (5th Cir. 2000) (“[I]t is an abuse of discretion for a district court to dismiss an action for failure to comply with an initial partial filing fee order without making some inquiry regarding whether the prisoner has complied with the order by submitting any required consent forms within the time allowed for compliance.”); Beyer v. Cormier, 235 F.3d 1039, 1041 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the court should have communicated with prison officials or granted an extension of payment deadline). But see Cosby v. Meadors, 351 F.3d 1324, 1332–1333 (10th Cir. 2003) (holding that a court that issued repeated orders for the plaintiff to show cause could dismiss where the plaintiff did not document any reasons for his failure to pay).

22. See Cosby v. Meadors, 351 F.3d 1324, 1332–1333 (10th Cir. 2003) (affirming dismissal of case where plaintiff said he could not pay the fees but had spent his money on other items); Jackson v. N.P. Dodge Realty Co., 173 F. Supp. 2d 951, 952 (D. Neb. 2001) (affirming dismissal incarcerated person's claim when he refused to pay the initial payment by the court's deadline, despite paying other fees associated with the lawsuit).

23. See Walp v. Scott, 115 F.3d 308, 309 (5th Cir. 1997) (reversing a dismissal based on a pending action and stating that there is no requirement that an incarcerated person complete payment of fees before beginning another action).

they are subject to the “three strikes” provision of the PLRA²⁴ can be denied IFP status or stopped completely from filing suit.²⁵

If you lose a case, a federal court may decide to charge you with the costs of the lawsuit.²⁶ Courts are free to choose whether they will make you pay the costs.²⁷ If a court decides to charge you with costs, you cannot appeal that decision.²⁸

There are no exceptions to the fee requirement. Once your case is filed, you owe the fee. The court cannot delay payment until after your release.²⁹ You usually must pay these filing fees even if your case is dismissed immediately, you fail to submit the necessary financial information,³⁰ or you paid a fee in connection with a previous appeal.³¹ You cannot get the fee back by choosing to withdraw the complaint or appeal.³² Prison officials must keep collecting fees from your account if you remain within their legal custody, even if you are transferred to another jurisdiction.³³ They are required to treat these fees as more important and collect them before any other deductions can be taken out of your account.³⁴

Filing fee payments are based on all money the incarcerated person receives, not just prison wages. Deductions from the fee may not be made for money you spent on legal copies and postage.³⁵ Filing

24. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). For more information on the “three strikes” provision, see the next section.

25. See Campbell v. Clarke, 481 F.3d 967, 969–970 (7th Cir. 2007) (reasoning that a judge’s discretion allows for the rejection of an action filed without fees when the filing incarcerated person still owes fees from previous actions and has struck out under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g)); Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999) (barring an incarcerated person who had “struck out” under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) from filing further litigation, especially considering evidence that at least one of the incarcerated person’s IFP applications contained fraud). However, a recent decision held that an incarcerated person who is subject to the “three strikes” provision of the PLRA and who has not paid filing fees owed from prior suits cannot be barred from filing under the “imminent danger of serious physical injury” exception to that provision. Miller v. Donald, 541 F.3d 1091, 1096–1097 (11th Cir. 2008).

26. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(f)(2). In one case, an incarcerated person was assessed $7,989.90 in costs and $15,750 in attorneys’ fees. See Sanders v. Seabold, No. 98-5470, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 19764 at *2 (6th Cir. Aug. 13, 1999) (unpublished).

27. Feliciano v. Selsky, 205 F.3d 568, 572 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting “the ability of a court to require, as a matter of discretion, that the indigent [(poor/need)] prisoner pay the costs, or some part of them”).

28. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(f)(2)(A); Whitfield v. Scully, 241 F.3d 264, 273 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that § 1915 forbids incarcerated people from appealing an award of costs on the ground of indigency).

29. Ippolito v. Buss, 293 F. Supp. 2d 881, 883 (N.D. Ind. 2003) (denying an incarcerated person’s request to defer payments).

30. See Todd v. Acevedo, No. 16-CV-2741 (JNE/SER), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162291, at *2–4 (D. Minn. Oct. 13, 2016) (unpublished) (“[W]ithout financial information from Todd’s prison trust account, the Court had no basis to conclude that he lacks the assets....to pay an initial partial filing fee.”); Leonard v. Lacy, 88 F.3d 181, 186 (2d Cir. 1996) (“[W]e will apply the PLRA to impose any required obligation for filing fees (subject to installment payments) upon all prisoners who seek to appeal civil judgments without prepayment of fees,” even if the action is later deemed frivolous); but see Smith v. District of Columbia, 182 F.3d 25, 29 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (not requiring incarcerated people to pay the full filing fee whenever their in forma pauperis application is denied and they decide to no longer pursue their lawsuit).

31. Lebron v. Russo, 263 F.3d 38, 42 (2d Cir. 2001) (refusing to grant an exception to filing fee requirement even where plaintiff filed a second appeal that arose out of the same district court action).

32. Goins v. Decaro, 241 F.3d 260, 261 (2d Cir. 2001) (“The PLRA makes no provision for return of fees partially paid or for cancellation of the remaining indebtedness in the event that an appeal is withdrawn.”).

33. Beese v. Liebe, 153 F. Supp. 2d 967, 970 (E.D. Wis. 2001) (holding that state officials are obligated “to put into place procedures for continuing the collection of the filing fees . . . The payments do not stop, nor are they even temporarily placed on hold, just because the Secretary has chosen to send [the incarcerated people] out-of-state.”) (citation omitted).

34. Smith v. Huibregtse, 151 F. Supp. 2d 1040, 1043 (E.D. Wis. 2001) (finding “funds exist within the meaning of the PLRA whenever a prisoner has funds or receives income and prison officials must give payment of federal court filing fees priority”).

35. Rutledge v. Romero, No. 99 C 3453, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9021, at *2–5 (N.D. Ill. June 2, 1999) fees may be assessed and collected from “release accounts” or “gate savings,” money intended to be provided to the prisoner upon release from prison, at least when doing so is consistent with state law.³⁶

The 20% monthly payment is to be made separately for each case. The Supreme Court has held that if you have more than one case on which you owe fees, you must pay on all the fees at the same time.³⁷

In class actions, only the incarcerated people who signed the complaint or notice of appeal are responsible for payment of fees.³⁸ In cases involving more than one plaintiff, the courts have disagreed about payment of filing fees. One federal appeals court held that each plaintiff must pay an equal amount of the fee saying that, “each prisoner should be proportionally liable for any fees and costs that may be assessed.”³⁹ Another appeals court held that multiple incarcerated people joining similar claims in a single suit must each pay a filing fee, but also have to file separate complaints.⁴⁰ More recently, other federal appeals courts agreed that each incarcerated plaintiff must pay the full filing fee, but they do not need to file a separate complaint.⁴¹ However, a number of district courts have held that incarcerated people proceeding IFP must file separate complaints, often citing the practical difficulties involved in multiple-plaintiff litigation.⁴²

(unpublished) (establishing that funds calculation is based on all money in the account, including money from third parties and money intended for legal communication). Courts have disagreed about whether money that is withheld from an incarcerated person’s income and held until release should be counted in calculating the fees or used to pay the fees.

36. Kennedy v. Huibregtse, 831 F.3d 441, 442 (7th Cir. 2016) (noting that state law permits release account’s use to pay filing fees upon judicial order and that federal courts in the state had so used them (citing State ex rel. Coleman v. Sullivan, 229 Wis.2d 804, 601 N.W.2d 335, 337–38 (Wis. App. 1999), and Spence v. McCaughtry, 46 F.Supp.2d 861, 863 (E.D. Wis. 1999))); Jackson v. Kallas, 17-cv-350-bbc, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145331, *4–5 (W.D. Wis., Sept. 8, 2017) (unpublished) (noting state law governs use of release account funds and authorizes courts only to order the payment of initial filing fee from them); Dean v. King, Civil No. 09–1745 (RHK/SRN), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76195, *5–6 (D. Minn., Aug. 26, 2009) (holding “gate savings” appropriately considered in initial fee calculation). It is not clear why state law limits on the use of these funds are not preempted by the PLRA under the Supremacy Clause, U.S. CONST., art. VI.

37. Bruce v. Samuels, 577 U.S. 82, 84, 89–90, 136 S. Ct. 627, 629, 632–633, 193 L. Ed. 2d 496, 499, 502–503 (2016).

38. Talley-Bey v. Knebl, 168 F.3d 884, 887 (6th Cir. 1999) (“[I]n cases involving class actions, . . . the responsibility of paying the required fees and costs rests with the prisoner or prisoners who signed the complaint . . . [O]n appeal, the prisoner or prisoners signing the notice of appeal are obligated to pay all appellate fees and costs.”).

39. In re Prison Litigation Reform Act, 105 F.3d 1131, 1138 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that any fees the district court or appeals court may impose should be equally divided among the plaintiffs). One lower court has taken a different approach to dividing the filing fee, holding that the parties can divide the fee as they like. Every person is responsible if the fee goes unpaid, even if they have already paid more than their share. See Alcala v. Woodford, No. C 02-0072 TEH (pr), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9504, at *2–3 (N.D. Cal. May 20, 2002) (unpublished) (holding that all parties are responsible for seeing that the fee is paid in full, and that all may be penalized for a failure to pay).

40. Hubbard v. Haley, 262 F.3d 1194, 1197 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that the clear language of the PLRA requires each incarcerated person to bring a separate suit).

41. Boriboune v. Berge, 391 F.3d 852, 854–856 (7th Cir. 2004); see also Hagan v. Rogers, 570 F.3d 146, 155 (3d Cir. 2009) (endorsing the Seventh Circuit’s approach in Boriboune v. Berge); Suarez v. A1, No. 06-2782 (JBS), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93720, at *11–13 (D.N.J. Dec. 13, 2006) (unpublished) (acknowledging the difficulties of joint litigation, but holding different plaintiffs who sought the same remedy could proceed jointly though they each had to pay a separate filing fee).

42. See, e.g., Sutcliffe v. S.C. Supreme Court, No. 0:16-992-TMC-PJG, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59180 (D.S.C. May 4, 2016) (citing cases); Lebon v. Mo. State Pub. Def. Sys., No. 4:13-CV-1834-SPM, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153911 (E.D. Mo. Oct. 28, 2013) (unpublished); Benford v. Madison Cty. Bd. of Supervisors, No. 3:09-cv-785-WHB-LRA, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7212 (S.D. Miss. Jan. 15, 2010) (unpublished); Proctor v. Applegate, 661 F. Supp. 2d 743, 780 (E.D. Mich. 2009); Caputo v. Belmar Municipality & County, No. 08-1975 (MLC), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36883, at *5–7 (D.N.J. May 2, 2008) (unpublished); Osterloth v. Hopwood, No. CV 06-152-M-JCL, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83461, at *2–3 (D. Mont. Nov. 15, 2006) (unpublished); Horton v. Evercom, Inc., No. 07-3183-SAC, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 299, at *3 (D. Kan. Jan. 2, 2008) (unpublished).

The joinder rules lay out the process of combining two or more legal issues into one court case. Joinder of parties allows a plaintiff to sue multiple defendants. Joinder of claims allows a plaintiff to bring multiple claims at the same time. However, plaintiffs can only use joinder if their injuries all come from the same “transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurrences” and when there is “any question of law or fact common to all defendants.”⁴³ This means that plaintiffs can only combine claims against people who were involved in one event or a series of events that are connected. These rules have sometimes been enforced loosely to allow plaintiffs to combine more claims and parties together. However, some courts are now strongly enforcing the joinder rules against incarcerated people. This is to prevent incarcerated people from paying one filing fee to bring claims that should be brought as separate complaints and fees.⁴⁴

Many constitutional challenges to the filing fees provisions have failed.⁴⁵ Courts have said that the filing fees rules are constitutional because they do not stop anyone from bringing suit.⁴⁶

The filing fees rules of the PLRA are used in federal court, and probably do not apply in state court. We are aware of no decisions on this issue in state courts.

43. FED. R. CIV. P. 20(a)(1) (joinder of plaintiffs). FED. R. CIV. P. 18 (joinder of claims).

44. See George v. Smith, 507 F.3d 605, 607–608 (7th Cir. 2007) (rejecting plaintiff’s lawsuit because “unrelated claims against different defendants belong in different suits”). An example of how this works is Vasquez v. Schueler, No. 06-cv-00743-bbc, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88193, at *1–2 (W.D. Wis. Nov. 29, 2007) (unpublished). The plaintiff in that case raised several different claims that arose at four different times. The court said that the plaintiff had to pursue his claims in four separate lawsuits, one for each different time. The only claims that could be combined in the same lawsuit were those of excessive force and of denial of medical care following the use of force, since they involved the same series of transactions or events. But see Griggs v. Holt, No. CV 117-089, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 182592, at *11 (S.D. Ga. Oct. 24, 2018) (unpublished) (holding claims of excessive force against multiple defendants in different incidents were properly joined where plaintiff alleged “the use of excessive force is a routine practice at ASMP and prison administrators are aware of this practice but refuse to take reasonable steps to prevent further assaults”), appeal filed, No. 19-12048 (11th Cir., May 28, 2019); Gates v. Gomez, No. 17-cv-00901-WQH-BGS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128417, at *12 (S.D. Cal. July 30, 2018) (unpublished) (holding claim of excessive force by one defendant followed by denial of medical care by another were properly joined where the claims were “logically related and provide context for one another” and where the plaintiff alleged a shared motivation between those defendants (footnote omitted)), report and recommendation adopted, No. 17CV901-WQH-BGS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 147520 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 28, 2018); Alford v. Mohr, No. 1:15-cv-645, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33680, at *22 (S.D. Ohio Mar. 1, 2018) (unpublished) (holding joinder was proper where claims against multiple defendants were “part of a campaign of retaliation or harassment in response to plaintiff’s filing of complaints, grievances and complaints originally stemming from [one defendant’s] actions”), report and recommendation adopted, No. 1:15cv645, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 229616 (S.D. Ohio July 26, 2018) (unpublished).

45. Lefkowitz v. Citi-Equity Group, 146 F.3d 609, 612 (8th Cir. 1998) (rejecting an equal protection claim and holding the filing fee provision does not unconstitutionally restrict access to the courts); Lucien v. DeTella, 141 F.3d 773, 775–776 (7th Cir. 1998) (finding the statute does not violate incarcerated people’s due process rights); Mitchell v. Farcass, 112 F.3d 1483, 1489 (11th Cir. 1997) (finding no equal protection violation); Nicholas v. Tucker, 114 F.3d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding the provisions constitutional both generally and as applied to the incarcerated person); Hampton v. Hobbs, 106 F.3d 1281, 1288 (6th Cir. 1997) (“[W]e find that the fee provisions of the Prison Litigation Reform Act violate neither a prisoner’s constitutional right of access to the courts, nor his rights under the First Amendment, the Due Process Clause, the Equal Protection Clause, or the Double Jeopardy Clause of the United States Constitution.”).

46. See, e.g., Nicholas v. Tucker, 114 F.3d 17, 21 (2d Cir. 1997) (upholding 28 U.S.C. §§ 1915(b)(1)–(4)).

The filing fees rules only apply to civil (not criminal) actions. Habeas corpus petitions and other post-judgment proceedings are generally not considered civil actions for this purpose.⁴⁷ Motions to vacate a criminal sentence under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 are also generally not considered civil actions.⁴⁸

Writs of mandamus and other “extraordinary writs” are considered civil actions and are subject to the PLRA, including the filing fee requirement, when they ask the court for relief that is similar to what you would ask for in a civil action.⁴⁹

Bankruptcy cases and challenges to seizures of property have been treated as civil actions. This means they are subject to the filing fees rules.⁵⁰

47. See Skinner v. Wiley, 355 F.3d 1293, 1294 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that the PLRA does not apply to habeas petitions about prison disciplinary proceeding); Malave v. Hedrick, 271 F.3d 1139, 1140 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding that the PLRA does not apply when challenging a delayed parole revocation hearing); Walker v. O'Brien, 216 F.3d 626, 634 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that proper habeas actions are not civil actions governed by PLRA, no matter the subject matter); Blair-Bey v. Quick, 151 F.3d 1036, 1039–1041 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that PLRA does not apply to challenges to parole procedures or other habeas actions), on reh'g, 159 F.3d 591 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Anderson v. Singletary, 111 F.3d 801, 805 (11th Cir. 1997) (holding that the filing fee requirement of PLRA does not apply to IFP habeas petitions or appeals). But see Kincade v. Sparkman, 117 F.3d 949, 952 (6th Cir. 1997) (stating that prisoners may not “cloak” civil actions as habeas/post-conviction cases). A habeas petition challenges your custody. Most courts hold you cannot challenge prison conditions in a federal habeas corpus claim. See, e.g., Beardslee v. Woodford, 395 F.3d 1064, 1068–1069 (9th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1096 (2005) (holding that a challenge to the conditions of the incarcerated person's confinement is more appropriately brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, not as a federal habeas claim). The main exceptions to this rule involve confinement, segregation, and disciplinary proceedings. Some courts have held that getting out of segregation, like getting out of prison entirely, may be sought by a habeas petition. See, e.g., Medberry v. Crosby, 351 F.3d 1049, 1053 (11th Cir. 2003) (finding that administrative segregation may be challenged through habeas action). Others have held that it cannot. See, e.g., Montgomery v. Anderson, 262 F.3d 641, 643–644 (7th Cir. 2001) (holding that habeas is improper because “segregation affects the severity rather than the duration of custody”). Disciplinary proceedings resulting in loss of good time instead of or in addition to placement in segregation must be challenged by petitioning for habeas corpus. See Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 643–644, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1587, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 911 (1997) (“[T]he sole remedy in federal court for a prisoner seeking restoration of good-time credits is a writ of habeas corpus”).

48. Kincade v. Sparkman, 117 F.3d 949, 950 (6th Cir. 1997) (examining the history and purpose of the Prison Litigation Reform Act); United States v. Cole, 101 F.3d 1076, 1077 (5th Cir. 1996) (determining that the absence of filing fees in the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act shows that the PLRA was not meant to apply to motions to vacate under § 2255).

49. Washington v. Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, 833 F.3d 1048, 1058–1059 (9th Cir. 2016) (adopting view of other circuits that mandamus is civil where the underlying action it is concerned with is civil but not where it is criminal); In re Grant, 635 F.3d 1227, 1230 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (holding “the filing-fee requirements of the PLRA apply to a petition for a writ of mandamus filed in connection with a civil proceeding in the district court,” though not addressing mandamus petitions about a criminal or habeas matter); In re Steele, 251 F. App'x 772, 772–773 (3d Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding “if a prisoner files a ‘mandamus petition’ that actually would initiate an appeal or a civil action, the PLRA applies”); In re Smith, 114 F.3d 1247, 1250 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (holding writ of prohibition in question was within the scope of PLRA because it contained “underlying claims that are civil in nature”); In re Tyler, 110 F.3d 528, 529 (8th Cir. 1997) (“[A] mandamus petition arising from an ongoing civil rights lawsuit falls within the scope of the PLRA.”); In re Washington, 122 F.3d 1345, 1345 (10th Cir. 1997) (determining that writs for mandamus are civil actions under PLRA). Contra, Madden v. Myers, 102 F.3d 74, 76 (3d Cir. 1996) (finding “a writ of mandamus is by its very nature outside the ambit of [PLRA] taxonomy”); Martin v. United States, 96 F.3d 853, 854 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding “a petition for mandamus in a criminal proceeding is not a form of prisoner litigation” and thus is not covered by PLRA); In re Nagy, 89 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1996) (denying PLRA coverage “to writs directed at judges conducting criminal trials”).

50. See United States v. Howell, 354 F.3d 693, 695–696 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that incarcerated people challenging administrative forfeiture are required to follow the limitations set by PLRA); United States v. Jones, 215 F.3d 467, 469 (4th Cir. 2000) (holding that a motion under the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(e) for the return of seized property is a civil action); Lefkowitz v. Citi-Equity Group, 146 F.3d 609, 612 (8th Cir. 1998) (concluding that “under the plain language of [PLRA], the phrase ‘civil action or appeal’ is not limited to challenges to conditions of confinement, and includes the instant commercial litigation.”); Pena v. United States, 122 F.3d 3, 4 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that a motion under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41(e) for the return of seized property is a “civil action” subject to the PLRA filing fee requirements).

Courts disagree about whether motions made within criminal prosecutions to address prison problems related to the prosecution are civil actions subject to PLRA provisions.⁵¹

The filing fees provisions apply only to “prisoners.” Under the PLRA, a “prisoner” is “any person incarcerated or detained in any facility who is accused of, convicted of, sentenced for, or adjudicated delinquent for, violations of criminal law or the terms and conditions of parole, probation, pretrial release, or diversionary program.”⁵² This definition applies to all PLRA provisions concerning litigation brought by “prisoners,” and it includes pretrial detainees,⁵³ military prisoners,⁵⁴ people in privately operated prisons and jails,⁵⁵ in juvenile facilities,⁵⁶ and in “halfway houses” (drug treatment programs), if the “prisoner” is in the program because of a criminal charge or conviction.⁵⁷ If you are in jail because of civil proceedings, you are not a “prisoner” under the PLRA,⁵⁸ unless you are civilly committed in

51. See United States v. Mohamed, 103 F.Supp.3d 281, 285–287 (E.D.N.Y. 2015) (holding district court in a criminal cases has jurisdiction despite the PLRA to consider a challenge to Special Administrative Measures (“SAMs”) affecting access to counsel and imposing isolation); United States v. Savage, NO.07-550-03, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS, at *7–12 (E.D.Pa., Oct. 21, 2010) (unpublished); United States v. Hashmi, 621 F. Supp. 2d 76, 84–85 (S.D.N.Y. 2008); United States v. Lopez, 327 F. Supp. 2d 138, 140–142 (D.P.R. 2004) (finding that a motion challenging placement in administrative segregation after the government decided to seek the death penalty against the defendant was not a civil action). But see also United States v. Antonelli, 371 F.3d 360, 361 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that a motion in a long-completed criminal case challenging a prison policy forbidding incarcerated people from keeping their pre-sentence reports should have been treated as a separate civil action); United States v. Morales, No. 4:13-CR-00200-MAC-CAN, 2017 WL 1457168, *2 (E.D.Tex., Mar. 20, 2017) (unpublished) (holding that a challenge to a separation order barring a criminal defendant from communicating with his brothers must be exhausted because it is about prison conditions, even though it was imposed by the Department of Justice and not the Bureau of Prisons), report and recommendation adopted, United States v. Morales, No. 4:13-CR-200, 2017 WL 1435222 (E.D.Tex., Apr. 20, 2017) (unpublished); U.S. v. Schrenko, No. 1:04-CR-568-CC-1, 2011 WL 13315132, *2 (N.D.Ga., Sept. 29, 2011) (unpublished) (vacating prior order requiring medical attention for detained defendant; holding defendant must exhaust before seeking relief in an “action” challenging the quality of her medical care); United States v. Khan, 540 F. Supp. 2d 344, 349–352 (E.D.N.Y. 2007) (finding PLRA and the PLRA’s exhaustion requirement applies to motion challenging SAMs and other pretrial jail restrictions).

52. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b) (requiring prisoner to pay a filing fee); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1915(h) (defining “prisoner”).

53. Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 402 (2015) (noting “the Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e, which is designed to deter the filing of frivolous litigation against prison officials, applies to both pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners”); Rodriguez v. Cty. of Los Angeles, 891 F.3d 776, 792 (9th Cir. 2018).

54. See Marrie v. Nickels, 70 F. Supp. 2d 1252, 1262 (D. Kan. 1999) (finding PLRA applies to military prisoners).

55. See, e.g., Roles v. Maddox, 439 F.3d 1016, 1017–1018 (9th Cir. 2006) (holding the PLRA applicable to people held in private prisons); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 993–994 (6th Cir. 2004) (also holding the PLRA applicable to people held in private prisons).

56. See Troy D. v. Mickens, 806 F.Supp.2d 758, 767 (D.N.J., Aug. 25, 2011) (holding the exhaustion requirement applies to juveniles who are incarcerated); Lewis v. Gagne, 281 F. Supp. 2d 429, 433 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding exhaustion requirement applies to juveniles); Alexander S. v. Boyd, 113 F.3d 1373, 1385 (4th Cir. 1997) (holding that the attorney fee limits apply to counsel representing juveniles who are incarcerated).

57. See Jackson v. Johnson, 475 F.3d 261, 266–267 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that parolee in a halfway house, which he could not leave without permission as a result of his criminal conviction, was a prisoner); Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 174–175 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that, despite state law, a “drug treatment campus” was a “jail, prison, or other correctional facility” under 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a), even though state law said it was not a correctional facility, because that term “includes within its ambit all facilities in which prisoners are held involuntarily as a result of violating the criminal law”); Witzke v. Femal, 376 F.3d 744, 753 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that an “intensive drug rehabilitation halfway house” was the equivalent of a “correctional facility” under PLRA).

58. See Merryfield v. Jordan, 584 F.3d 923, 927 (8th Cir. 2009) (holding a person civilly detained under a sexually violent predator statute was not subject to the PLRA); Michau v. Charleston County, S.C., 434 F.3d 725, 727–728 (4th Cir. 2006) (same as Merryfield); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1121–1122 (9th Cir. 2005) (stating that PLRA “three strikes” provision did not apply to dismissals of actions brought while a plaintiff was in INS custody “so long as the detainee did not also face criminal charges”); Perkins v. Hedricks, 340 F.3d 582, 583 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding that a person who was civilly detained in prison Federal Medical Center was not subject to the connection with pending criminal charges. If you are civilly committed in connection with pending criminal charges, you are subject to the PLRA as a pretrial detainee.⁵⁹

Formerly incarcerated people who file complaints or notices of appeal after they are released are not considered “prisoners” under the PLRA and are not subject to PLRA rules in those proceedings.⁶⁰ People released on parole are not “prisoners,”⁶¹ unless they are paroled to a restrictive institutional setting where they continue to be “incarcerated or detained in [a] facility” during their period of parole for criminal violations.⁶² They are not bound by the PLRA’s filing fees and can apply for in forma pauperis status like any other free poor person. And if it is granted, they may move forward without any prepayment or installment payment of fees.

Incarcerated people who are released after they have filed suit generally remain subject to PLRA rules in that litigation, since those cases were brought by incarcerated people.⁶³ The filing fees provisions are different. They call for fees to be collected from an incarcerated persons’ institutional accounts, and an incarcerated person who is released no longer has an institutional account.

Some courts have therefore held that the formerly incarcerated person must move for IFP status like any other poor person.⁶⁴ Several others have held that any amount due from the period of PLRA); Kolocotronis v. Morgan, 247 F.3d 726, 728 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding that a person committed after a finding of not guilty by reason of insanity is not a “prisoner” under the PLRA); LaFontant v. INS, 135 F.3d 158, 165 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (finding immigration detainees not “prisoners” subject to fee provisions of PLRA).

59. See Kalinowski v. Bond, 358 F.3d 978, 979 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that persons committed under the Illinois Sexually Dangerous Persons Act while they wait their felony trials are pretrial detainees are subject to the PLRA).

60. Olivas v. Nevada ex rel. Department of Corrections, 856 F.3d 1281, 1283–1284 (9th Cir. 2017); Lesesne v. Doe, 712 F.3d 584, 586, 588 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (pretrial release); Talamantes v. Leyva, 575 F.3d 1021, 1023–1024 (9th Cir. 2009); Cofield v. Bowser, 247 F. App’x 413, 414 (4th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished); Norton v. The City of Marietta, OK, 432 F.3d 1145, 1150 (10th Cir. 2005) (per curiam); Nerness v. Johnson, 401 F.3d 874, 876 (8th Cir. 2005) (per curiam).

61. Greig v. Goord, 169 F.3d 165, 167 (2d Cir. 1999) (per curiam) (noting that a parolee is not “incarcerated or detained”); Kerr v. Puckett, 138 F.3d 321, 322–23 (7th Cir. 1998); Robinson v. Sheppard, NO. H-11-3397, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85245, *1 n.2 (S.D. Tex., June 20, 2012) (unpublished); Connor v. California, 1:10-cv-01967-AWI-GSA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45504, *3 (E.D. Cal., Apr. 27, 2011) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Connor v. California, 1:10-cv-01967-AWI-GSA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77071 (E.D. Cal., July 15, 2011) (unpublished).

62. Jackson v. Johnson, 475 F.3d 261, 265–267 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that parolee in a halfway house, which he could not leave without permission, was a prisoner, since his placement was pursuant to his criminal conviction); Clemens v. SCI Albion, No. 05-325 Erie, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91543, at *5 (W.D. Pa., Dec. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (holding halfway house with random urine tests and limited visiting was an “other correctional facility”); Fernandez v. Morris, No. 08-CV-0601 H (PCL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54298, *2 (S.D. Cal., July 16, 2008) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff involuntarily confined in a drug program was a prisoner under the PLRA); Clemens v. SCI Albion, No. 05-325 Erie, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91543, at *5 (W.D. Pa., Dec. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (holding prisoner confined to a “residential community corrections program” which was also a “minimum security work release facility” was a prisoner).

63. Perez v. Westchester Cnty. Dept. of Corrections, 587 F.3d 143, 154–155 (2d Cir. 2009) (discussing attorney’s fees provisions); Harris v. City of New York, 607 F.3d 18, 21–22 (2d Cir. 2010) (detailing three strikes provision); Cox v. Mayer, 332 F.3d 422, 425 (6th Cir. 2003) (explaining exhaustion requirement); Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 973–976 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (describing physical injury requirement); Banos v. O’Guin, 144 F.3d 883, 885 (5th Cir. 1998) (describing “imminent danger” exception to three strikes provision).

64. Brown v. Eppler, 725 F.3d 1221, 1231 & n.7 (10th Cir. 2013).

incarceration must be paid first.⁶⁵ Some have held that the need to pay ends on the prisoner's release.⁶⁶ Some have said that released prisoners must still pay the full filing fee, though they have differed about how to accomplish this.⁶⁷

C. The "Three Strikes" Provision

Filing fees are also affected by the "three strikes" provision. This is one of the harshest parts of the PLRA. It says:

In no event shall a prisoner bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding under this section [in forma pauperis] if the prisoner has, on 3 or more prior occasions, while incarcerated or detained in any facility, brought an action or appeal in a court of the United States that was dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted, unless the prisoner is under imminent danger of serious physical injury.⁶⁸

65. Robbins v. Switzer, 104 F.3d 895, 899 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that a formerly incarcerated person must provide an account statement as of release and pay any part of the filing fee that they could have paid before release. Afterwards, continuation under IFP provisions can be considered); accord, In Re Smith, 114 F.3d 1247, 1251-52 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (following Robbins; requiring incarcerated people who failed to submit account information or make payments before release to do so after release; stating plaintiff can rely on IFP provisions after satisfying pre-release obligation); see Smalls v. State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, No. CV414-031, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67133, *15–17 (S.D. Ga., May 15, 2014) (unpublished) (holding a formerly incarcerated person must ordinarily make all payments due up to release, holding this plaintiff didn't need to because his short incarceration made the amount de minimis; directing plaintiff to file a new IFP motion).

66. See, e.g., DeBlasio v. Gilmore, 315 F.3d 396, 398–399 (4th Cir. 2003) (holding that a formerly incarcerated person doesn't need to pay fees due before release because "[a] released prisoner should not have to shoulder a more difficult financial burden than the average indigent [poor] plaintiff in order to continue his lawsuit") (citations omitted); McGann v. Comm'r, Soc. Sec. Admin., 96 F.3d 28, 29–30 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that the PLRA fee requirements do not apply to a formerly incarcerated person, but dismissing the suit as frivolous).

67. See Gay v. Tex. Dept. of Corr. State Jail Div., 117 F.3d 240, 242 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that a formerly incarcerated person who filed a "notice to appeal" before his release from prison was required to pay the filing fees for the appeal, without explaining how it was to be collected without a prison account); Vaughn v. Griesbach, No. 17-cv-437-pp, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39925, at*1 (E.D. Wis., Mar. 12, 2018) (unpublished) ("Because it appears that the plaintiff is now out of custody, however, the court cannot direct the institution to collect the filing fee according to 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b)(2). The court will require the plaintiff to make payments to the court as he is able."); Kilgore v. Kendrick, No. 5:17-cv-144-MTT-TQL, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 214413, at *2 (M.D. Ga., Oct. 17, 2017) (unpublished) (holding that after release, "plaintiff remains obligated to continue making monthly payments to the clerk toward the balance due until said amount has been paid in full"; authorizing collection "by any means permitted by law"); report and recommendation adopted, Kilgore v. Kendrick, No. 5:17-CV-144(MTT), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2584 (M.D. Ga., Jan. 8, 2018) (unpublished); Flynn v. Canlas, No. 15-cv-2115 WQH (PCL), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 166493, *3–4 (S.D. Cal., Dec. 10, 2015) (unpublished) (holding that a released IFP incarcerated person must pay the full unpaid amount of the filing fee in installments "dependent on Plaintiff's post-release ability to pay"; directing plaintiff to file a supplemental IFP motion within 30 days since court lacks information about plaintiff's post-incarceration finances); McColm v. California, No. 1:14-cv-00580-RRB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23564, *3 (E.D. Cal., Feb. 26, 2015) (unpublished) (holding that released IFP incarcerated person must pay the full unpaid amount of the fee in order to proceed, without explaining why she can't seek new IFP status); Murphy v. Maricopa County Sheriff's Office, No. CV-05-2553-PHX-DGC (DKD), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34828, at *1 (D. Ariz., Dec. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding a person who was released from prison must pay the entire filing fee within 30 days or show cause why they cannot).

68. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). As with the filing fees provisions discussed in the previous Section, this provision only applies to people who are incarcerated when they file suit. See Brown v. Taylor, 677 F. App'x 924, 931 (5th Cir. 2017) (unpublished) and cases cited (holding provision does not apply to person who was a civil detainee when they filed suit); Kolocotronis v. Morgan, 247 F.3d 726, 728 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding provision does not apply to person committed after finding of not guilty by reason of insanity).

This provision means that if you have had three actions or appeals dismissed as frivolous (lacking “an arguable basis either in law or fact”),⁶⁹ or malicious (filed for an improper purpose,⁷⁰ repetitive of other litigation,⁷¹ or otherwise abusive of the judicial process⁷²), you cannot file a new complaint or appeal in forma pauperis (“IFP”). The only exception is that you can file IFP if you can show that you are in “imminent danger of serious physical injury.” If you cannot file IFP, you have to pay the entire filing fee up front. If you can’t pay up front, your case will almost certainly be dismissed,⁷³ and you will still have to pay the fee in installments.⁷⁴ If you have not paid the fee, and the court rules that

69. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 325, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1832, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 347 (1989), superseded by statute, 28 U.S.C. §1915A(b). A claim may be legally frivolous if it fails to raise an “arguable question of law” or is based on an “indisputably meritless legal theory,” Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 325, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 349 (1989), superseded by statute, 28 U.S.C. §1915A(b); or if the factual allegations in the complaint make it absolutely clear that the case is barred by a defense—for example, the statute of limitations has run, see Street v. Vose, 936 F.2d 38, 39 (1st Cir. 1991), or that the claim is barred by immunity, Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 325, 327, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (1989), superseded by statute, 28 U.S.C. §1915A(b), or by res judicata, Magee v. Hamline University, 775 F.3d 1057, 1058–1059 (8th Cir. 2015). A complaint is factually frivolous only if the “claims describ[e] fantastic or delusional scenarios,” Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 325, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 349 (1989), superseded by statute, 28 U.S.C. §1915A(b), which means that “the facts alleged rise to the level of the irrational or the wholly incredible, whether or not there are judicially noticeable facts available to contradict them.” Denton v. Hernandez, 504 U.S. 25, 33, 112 S. Ct. 1728, 1734, 118 L. Ed. 2d 340, 350 (1992), superseded by statute on other grounds, 28 U.S.C. §1915A(b)(1).

70. Knapp v. Hogan, 738 F.3d 1106, 1109 (9th Cir. 2013) (stating a claim is malicious when “filed with the intention or desire to harm another” (citing Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1121 (9th Cir. 2005))); Crisafi v. Holland, 655 F.2d 1305, 1309 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (complaint filed for purposes of vengeance and not to redress a legal wrong was malicious).

71. Crisafi v. Holland, 655 F.2d 1305, 1309 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (per curiam) (“A complaint plainly abusive of the judicial process is properly typed malicious. . . . A complaint that merely repeats pending or previously litigated claims may be considered abusive, and a court may look to its own records to determine whether a pleading repeats prior claims.”). Repetitive litigation is not malicious in every instance, depending on the circumstances of each case. See, e.g., Washington v. Los Angeles County Sheriff’s Dept., 833 F.3d 1048, 1060 (9th Cir. 2016) (holding a repetitive complaint “was not frivolous or malicious by virtue of being repetitive. . . . Rather, it reflects a pro se litigant’s inartful attempt to amend the first pleading, . . . by revising his requested relief and causes of action. . . .”).

72. Rivera v. Allin, 144 F.3d 719, 731 (11th Cir. 1998) (describing plaintiff’s misrepresentation of his prior litigation history on a complaint form as abusive), abrogated on other grounds, Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 921, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 813 (2007); Arango v. Butler, 14-61706-CIV-MORENO, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129319, at *2 (S.D. Fla., Sept. 16, 2014) (holding failure to obey court orders to be abusive) (unpublished).

73. See Flemming v. Fischer, No. 9:09-CV-0005 (LEK), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134065, at *1 (N.D.N.Y., July 15, 2009) (unpublished) (noting rejection of offer to pay in seven installments of $50; granting final three-week extension to pay the entire fee); Jones v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, No. 5:07-cv-158, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47775, at *3 (E.D. Tex. June 19, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting request for a “payment plan,” since that would amount to proceeding IFP). One court has said that district courts have the ability to let a litigant with three strikes to pay fees over time, though the court did not exercise that ability. See Dudley v. United States, 61 Fed. Cl. 685, 688 (Fed. Cl. 2004). Some courts have granted incarcerated people some extra time to pay the fee. See Watts v. Pickett, No. 5:17-CV-38-DCB-MTP, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193737, at *1 (S.D. Miss., Nov. 14, 2018) (unpublished) (after ordering payment of fee within 60 days and accepting two installment payments, the court granted another 30 days to pay the remaining $150); Wilkins v. Gonzalez, No. 2: 16-cv-347 KJM KJN P, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44048, at *1 (E.D. Cal., Mar. 14, 2018) (unpublished) (granting a one-time 30-day extension for an incarcerated person who had made a partial payment to pay the full balance of the fee). In addition, a notice of appeal filed on time grants appellate jurisdiction even if the filing fee is not paid on time, see Daly v. United States, 109 F. App’x 210, 212 (10th Cir. 2004) (unpublished), which may allow you additional time to pay the fee if you can’t do so within the 30 days allowed for a notice of appeal. One recent federal circuit decision holds that the court has ability to decide an appeal even if the filing fee has not been paid; Isby v. Brown, 856 F.3d 508, 520 (7th Cir. 2017). But do not count on getting an extension. Most likely, if you have received three strikes and cannot pay the fee quickly, your appeal will be dismissed.

74. Jerelds v. Smith, No. 1:07-cv-00111-MP-AK, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21562, at *1 (N.D. Fla. Mar. 6, 2008) (unpublished) (stating that a plaintiff whose suit was dismissed for three strikes could not get a refund of his partial fee payment, “since by filing an action he agreed to a full payment of the filing fees”).

you are subject to the three strikes provision, most courts say you should still be given time to pay in order to avoid dismissal.⁷⁵ One court, however, has said that an incarcerated person who sought IFP status, even though he had already been found to have three strikes, had committed “a fraud on the federal judiciary,” and so his appeal was dismissed.⁷⁶ That same court has also held that a litigant with three strikes can be barred from filing any more papers in court until all previously incurred fees have been paid.⁷⁷ However, that rule cannot be extended to block IFP filings by incarcerated people who fit into the “imminent danger of serious physical injury” exception.⁷⁸

The three strikes rule makes it important to be sure that the facts in any complaint you file describe a specific violation of law. If you file lawsuits based just on your general feeling that someone has mistreated you, you will probably be given strikes and may not be able to proceed IFP in the future.

The three strikes provision, like the filing fees provisions, only applies to incarcerated people who are incarcerated when they file suit,⁷⁹ or when they file a notice of appeal.⁸⁰ It applies only to civil actions or appeals, and does not normally apply to habeas corpus or other challenges to criminal convictions or sentences.⁸¹

Rule 60(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure can sometimes be used to remove a strike from your record. However, courts only do this in unusual situations.⁸²

75. See In re Alea, 286 F.3d 378, 382 (6th Cir. 2002) (allowing 30 days to pay the filing fee); Smith v. District of Columbia, 182 F.3d 25, 29–30 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (stating that a person stopped from filing as a poor person has 14 days to pay the filing fee so his suit may continue); Craig v. Cory, No. 98-1128, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 26602, at *4 (10th Cir. Oct. 20, 1998) (unpublished) (holding that PLRA does not bar an incarcerated person with three strikes from suing, so long as they pay the filing fee); Windham v. Franklin, No. CV 16-5888-SVW (JEM), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53503, at *4 n.1 (C.D.Cal., Jan. 25, 2018) (allowing 30 days to pay the filing fee) (unpublished, report and recommendation adopted, Windham v. Franklin, No. CV 16-5888-SVW (JEM), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53503 (C.D.Cal., Mar. 22, 2018) (unpublished); But see Dupree v. Palmer, 284 F.3d 1234, 1236 (11th Cir. 2002) (holding a suit must be dismissed without prejudice and refiled, since the statute says fees must be paid when the suit starts).

76. Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999) (“Litigants to whom [the three strikes provision] applies take heed! An effort to bamboozle the court by seeking permission to proceed in forma pauperis after a federal judge has held that § 1915(g) applies to a particular litigant will lead to immediate termination of the suit.”).

77. Sloan v. Lesza, 181 F.3d 857, 859 (7th Cir. 1999).

78. Miller v. Donald, 541 F.3d 1091, 1098–1099 (11th Cir. 2008). Subsection C(1)(a) below discusses that exception.

79. Jackson v. Johnson, 475 F.3d 261, 266–267 (5th Cir. 2007) (noting that people released on parole into the general public are not “prisoners” under PLRA, but holding that a person confined to a halfway house remained a prisoner subject to the three strikes rule); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1121–1122 (9th Cir. 2005) (stating that PLRA “three strikes” rule did not apply to dismissals of actions brought while a plaintiff was in INS custody “so long as the detainee did not also face criminal charges”)

80. Schuhaiber v. Illinois Dept. of Corrections, --- F.3d ---, 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 36389, *1–6 (7th Cir., Nov. 19, 2020) (holding a person who was incarcerated when he filed suit, but was no longer incarcerated when he appealed, was not subject to the three strikes provision on appeal).

81. See Al-Pine v. Richerson, 763 F. App’x 717, 718 (10th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding habeas corpus petitions are not “civil actions” for purposes of 28 U.S.C. § 1915); Jennings v. Natrona Cty. Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 779 (10th Cir. 1999); In re Crittendom, 143 F.3d 919, 920 (5th Cir. 1998) (deciding the character of a writ of mandamus depends on the underlying suit; here, because it was a civil action, the three strikes rule required the incarcerated person to pay the filing fee first). See Part B of this Chapter for the definition of civil actions.

82. See FED. R. CIV. P. 60(b) (stating that there are some instances where a court may “relieve a party or its legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding”); see also Ceara v. Clark-Dirusso, No. 1:13-CV-3041-LAP, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130620, at *4 (S.D.N.Y., Aug. 5, 2019) (unpublished) (changing a judgment of dismissal under Rule 60 where the incorrect citation of statute suggested it should be treated as a strike despite the lack of a finding the action was frivolous or malicious); Dalvin v. Beshears, 943 F. Supp. 578, 578–579 (D. Md. 1996) (holding plaintiff’s suit to get a standing order of the court was not frivolous for PLRA purposes because he believed it was the only way he could get it); . Prisoners who have been charged with a strike for failure to exhaust administrative remedies may wish to pursue this remedy in light of the Supreme Court’s decision that failure to exhaust under the PLRA is not a failure to state a claim. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213–215, 127 S. Ct.

The three strikes provision of the PLRA governs actions brought in federal court, but state courts don't necessarily have to follow it.⁸³ A poor person who is incarcerated with three strikes may prefer to file in state court if the state law permits. Most courts have held that if you file in state court, and the defendants remove the case to federal court, the case is not affected by Section 1915(g).⁸⁴ Section 1915(g) applies to those who "bring a civil action or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding under this section," i.e., litigants who invoked the federal IFP provisions when the case was "brought." A case brought in state court is not "brought under" those provisions, but rather under the state court's rules, whatever they may be.⁸⁵ When the defendants remove your case from state court to federal court, they are responsible for paying the federal court filing fee, and you are not asking for IFP status at that point, so Section 1915(g) is irrelevant. Most courts have also held that a removed case cannot be remanded to state court on the ground that the plaintiff has three strikes.⁸⁶ Some courts have resisted these conclusions because they believe prisoners are evading their obligations under Section 1915(g) by filing in state court,⁸⁷ ignoring the fact that as Section 1915(g) is written, it has no application to cases brought in state courts.⁸⁸

910, 920–921, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–813 (2007). For more information on exhaustion, see Part E of this Chapter.

83. See Woodson v. McCollum, 875 F.3d 1304, 1307 (10th Cir. 2017) (noting States may have less restrictive rules than § 1915(g)); Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307, 314–315 (3d Cir. 2001) (en banc) (same); Abreu v. Kooi, No. 9:14-CV-1529 (GLS/DJS), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120681, at *4 (N.D.N.Y., Aug. 4, 2016) (unpublished) (noting the absence of a § 1915(g)-type provision in New York State law), report and recommendation adopted, Abreu v. Kooi, No. 9:14-cv-1529 (GLS/DJS), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120463 (N.D.N.Y., Sept. 7, 2016) (unpublished); Crooker v. U.S., No. 3:2009-206, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126460, at *4 (W.D.Pa., Nov. 20, 2009) (unpublished) (noting lack of three strikes rule in Pennsylvania law); Lakes v. State, 333 S.C. 382, 386, n.2, 510 S.E.2d 228, 230, n.2 (S.C. Ct. App. 1998) (noting that South Carolina has no equivalent to PLRA's three strikes rule).

84. Woodson v. McCollum, 875 F.3d 1304, 1305 (10th Cir. 2017); Harris v. Mangum, 863 F.3d 1133, 1140–1141 (9th Cir. 2017).

85. Woodson v. McCollum, 875 F.3d at 1306; Blevins v. O'Malley, 2010 LEXIS 127589, at *1 n.2 (N.D. Ind., Dec. 2, 2010) (unpublished) (noting three-strike plaintiff had obtained a leave to proceed without payment of fees before removal); Pickett v. Hardy, No. 09–1116, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110619, *4–9 (C.D. Ill., Oct. 18, 2010) (unpublished) (noting there was "no cause to consider the in forma pauperis statute" in removed case); Carrea v. California, No. EDCV 07-1148-CAS (MAN), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1007902, at *8 (C.D. Cal., Aug. 25, 2010) (unpublished) (noting that state court IFP decision was governed by state law and federal court lacked power to revoke or change it after removal), report and recommendation adopted, Carrea v. California, No. EDCV 07-1148-CAS (MAN), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68546 (C.D. Cal., June 23, 2011) (unpublished), affirmed in part, vacated in part, remanded on other grounds, Carrea v. California, 551 F. App'x 368 (9th Cir. 2014) (unpublished).

86. Lloyd v. Benton, 686 F.3d 1225, 1227–1228 (11th Cir. 2012); Lisenby v. Lear, 674 F.3d 259, 262–263 (4th Cir. 2012); accord, Johnson v. Rock, No. 9:14-CV-815 (DNH/ATB), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178637, at *6–7 (N.D.N.Y., Dec. 31, 2014) (unpublished); Dotson v. Shelby County, No. 13-2766-JDT-tmp, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95953, *19–23 (W.D. Tenn., July 15, 2014) (unpublished); Hartley v. Comerford, No. 3:13cv488/MCR/EMT, 2014 WL 241759, *5–6 (N.D. Fla., Jan. 22, 2014) (unpublished) (declining to remand on grounds not specified in the removal statute; § 1915(g) does not defeat removal jurisdiction).

87. See, e.g., Crooker v. Global Tel Link, No. C.A. 11-229L, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25183, *2 (D.R.I., Jan. 6, 2012) (dismissing removed case subject to the plaintiff's paying the filing fee and reinstating it, ignoring the statutory rule that defendants pay filing fee in removed cases), report and recommendation adopted, Crooker v. Global Tel Link, No. C.A. 11-229L, 2012 LEXIS 25185 (D.R.I., Feb. 28, 2012) (unpublished), appeal dismissed, No. 12-1318 (1st Cir., June 14, 2012); Mitchell v. Dallas County Sheriff Dept., No. 3:12-CV-1960-O-BK, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 186320, *4 (N.D. Tex., July 12, 2012) (unpublished) (punishing incarcerated person for filing in state court to avoid three strikes order), supplemented, Mitchell v. Dallas County Sheriff Dept., No. 3:12-CV-1960-O-BK, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24609 (N.D. Tex., Jan. 7, 2013) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Mitchell v. Dallas County Sheriff Dept., No. 3:12-CV-1960-O-BK, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23420 (N.D. Tex., Feb. 20, 2013).

88. Abreu v. Kooi, No. 9:14-CV-1529 (GLS/DJS), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120681, at *4 (N.D.N.Y., Aug. 4, 2016) (unpublished) ("Even if removal is foreseeable, a three strikes prisoner who files an action in state court is not thereby 'circumventing' the PLRA because the PLRA does not address prisoner filings in state court."), report and recommendation adopted, Abreu v. Kooi, No. 9:14-CV-1529 (GLS/DJS), 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120681 (N.D.N.Y., Sept. 7, 2016) (unpublished).

1. What is a Strike?

The PLRA is very specific about which dismissals count as strikes: dismissals for failure to state a claim, frivolousness, or maliciousness. “Failure to state a claim” means that even if all facts in your complaint are true, they still do not show a violation of law that the court could fix.⁸⁹ A legally “frivolous” suit is one that fails to raise an arguable question of law,⁹⁰ a suit based on an unsupported legal theory,⁹¹ or one that alleges as fact “fantastic or delusional scenarios.”⁹² A malicious suit is one filed for an improper purpose or one that is an abuse of the legal system.⁹³

A case dismissed on grounds other than frivolousness, maliciousness, or failure to state a claim is not a strike.⁹⁴ Dismissals on grounds such as lack of prosecution,⁹⁵ lack of jurisdiction,⁹⁶ or expiration of the statute of limitations⁹⁷ are not automatically strikes. They might be strikes if the court finds that the suit was frivolous or malicious, for example, if the claim of jurisdiction was so unfounded as to be frivolous, or the failure to prosecute had an improper purpose.

A case that is dismissed on summary judgment—which means there are no material disputes of fact—is generally not a strike.⁹⁸ It is important to know that lawyers who represent the government

89. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–921, 66 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–813 (2007); Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 663, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1940, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 874 (1957) (citing Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929) (holding that a claim does not require “detailed factual allegations,” but does require facial plausibility).

90. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 349 (1989).

91. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (1989).

92. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 328, 109 S. Ct. 1827, 1833, 104 L. Ed. 2d 338, 348 (1989).

93. See Pittman v. Moore, 980 F.2d 994, 994–995 (5th Cir. 1993) (stating that repetitive litigation is malicious); Spencer v. Rhodes, 656 F. Supp. 458, 464 (E.D.N.C. 1987) (holding that a case started out of desire for vengeance and not to remedy a violation of legal rights was malicious), aff’d, Spencer v. Rhodes, 826 F.2d 1061 (4th Cir. 1987). Please see footnote 70 in Part C of this Chapter for the definition of maliciousness.

94. See Harris v. Harris, 935 F.3d 670, 674 (9th Cir. 2019) (holding policy concerns, however warranted, cannot justify expanding the statute’s reach beyond its plain language); Daker v. Commissioner, Georgia Department of Corrections, 820 F.3d 1278, 1283–1284 (11th Cir. 2016) (“Three specific grounds render a dismissal a strike: . . . Under the negative-implication canon, these three grounds are the only grounds that can render a dismissal a strike.” (citing ANTONIN SCALIA & BRYAN A. GARNER, READING LAW 107–111 (2012))), cert. denied, Daker v. Commissioner, Georgia Department of Corrections, 137 S. Ct. 1227 (2017); Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 443 (2d Cir. 2007) (refusing to treat an appeal dismissed as premature as a strike, stating the PLRA “was designed to stem the tide of egregiously meritless lawsuits, not those temporarily infected with remediable procedural or jurisdictional flaws”); Fortson v. Kern, No. 05-CV-73223-DT, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *4–5 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (holding dismissal for failure to pay initial filing fee is not a strike); Maree-Bey v. Williams, No. 04-1759 (RCL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35722, at *7 (D.D.C. Aug. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that dismissal under Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure is not a strike).

95. Butler v. Dept. of Justice, 492 F.3d 440, 443–445 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that dismissal for lack of prosecution is not a strike); Harden v. Harden, No. 8:07CV68, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56922, at *3 (D. Neb. Aug. 3, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that dismissals for lack of jurisdiction or failure to prosecute are not strikes).

96. Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 440 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that “[d]ismissals for lack of jurisdiction do not count as strikes unless the court expressly states that the action or appeal was frivolous or malicious.”); see also Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 443 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that dismissal for a jurisdictional flaw resulting from premature filing does not warrant a strike).

97. Myles v. United States, 416 F.3d 551, 553 (7th Cir. 2005) (noting that dismissal based on statute of limitations is not a strike since it is based on an affirmative defense). If a statute of limitations defense, or other defense, is evident on the face of the complaint, the complaint may fail to state a claim. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812 (2007).

98. See Stallings v. Kempker, No. 04–1585, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 19312, at *4 (8th Cir. Sep. 24, 2004) (unpublished) (modifying a judgment to remove the strike from a case ended by summary judgment); Chappell v. Pliler, No. CIV S–04–1183 LKK DAD P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92538, at *9 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 21, 2006) (unpublished) (stating that “[t]he granting of summary judgment on some claims precludes a determination that the case was dismissed for failure to state a claim on which relief could be granted”), recommendation adopted, Chappell v. Pliler, No. CIV S–04–1183 LKK DAD P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5984 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2007).

often improperly file motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim in cases that raise disputed material. In such a case you must show that the case raises material factual disputes and that defendants may only pursue dismissal by way of a motion for summary judgment.⁹⁹ That way, even if you lose, you will lose by summary judgment, and it will usually not count as a strike. If, however, your suit is dismissed for failure to state a claim, you will get a strike.

The failure to exhaust administrative remedies is not a failure to state a claim unless it is clear from the complaint itself that you did not exhaust.¹⁰⁰ This means that if your suit is dismissed for non-exhaustion it should not be a strike unless the dismissal is based solely on what you wrote in your complaint about exhaustion.¹⁰¹ Courts have differed over whether a dismissal for non-exhaustion that was a strike under the law at the time of the dismissal should still continue to be a strike.¹⁰² Most courts have held a partial dismissal—an order throwing out some claims or some defendants, but letting the rest of the case go forward—is not a strike.¹⁰³ A case is also not a strike if some of the claims are dismissed on grounds specified in Section 1915(g) (failure to state a claim, frivolousness, or maliciousness) but other claims in the lawsuit are dismissed on other grounds.¹⁰⁴ Two circuits have (unpublished).

99. Motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim are distinct from motions for summary judgment as a matter of law. Compare FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6) (motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted) with FED. R. CIV. P. 56 (summary judgment). In deciding a motion to dismiss, a judge will only look at the plaintiff's complaint to determine if the plaintiff stated a legal claim. In deciding a motion for summary judgment, a judge may look at any facts provided by either the plaintiff or the defendant. For more information on the difference between a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim and a motion for summary judgment, see JLM Chapter 6, "An Introduction to Legal Documents."

100. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 212–213, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–921, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–813 (2007) ("[T]he usual practice under the Federal Rules is to regard exhaustion as an affirmative defense.").

101. Some courts have held a case dismissed for non-exhaustion is a strike because it seeks "relief to which [the plaintiff] is not entitled" and is therefore frivolous. See, e.g., Wallmark v. Johnson, No. 2:03-CV-0060, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7088, at *4 (N.D. Tex. Apr. 28, 2003) (unpublished). You can argue that these courts are wrong because an unexhausted case does not necessarily fail to raise "an arguable question of law" or rest on an "indisputably meritless legal theory," which, as discussed above, is what "frivolous" means. Further, as the Second Circuit has said, PLRA "was designed to stem the tide of egregiously meritless lawsuits, not those temporarily infected with remediable procedural or jurisdictional flaws." Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 443 (2d Cir. 2007). Of course, if you have an argument that what you did should have satisfied the exhaustion requirement or that no administrative remedy was really available to you, that case should not be seen as frivolous and should not be treated as a strike.

102. Compare Strope v. Cummings, 653 F.3d 1271, 1274 (10th Cir. 2011) (holding that Jones v. Bock does not apply retroactively and that past claims which have been dismissed for failure to state a claim based on non-exhaustion are still strikes) with Hale v. Collier, 690 F. App'x 247, 248 (5th Cir. 2017) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding a partial dismissal which would have been a strike under prior law should not be treated as one since the law had changed); Richey v. Dahne, 807 F.3d 1202, 1207–1208 (9th Cir. 2015) (holding dismissal that was formerly a strike should no longer be treated as one because the law had changed); Feathers v. McFaul, 274 F. App'x 467, 468–469 (6th Cir. 2008) (unpublished) (holding dismissals for failure to plead exhaustion, previously treated as strikes, should no longer be so treated because the law had changed so plaintiffs were not required to plead exhaustion).

103. Escalera v. Samaritan Vill., 938 F.3d 380, 381–382 (2d Cir. 2019) (per curiam) ("The plain language of § 1915(g) defines a strike as 'an action or appeal' that was dismissed on an enumerated ground, not as an individual claim that was dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or for failure to state a claim."); Taylor v. First Medical Management, 508 F. App'x 488 (10th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) ("Even if an action only has one meritorious claim amidst a sea of frivolous ones, the case cannot count as a § 1915(g) strike."); Tolbert v. Stevenson, 635 F.3d 646, 651 (4th Cir. 2011); Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 432 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (noting that statute does not apply to actions "containing at least one claim falling within none of the three strike categories,").

104. See Harris v. Harris, 935 F.3d 670, 675 (9th Cir. 2019) ("But we evaluate the 'case as a whole' and dismissal of even one claim for an unenumerated reason saves the entire case from counting as a strike."); Turley v. Gaetz, 625 F.3d 1005, 1013 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that a case is not a strike when some claims are dismissed for failure to state a claim but others are resolved on the merits); Juarez v. Frank, No. 05–C–738–C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 571, at *14 (W.D. Wis. Jan. 6, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that where state law claim was dismissed because court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction, case was not a strike); Fortson v. Kern, No. 05–CV–73223–DT, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *4–5 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a case held that a dismissal can be a strike if part of the case is dismissed on “three strikes grounds,” and the rest of it is dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies,¹⁰⁵ though there is no discernible basis in the statute for treating exhaustion-related dismissals differently from other dismissals not set out in Section 1915(g).

A case that you voluntarily withdraw is not a strike.¹⁰⁶ An action that was never accepted for filing cannot be a strike.¹⁰⁷ Only federal court dismissals count as strikes, since a state court is not a “court of the United States” under the statute.¹⁰⁸

A motion filed in an existing case and then denied is not a strike.¹⁰⁹ The Supreme Court has held that dismissals on the enumerated § 1915(g) grounds are strikes even if they are without prejudice.¹¹⁰ A dismissal under Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, meaning the complaint was not understandable, may be a strike if the plaintiff repeatedly fails to correct it.¹¹¹ If a dismissed case is re-filed in a separate action (for example, with a new complaint used to correct the problems that led deemed frivolous as to one defendant and otherwise dismissed for failure to pay filing fee was not a strike); Barela v. Variz, 36 F. Supp. 2d 1254, 1259 (S.D. Cal. 1999) (holding that a case was not a strike where some claims were dismissed for failure to state a claim and defendants were granted summary judgment in others). But see Jones v. Cimarron Corr. Facility, No. CIV-04-1361-F, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21982, at *4 (W.D. Okla. Aug. 25, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a case was a strike even though one claim was dismissed without prejudice for failure to exhaust).

105. Thomas v. Parker, 672 F.3d 1182, 1184 (10th Cir. 2012); Pointer v. Wilkinson, 502 F.3d 369, 376 (6th Cir. 2007).

106. Carbajal v. McCann, 808 F. App’x 620, 630 (10th Cir. 2020) (unpublished); Andrews v. Persley, 669 F. App’x 529, 530 (11th Cir. 2016); Tiedemann v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 631 F. App’x 629, 631 (10th Cir. 2015) (unpublished); Tolbert v. Stevenson, 635 F.3d 646, 654 (4th Cir. 2011). Some courts have held that an incarcerated person who receives a magistrate judge’s recommendation for dismissal cannot avoid a strike by dismissing voluntarily. See, e.g., Johnson v. Edlow, 37 F. Supp. 2d 775, 776–778 (E.D. Va. 1999); Sumner v. Tucker, 9 F. Supp. 2d 641, 644 (E.D. Va. 1998). More recent decisions have rejected this idea. Andrews v. Persley, 669 F. App’x at 530; Aldrich v. United States, No. 13-12085-NMG, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94098, at *3–*4 (D. Mass. July 17, 2015) (unpublished).

107. Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 603 (6th Cir. 1998) (finding cases never filed do not count as strikes).

108. Harris v. Mangum, 863 F.3d 1133, 1140–1141 (9th Cir. 2017); Rambert v. Krasner, No. 19-CV-5249, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3346 at *13 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 9, 2020) (unpublished); Moffit v. Fagerman, No. 1:18-cv-916, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 154168 at *12 (W.D. Mich. Sept. 11, 2018) (unpublished); D’Amico v. Montoya, No. 4:14cv127-MW/CAS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91785 at *6 (N.D. Fla. June 13, 2016) (unpublished, report and recommendation adopted); D’Amico v. Montoya, No. 4:14cv127-MW/CAS, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91776 (N.D. Fla., July 14, 2016) (unpublished); Townsel v. Washington State Dept. of Corrections, No. 12-CV-5095-JTR 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150281 at *5 (E.D. Wash. Oct. 11, 2013) (unpublished) (“Because this case was originally filed in Walla Walla County Superior Court, the dismissal of Plaintiff’s claims does not result in a strike under § 1915(g).”); Miller v. John Doe, No. 05-C-185, 2005 WL 1308408 at *1 (E.D. Wis. May 31, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that actions dismissed from state and local courts cannot be strikes); Freeman v. Lee, 30 F. Supp. 2d 52, 54 (D.D.C. 1998).

109. Ortiz v. Kelly, No. 3:05-CV-00113-LRH-VPC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100328 at *4–5 (D. Nev., Sept. 20, 2010) (unpublished) (holding denial of a temporary restraining order was not a strike); Belton v. U.S., No. 07-C-925, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68964 at *33 (E.D. Wis. June 2, 2008) (unpublished) (holding a decision on a motion under Rule 60(b) is not a strike; statute “does not apply to motions, only ‘actions’ or ‘appeals’”).

110. Lomax v. Ortiz-Marquez, 140 S. Ct. 1721, 207 L. Ed.2d 132 (2020).

111. Knapp v. Hogan, 738 F.3d 1106, 1110 (9th Cir. 2013) (“We hold that dismissals following the repeated violation of Rule 8(a)’s ‘short and plain statement’ requirement, following leave to amend, are dismissals for failure to state a claim under § 1915(g). . . . When a litigant knowingly and repeatedly refuses to conform his pleadings to the requirements of the Federal Rules, it is reasonable to conclude that the litigant simply cannot state a claim.”); Paul v. Marberry, 658 F.3d 702, 705 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding that a complaint that is “irremediably unintelligible” and is not corrected gives rise to an inference that the plaintiff cannot state a claim). Contra, Carbajal v. McCann, 808 F. App’x 620, 629 (10th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (declining to find a strike where an action was dismissed for failure to prosecute for failing to correct a Rule 8 violation); Maree Bey v. Williams, No. 04-1759 (RCL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35722 at *5 (D.D.C. Aug. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding a Rule 8 violation is not a strike because § 1915(g) does not list such dismissals as strikes).

to dismissal), rather than by amending the original complaint, and is then dismissed again, you will receive a second strike.¹¹²

A dismissal is not a strike if the reason for it cannot be determined.¹¹³ Some older decisions have held that incarcerated people should not be given a strike based on law that was unclear or that changed after they filed.¹¹⁴

Dismissals may be strikes even if they were not IFP cases.¹¹⁵ Courts have also counted as strikes cases filed or dismissed before the enactment of the PLRA.¹¹⁶ A dismissal in a habeas corpus action is not a strike, unless it is a “misabeled” 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action (that is, a civil rights claim, and not a habeas corpus action).¹¹⁷ Courts have sometimes treated these incorrectly filed habeas petitions as Section 1983 cases and gone forward with them in adjudication as if they were Section 1983 cases.¹¹⁸ But courts have warned that this should not be done automatically since there may be significant consequences (like being charged a strike and having to pay the higher civil action filing fee) and incarcerated people ought to have a chance to think over whether they want to proceed.¹¹⁹ Most courts

112. See Orr v. Clements, 688 F.3d 463, 465–466 (8th Cir. 2012) (finding that two strikes was appropriate since there were two separate actions with separate complaints and separate case numbers).

113. See Williams v. PA Department of Corrections, 695 F. App'x 654, 656–657 (3d Cir. 2017) (per curiam) (unpublished) (noting that no case of the plaintiff's could be identified that “conclusively qualifies as a strike”); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that, where defendants want to show a plaintiff had three strikes, they must produce court records or documentation to allow district courts to determine whether a prior case was dismissed because it was “frivolous, malicious, or failed to state a claim,” and where docket records do not reflect “the basis for dismissal ... the defendants may not simply [rely] on the fact of dismissal [alone].”); Lyons v. Beard, No. 1:13-CV-2952, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71123 at *13 (M.D.Pa., May 23, 2014) (unpublished) (holding ambiguous docket records did not establish that dismissals were strikes); Deen-Mitchell v. Lappin, NO. 1:09-cv-02069-RJL, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59355, at *2–*3 (D.D.C., June 8, 2010) (unpublished) (holding docket summary which did not rule out non-§ 1915(g) reasons for dismissal did not establish a strike); Freeman v. Lee, 30 F. Supp. 2d 52, 54 (D.D.C. 1998) (finding there was no strike because since the order dismissing the prisoner's action did not explain the reason for dismissal, the court refused to assume it was eligible for a strike, stating that “[the court] is unaware of any principle that would permit [it] to presume that the dismissal was on one of the grounds referenced in § 1915(g).”).

114. See, e.g., Clemente v. Allen, 120 F.3d 703, 705 n.1 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding appeal was not a strike in the absence of published law on the question before the court); Hairston v. Falano, No. 99-C-2750, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9027, at *3–4 (N.D. Ill. May 28, 1999) (unpublished) (holding dismissal of plaintiff's claim based on a later Supreme Court decision was not a strike since it had stated a valid civil rights claim at the time it was filed).

115. See Belanus v. Clark, 796 F.3d 1021, 1028–1030 (9th Cir. 2015); Byrd v. Shannon, 715 F.3d 117, 122–124 (3d Cir. 2013); Burghart v. Corrections Corp. of America, 350 F. App'x 278, 279 (10th Cir. 2009) (unpublished); Hyland v. Clinton, 3 F. App'x 478, 479 (6th Cir. 2001) (unpublished); Duvall v. Miller, 122 F.3d 489, 490 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that “a dismissal need not, to qualify as a strike, be of an action or appeal filed [IFP].”). Contra, Jones v. Moorjani, No. 13 Civ. 2247 (PAC) (JLC), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 175290 at *26–36 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 13, 2013) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Jones v. Moorjani, No. 13 Civ. 2247 (PAC) (JLC) 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12664 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 31, 2014) (unpublished).

116. See, e.g., Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, 208 F.3d 1032, 1036 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Welch v. Galie, 207 F.3d 130, 131 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that lawsuits filed before Section 1915(g) was enacted can still count as strikes); Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 602–604 (6th Cir. 1998) (rejecting retroactivity-based challenge to counting pre-PLRA dismissals as strikes); Rivera v. Allin, 144 F.3d 719, 730–31 (11th Cir. 1998).

117. El-Shaddai v. Zamora, 833 F.3d 1036, 1047 (9th Cir. 2016); Jones v. Smith, 720 F.3d 142, 147–148 (2d Cir. 2013) (holding dismissal of habeas petition or of appeal in a habeas proceeding is not a strike; expressing no view as to habeas petitions directed to conditions of confinement); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1122–1123, 1123 n.12 (9th Cir. 2005).

118. See Carson v. Johnson, 112 F.3d 818, 819 (5th Cir. 1997) (construing habeas corpus petition as a Section 1983 case).

119. Pischke v. Litscher, 178 F.3d 497, 500 (7th Cir. 1999) (dismissing habeas corpus actions and indicating plaintiffs may re-file complaints as civil rights claims); Reed v. Paramo, No. 1:17-cv-01347-AWI-MJS (HC), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 192949, at *5 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 21, 2017) (unpublished); Raia v. Aviles, No. 11-3374 (WJM), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 74940, at *4 (D.N.J. July 6, 2011) (unpublished); Brock v. White, No. 2:09-CV-14005, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44145, at *9 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 25, 2011) (unpublished).

have held that civil rights actions dismissed because they should have been filed as habeas corpus petitions (“Heck-barred” cases) are strikes,¹²⁰ but some have disagreed.¹²¹ One federal circuit has taken a more analytical approach, noting that Heck-barred cases are not all frivolous; some incarcerated people may have claims that are valid even if they have been brought prematurely. A Heck-barred action may be a strike only “when the pleadings present an ‘obvious bar to securing relief’ under Heck,” and only if the entire case can be dismissed under Heck.¹²²

In a class action, only named plaintiffs, and not unnamed class members, are subject to the three strikes provision.¹²³

The statute refers only to previous actions brought “while [the plaintiff is] incarcerated or detained” as claims which can result in a strike.¹²⁴

Appeals count as strikes under Section 1915(g) only if they are “dismissed . . . [as] frivolous, malicious, or fail[ing] to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.”¹²⁵ It is usually not enough for an appeals court to simply affirm a district court decision that dismissed under Section 1915(g).¹²⁶

120. Heck-barred refers to the Supreme Court decision in Heck v. Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 114 S.Ct. 2364, 129 L. Ed. 2d 383 (1994). See, e.g., In re Jones, 652 F.3d 36, 38–39 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (holding Heck-barred claim fails to state a claim and is therefore a strike); Smith v. Veterans Admin., 636 F.3d 1306, 1312 (10th Cir. 2011) (citing Davis v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 507 F.3d 1246, 1248, 1249 (10th Cir. 2007)); Hamilton v. Lyons, 74 F.3d 99, 103 (5th Cir. 1996) (holding Heck-barred claim was frivolous); Schafer v. Moore, 46 F.3d 43, 45 (8th Cir. 1995) (“[I]n light of Heck, the complaint was properly dismissed for failure to state a claim.”); Wright v. East Point Police Dept., No. 1:12-CV-2062-TWT, 2014 WL 1908648, *2 n.4 (N.D. Ga. May 12, 2014) (unpublished) (“A dismissal based on the prematurity of a civil rights action counts as a strike.”); Sharp v. Montana, No. CV 13–88–GF–DWM, 2014 WL 824820, *6 (D. Mont. Mar. 3, 2014) (unpublished) (noting “the Supreme Court in Heck stated its ruling was based on a denial of ‘the existence of a cause of action’”); Berner v. Hill, No. 1:11-cv-1373, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29349, at *4 (W.D.Mich., Mar. 6, 2012) (unpublished).

121. See, e.g., Mejia v. Harrington, 541 F. App’x 709, 710 (7th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (stating “Heck and Edwards [v. Balisok] deal with timing rather than the merits of litigation” so dismissal under them is not a strike); McCotter v. Repischak, No. 12-CV-314-JPS, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81701, at *8 (E.D. Wis., June 13, 2012) (unpublished) (holding “because the plaintiff may pursue a separate petition for a writ of habeas corpus, . . . the plaintiff will not incur a strike under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).”); see also Lomax v. Ortiz-Marquez, 140 S. Ct. 1721, 1724 n.2, 207 L.Ed.2d 132, 136 n.2 (2020) (acknowledging circuit split over whether dismissals as Heck-barred are for failure to state a claim).

122. Washington v. Los Angeles Cty. Sheriff’s Dept., 833 F.3d 1048, 1055–1057 (9th Cir. 2016).

123. Spotts v. Jones, No. 1:18-CV-41, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141168, at *1 (E.D. Tex. Aug. 20, 2018) (unpublished); Meisberger v. Donahue, 245 F.R.D. 627, 630 (S.D. Ind. 2007).

124. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). See Arvie v. Lastrapes, 106 F.3d 1230, 1232 (5th Cir. 1997) (per curiam) (remanding to determine whether the plaintiff was a prisoner when he filed his previous actions such that he would have three strikes under Section 1915(g)); Robbins v. Switzer, 104 F.3d 895, 897 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding dismissal would count as strike if ex-prisoner ever returns to prison, but his appeals outside of his time in prison did not count).

125. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). Compare Newlin v. Helman, 123 F.3d 429, 433 (7th Cir. 1997), overruled on other grounds by Walker v. O’Brien, 216 F.3d 626 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that a frivolous appeal of a dismissed claim counts as a second strike, since “bringing an action and filing an appeal are separate acts.”), with Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120–1121 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that an appeal dismissed for lack of jurisdiction was not necessarily a strike, since the lower court did not perform an independent assessment to determine if it was frivolous or malicious as required under Section 1915(g)).

126. See, e.g., Ladeairous v. Sessions, 884 F.3d 1172, 1175–1176 (D.C. Cir. 2018); El-Shaddai v. Zamora, 833 F.3d 1036, 1045 (9th Cir. 2016); Ball v. Famiglio, 726 F.3d 448, 464 (3d Cir. 2013); Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 436 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (“[Congress’s] choice of the word ‘dismiss’ rather than ‘affirm’ in relation to appeals was unlikely an act of careless draftsmanship.”); Jennings v. Natrona County Det. Ctr. Med. Facility, 175 F.3d 775, 780 (10th Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds by Coleman v. Tollefson 135 S. Ct. 1759, 191 L. Ed. 2d 803 (2015) (“Under the plain language of the statute, only a dismissal may count as strike, not the affirmance of an earlier decision to dismiss.”); Adepegba v. Hammons, 103 F.3d 383, 387 (5th Cir. 1996), abrogated in part on other grounds by Coleman v. Tollefson, 135 S. Ct. 1759, 191 L. Ed. 2d 803 (2015) (“It is straightforward that affirmance of a district court dismissal as frivolous counts as a single ‘strike.’”). One federal appeals court has taken a different view. The Seventh Circuit has held that “the appeal following a frivolous complaint is yet another ‘strike.’” Kalinowski v. Bond, 358 F.3d 978, 979 (7th Cir. 2004), without distinguishing between affirmance and dismissal of the appeal. The court in Kalinowski noted its view that the appeal too was

The appeals court itself must dismiss under Section 1915(g). An appeal dismissed on grounds not related to Section 1915(g) does not count as an additional strike. Even if the district court decision that you appealed counts as a strike, if the appeals court dismisses the appeal on any grounds other than Section 1915(g), the appeals court decision should not count as a strike.¹²⁷

A dismissal on the grounds enumerated in § 1915(g) takes effect as a strike immediately. Many courts held that dismissals only become strikes when all appeals are exhausted or waived, but the Supreme Court rejected that position.¹²⁸ The Supreme Court left open the question whether its decision means that an incarcerated person who receives a third strike in the district court is barred from IFP status in appealing that district court decision. Lower court decisions on the point are divided.¹²⁹ The Seventh Circuit had previously said this problem is a non-problem, since incarcerated people have “a perfectly good remedy” in the appeals court itself: seek IFP status from the appeals court, which in the course of deciding whether the incarcerated person actually does have three strikes will review the correctness of the district court’s determination, at least to the extent of determining whether the appeal should be allowed to go forward.¹³⁰

The defendants (or the court) have the burden of providing evidence to show that you have three strikes. If they do, the burden shifts to you to show that you do not have three strikes.¹³¹ Defendants do not meet their burden just by showing dismissals. They must also show that the reason for each dismissal was a failure to state a claim, frivolousness, or maliciousness.¹³² This may be done with docket entries if those entries actually show that cases were dismissed on Section 1915(g) grounds.¹³³ frivolous. Id. However, it affirmed the decision below, rather than dismissing the appeal. The practice in the Seventh Circuit is to treat appellate affirmances of district court dismissals on the § 1915(g) grounds as strikes. See, e.g., Ealy v. Griffin, 803 F. App’x 41, 43 (7th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (affirming dismissal for failure to state a claim, declaring affirmance a strike); Kupsy v. Outagamie Cty., 747 F. App’x 431, 432 (7th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (same). This practice contradicts the statutory language, which counts as strikes only an action or appeal “dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous, malicious, or fails to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.” 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g) (emphasis supplied).

127. See, e.g., Tafari v. Hues, 473 F.3d 440, 442–444 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding an appeal dismissed as premature does not count as a strike); Cosby v. Knowles, No. 97-1400, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 7845, at *4–5, 145 F.3d 1345 (10th Cir. Apr. 23, 1998) (unpublished) (noting that dismissal based on denial of IFP status, not the merits, is not a strike even though merits were frivolous); Perkins v. Lora, No. 11-10794, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49730, at *7 (E.D. Mich. 2011) (unpublished) (finding that dismissal based on a failure to exhaust administrative remedies does not count as a strike under Section 1915(g)).

128. Coleman v. Tollefson, 135 S. Ct. 1759, 1761–1762, 191 L. Ed. 2d 803, 808–809 (2015).

129. Richey v. Dahne, 807 F.3d 1202, 1209 (9th Cir. 2015) (holding the district court third strike does not bar IFP status on appeal in that same case); Taylor v. Grubbs, 930 F.3d 611, 615–20 (4th Cir. 2019) (same); Dawson v. Coffman, 651 F. App’x 840, 842 n.2 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (same). Contra Parker v. Montgomery County Correctional Facility/Business Office Manager, 870 F.3d 144, 151–154 (3rd Cir. 2017).

130. Robinson v. Powell, 297 F.3d 540, 541 (7th Cir. 2002).

131. Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 435–436 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1116, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that defendant bears the burden of establishing that Section 1915(g) bars the plaintiff’s IFP status). See also Green v. Morse, No. 00-CV-6533-CJS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52085, at *7–9 (W.D.N.Y. May 26, 2006) (unpublished) (affirming the burden shifting framework). In practice, courts often raise three strikes on their own at initial screening.

132. Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1120 (9th Cir. 2005). See also Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 436 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (holding that once the burden of evidence shifts to the prisoner, he must “explain why the past dismissals should not count as strikes”) (emphasis added).

133. Harris v. City of New York, 607 F.3d 18, 23–24 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding docket entries may be used if they show clearly the nature of the disposition); Thompson v. Drug Enforcement Admin., 492 F.3d 428, 433–435 (D.C. Cir. 2007); Andrews v. King, 398 F.3d 1113, 1119–1120 (9th Cir. 2005)

Otherwise, more complete information must be obtained.¹³⁴ Courts have reached different conclusions about how specific they must be in identifying each case they consider to be a strike.¹³⁵

The three strikes rule cannot revoke IFP status in a case filed before you had three strikes. The statute is a limit on your ability to “bring” suit, not on your ability to maintain or continue suits already brought.¹³⁶ A case is “brought” when you submit the complaint to the court.¹³⁷ The three strikes provision also does not stop you from amending your complaint in a suit filed before you had three strikes.¹³⁸

(a) The “Imminent Danger of Serious Physical Injury” Exception

The three strikes provision does not keep you from proceeding IFP if you are in “imminent danger of serious physical injury.”¹³⁹ “Imminent” means you must be in danger at the time you file the suit¹⁴⁰ or when you file a notice of appeal and seek IFP status on appeal.¹⁴¹

Most courts have held that claims of imminent danger are to be assessed on the basis of the allegations in the complaint, which are to be assumed true for purposes of the imminent danger decision.¹⁴² Courts may also look to allegations in other documents submitted by the plaintiff that

134. See, e.g., Lewis v. Healy, No. 9:08-CV-148 (LEK/DEP), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 124378, at *9 (N.D.N.Y. Oct. 29, 2008) (unpublished) (noting that since “determination of whether a prior dismissal does in fact constitute a strike is dependent upon the precise nature of the dismissal and the grounds supporting it,” court obtained copies of actual orders of dismissal rather than relying on docket entries).

135. See Parks v. Samuels, 540 F. App’x 146, 149 n.1 (3d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (noting that the “preferred practice” is for the district court to “make a record” of the prisoner’s strikes for appellate review, but that the court could review the prisoner’s strikes regardless); Gibson v. City Municipality of New York, 692 F.3d 198, 200 n.2 (2d Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (holding district courts need not specify the dismissals they deem to be strikes, but the case may need to be remanded if they don’t); Muhammad v. Workman, 479 F. App’x 871, 872 (10th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (vacating and remanding three strikes finding where district court did not include opinions and judgments in the record for appellate review); Evans v. Ill. Dept. of Corr., 150 F.3d 810, 812 (7th Cir. 1998) (“[I]n the order denying leave to proceed in forma pauperis IFP] the district court must cite specifically the case names, case docket numbers, districts in which the actions were filed, and the dates of the orders dismissing the actions.”). See also Jennings v. Dist. Court for Seventh Judicial Dist., No. 98-8068, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 2386, at *2–3 (10th Cir. Feb. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (remanding because the district court did not specify which prior actions or appeals were frivolous).

136. See, e.g., Nicholas v. American Detective Agency, 254 F. App’x 116, 117 (3d Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished); Mills v. White, 182 F. App’x 615 (8th Cir. 2006) (per curiam) (unpublished); Abdul-Wadood v. Nathan, 91 F.3d 1023, 1025 (7th Cir. 1996) (“Section 1915(g) governs bringing new actions or filing new appeals—the events that trigger an obligation to pay a docket fee—rather than the disposition of existing cases.”).

137. O’Neal v. Price, 531 F.3d 1146, 1151–1152 (9th Cir. 2008).

138. Elkins v. Schrubbe, No. 04-C-85, 2005 WL 1154273, at *1 (E.D. Wis. Apr. 20, 2005) (unpublished) (allowing submission of an amended complaint after a third strike because the new claims related back to the original complaint).

139. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g).

140. Williams v. Paramo, 775 F.3d 1182, 1190 (9th Cir. 2015); Pinson v. Samuels, 761 F.3d 1, 4–5 (D.C. Cir. 2014), aff’d on other grounds sub nom. Bruce v. Samuels, 577 U.S. 82, 136 S. Ct. 627 (2016); Hafed v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 635 F.3d 1172, 1179 (10th Cir. 2011); Vandiver v. Vasbinder, 416 F. App’x 560, 560 (6th Cir. 2011) (unpublished); Andrews v. Cervantes, 493 F.3d 1047, 1052–1053 (9th Cir. 2007); Ciarpaglini v. Saini, 352 F.3d 328, 330 (7th Cir. 2003).

141. Pinson v. United States Dept. of Justice, 964 F.3d 65, 69 (D.C. Cir. 2020); Williams v. Paramo, 775 F.3d 1182, 1187–1188 (9th Cir. 2015). But see Williams v. Paramo, 775 F.3d 1182, 1190 (9th Cir. 2015) (holding “a prisoner who was found by the district court to sufficiently allege an imminent danger is entitled to a presumption that the danger continues at the time of the filing of the notice of appeal.”).

142. Vandiver v. Vasbinder, 416 F. App’x 560, 562–563 (6th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (holding that plaintiff “sufficiently alleged [imminent danger], and that is all that is required by § 1915(g)”; Jackson v. Jackson, No. 08-13009, 335 F. App’x 14, 14–15 (11th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (“Based on these allegations, which we must construe liberally, accept as true, and view as a whole, . . . we conclude that Jackson has sufficiently demonstrated that he was in imminent danger of serious physical injury when he filed suit.”); Andrews v. Cervantes, 493 F.3d 1047, 1050 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding that courts must rely on complaint’s allegations and that “the three-strikes rule is a screening device that does not judge the merits of prisoners’ lawsuits”); Martin v.

address conditions around the time of the complaint.¹⁴³ On appeal, where there is no new complaint, allegations of imminent danger tend to be made (and will be considered) when the incarcerated person submits a request for in forma pauperis status on appeal, or may be made in other documents filed in the same time period.¹⁴⁴

Even when courts credit the plaintiff's allegations of imminent danger of serious physical harm, they may reject them as alleging harm that is not imminent enough,¹⁴⁵ not serious enough,¹⁴⁶ or too vague, speculative, or conclusory to be credited.¹⁴⁷ Past danger is not imminent danger.¹⁴⁸ Conditions that are generally dangerous do not satisfy the imminent danger standard unless they are shown to be personally dangerous to the plaintiff.¹⁴⁹

Shelton, 319 F.3d 1048, 1050 (8th Cir. 2003) (requiring “specific fact allegations of ongoing serious physical injury, or of a pattern of misconduct evidencing the likelihood of imminent serious physical injury”); Ciarpiaglini v. Saini, 352 F.3d 328, 330–331 (7th Cir. 2003) (describing standard as “amorphous,” disapproving extensive inquiry into seriousness of allegations at pleading stage).

143. Barber v. Krepp, 680 F. App'x 819, 820–822 (11th Cir. 2017) (unpublished) (quoting Asemani v. U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Servs., 797 F.3d 1069, 1074–1075 (D.C. Cir. 2015)) (referring to plaintiff's “various filings in the district court” in assessing imminent danger); Miller v. United States, No. 15-646C, 2015 U.S. Claims LEXIS 1015, at *2 (Fed. Cl. Aug. 7, 2015) (unpublished) (relying on allegations in a “separate filing”). In Asemani, the relevant facts appeared in plaintiff's response to a motion to vacate IFP status. Asemani v. U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Servs., 797 F.3d 1069, 1075 (D.C. Cir. 2015).

144. Dopp v. Larimer, 731 F. App'x 748, 750–752 (10th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (noting plaintiff had sufficiently alleged imminent danger in his complaint, and alleged that his untreated medical condition was worsening in response to the appeals court's order to show cause why the appeal should not be dismissed for nonpayment of the fee); Hafeed v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 635 F.3d 1172, 1180 (10th Cir. 2011) (stating “[a]n appellant should make his allegations of imminent danger in his motion for leave to proceed ifp”[sic] and acknowledging that a litigant may “point[] to other papers to establish his allegations of imminent harm”); Williams v. Paramo, 775 F.3d 1182, 1190 (9th Cir. 2015) (citing imminent danger allegations in response to order to show cause why IFP should not be revoked).

145. For example, courts have said exposure to second-hand smoke can be dangerous but not imminent enough. Hart v. Sec'y, Fla. Dept. of Corr., No. 4:18cv322-RH/CAS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158621, at *1 (N.D. Fla. Sept. 18, 2018) (noting that “exposure to tobacco smoke can cause serious physical injury, even death. Most tobacco-caused serious physical injuries result from long-term exposure and cannot fairly be characterized as imminent” and holding plaintiff did not explain how his exposure presented a danger that was imminent.); Johnson v. Mercer, No. 4:13cv321-RH/CAS, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122564, at *1 (N.D. Fla. Aug. 28, 2013) (“Second-hand smoke does pose a risk of serious physical injury, but the risk is not sufficiently imminent to qualify under § 1915(g).”).

146. Gresham v. Meden, 938 F.3d 847, 850 (6th Cir. 2019) (“A physical injury is ‘serious’ for purposes of § 1915(g) if it has potentially dangerous consequences such as death or severe bodily harm. Minor harms or fleeting discomfort don’t count.”) In Gresham, the Court held that being forced to take an antipsychotic drug against your will does not count as imminent danger.

147. See, e.g., Fourstar v. United States, 950 F.3d 856, 859 (Fed. Cir. 2020) (holding claim of imminent injury to plaintiff incarcerated in Montana from possible breakage or leakage of Keystone XL Pipeline in the Dakotas was “too speculative and attenuated” to satisfy imminent danger standard); Asemani v. U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Servs., 797 F.3d 1069, 1076 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (holding that allegations that plaintiff might face danger because he has “inmate enemies” and there is a generic threat in a maximum security prison population did not establish imminent danger to him).

148. Vandiver v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 727 F.3d 580, 585 (6th Cir. 2013) (quoting Percival v. Gerth, 443 F. App'x 944, 946 (6th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (explaining that the threat or prison condition must exist at the time the complaint is filed, and that “assertions of past danger will not satisfy the ‘imminent danger’ exception”); Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1349 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that incarcerated person faced imminent danger when the prison's medical staff stopped treating his HIV and hepatitis, and his medical condition declined).

149. Hart v. Jones, No. 4:18-cv-51-RH-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63630, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Feb. 9, 2018) (unpublished) (holding allegation of placement in a high custody dormitory where plaintiff “was threatened by gang violence and where there were four ‘eruptions’ of gang violence” in one month before suit was filed, done in retaliation for filing lawsuits against prison officials, did not sufficiently allege that he personally faced imminent danger), report and recommendation adopted, Hart v. Jones, No. 4:18-cv-51-RH-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63329 (N.D. Fla. Apr. 16, 2018); Harris v. Nink, No. 2:13-cv-304, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126747, at *1 (S.D. Ohio Sept. 5, 2013) (holding that allegations of understaffing, overcrowding, medical care and violence do not show

If claims of imminent danger are disputed, the court may hold a hearing or review depositions and affidavits to determine whether you are in enough danger to meet the requirement.¹⁵⁰ Some courts, however, may make ad hoc (“ad hoc” means “unique to your particular case”) judgments about the credibility or seriousness of your pro se complaint’s allegations.¹⁵¹ The more specific you can be about the danger you are in, the more likely you are to qualify for the exception.

Allegations of failure to protect from the risk of assault from other incarcerated people may constitute imminent danger of serious injury.¹⁵² The same is true for assault by staff members.¹⁵³ As imminent danger without allegations of specific risk to the plaintiff); Jemison v. Thomas, Civ. Action No. 12-0557-CG-M, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171208, at *2 (S.D. Ala. Nov. 1, 2012) (holding that allegations of health-threatening heat and unsanitary food service and living conditions did not establish imminent danger where the plaintiff did not specifically allege current or future injury to himself), report and recommendation adopted, Jemison v. Thomas, Civ. Action No. 12-0557-CG-M, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170282 (S.D. Ala. Nov. 29, 2012).

150. McLeod v. Sec’y, Fla. Dept of Corr., 778 F. App’x 663, 665 (11th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (“Once a district court has made an initial finding of imminent danger, it retains the authority to revisit that determination and revoke IFP status when new evidence bearing on the IFP determination comes to light.”) Shepherd v. Annucci, 921 F.3d 89, 95 (2d Cir. 2019) (approving “limited probe into the plausibility of a prisoner-litigant’s claim of imminent danger,” by resorting to outside evidence and holding that “a narrow evidentiary challenge to a provisional determination that a prisoner is in imminent danger of serious physical injury should not metastasize into ‘a full-scale merits review.’” (citation omitted)); Sanders v. Melvin, 873 F.3d 957, 961–962 (7th Cir. 2017) (stating “if a claim [of imminent danger] is challenged by the defense, or seems fishy to the judge, it must be supported by facts presented in affidavits or, if appropriate, hearings”); Stine v. U.S. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 465 F. App’x 790, 794 (10th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (noting that if defendants contest imminent danger after a grant of IFP status, they may “mount a facial challenge, based on full development of the facts” (citation omitted)); Taylor v. Watkins, 623 F.3d 483, 485–86 (7th Cir. 2010) (holding that “when a defendant contests a plaintiff’s claims of imminent danger, a court must act to resolve the conflict” by having a hearing of limited scope on the issue of limited danger); Gibbs v. Roman, 116 F.3d 83, 86–87 (3d Cir. 1997), overruled on other grounds by Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307 (3d Cir. 2001) (instructing the district court to explore allegations and the state’s response before dismissal).

151. See, e.g., Davis v. Stephens, 589 F. App’x. 295, 296 (5th Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff’s “allegation that he might be seriously injured at an indefinite point in the future because he has been required to wear shoes that are the wrong size and are damaged is insufficient to establish that he was in imminent danger of serious physical injury at the relevant times”); Senator v. Cates, No. 2:11-cv-2029 DAD P, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78067, at *2 (E.D. Cal., June 5, 2012) (unpublished) (finding no imminent danger based on court’s lay reading of medical records attached to the complaint, relying on boilerplate phrases like “not in ‘acute distress’” and “alert and oriented”), reconsideration denied, Senator v. Cates, No. 2:11-cv-2029 DAD P, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34229 (E.D. Cal., Mar. 12, 2013); Pruden v. Mayer, No. 3:CV-08-0559, No. 3:CV-08-0560, No. 3:CV-08-0561, No. 3:CV-08-0562, No. 3:CV-08-0571, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26700, at *3–4 (M.D. Pa. Apr. 2, 2008) (unpublished) (concluding that prisoner’s medical care claims did not pose imminent danger because they had occurred over a long period of time).

152. Smith v. Dewberry, 741 F. App’x 683, 686–687 (11th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding prisoner assaulted and then subjected to ongoing threats of assault showed imminent danger even though his housing unit was on lockdown when he filed, since a lockdown can end “any time”); Valenzuela v. Monts, 731 F. App’x 693, 693 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff’s allegation that “one or more inmates had sexually assaulted her and threatened her life, that these threats and assaults were ongoing, and that she had reported these matters and nothing had been done” satisfied the imminent danger requirement); Williams v. Buenostrome, 764 F. App’x 573, 574 (9th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding allegations “that defendant . . . repeatedly assaulted him without justification, encouraged other inmates to attack him, and threatened his life” and that even after he was moved to a different building, [the defendant] continued to have access to him and threaten him with physical harm” . . . are sufficient to plausibly allege imminent danger of serious physical injury”); Lindsey v. Hoem, 799 F. App’x 410, 412–413 (7th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (finding imminent danger where plaintiff’s requests for separation from prisoners who had threatened or attacked him were denied, and where after one attack, staff members had “threatened to make sure that he ‘get[s] [his] ass beat again’”); Ashley v. Dilworth, 147 F.3d 715, 717 (8th Cir. 1998) (unpublished) (finding that enduring repeated attacks from a prisoner housed nearby and filing only days after an attack proved imminent danger).

153. Williams v. Ortega, 757 F. App’x 636, 636 (9th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding allegation that plaintiff was physically assaulted by one defendant causing serious injury and that he and another defendant threatened plaintiff with further attacks and worse injuries if he were to report the assaults or file any grievances or lawsuits about it are sufficient to plausibly allege imminent danger of serious physical injury); Newkirk v. Kiser, 812 F.

the cited cases illustrate, the plaintiff must show not only that he was attacked, but that there is reason to believe there will be more attacks. Ongoing failure to treat serious medical¹⁵⁴ or dental¹⁵⁵ problems is often held to satisfy the imminent danger standard, as is the failure to accommodate disabilities if it creates an actual risk of physical injury.¹⁵⁶ Exposure to dangerous living conditions

App'x 159, 160 (4th Cir. 2020) (per curiam) (unpublished) (directing grant of IFP where the plaintiff "described one incident in which he was allegedly subjected to excessive force and asserted that this was not an isolated occurrence. To the contrary, he claimed that prison staff members regularly assault inmates without cause and threaten inmates who complain."); Ball v. Hummel, 577 F. App'x 96, 96 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (motion that "describes being beaten and sexually assaulted by guards, with threats to harm her further the next time" in a case that alleged physical abuse by staff satisfied the imminent danger standard); Mendez v. Ariz. Dept. of Corr., 478 F. App'x 437, 437 (9th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegation of recent brutal beating and threats of death if plaintiff sought legal redress met the imminent danger standard); Tucker v. Pentrich, 483 F. App'x 28, 29–30 (6th Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding allegations of an assault, followed by five explicit threats related to plaintiff's complaints about the assault, within two months of the complaint's filing met the imminent danger standard); Smith v. Clemons, 465 F. App'x 835, 837 (11th Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding incident of physical abuse followed by recent threats of more violence from the same officers in retaliation for plaintiff's filing suit satisfied imminent danger standard); Prall v. Bocchini, 421 F. App'x 143, 145 (3d Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding allegation of ongoing physical abuse "at least once a week" clearly stated an ongoing danger that was imminent when the complaint was filed); Chavis v. Chappius, 618 F.3d 162, 170 (2d Cir. 2010) ("An allegation of a recent brutal beating, combined with three separate threatening incidents, some of which involved officers who purportedly participated in that beating, is clearly the sort of ongoing pattern of acts that satisfies the imminent danger exception.").

154. See, e.g., McFadden v. Koenigsmann, 798 F. App'x 699, 700 (2d Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (holding allegation that plaintiff "had ongoing heart disease, that his pacemaker battery had expired, and that the defendants refused to replace the battery" met imminent danger requirement); Boles v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 794 F. App'x 767, 771 (10th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding allegation that failure to provide a fresh food diet for a prisoner with irritable bowel syndrome, resulting in severe pain and aggravation of a degenerative bone condition, met imminent danger requirement); O'Connor v. Backman, 743 F. App'x 373, 376 (11th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding ongoing gastrointestinal issues involving "severe cramping, causing him to curl up in the fetal position with clenched fists and teeth and forcing him to crawl to and from the toilet; bloody stools; acid reflux; heartburn; and significant weight loss, resulting in a weight of 137 pounds on his six-foot tall frame" satisfied the imminent danger requirement, as does allegation of a two-year delay in surgery for gallstones that "could lead to an infection of his gallbladder, the eruption of which, like appendicitis, could be fatal"); Mitchell v. Nobles, 873 F.3d 869, 874 (11th Cir. 2017) (holding allegation of total lack of treatment for symptomatic Hepatitis C satisfies imminent danger requirement); Brown v. Wolf, 705 F. App'x 63, 66–67 (3d Cir. 2017) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's allegations of defendants' refusal to treat him for Hepatitis C despite his symptoms sufficiently alleged imminent danger); Reberger v. Koehn, 683 F. App'x 607, 607 (9th Cir. 2017) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff plausibly alleged imminent danger "because defendants continue to refuse to give him his HIV and seizure medications regularly").

155. Stine v. Oliver, 644 F. App'x 857, 859 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (holding allegations of failure to provide dental care for infected and abscessed teeth showed imminent danger); Tierney v. Unknown Dentist, 596 F. App'x 576, 577 (9th Cir. 2015) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's allegation of "extreme and continuing pain, inability to sleep, and infection of his gums" sufficiently alleged imminent danger notwithstanding offer of tooth extraction); McAlphin v. Toney, 281 F.3d 709, 710–711 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding allegations of a spreading mouth infection and a need for two tooth extractions showed imminent danger); McAlphin v. Correct Care Sols., LLC, No. 2:17CV00093-KGB-JTK, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84028, at *2 (E.D. Ark. Mar. 29, 2018) (unpublished) (holding refusal to extract five rotten teeth, which caused infection, abscesses, swollen lymph nodes, fever blisters, and other medical problems, established imminent danger), report and recommendation adopted, McAlphin v. Correct Care Sols., LLC, No. 2:17-cv-00093-KGB, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83206 (E.D. Ark. May 17, 2018) (unpublished); Thomas v. Cate, No. C 13-04052 DMR (PR), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65169, at *2 (N.D. Cal. May 12, 2014) (unpublished) (holding allegations of "severe gingival inflammation and palpation and severe periodontitis" could satisfy standard).

156. See, e.g., Fuller v. Wilcox, 288 F. App'x 509, 511 (10th Cir. 2008) (unpublished) (holding denial of a wheelchair, meaning that plaintiff must crawl, and could not walk to the shower or lift himself to his bed, "could result in a number of serious physical injuries" and sufficiently alleged imminent danger); Dye v. Bartow, No. 13-cv-284-bbc, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134000, at *2 (W.D. Wis. Sept. 19, 2013) (unpublished) (holding requirement that prisoner with malformed thumb and degenerative arthritis use a short-handled toothbrush, causing pain, meets the "low bar" of imminent danger); McDonald v. Maue, No. 12-cv-1183-JPG, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170801, at *1–*2 (S.D. Ill. Dec. 3, 2012) (unpublished) (holding failure to heed plaintiff's post-surgery medical restrictions may constitute imminent danger,¹⁵⁷ though in such cases courts often look closely at whether the allegations describe a specific risk to the plaintiff him- or herself.¹⁵⁸

Most federal appeals courts that have considered the question have held that if you sufficiently allege imminent danger, your whole complaint should go forward, even if portions of it are not related to the specific allegations and defendants currently responsible for the danger.¹⁵⁹ However, many district courts only allow the specific claims related to the imminent danger to proceed.¹⁶⁰ satisfied imminent danger standard), reconsideration denied, McDonald v. Maue, No. 12-cv-1183-JPG-PMF, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5685 (S.D. Ill. Jan. 15, 2013) (unpublished) (S.D. Ill. Jan. 15, 2013); Dye v. Grisdale, No. 11-cv-443-slc, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123748, at *2 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 25, 2011) (unpublished) (holding rescission of single-cell feed-in status to prisoner with eating disorder/phobia that prevented him from eating around others, resulting in “serious hunger pains, lack of bowel movements for days at a time, headaches, weakness,” constituted imminent danger); Claiborne v. Blauser, No. CIV. S-10-2427 LKK EFB P, 2011 U.S. Dist. Lexis 68876, at *2 (E.D. Cal. June 27, 2011) (unpublished) (holding policy of rear-handcuffing mobility-impaired prisoners despite medical recommendations and taking their crutches and canes when moving them satisfied imminent danger standard); Williams v. Walker, No. CIV S-11-0805 DAD P, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55925, at *1 (E.D. Cal. May 9, 2011) (unpublished) (stating prisoner with multiple mobility disabilities creating a risk of further injury unless he is placed in a bottom bunk sufficiently pled imminent danger)

157. See, e.g., Brown v. Sec’y, Penn. Dept. of Corr., 486 F. App’x 299, at *301–*302 (3d Cir. June 21, 2012) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding allegations of lack of open windows, no air conditioning, a ventilation system that is faulty and dirty, excessive heat, and polluted air sufficiently pled imminent danger); Smith v. Wang, 370 F. App’x 377, 378 (4th Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (unpublished) (citing exposure to environmental tobacco smoke allegedly causing nosebleeds and headaches in finding imminent danger adequately pled); Jackson v. Heyns, No. 1:13cv636, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100632, at *5–*6 (W.D. Mich. July 24, 2014) (unpublished) (holding allegations concerning the effect of chemical sprays and mold on plaintiff’s asthma rise to the level of imminent danger, as do another plaintiff’s allegations of nausea, vomiting, and coughing up blood as a result of unsanitary conditions); Cochran v. Geit, No. 11-cv-134-wmc, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81720, at *2 (W.D. Wis. July 26, 2011) (unpublished) (holding risk of having to climb to a top bunk without a ladder met imminent danger standard); Cole v. Ellis, No. 5:10-cv-00316-RS-GRJ, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 139420, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Dec. 28, 2010) (unpublished) (holding “the continuing harm of sleeping without heat during the winter months without additional clothing or blankets, could constitute an ongoing threat of serious physical harm” showing imminent danger), report and recommendation adopted, Cole v. McNeil, No. 5:10cv316/Rs-GRJ, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2521 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 11, 2011), aff’d, Cole v. Sec’y Dept of Corr., 451 F. App’x. 827 (11th Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished); Williams v. Lopez, No. 1:10-cv-00952-DLB PC, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61622, at *1 (E.D. Cal. May 28, 2010) (allegation inter alia that defendants were about to transfer HIV-positive prisoner to prison where he would be exposed to potentially fatal Valley Fever met imminent danger standard). Note the difference between Smith v Wang, cited above, and the cases about second-hand tobacco smoke cited in footnote 145, above: Smith cited current symptoms the plaintiff alleged he personally experienced, while the others relied more on potential future harm.

158. See, e.g., Frazier v. Fla. Dept. of Corr., No. 1:18-cv-186-MW-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 205166, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Sept. 26, 2018) (holding allegation that plaintiff and others are “forced to drink contaminated water” causing “headaches, sore throat, chest pain, stomach pain, kidney pain, side pain, fever, diarrhea, and infection” to be “too vague and generalized” to show imminent danger without details as to the plaintiff’s being “‘forced’ to drink the contaminated water, or what, if any, of the alleged physical side effects he has personally suffered”), report and recommendation adopted, Frazier v. Fla. Dept. of Corr., No. 1:18-cv-186-MW-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 204049 (N.D. Fla. Dec. 3, 2018).

159. See Boles v. Colo. Dept. of Corr., 794 F. App’x 767, 772 (10th Cir. 2019) (unpublished); Chavis v. Chappius, 618 F.3d 162, 171–172 (2d Cir. 2010) (“Nothing in the text of § 1915 provides any justification for dividing an action into individual claims and requiring a filing fee for those that do not relate to imminent danger.”); Andrews v. Cervantes, 493 F.3d 1047, 1052 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding “qualifying prisoners can file their entire complaint IFP; the exception does not operate on a claim-by-claim basis or apply to only certain types of relief”); Ibrahim v. District of Columbia, 463 F.3d 3, 5–7 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Ciarpiglini v. Saini, 352 F.3d 328, 330 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding damages claim could go forward even though injunctive claim on which “imminent danger” allegation was based was moot and stating § 1915(g) “only limits when frequent filers can proceed IFP, and says nothing about limiting the substance of their claims”); Gibbs v. Roman, 116 F.3d 83, 87 n.7 (3d Cir. 1997), overruled on other grounds, Abdul-Akbar v. McKelvie, 239 F.3d 307 (3rd Cir. 2001) (en banc). But see McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755–756 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that a complaint that satisfies the imminent danger exception cannot be amended to include claims that do not involve imminent danger).

160. See, e.g., Bostic v. Tenn. Dept. of Corr., No. 3:18-cv-00562, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122597, at *10 (M.D. Tenn. July 23, 2018) (unpublished); Rivera v. Stirling, No. 8:17-cv-02087-JMC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 101906, at

Mental health conditions generally do not satisfy the imminent danger requirement because they generally do not involve physical injury.¹⁶¹ If they do involve physical harm in some fashion, then they may constitute imminent danger.¹⁶² Many courts have held that the risk of self-inflicted physical injury resulting from mental illness may establish imminent danger.¹⁶³ That makes sense because many prison suicides and attempted suicides are a result of serious mental illness aggravated by prison conditions and practices.¹⁶⁴ However, some courts maintain that self-inflicted injury cannot meet the *3 (D.S.C. June 19, 2018) (unpublished); Gorbey v. Bowles, No. 7:17cv00091, No. 7:17cv00192, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14402, at *11 (W.D. Va. Jan. 30, 2018), report and recommendation adopted sub nom. Gorbey v. Avery, No. 7:17-cv-00192, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106547 (W.D. Va., June 26, 2018) (unpublished); White v. Jindal, No. 13-15073, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85506, at *4 (E.D. Mich. June 24, 2014) (unpublished); Buhl v. Sproul, No. 14-cv-00302-BNB, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59010, at *1 (D. Colo. Apr. 25, 2014) (unpublished); Custard v. Allred, No. 13-cv-02296-BNB, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171662, at *2 (D. Colo. Dec. 4, 2013) (unpublished) (dismissing two of eight claims because they did not allege imminent danger), order clarified, Custard v. Allred, No. 13-cv-02296-BNB, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 180997 (D. Colo. Dec. 23, 2013); Redmond v. Univ. of Tex. Med. Branch Hosp. Galveston, No. 2:13-CV-268, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126258, at *2 (S.D. Tex. Sept. 4, 2013) (unpublished) (holding claim for injunction re medical care should be “explored” under imminent danger exception but claims of past mistreatment causing the problem would not be cognizable).

161. Sanders v. Melvin, 873 F.3d 957, 959–960 (7th Cir. 2017) (“Mental deterioration, however, is a psychological rather than a physical problem. Physical problems can cause psychological ones, and the reverse, but the statute supposes that it is possible to distinguish them. A claim of long-term psychological deterioration is on the psychological side of the line. Prisoners facing long-term psychological problems can save up during that long term and pay the filing fee.”).

162. In Custard v. Allred, No. 13-cv-02296-BNB, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 171662, at *2 (D. Colo. Dec. 4, 2013), order clarified, Custard v. Allred, No. 13-cv-02296-BNB, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 180997, at *2 (D. Colo. Dec. 23, 2013) (unpublished), the court first observed: “An untreated psychological condition does not meet the imminent danger exception.” However, it held that the plaintiff’s condition did meet that standard in light of his additional allegation that the defendants’ practice of pounding on his cell door at night caused him to wake in a terrified state and harm himself. Similarly, in Annabel v. Michigan Dept. of Corrections, No. 1:14-cv-756, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116440, at *1 n.1 & *5 (W.D. Mich. Aug. 21, 2014) (unpublished), the court held that the plaintiff “alleges facts that, if believed, are sufficient to show that he is in imminent danger of serious bodily injury” where he alleged in connection with claims of retaliation, discrimination, religious rights violation, and unhygienic conditions that “his post-traumatic stress disorder has been aggravated to the point that he experiences frequent nightmares, severe paranoia, thoughts of suicide and self-injury, weight loss, extreme depression, anger, rage and fear.”

163. See, e.g., Lindsey v. Hoem, 799 F. App’x 410, 412 (7th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (“Suicidal ideation and a risk of self-harm, particularly for a mentally ill prisoner like Lindsey in prolonged segregation, satisfy the statutory imminent-danger exception. . . .”); Sanders v. Melvin, 873 F.3d 957, 959–960 (7th Cir. 2017); Irby v. Gilbert, No. 16-35373, 2016 U.S. App LEXIS 23591, at *1 (9th Cir. Nov. 14, 2016) (unpublished) (rejecting district court holding that “a prisoner’s allegations that he may harm himself or commit suicide are insufficient to constitute imminent danger”); Walker v. Scott, No. 10-56970, 472 F. App’x 514, 515 (9th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegation that “repeated placement in double-cell housing without first completing treatment for coping in that environment caused his mental health to deteriorate such that he became suicidal and violent towards others” satisfied imminent danger standard); Hairston v. Maria, No. 2:18-cv-378, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 213586, at *5 (S.D. Ohio Dec. 19, 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff whose mental health problems resulted in a suicide attempt causing dizzy spells, migraines, and coughing up blood satisfied imminent danger requirement); Cassady v. Dozier, No. 5:17-CV-495 (MTT), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43216, at *2 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 16, 2018) (unpublished) (holding risk of further self-injury resulting from ongoing gender dysphoria after defendants refused to provide gender reassignment surgery satisfied imminent danger requirement); Marshall v. Weber, No. RWT-11-2755, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178169, at *1 (D. Md. Dec. 17, 2012) (unpublished) (noting plaintiff was allowed to proceed IFP based on allegations he “felt suicidal” and had previously swallowed razor blades and had bitten his tongue during a panic attack), appeal dismissed, No. 13-6096 (4th Cir. Apr. 3, 2013).

164. See, e.g., Lindsey v. Hoem, 790 F. App’x 410, 412 (7th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (noting enhanced risk of self-harm for prisoner with mental illness held in long-term segregation); Sanville v. McCaughtry, 266 F.3d 724, 728 (7th Cir. 2001) (alleging prison officials’ failure to medicate mentally ill prisoner resulted in prisoner’s suicide); Eng v. Smith, 849 F.2d 80, 81–83 (2d Cir. 1988) (affirming injunction based on findings that state prison’s policies did not adequately protect mentally ill prisoners).

imminent danger standard because “[e]very prisoner would then avoid the three strikes provision by threatening suicide.”¹⁶⁵

The danger you are in must have some “nexus” (be related) to the allegations in the complaint to satisfy the imminent danger exception.¹⁶⁶

A claim of imminent danger does not excuse you from meeting the PLRA’s administrative exhaustion requirement.¹⁶⁷

The federal circuit (appeals) courts have upheld the three strikes provision as constitutional.¹⁶⁸ No circuit court has held the three strikes provision unconstitutional on First Amendment grounds. Still, some incarcerated people advocates have argued that the rule does violate the First Amendment because it limits your right to access and petition the courts.¹⁶⁹

165. Wallace v. Cockrell, No. 3:02-CV-1807-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3602, at *10 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 10, 2003) (unpublished), approved as supplemented, Wallace v. Cockrell, No. 3:02-CV-1807-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4897, at *1–4 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 27, 2003) (unpublished); accord, e.g., Morrill v. Holmes Cty. Jail, No. 5:15-cv-324-WTH-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 219853, at *9 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 30, 2018) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Morrill v. Holmes Cty. Jail, No. 5:15cv324/MCR/GRJ, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9944 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 22, 2019) (unpublished); Ochoa v. Nakashima, No. 3:12-cv-00239-RCJ-VPC, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 177538, at *2 (D. Nev. Oct. 22, 2012) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff with fanciful food complaint who had stopped eating in order to meet the imminent-harm standard at the time of the complaint was not allowed to proceed IFP), report and recommendation adopted, Ochoa v. Nakashima, No. 3:12-cv-00239-RCJ-VPC, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 176068 (D. Nev. Dec. 12, 2012) (unpublished); Cash v. Bernstein, No. 09 Civ.1922(BSJ)(HBP), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134948, at *1–*2 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 20, 2010) (unpublished) (declining to find imminent danger where plaintiff thwarted defendants’ efforts to treat his medical problem (citing Nelson v. Scoggy, No. 9:06-CV-1146 (NAM/DRH), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121257, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Dec. 30, 2009) (unpublished)).

166. Pinson v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 964 F.3d 65, 71 (D.C. Cir. 2020); Meyers v. Comm’r of Soc. Sec. Admin., 801 F. App’x 90, 96 (4th Cir. 2020) (per curiam) (unpublished); Fourstar v. United States, 950 F.3d 856, 859 (Fed. Cir. 2020) (holding complaint of imminent danger from denial of prison medical care lacked a nexus to Tucker Act assertions concerning management of Indian properties and resources); Lomax v. Ortiz-Marquez, 754 F. App’x 756, 759 (10th Cir. 2018) (adopting Pettus nexus test), aff’d, Lomax v. Ortiz-Marquez, 140 S. Ct. 1721, 207 L. Ed. 2d 132 (2020); Ball v. Hummel, 577 F. App’x 96, 96 n.1 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished); Pettus v. Morgenthau, 554 F.3d 293, 298–299 (2d Cir. 2009).

167. Fletcher v. Menard Corr. Ctr., 623 F.3d 1171, 1173 (7th Cir. 2010); McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755 (8th Cir. 2004) (upholding the rule that prisoners must fulfill the administrative exhaustion requirement); see Part E of this Chapter for more on the exhaustion requirement.

168. See, e.g., Polanco v. Hopkins, 510 F.3d 152, 156 (2d Cir. 2007) (rejecting claims of unconstitutionality); Lewis v. Sullivan, 279 F.3d 526, 528 (7th Cir. 2002) (rejecting access to courts claim); Higgins v. Carpenter, 258 F.3d 797, 799–801 (8th Cir. 2001) (rejecting equal protection and access to courts claims); Medberry v. Butler, 185 F.3d 1189, 1192 (11th Cir. 1999) (rejecting Ex Post Facto Clause argument); Rodriguez v. Cook, 169 F.3d 1176, 1178–1182 (9th Cir. 1999) (rejecting due process, equal protection, access to courts, Ex Post Facto Clause, and separation of powers arguments); White v. Colorado, 157 F.3d 1226, 1233–1234 (10th Cir. 1998) (rejecting access to courts and equal protection challenges); Wilson v. Yaklich, 148 F.3d 596, 604–606 (6th Cir. 1998) (rejecting equal protection, due process, and other claims); Rivera v. Allin, 144 F.3d 719, 723–729 (11th Cir. 1998) (stating IFP status is “a privilege, not a right”; upholding provision against 1st Amendment, access to courts, separation of powers, due process, and equal protection challenges), repealed by Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 214–215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–921 (2007).

169. In other contexts, the Supreme Court has found that the right to court access “is part of the right of petition protected by the First Amendment.” Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 513, 92 S. Ct. 609, 613 (1972). See also Legal Servs. Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533, 542–543, 121 S. Ct. 1043, 1049–1050 (2001) (stating that advocacy in litigation is speech); N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 272, 84 S. Ct. 710, 721 (1964) (finding that the 1st Amendment requires “breathing space” and a margin for error for inadvertent false speech so that true speech will not be deterred). This “breathing space” principle has been applied in other areas of law. See, e.g., Cal. Motor Transp. Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 511, 92 S. Ct. 609, 612 (1972) (applying rule in antitrust context); Bill Johnson’s Rests., Inc. v. NLRB, 461 U.S. 731, 741, 103 S. Ct. 2161, 2169 (1983) (applying rule in labor context). Under the principle, sanctions may not be imposed against plaintiffs unless the litigation is both objectively and subjectively baseless. See Profl Real Estate Investors, Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 508 U.S. 49, 60–61, 113 S. Ct. 1920, 1928 (1993) (requiring both subjective and objective intent). Applied to the three strikes provision, the “breathing space” principle would mean that prisoners could only be punished for knowing falsehood or intentional abuse of the judicial system—a category far narrower than

D. Screening and Dismissal of Incarcerated People's Cases

The PLRA requires federal courts to examine all suits by incarcerated people against government employees and all IFP cases at the start of litigation, and to dismiss cases that are frivolous or malicious, that fail to state a claim on which relief may be granted, or that seek damages from a defendant immune from damage claims.¹⁷⁰ These dismissals may be done without prior notice or an opportunity to respond,¹⁷¹ though one court has cautioned that this should only be done where “it is unmistakably clear that the court lacks jurisdiction, or that the complaint lacks merit or is otherwise defective.”¹⁷²

Incarcerated people are entitled to try to amend complaints that do not state a claim before they are finally dismissed unless the court is certain that they cannot be saved.¹⁷³ Courts may dismiss the case with leave to amend,¹⁷⁴ or may dismiss the complaint, which keeps the case alive;¹⁷⁵ if the plaintiff does not amend the complaint, or does not do so adequately, a separate order dismissing the case may be entered. Complaints the court has deemed frivolous or malicious need not be afforded an opportunity for amendment.¹⁷⁶

Dismissal under these screening statutes is reviewed on appeal de novo (granting no deference to the district court's ruling), at least with respect to dismissals for failure to state a claim.¹⁷⁷ Some courts the scope of the provision. A few courts have rejected the “breathing space” argument, but have not addressed the Supreme Court decisions cited above. Daker v. Jackson, 942 F.3d 1252, 1258 (11th Cir. 2019), pet. for cert. filed, No. 19-1387 (June 18, 2020); see Daker v. Bryson, 784 F. App'x 690 (11th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished) (ruling similarly); Clardy v. Byerly, No. 6:18-cv-01200-CL, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 222735, at *2 (D. Or. Oct. 15, 2018) (unpublished) (rejecting argument “that the ‘breathing space’ principle of the First Amendment affords this Court the discretion to grant IFP status to a prisoner litigant with three strikes if the case is deemed to have factual and legal merit”), report and recommendation adopted, Clardy v. Byerly, No. 6:18-cv-01200-CL, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43010 (D. Or. Mar. 15, 2018) (unpublished), aff'd, Clardy v. Byerly, 800 F. App'x 594 (9th Cir. 2020) (unpublished).

170. These requirements appear in three related statutes: 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2), 28 U.S.C. § 1915A, and 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c)(1).

171. Plunk v. Givens, 234 F.3d 1128, 1129 (10th Cir. 2000) (upholding lower court sua sponte dismissal where no hearing was provided); Carr v. Dvorin, 171 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1999) (per curiam) (“The statute clearly does not require that process be served or that the plaintiff be provided an opportunity to respond before dismissal.”); Allen v. Zavaras, 430 F. App'x 709, 712 (10th Cir. 2011) (unpublished).

172. Giano v. Goord, 250 F.3d 146, 151 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting Carr v. Dvorin, 171 F.3d 115, 116 (2d Cir. 1999)) (noting that where a colorable (plausible; not unreasonable) claim is filed, the court should not dismiss the claim if the defendant did not move for the dismissal).

173. Gomez v. USAA Fed. Sav. Bank, 171 F.3d 794, 795–796 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding dismissal of a pro se complaint under Section 1915(e)(2)(B) should be done with leave to amend “unless the court can rule out any possibility, however unlikely it might be, that an amended complaint would succeed in stating a claim”); accord, LaFountain v. Harry, 716 F.3d 944, 951 (6th Cir. 2013); Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1348–1349 (11th Cir. 2004); Grayson v. Mayview State Hosp., 293 F.3d 103, 111 (3d Cir. 2002); Razzoli v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 230 F.3d 371, 377 (D.C. Cir. 2000), overruled by Davis v. U.S. Sentencing Comm'n, 405 U.S. App. D.C. 93, 98, 716 F.3d 660, 665 (2013); Perkins v. Kansas Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 806 (10th Cir. 1999); Murphy v. City of Stamford, CIVIL ACTION NO. 3:13-CV-00942 (JCH), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153441 at *12–*13 (D. Conn. Oct. 25, 2013) (unpublished), amended by Murphy v. City of Stamford, CIVIL ACTION NO. 3:13-CV-00942 (JCH), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS at *5 (D. Conn. Apr. 14, 2014).

174. Lomax v. Ortiz-Marquez, 140 S. Ct. 1721, 1724, 207 L. Ed. 2d 132, 136 (2020).

175. Lira v. Herrera, 427 F.3d 1164, 1169 (9th Cir. 2005); accord, Paul v. Marberry, 658 F.3d 702, 705 (7th Cir. 2011).

176. Coleman v. Tollefson, 733 F.3d 175, 177 (6th Cir. 2013) (“Under the PLRA, a court may dismiss an action that it finds ‘frivolous or malicious’, without permitting the plaintiff to amend the complaint.”), aff'd, 575 U.S. 532 (2015).

177. See Hutchinson v. Watson, 607 F. App'x 116, 116 (2d Cir. 2015) (unpublished) (28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2); citing Giano v. Goord, 250 F.3d 146, 149–150 (2d Cir. 2001)); Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1319–1320 (11th Cir. 2008) (28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii)); Brown v. Bargery, 207 F.3d 863, 866–867 (6th Cir. 2000) (28 U.S.C. §§ 1915(e)(2) and 1915A(b)); Moore v. Sims, 200 F.3d 1170, 1171 (8th Cir. 2000) (per curiam) (28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii)); Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 134 (2d Cir. 1999) (28 U.S.C. § 1915A and 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(c)(2)); Barren v. Harrington, 152 F.3d 1193, 1194 (9th Cir. 1998); Black v. Warren, 134 F.3d 732, 734 (5th Cir. 1998); have held that dismissals as frivolous or malicious are reviewed under an “abuse of discretion” standard, which means that the appeals court will not overrule the district court’s decision unless it thinks the district court made a very big mistake.¹⁷⁸

The PLRA screening provisions do not change the standards for assessing complaints to determine whether they state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The court must take as true all factual allegations in the complaint and draw all reasonable inferences in the plaintiff’s favor.¹⁷⁹ It is still the case that “[a] document filed pro se is ‘to be liberally construed,’ and ‘a pro se complaint, however inartfully pleaded, must be held to less stringent standards than formal pleadings drafted by lawyers.’”¹⁸⁰

The screening provisions have been held not to violate due process,¹⁸¹ equal protection,¹⁸² or the right of access to the courts.¹⁸³

E. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

The PLRA exhaustion requirement says:

No action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under [42 U.S.C. § 1983] . . . or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted.¹⁸⁴

More incarcerated people lose their cases because they fail to exhaust administrative remedies than from any other part of the PLRA.

Mitchell v. Farcass, 112 F.3d 1483, 1489–1490 (11th Cir. 1997); Atkinson v. Bohn, 91 F.3d 1127, 1128 (8th Cir. 1996).

178. See Ejikeme v. Dir., Fed. Bureau of Intelligence., 639 F. App’x 75, 75 (3d Cir. 2016) (per curiam) (unpublished); Johnson v. Darr, 368 F. App’x 822 (9th Cir. 2010) (unpublished); Mosely v. Highsmith, 311 F. App’x 932, 933 (8th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished); Hughes v. Lott, 350 F.3d 1157, 1160 (11th Cir. 2003); Gladney v. Pendleton Corr. Facility, 302 F.3d 773, 775 (7th Cir. 2002); Bilal v. Driver, 251 F.3d 1346, 1348–1349 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that abuse of discretion standard was proper for review of dismissal based on frivolity); Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 718 n.3 (5th Cir. 1999) (stating that de novo review is only appropriate for dismissals for failure to state a claim on which relief may be granted). In practice, the “abuse of discretion” standard makes it very unlikely that an appellate court will overturn the district court’s ruling.

179. Resnick v. Hayes, 213 F.3d 443, 447 (9th Cir. 2000); Gomez v. USAA Federal Savings Bank, 171 F.3d 794, 795–796 (2d Cir. 1999).

180. Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2200 (2007) (citation omitted) (quoting Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285 (1976)).

181. Section 1915(e)(2)(B)(i), which only addresses procedures to be followed by the district court once a claim is presented before the court, did not impede or restrict the prisoner’s ability to prepare, file, and bring to the court’s attention his complaint. See Vanderberg v. Donaldson, 259 F.3d 1321, 1323 (11th Cir. 2001) (addressing a dismissal for failure to state a claim under § 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii)). Similarly, there is no due process violation where Johnson filed objections to the magistrate’s report and recommendation, and the district court conducted a de novo review before dismissing his complaint under § 1915(e)(2)(B). Id. at 1324.” Johnson v. Patterson, 519 F. App’x 610, 612 (11th Cir. 2013) (unpublished). Curley v. Perry, 246 F.3d 1278, 1283–1284 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding no due process violation).

182. Vanderberg v. Donaldson, 259 F.3d 1321, 1324 (11th Cir. 2001) (holding that section 1915(e)(2)(B)(ii) does not violate the Equal Protection Clause); Curley v. Perry, 246 F.3d 1278, 1285 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding no equal protection violation).

183. Martin v. Scott, 156 F.3d 578, 580 n.2 (5th Cir. 1998) (finding provision does not unconstitutionally restrict access to federal courts).

184. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a).

The PLRA makes exhaustion of prison remedies required before you can file suit.¹⁸⁵ This is true even if you are suing for money damages and the grievance system does not provide them.¹⁸⁶ If you do not exhaust your administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed instead of stayed (held pending exhaustion).¹⁸⁷ For this reason, you should use all of your administrative remedies before filing. You must exhaust before you file suit, not afterward, or your case will be dismissed.¹⁸⁸ Most courts have said that dismissal for non-exhaustion should be “without prejudice,”¹⁸⁹ meaning the case could be refiled if you were able to exhaust after the dismissal, though a few have said it can be dismissed with prejudice if there are reasons to believe the case can’t be brought again, for example if the statute of limitations or the deadline to file a grievance has passed.¹⁹⁰ See Part E(6) of this Chapter for more information about time limits.

So, it is very important to exhaust your administrative remedies within the prison correctly the first time. You may not get a second chance. You need to be careful to get it right because some prison remedies are complicated or they may not be administered according to the rules. Also, any mistake may be used against you. If something happens to you that you may want to bring suit about, here is what you should do:

- (1) Find out what remedies are available within the prison administrative system right away. Many times, deadlines are very short. If you wait until you have definitely decided to sue, it may be too late to exhaust your administrative remedies.
- (2) Always use the prison grievance system or any other available remedy, such as a disciplinary appeal.
- (3) If you think there is a reason why you should not have to exhaust your administrative remedies, forget it. Exhaust them anyway.

185. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 21 (2002) (requiring “exhaustion in cases covered by [U.S.C.] § 1997e(a)”). Though mandatory, exhaustion is not “jurisdictional”. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 101, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2392, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 385 (2006). That means if you didn’t exhaust and you think you have a good enough reason, the court at least has the power to consider your argument—but these arguments rarely work, as discussed.

186. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 738–739, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1823–1824, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 964–965 (2001).

187. McKinney v. Carey, 311 F.3d 1198, 1199–1200 (9th Cir. 2002) (per curiam); Medina-Claudio v. Rodriguez-Mateo, 292 F.3d 31, 36 (1st Cir. 2002); Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 121–123 (2d Cir. 2001); Perez v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., 182 F.3d 532, 534–535 (7th Cir. 1999). A few decisions have granted stays pending exhaustion under very unusual circumstances. See Kennedy v. Mendez, No. 3:CV-03-1366, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20170, at *5–*6 (M.D. Pa. Oct. 7, 2004) (unpublished) (stating that a stay was appropriate because the defendants argued the plaintiff had not exhausted his remedies when the litigation had already been going on for a long time, and claims that were not exhausted were closely related to those that had been exhausted); Campbell v. Chaves, 402 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1108–1109 (D. Ariz. 2005) (telling the prison system to consider a grievance where a staff member had told the prisoner to file a tort claim instead of a grievance. The tort claim was rejected for jurisdictional reasons, and the grievance system rules had been changed so the matter would have been grievable).

188. Gonzalez v. Seal, 702 F.3d 785, 787–788 (5th Cir. 2012) (per curiam); Johnson v. Jones, 340 F.3d 624, 627–628 (8th Cir. 2003); Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 2001); Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 269 (D.C. Cir. 2001).

189. Pelino v. Sec’y, Penn. Dept. of Corr., 791 F.App’x 371, 373 (3d Cir. 2020) (per curiam) (unpublished) (citing Nyhuis v. Reno, 204 F.3d 65, 78 (3d Cir. 2000)); Bargher v. White, 928 F.3d 439, 447 (5th Cir. 2019); Porter v. Sturm, 781 F.3d 448, 452 (8th Cir. 2015); French v. Warden, 442 F. App’x 845, 846 (4th Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished); Gallagher v. Shelton, 587 F.3d 1063, 1068 (10th Cir. 2009); Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1379 (11th Cir. 2008); O’Guinn v. Lovelock Corr. Ctr., 502 F.3d 1056, 1059 (9th Cir. 2007); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 994 (6th Cir. 2004); Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 401 (7th Cir. 2004); see, e.g., Berry v. Kerik, 366 F.3d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 2003).

190. See, e.g., Thompson v. Coulter, 680 F. App’x 707, 712 (10th Cir. 2017) (unpublished), cert. denied, Thompson v. Coulter, 138 S. Ct. 180 (2017); Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1375 n.11 (11th Cir. 2008) (dicta); Berry v. Kerik, 366 F.3d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 2003). To the contrary, one federal appeals court has explained that all dismissals for non-exhaustion should be without prejudice, since states can allow litigants to fix their failure to exhaust, or plaintiffs may be able to go ahead without exhaustion in state court, and defenses to a new suit should be addressed in that suit. Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 401 (7th Cir. 2004).

- (4) Take all the available appeals, even if you get what you think is a good decision.
- (5) If you do not get an answer to a grievance, try to appeal anyway. Many grievance systems say that if a certain amount of time passes and there's no decision, you can treat the non-response as a denial of the grievance, and appeal.
- (6) If you're not sure which remedy to use, try all available remedies.
- (7) If prison employees tell you an issue is not grievable but you think it is, request that they process your grievance anyway so you will have a record. If there is a way to appeal or grieve a decision which says that something is not grievable, do that too! As long as there is another step you can take, take it.
- (8) If prison employees tell you something will be taken care of and you do not need to file a grievance, exhaust your remedies anyway if you think there is any chance you might want to file suit.
- (9) Follow the rules of the grievance system or other remedy as best you can.
- (10) If the people running the grievance system or in charge of the remedy tell you that you filed your grievance incorrectly, ask them how to fix it and follow their instructions. Make a record of what you were told.
- (11) If you make a mistake, like missing a time deadline, do not give up. File the grievance anyway, explain the reasons for your mistakes, and ask that your grievance be considered despite your mistake. Appeal as far as you can if you lose.

Always remember that once you file suit, prison officials and their lawyers will use anything they can to get your case thrown out of court. They will look for any possible basis to say that you filed incorrectly and should not be allowed to sue. You want to show the court that you did everything you could to follow the exhaustion requirement, including following the prison's rules for grievances and other complaints or appeals.

If your suit is dismissed and then you manage to exhaust your administrative remedies, you may have to pay a new fee to re-file your case (but not all courts agree about whether this is necessary).¹⁹¹ You could also be charged a "strike," which could affect your ability to proceed in forma pauperis in the future.¹⁹² (See Part C above for more information on the PLRA's "three strikes" provision.)

The exhaustion provision of the PLRA applies to any case brought by "a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility" about prison conditions under federal law.¹⁹³ A case is "brought by a prisoner" if the plaintiff is a prisoner at the time he files the complaint. If you are no longer a prisoner when the suit is filed, you do not need to have exhausted your administrative remedies.¹⁹⁴ PLRA exhaustion does not apply to petitions for habeas corpus—habeas has its own

191. The only federal appeals court to have ruled on this point held that a new filing fee is not necessary to re-file the same case. Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 772–774 (6th Cir. 2006). Some courts have declined to follow that holding. See, e.g., Ellis v. Kitchin, No. 2:07cv367, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113248, at *1 (E.D. Va. 2010) (unpublished) (declining to follow Owens v. Keeling). Others have interpreted Owens narrowly. See Barrett v. Pearson, No. CIV 06-299-RAW-SPS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9156, at *3–4 (E.D. Okla. 2008) (unpublished) (holding, in part, that because the prisoner sued different people in each complaint, he had to pay a second filing fee). Courts have generally said that a new case must be filed after dismissal for non-exhaustion, instead of reopening the dismissed case. See Williams v. Ramirez, No. CIV S-06-1882 MCE DAD P, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 61617, at *3–4 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 28, 2006) (unpublished) (advising plaintiff that a new post-exhaustion complaint should not have the docket number of the dismissed action; the plaintiff has to file a new in forma pauperis application). Some courts, however, may allow prisoners to reopen their cases after exhaustion of administrative remedies. See Roberts v. Taminga, 20 F. App'x 455, 456–457 (6th Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (discussing the District Court's order that the prisoner be able to reopen his case but finding that the prisoner had still not exhausted administrative remedies in the six months the court had given him).

192. For more information about this issue, see Part C(1) of this Chapter. As explained there, if your complaint is dismissed because non-exhaustion is obvious on the face of the complaint, the dismissal may be a strike. Otherwise, it should not be a strike, but some courts have used weaker justifications for charging prisoners a strike for exhaustion-related dismissals.

193. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a). For more discussion of when a person is a "prisoner" for PLRA purposes, see footnotes 52–63 and the related text.

194. Olivas v. Nevada ex rel. Dept. of Corr., 856 F.3d 1281, 1283–1284 (9th Cir. 2017); Lesesne v. Doe, 712

exhaustion requirement.¹⁹⁵ The PLRA exhaustion requirement, has been applied in Section 1983 actions filed in state court, including those that were later removed to federal court.¹⁹⁶

Most courts have held there is no emergency exception to the exhaustion requirement.¹⁹⁷ There are a few decisions that have allowed cases to go forward without exhaustion to avoid irreversible harm.¹⁹⁸ However these cases do not provide much legal justification for not following the exhaustion requirement. One federal appeals court has held that district courts retain their usual discretion to grant relief to maintain the status quo pending exhaustion,¹⁹⁹ which probably means you'd better have a grievance filed if you ask the court for relief pending exhaustion. Another court has said: "If a prisoner has been placed in imminent danger of serious physical injury by an act that violates his constitutional rights, administrative remedies that offer no possible relief in time to prevent the imminent danger from becoming an actual harm can't be thought available."²⁰⁰ However, if the prison makes available an emergency grievance procedure that could provide timely relief, the prisoner is obliged to use it before bringing suit.²⁰¹

The only exception to the exhaustion requirement that the courts recognize is the one "baked into its text," i.e., the requirement that remedies be "available."²⁰² The meaning of that exception is discussed further in part E(3) of this Chapter.

For information about the New York State prison grievance system, see JLM Chapter 15, "Inmate Grievance Procedures."

F.3d 584, 586, 588 (D.C. Cir. 2013); Greig v. Goord, 169 F.3d 165, 167–168 (2d Cir. 1999); see also Jasperson v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 460 F. Supp. 2d 76, 87 (D.D.C. 2006) (plaintiff who filed a challenge to restrictions on placement in halfway house before he surrendered to the Bureau of Prisons did not have to exhaust because he was not confined yet, even if he was legally in the Bureau's custody). PLRA's administrative exhaustion requirement, discussed in Part E of this Chapter, applies to "a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility." 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a). The difference in phrasing does not seem to be important.

195. Carmona v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 243 F.3d 629, 633–634 (2d Cir. 2001). For more information on habeas corpus claims, see Chapter 13 of the JLM, "Federal Habeas Corpus."

196. See, e.g., Jennings v. Dowling, 642 F. App'x 908, 913 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (citing Marziale v. Silas, No. 4:15CV00655-JLH-JJV, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164879, at *2 (E.D. Ark. Nov. 10, 2015) (unpublished) (collecting cases), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164878 (E.D. Ark. Dec. 8, 2015) (unpublished); Johnson v. Louisiana ex rel. Dept. of Public Safety & Corr., 468 F.3d 278, 280 (5th Cir. 2006) ("The PLRA's exhaustion requirement applies to all Section 1983 claims regardless of whether the inmate files his claim in state or federal court."); Chapman v. Wyo. Dept. of Corr., 366 P.3d 499, 508 (Wyo. 2016); Berry v. Feil, 357 P.3d 344, 346 & n.3 (Nev. App. 2015) (citing cases).

197. See, e.g., Bovarie v. Giurbino, 421 F. Supp. 2d 1309, 1314 (S.D. Cal. 2006) (holding as "irrelevant" prisoner's claim that the litigation limited his time and did not let him complete grievance process concerning law library access).

198. See Evans v. Saar, 412 F. Supp. 2d 519, 527 (D. Md. 2006) (declining to dismiss the case for non-exhaustion, because "given the shortness of time, [the] Court [was] unprepared to decide whether [plaintiffs] failure to exhaust [was] attributable to his delay in filing his administrative claim or the State's delay in deciding it."); Howard v. Ashcroft, 248 F. Supp. 2d 518, 533–534 (M.D. La. 2003) (holding that prisoner fighting transfer from community corrections to a prison did not have to exhaust where it was clear that her claim would be rejected, her appeal would take months, and that prison officials wanted to transfer her despite her pending appeal).

199. Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 267–268 (D.C. Cir. 2001). This holding has not been cited much in litigation brought by incarcerated people. In one case where it was, the court threatened to grant relief, and jail officials very quickly addressed the problem. Tvelia v. Dept. of Corr., No. Civ. 03-537-M, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2227, at *5 (D.N.H. Feb. 13, 2004) (unpublished). Other courts have declined to grant relief under the Jackson v. D.C. theory. See, e.g., Blain v. Bassett, No. 7:07-cv-00552, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86167, at *6–7 (W.D. Va. Nov. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (refusing to order delay of new prison rule pending plaintiff's exhaustion and dismissing action).

200. Fletcher v. Menard Corr. Ctr., 623 F.3d 1171, 1173 (7th Cir. 2010).

201. Fletcher v. Menard Corr. Ctr., 623 F.3d 1171, 1174 (7th Cir. 2010); accord, Smith v. Moon, No. 1:12-cv-01153-GBC (PC), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159195, at *4–*7 (E.D. Cal. Nov. 6, 2012) (unpublished); Nowell v. Hickey, No. 11-CV-00027-KSF, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10799, at *8–*13 (E.D. Ky. Feb. 1, 2011) (unpublished).

202. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1862, 195 L.Ed.2d 117, 124 (2016).

1. What Is Exhaustion?

Exhaustion under the PLRA means “proper exhaustion,” which is “compliance with an agency’s deadlines and other critical procedural rules.”²⁰³ Part E(5) of this Chapter discusses this point in detail. Exhaustion also means taking your complaint all the way to the end of the internal prison complaint process that applies to your problem. That is usually the prison’s grievance system. You must use every appeal available to you²⁰⁴ and complete the process before you file suit.²⁰⁵ Some courts have held that incarcerated people cannot add additional claims by amending their complaints unless the new claims were exhausted before the initial complaint was filed.²⁰⁶ Most courts, however, have said that as long as the new issues were exhausted before you try to add them to the case, you can amend your complaint to add them.²⁰⁷ That view is consistent with the Supreme Court’s decision in Jones v. Bock,²⁰⁸ which held that the exhaustion requirement should be interpreted consistently with the usual practices of litigation under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The ability to amend complaints freely is part of normal federal procedural practice under those Rules.²⁰⁹

Most courts have held that once the deadline for the final decision of your last appeal has passed, you can file suit even if you have not received the decision,²¹⁰ even if the authorities then issue a late decision after you file.²¹¹ It is not clear how long you have to wait if the system has no deadline for deciding your final appeal.²¹²

203. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2385–2386, 165 L. Ed. 2d. 368, 378 (2006).

204. See Wright v. Hollingsworth, 260 F.3d 357, 358 (5th Cir. 2001) (holding that PLRA required incarcerated person to make use of all the administrative remedies available to him and that his failure to do so prevented him from going forth with his lawsuit); White v. McGinnis, 131 F.3d 593, 595 (6th Cir. 1997) (affirming dismissal for failing to appeal denial of grievance). See also Lopez v. Smiley, No. 3:02CV1020 (RNC), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16724, at *4 (D. Conn. Sept. 22, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person who appealed, but whose appeal was not received and was told it was too late to file another, had exhausted).

205. Johnson v. Jones, 340 F.3d 624, 627–628 (8th Cir. 2003) (stating that by the time of the filing of the lawsuit, inmates must have exhausted their administrative remedies); Neal v. Goord, 267 F.3d 116, 122 (2d Cir. 2001) (stating that you must exhaust administrative remedies before suing).

206. See, e.g., Miller v. Hall, Civil Action No.: 4:18CV77-RP, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 134135, *17 (N.D.Miss., Aug. 9, 2018) (unpublished) (noting claims added by amended complaint “occurred subsequent to the filing of this lawsuit in March 2018. . . . Accordingly, it is impossible that Miller achieved pre-filing exhaustion with regard to these claims, and therefore, any claim presented that could not have been exhausted prior to March 2018”); Lee v. Urieta, No. 5:13-CT-3155-F, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86602, *6 (E.D.N.C., June 24, 2014) (“Because these amended claims arose after the filing of the complaint, Plaintiff could not have exhausted his administrative remedies for these claims prior to the filing of this action.”).

207. See Mattox v. Edelman, 851 F.3d 583, 591–595 (6th Cir. 2017); Cano v. Taylor, 739 F.3d 1214, 1220–1221 (9th Cir. 2014); Cannon v. Washington, 418 F.3d 714, 719–720 (7th Cir. 2005) (rejecting defendants’ argument that new claims could not be added by amendment even if the administrative remedies had been exhausted).

208. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 210–212, 127 S. Ct. 910, 918–919, 166 L. Ed. 2d. 798, 810–811 (2007) 209; see FED. R. CIV. P. 15(a).

210. Hayes v. T. Dahlke, 976 F.3d 259, 266 (2d Cir. 2020); Smith v. U.S., 432 F. App’x 113, 117 (3rd Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished) (citing federal regulation providing prisoners may treat the absence of a timely response as a denial); Whittington v. Ortiz, 472 F.3d 804, 807–808 (10th Cir. 2007); Jernigan v. Stuchell, 304 F.3d 1030, 1032 (10th Cir. 2002); Powe v. Ennis, 177 F.3d 393, 394 (5th Cir. 1999) (per curiam) (“A prisoner’s administrative remedies are deemed exhausted when a valid grievance has been filed and the state’s time for responding thereto has expired.”); Underwood v. Wilson, 151 F.3d 292, 295 (5th Cir. 1998); see Lewis v. Washington, 300 F.3d 829, 833 (7th Cir. 2002) (rejecting interpretations that would “permit [prison officials] to exploit the exhaustion requirement through indefinite delay in responding to grievances.”).

211. See, e.g., Robinson v. Superintendent Rockview SCI, 831 F.3d 148, 154 & n.4 (3d Cir. 2016) (“Robinson’s decision to accept that response in good faith and pursue his claim through the remainder of a belated administrative process does not rectify the prison’s errors. . . . We reject the prison’s invitation to hold Robinson’s diligence against him.”).

212. See McNeal v. Cook Cnty. Sheriff’s Dept., 282 F. Supp. 2d 865, 868 n.3 (N.D. Ill. 2003) (holding 11 months is long enough to wait and citing cases holding that seven months is long enough but one month is not). However, the Seventh Circuit said, in connection with a grievance system that called for appeal decisions within 60 days “whenever possible,” that the remedy did not become “unavailable” because it took six months to get a decision. Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 400 (7th Cir. 2004).

Some courts have said that if you do not get a response to your initial grievance, you have exhausted your available internal remedies.²¹³ However, most have said that if the grievance system allows you to treat a non-response as a denial and appeal it, you must do so.²¹⁴ When in doubt, try to appeal, even if officials have failed to respond. You should do this even if your grievance just “disappears” and never shows up in the records even at the first step of the process.²¹⁵ Technically you are only required to follow up on unanswered grievances if the grievance policy provides instructions for doing so.²¹⁶ However, sometimes courts hold that failure to follow up on a non-response is a failure to exhaust regardless of whether the policy so requires.²¹⁷ Also, if you make a record of following up, you are more likely to win if the defendants claim that you never really filed the grievance.²¹⁸

Courts have said that if you win your grievance before the final stage and do not appeal you have exhausted, since it makes no sense to appeal if you win.²¹⁹ You are best advised not to rely on that

213. See, e.g., Brengettcy v. Horton, 423 F.3d 674, 682 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding prisoner who received no decision regarding his initial grievance had exhausted his remedies where the grievance policy does not tell the prisoner what to do when there is no decision); Boyd v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 380 F.3d 989, 996 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that “administrative remedies are exhausted when prison officials fail to timely respond to a properly filed grievance.”).

214. See Bargher v. White, 928 F.3d 439, 447 (5th Cir. 2019); Mitchell v. Warden, Baldwin State Prison, 777 F. App’x 472, 473 (11th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished); Cicio v. Wenderlich, 714 F. App’x 96, 97–98 (2d Cir. 2018) (unpublished); Wilson v. Epps, 776 F.3d 296, 300–301 (5th Cir. 2015) (holding an incarcerated person who did not receive a grievance decision must follow policy provision that “expiration of response time limits without receipt of a written response shall entitle the offender to move on to the next step in the process”); Jolliff v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 626 F. App’x 783, 784 (10th Cir. 2015) (unpublished); Risher v. Lappin, 639 F.3d 236, 241 (6th Cir. 2011) (holding an incarcerated person who did not receive a response timely was entitled under the rules to appeal and was not obliged to track down the errant response; “When pro se inmates are required to follow agency procedures to the letter in order to preserve their federal claims, we see no reason to exempt the agency from similar compliance with its own rules.”); Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1083–1085 (11th Cir. 2008) (finding that where an incarcerated person alleged that the warden tore up his grievance, he would have been obliged to file an appeal from the lack of a decision, except that the warden also threatened him); Cox v. Mayer, 332 F.3d 422, 425 n.2 (6th Cir. 2003) (finding that an incarcerated person who sued after not receiving a response to a grievance form, had not exhausted administrative remedies because the prison grievance procedure required prisoners to pursue grievances to the next level even without a response from the prison); Clarke v. Thornton, 515 F. Supp. 2d 435, 438–441 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (holding that an incarcerated person had not exhausted when that individual filed suit after receiving no response from levels one and two of a three-tiered grievance policy). The New York State grievance rules provide that issues not decided within the prescribed time limits can be appealed unless the incarcerated person has consented to an extension of time. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(g)(2) (2012).

215. Dole v. Chandler, 438 F.3d 804, 809, 809–812 (7th Cir. 2006).

216. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218 (2007) (holding “it is the prison’s requirements, and not the PLRA, that define the boundaries of proper exhaustion”); Williams v. Priatno, 829 F.3d 118, 124 (2d Cir. 2016) (holding remedy unavailable where incarcerated person’s grievance submitted per policy never got filed, and the policy had no instruction for appealing grievances that were never acknowledged).

217. See Lockett v. Bonson, 937 F.3d 1016, 1026 (7th Cir. 2019) (holding prisoner who alleged he filed a grievance appeal and got no response, in a system that provided after 45 days without a response the plaintiff was free to go to court, the regulations “in their totality” required the plaintiff to regard the failure to provide a receipt as a “red flag” and file a new grievance about the fate of his prior grievance, despite lack of such a requirement in the rules); Williams v. LaClair, 128 Fed.App’x. 792, 793 (2d Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (affirming dismissal for non-exhaustion where the plaintiff alleged that an unidentified prison official had discarded his grievance, but failed to explain why he did not pursue the matter when he realized his grievance had not been filed).

218. See, e.g., Mojica v. Murphy, No. 9:17-CV-0324 (DNH/ML), 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11857, at *47 n. 26 (N.D.N.Y., Jan. 23, 2020) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Mojica v. Murphy, No. 9:17-CV-0324 (DNH/ML), 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40175 (N.D.N.Y., Mar. 9, 2020) (unpublished), and cases cited.

219. See Williams v. Dept. of Corr., 678 F. App’x 877, 880–881 (11th Cir. 2017) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person whose “informal grievance” requesting a transfer for safety reasons resulted in his transfer had exhausted without further proceedings), cert. denied sub nom., Williams v. Fla. Dept. of Corr., 138 S. Ct. 1586, 200 L.Ed.2d 751 (2018); Patterson v. Stanley, 547 F. App’x 510, 512–513 (5th Cir. 2013) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff whose disciplinary conviction was reversed at Step 1, with no indication he could statement. because some courts have also held that if you do not win all possible relief in the grievance, then you have not technically exhausted all available remedies.²²⁰ Prison officials and their lawyers will almost always be able to think of some relief you could possibly have obtained, and the court may accept their arguments.²²¹ Courts have held that if you have been “reliably informed by an administrator that no remedies are available,” you do not have to keep appealing.²²² If you have not been told this and you want to bring suit, you should probably appeal any decision all the way up, no matter what. If you have to explain why you are appealing a positive decision or decision that you have won, you can respond by saying something like “to exhaust my administrative remedies by calling this problem to the attention of high-level officials so they can take whatever action is necessary to make sure it never happens again.”²²³ have gotten more relief at Step 2, had exhausted); Toomer v. BCDC, 537 F. App’x 204, 206 (4th Cir. 2013) (per curiam) (unpublished) (“After receiving a favorable outcome on the merits of his grievance at a lower step in the process, Toomer was not obligated to pursue an administrative appeal to Step III in order to exhaust his administrative remedies.”); Diaz v. Palakovich, 448 F. App’x 211, 216 (3rd Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (holding there is no need to appeal outcomes of “grievance resolved” or “uphold inmate”); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 935 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding “a prisoner need not press on to exhaust further levels of review once he has either received all ‘available’ remedies at an intermediate level of review or been reliably informed by an administrator that no remedies are available”); Abney v. McGinnis, 380 F.3d 663, 669 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding an incarcerated person who repeatedly got favorable decisions that later were not carried out had exhausted despite failure to appeal the favorable decisions); Sulton v. Wright, 265 F. Supp. 2d 292, 298–299 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (noting that an incarcerated person is not required to complain after his grievance has been addressed but not corrected).

220. Rozenberg v. Knight, 542 F. App’x 711, 713 (10th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person removed by Inspector General from job he complained about did not thereby exhaust because he did not also get relief on his grievance requests seeking reprimand of staff and reform of kitchen supervision); Johnson v. Thyng, 369 F. App’x 144, 148–149 (1st Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person who sought protective custody did not exhaust where his assailant was transferred as a result of his initial grievance, he did not appeal, but he continued to complain that other people who were incarcerated were threatening him, and other relief could have been granted); Carter v. Rojas, No. 1:06-cv-00251-OWW-DLB (PC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10758, *8–*10 (E.D. Cal., Feb. 4, 2009) (unpublished) (holding that plaintiff who did not take his final appeal because his problem had been solved did not exhaust, since he had also asked for a detailed description of the offending employee’s conduct, and he could also have received an apology or a change in rules and regulations), report and recommendation adopted, Carter v. Rojas, No. 1:06-cv-00251-OWW-DLB (PC), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25559 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 27, 2009) (unpublished); see also Rivera v. Pataki, 01 Civ. 5179 (MBM), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11266, at *27 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2005) (noting it “made sense” for a prisoner to appeal when prisoner had been granted partial relief but the relief did not change the challenged policy).

221. See, e.g., Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 44 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that putting prison officials on notice is not enough because “[t]he benefits of exhaustion can be realized only if the prison grievance system is given a fair opportunity to consider the grievance” and “[t]he prison grievance system will not have such an opportunity unless the grievant complies with the system’s critical procedural rules” (citations omitted)); Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177–178 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that an incarcerated person who prevailed informally needed to exhaust grievances because of “the larger interests at stake”). However, the Seventh Circuit has rejected this idea, stating that “we do not think it [is the prisoner’s] responsibility to notify persons higher in the chain when this notification would be solely for the benefit of the prison administration.” Thornton v. Snyder, 428 F.3d 690, 696–697 (7th Cir. 2005).

222. Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 935 (9th Cir. 2005); Cahill v. Arpaio, No. CV 05-0741-PHX-MHM (JCG), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80772, at *7–8 (D. Ariz. Nov. 2, 2006) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff reasonably relied on grievance hearing officer telling him that “(1) the matter was under investigation and he would not be notified of the results, (2) he could not appeal and would not be given a form, and (3) he should proceed to federal court,” even though the preprinted decision form said an appeal was available). Similarly, courts have held that if a prisoner’s grievance is rejected on the ground that the prisoner has already received the relief sought, he has exhausted. Elkins v. Schrubbe, No. 04-C-85, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43157, at *154–155 (E.D. Wis. June 15, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person who had no remaining available remedy where grievances were “rejected as moot because the issue had already been resolved in his favor in that he received the requested relief”).

223. See Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that an incarcerated person who obtained what he wanted informally was still required to exhaust because a grievance “still would have allowed prison officials to reconsider their policies and discipline any officer who had failed to follow existing policies”).

“Exhaustion” generally means using whatever formal complaint process is available (usually a grievance system or administrative appeal). The PLRA requires “Proper Exhaustion,” meaning that you follow all of the rules of the prison process.²²⁴ If you do that, you cannot be required to do more.²²⁵ Letters and other informal means of complaint, like participating in an internal affairs or inspector general investigation, generally will not be considered proper exhaustion.²²⁶ They might be if the prison rules specifically identify them as an alternative means of complaint.²²⁷ In a few cases, courts have said that non-grievance complaints that were actually reviewed at the highest levels of authority in the prison system satisfied the exhaustion requirement,²²⁸ but this result is less likely after the Supreme Court’s “proper exhaustion” holding in Woodford v. Ngo.

The exhaustion requirement refers only to administrative remedies. You do not need to go to court and exhaust judicial remedies before you go to federal court.²²⁹ The administrative remedies Congress

224. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 93, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2387, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 380 (2006) (“[T]he PLRA exhaustion requirement requires proper exhaustion”).

225. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–923, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) (“Compliance with prison grievance procedures . . . is all that is required by the PLRA to ‘properly exhaust.’”)

226. See Pavey v. Conley, 663 F.3d 899, 905 (7th Cir. 2011) (“The benefits of exhaustion can be realized only if the prison grievance system is given a fair opportunity to consider the grievance.” (emphasis supplied)); Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 177 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that talking with Sheriff’s Department investigators rather than filing a jail grievance did not satisfy the exhaustion requirement); Panaro v. City of N. Las Vegas, 432 F.3d 949, 953 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that participation in an internal affairs investigation did not amount to exhaustion because it did not provide a remedy for the incarcerated person, even though the officer was disciplined); Scott v. Gardner, 287 F. Supp. 2d 477, 488 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that letters of complaint are not part of the grievance process).

227. In Pavey v. Conley, 170 F. App’x 4, 8 (7th Cir. 2006) (unpublished), the plaintiff alleged that prison staff had broken his arm and he could not write, and the grievance rules said that prisoners who could not write could be assisted by staff. The court held that any memorialization of his complaint by investigating prison staff might qualify as a grievance—and even if they did not write it down, he might have “reasonably believed that he had done all that was necessary to comply with” the policy. See also Amador v. Andrews, 655 F.3d 89, 103–104 (2d Cir. 2011) (holding that an incarcerated person exhausted where her letter was treated as a grievance and she completed the grievance process); Ruffin v. Knowlton, No. 2:17-cv-00152-LEW, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6867, at *6 (D. Me. Jan. 15, 2019) (unpublished) (holding prisoner’s letter to State Jail Inspector appeared to satisfy the final appeal requirement of the jail); Kocsis v. Cty. of Sedgwick, No. 14-2167-CM, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161882, at *3–4 (D. Kan. Nov. 19, 2014) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where investigation followed plaintiff’s verbal (sic) complaint, since defendants’ policy provided for acceptance of and response to such complaints); Carter v. Symmes, No. 06-10273-PBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7680, at *8 (D. Mass. Feb. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a timely letter from the prisoner’s lawyer served to exhaust remedies where grievance rules did not specify use of a form, and stating that the letter could be considered as part of prisoner’s grievance); Shaheed-Muhammad v. Dipaolo, 393 F. Supp. 2d 80, 96–97 (D. Mass. 2005) (concluding that letters to officials are considered grievances under state law).

228. See Camp v. Brennan, 219 F.3d 279, 280–281 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding that use of force allegation reportedly investigated and rejected by Secretary of Correction’s office needed no further exhaustion). If you are in the position where you must argue that another kind of complaint meets the exhaustion requirement, be sure to remind the court that it is not as if Congress allowed every prisoner to go straight to court without pursuing other grievance processes first. The Supreme Court even expressed this sentiment, noting that “Congress afforded corrections officials time and opportunity to address complaints internally before allowing the initiation of a federal case.” Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 525, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, L. Ed. 2d. 12, 22 (2002). You can then argue that if prison officials actually reviewed your complaint, they had the opportunity to address the complaint internally, and exhaustion was therefore satisfied. The likelihood of success with this argument is not good and you should not bypass normal exhaustion procedures. See, e.g., Macias v. Zenk, 495 F.3d 37, 43–44 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding “after Woodford, notice alone is insufficient”; the PLRA requires both “substantive exhaustion” (notice to officials) and “procedural exhaustion” (following the rules)).

229. See Minter v. Bartruff, 939 F.3d 925, 927–928 (8th Cir. 2019) (holding state postconviction judicial remedies are not administrative remedies to be exhausted under § 1997e(a)); Pozo v. McCaughtry, 286 F.3d 1022, 1024 (7th Cir. 2002); Jenkins v. Morton, 148 F.3d 257, 259–260 (3d Cir. 1998) (finding that an incarcerated person was not required to exhaust his state judicial remedies prior to bringing an action covered by PLRA). New York does not have that kind of judicial review procedure. Instead, New York permits review of administrative decisions by Article 78 proceedings. For more information on Article 78 proceedings, see JLM Chapter 22, “How to Challenge had in mind when it passed the PLRA are internal prison grievance procedures.²³⁰ An incarcerated person is not required to exhaust state or federal tort claim procedures, unless he wishes to make a tort claim under state law or the Federal Tort Claims Act.²³¹

The United States Department of Justice (“DOJ”) maintains complaint procedures for incarcerated people alleging disability discrimination in violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act or the Rehabilitation Act. There are separate procedures for incarcerated people complaining about state and local facilities and those complaining about the Federal Bureau of Prisons.²³² Some courts have held that resort to the DOJ procedures is not a substitute for exhaustion of prison grievance remedies, but a number of courts have held that the DOJ procedures must be exhausted in addition to the prison grievance process.²³³ As to people incarcerated in federal custody, most recent decisions hold that exhausting the DOJ process is required, and federal regulations now specify that incarcerated people must complete the federal Administrative Remedy Procedure (the grievance system) before using the DOJ disability complaint procedures.²³⁴ The DOJ procedures have been amended in recent years to provide a more elaborate process which may lead to a judicial-like hearing and where participation of counsel is allowed, though the agency does not provide counsel.²³⁵ The procedures for people

Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.”

230. Rumbles v. Hill, 182 F.3d 1064, 1069 (9th Cir. 1999). See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–923, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) (“Compliance with prison grievance procedures, therefore, is all that is required by the PLRA to ‘properly exhaust.’”); Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524–525, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 21 (2002) (stating that the exhaustion requirement was intended to give corrections officials the opportunity to solve problems before suit was filed).

231. See, e.g., Rumbles v. Hill, 182 F.3d 1064, 1069–1070 (9th Cir. 1999) (stating that under the PLRA, “there is no indication that [Congress] intended prisoners also to exhaust state tort claim procedures”), overruled on other grounds by Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741 (2001). For information on tort claims generally, review Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.”

232. 28 C.F.R. § 35.170 (2019).

233. O’Guinn v. Lovelock Corr. Ctr., 502 F.3d 1056, 1062–1063 (9th Cir. 2007) (relying on the Supreme Court’s characterization of the exhaustion requirement as addressing internal prison remedies); Lavista v. Beeler, 195 F.3d 254, 257 (6th Cir. 1999) (holding that resort to the ADA procedures did not suffice to exhaust, stating: “Congress intended the exhaustion requirement to apply to the prison’s grievance procedures, regardless of what other administrative remedies might also be available.”).

234. Brown v. Cooper, No. 18-219 (DSD/BRT), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 218544 (D. Minn. Dec. 11, 2018) (unpublished) report and recommendation adopted, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2159 (D. Minn. Jan. 7, 2019) (unpublished), aff’d, 787 F. App’x 366 (8th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished); Elliott v. Wilson, No. 15-CV-1908, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48348 (D. Minn. Jan. 17, 2017) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47952 (D. Minn. Mar. 29, 2017) (unpublished); Cardenas-Urriarte v. USA, No. 14-cv-00747-JPG-PMF, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116193 (S.D. Ill. Sept. 1, 2015) (unpublished); Zoukis v. Wilson, No. 1:14cv1041 (LMB/IDD), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86788 (E.D.Va. July 2, 2015) (unpublished); Brown v. Cantrell, Civil Action No. 11-cv-00200-PAB-MEH, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 131188 (D. Colo. Sept. 14, 2012) (unpublished) (“Although certain courts have looked to the purpose of the PLRA and to the requirements imposed on non-prisoners asserting ADA claims in determining that the § 39.170 remedy need not be exhausted, . . . the Court finds that the PLRA’s clear textual mandate should control this issue.” (footnote omitted)); Haley v. Haynes, No. CV210-122, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3754 (S.D. Ga. Jan. 12, 2012) (unpublished), appeal dismissed, No. 12-11339 (11th Cir. Apr. 22, 2013) (unpublished); Bryant v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. CV11-254 CAS (DTBx), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86374 (C.D. Cal. July 11, 2011) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff required by 28 C.F.R. § 39.170 to exhaust that procedure, in addition to the federal Administrative Remedy Procedure, before proceeding with his Rehabilitation Act claim). See Gambino v. Hershberger, Civil Action No. TDC-17-1701, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47521 (D. Md. Mar. 20, 2019) (unpublished) (citing 28 C.F.R. § 39.170(d) (2019)).

235. The procedures have been conveniently summarized by one district court:

To exhaust the additional two step grievance process for disability discrimination issues, the prisoner must file a complaint within 180 days of the BOP general counsel’s final administrative decision. 28 C.F.R. § 39.170(d)(3) (2019). The complaints are processed by the Director of Equal Employment Opportunity at the Department of Justice (“DOJ”). 28 C.F.R. § 39.170(d)(4) (2019). The Director of Equal Employment Opportunity will attempt informal resolution of the issue and if informal resolution is incarcerated in state or local custody remain basic. DOJ is generally required to investigate disability complaints, but they are not required to investigate each complaint. The regulations provide that “designated agencies may exercise discretion in selecting title II complaints for resolution,” reflecting DOJ’s experience that “the Department has received many more complaints alleging violations of title II than its resources permit it to resolve.”²³⁶ If the complaint is not resolved, DOJ is required to issue findings only “[w]here appropriate.” whatever that means. Though at least one recent decision has held that state and local incarcerated people are required to exhaust this process, we are not sure why a remedy that does not even guarantee an investigation or a meaningful decision to the incarcerated person can be considered an available remedy under the PLRA, and we have not seen cases addressing that question.²³⁷

Some courts have held that exhaustion of the DOJ process was not required where there was no evidence that the procedure had been made known to the incarcerated people.²³⁸

In New York, the prison system has agreed not to argue that the DOJ procedures must be exhausted in litigation against it.²³⁹

2. What Are “Prison Conditions”?

The exhaustion requirement applies only to cases filed by incarcerated people about “prison conditions.” The Supreme Court has said that phrase applies “to all inmate suits about prison life, whether they involve general circumstances or particular episodes, and whether they allege excessive unsuccessful, the Director will issue a letter of findings within 180 days of receipt of the complaint. 28 C.F.R. §§ 39.170(f)–(h) (2019). The prisoner may then request a hearing and appeal the letter of findings. 28 C.F.R. § 39.170(i) (2019). The administrative remedies process will then be finished after the Complaint Adjudication Officer issues a ruling on the appeal. 28 C.F.R. §§ 39.170(i)–(l).

Cardenas-Uriarte v. United States, No. 14-cv-00747-JPG-PMF, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116194, at *9 (S.D. Ill. July 27, 2015) (unpublished).

236. 28 C.F.R. Pt. 35, App. A, Guidance to Revisions to ADA Regulation on Nondiscrimination on the Basis of Disability in State and Local Government Services, comment on § 35.172 (2011).

237. 28 C.F.R. § 35.172(c) (2019). Trevino v. Woodbury Cty. Jail, No. C14-4051-MWB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7423 (N.D. Iowa Jan. 22, 2015) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff was required to exhaust the DOJ procedures under 28 C.F.R. § 35.170; noting statutory language did not restrict exhaustion requirement to in-prison remedies), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62609 (N.D. Iowa May 13, 2015), aff’d, 623 F. App’x 824 (8th Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (unpublished). Some older decisions held similarly under the prior regulations. See William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *16 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 11, 2005) (unpublished); Scott v. Goord, No. 01 Civ. 0847 (LTS) (AJP), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21663 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 25, 2004) (unpublished); Burgess v. Garvin, No. 01 Civ. 10994 (GEL), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14419 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 18, 2003), on reconsideration, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4122 (S.D.N.Y. March 16, 2004) (unpublished); Rosario v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., No. 03 Civ. 859, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18032 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 24, 2003) (unpublished), vacated and remanded, 400 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2005) (per curiam).

238. Woody v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 16-862 (DWF/BRT), 2016 U.S. Dist. Lexis 182036 (D. Minn. Nov. 22, 2016) (unpublished) (holding DOJ procedures unavailable to people incarcerated in federal prison where they were not mentioned in the inmate handbook or in the Bureau of Prisons’ grievance policy and incarcerated people were not otherwise informed of them), report and recommendation adopted, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5636 (D. Minn. Jan. 13, 2017) (unpublished); Burgess v. Garvin, No. 01 Civ. 10994 (GEL), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4122 (S.D.N.Y. March 16, 2004) (unpublished) (discussing procedural requirements for people incarcerated in state prison); see also Payne v. United States Marshals Serv., No. 15 C 5970, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122015 (N.D. Ill. July 20, 2018) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where a quadriplegic incarcerated person’s disability was not accommodated in a federal courthouse, and no information about administrative remedies was provided in response to his inquiries; stating the plaintiff had exercised “reasonable diligence” and “did not need to scour the Code of Federal Regulations.” Payne v. United States Marshals Serv., No. 15 C 5970, 1028 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122015 (N.D. Ill. July 20, 2018) (unpublished).

239. Rosario v. Goord, 400 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2005) (per curiam). But see William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 11, 2005) (unpublished) (holding DOJ process must be exhausted in action against by state Division of Parole and Office of Mental Health).

force or some other wrong.”²⁴⁰ In other words, if something happened to you in prison, it is probably covered by the exhaustion requirement.²⁴¹

What anyone does outside the prison system generally will not be considered as relating to “prison conditions.”²⁴² What happened while you were in police custody generally will also not be considered as relating to “prison conditions,” though in many cases concerning events immediately after arrest, it is difficult to tell from court decisions whose custody the incarcerated person was in or where the line was drawn between being an arrestee and being an incarcerated person.²⁴³ The same might be true of medical facilities outside the prison.²⁴⁴ Disputes over whether you should be in prison at all are not about “prison conditions.”²⁴⁵ Whether parole release or revocation relate to “prison conditions” is

240. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 532, 122 S. Ct. 983, 992, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 26 (2002).

241. See Krilich v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 346 F.3d 157, 159 (6th Cir. 2003) (holding that intrusions on attorney-client correspondence and telephone conversations are prison conditions, notwithstanding argument that attorney-client relationship “transcends the conditions of time and place”); United States v. Carmichael, 343 F.3d 756, 761 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that statutorily required DNA collection is a prison condition); Castano v. Neb. Dept. of Corr., 201 F.3d 1023, 1024 (8th Cir. 2000) (failure to provide interpreters for Spanish-speaking prisoners is a prison condition). But see United States v. Hashmi, 621 F. Supp. 2d 76, 79, 84–85 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (holding that security clearances for prisoners’ attorneys put in place by the Attorney General were not “conditions” as the PLRA contemplated).

242. For example, one court held that the Department of Homeland Security’s placement of a prisoner on a “watch list” was not a prison condition requiring exhaustion; however, the prison’s actions in placing him in segregation or depriving him of telephone privileges based on that placement required exhaustion. Almahdi v. Ridge, 201 F. App’x 865, 868 (3d Cir. 2006) (unpublished). See also Singh v. U.S. Dept. of Homeland Sec., No. 1:12-cv-00498-AWI-SKO, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56664 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2013) (unpublished) (holding Privacy Act suit about Department of Homeland Security misinformation concerning an immigration detainer was not about prison conditions and need not be exhausted within Bureau of Prisons), report and recommendation adopted, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80599 (E.D. Cal. June 6, 2013) (unpublished); Johnson v. O’Malley, No. 96 C 6598, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7955, at *10–11 (N.D. Ill. May 15, 1998) (unpublished) (holding that incarcerated person who alleged that prosecutors and investigators were conspiring to harm him in jail because he had information about official corruption did not have to exhaust because claim was not about prison conditions).

243. See Bowers v. City of Philadelphia, No. 06-CV-3229, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5804, at *116 n.40 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 25, 2007) (unpublished) (holding police holding cells were not prisons for purpose of prisoner release provisions of PLRA). See Carbajal v. McCann, 808 F. App’x 620, 639 (10th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (holding § 1997e(a) applied to use of force in a court holding cell because “the PLRA applies to all claims of excessive force pressed by prisoners”; not addressing the statutory term “prison conditions”); Voss v. Kauer, No. 18-cv-848-jdp, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136215 (W.D. Wis. Aug. 13, 2019) (unpublished) (holding denial of medical care while plaintiff was in a holding cell in jail was about prison conditions, regardless of whether he had been booked); Jackson v. Dart, No. 13-CV-7713, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132582 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 26, 2016) (unpublished) (stating it is unclear “whether, during the booking and bond-setting process, he was “confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility”); Vasquez v. Williams, No. 13 Civ. 9127 (LGS), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105913 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 11, 2015) (unpublished) (noting it is “unclear” whether court holding facilities outside the prison are covered by the exhaustion requirement); see also Khatib v. County of Orange, 639 F.3d 898, 902–905 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding court holding cells were “jails” and “detention facilities” under 42 U.S.C. § 1997(1), which is not a part of the PLRA).

244. In Borges v. Adm’r for Strong Mem. Hosp., No. 99-CV-6351Fe, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18596, at *11 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2002) (unpublished), the court expressed doubt that a claim made by incarcerated people injured by dentists at an outside hospital involved prison conditions, since the grievance system probably could not take any action against defendants. However, the same court reached the opposite conclusion in Abdur-Raqiyb v. Erie County Med. Ctr., 536 F. Supp. 2d 299, 304 (W.D.N.Y. 2008), reasoning that the statute is supposed to be read broadly and that the plaintiff was still an incarcerated person while being treated at an outside medical facility.

245. See Cantu v. Bexar Cty., No. SA-17-CA-306-XR, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47095 (W.D. Tex. Mar. 22, 2018) (unpublished) (noting challenges to fact or duration of confinement are not about “prison conditions”); Hampton v. Johnson, No. 12-CV-1103, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43357 (W.D. Ark. Mar. 31, 2014) (unpublished) (holding unlawful arrest claim “would not be covered under Section 1997e(a)” and need not be exhausted); Regelman v. Weber, Civil Action No. 10 - 675, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29117 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 21, 2011) (unpublished) (holding false arrest plaintiff “is complaining about the very fact of confinement, not the conditions of confinement, and the PLRA does not apply to such claims”); Fuller v. Kansas, No. 04-2457-CM, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18977, at *5 (D. Kan. Aug. 8, 2005) (unpublished) (holding claims of false arrest and imprisonment are not not clear.²⁴⁶ Complaints from halfway houses or residential treatment programs are likely to be considered “prison conditions” as long as (1) you are there because of a criminal conviction or charge and (2) you are not free to leave.²⁴⁷ However, placement in or removal from these programs might not be about “prison conditions.”²⁴⁸ Incarcerated people complaining about not receiving psychiatric medication and referrals for their mental illness before being released are complaining about prison conditions.²⁴⁹

3. What Are “Available” Remedies?

The PLRA says you must exhaust all “available” administrative remedies before you can file a suit in federal court. The Supreme Court has said that the only exception to the exhaustion requirement is that incarcerated people need not exhaust remedies that are not “available.”²⁵⁰

An administrative remedy is “available” if it can “provide any relief” or “take any action whatsoever in response to a complaint,” even if it cannot provide the relief you prefer, such a money damages.²⁵¹ prison conditions claims under the statute), aff’d, 175 F. App’x 234 (10th Cir. 2006) (unpublished); Wishom v. Hill, No. 02-2291-KHV, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2172, at *34 (D. Kan. Feb. 13, 2004) (unpublished) (holding detention without probable cause not a prison condition); Monahan v. Winn, 276 F. Supp. 2d 196, 204 (D. Mass. 2003) (holding a Bureau of Prisons rule revision abolishing its discretion to designate some offenders to community confinement facilities did not involve prison conditions).

246. Compare Smalls v. State Bd. of Pardons and Paroles, No. CV414-031, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 67133 (S.D. Ga. May 14, 2014) (unpublished) (holding challenge to parole condition is not about prison conditions even if it was imposed, and the incarcerated person filed suit, before release); Coleman v. Dumeng, No. 10 Civ. 8766 (JGK), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18449 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 13, 2012) (unpublished) (holding challenge to parole condition is not about prison conditions), appeal dismissed, No. 12-1168 (2d Cir. Aug. 20, 2012); Hernandez-Vazquez v. Ortiz-Martinez, No. CIVIL 09-01743 (JA), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1621 (D.P.R. Jan. 8, 2010) (unpublished) (holding delayed parole hearing is not a prison condition); L.H. v. Schwarzenegger, 519 F. Supp. 2d 1072, 1081 n.9 (E.D. Cal. 2007) (holding parole violation procedures are not prison conditions), with Martin v. Iowa, 752 F.3d 725, 727 (8th Cir. 2014) (holding challenge to lack of in-person parole interviews must be exhausted since it was a “civil action with respect to prison conditions,” citing the definition from 18 U.S.C. § 3626(g), governing another part of the PLRA); Castano v. Neb. Dept of Corr., 201 F.3d 1023, 1024–1025 (8th Cir. 2000) (holding a § 1983 action alleging defendants’ failure to provide qualified interpreters at disciplinary hearings and institutional programs bearing on eligibility of parole concerned prison conditions); Ondek v. Ranatza, No. 16-725-JWD-RLB, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43116 (M.D. La. Mar. 16, 2018) (unpublished) (holding claims alleging defendants inadequately supervised and trained Parole Board with respect to the Board’s consideration of plaintiff’s pardon application concerned prison conditions); Morgan v. Messenger, No. 02-319-M, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14892, at *8–9 (D.N.H. Aug. 27, 2003) (unpublished) (holding sex offender treatment director’s disclosure of private information from plaintiff’s treatment file to parole authorities and prosecutor involved prison conditions, since the director was a prison employee and the action affected the duration of plaintiff’s prison confinement).

247. See Ruggiero v. County of Orange, 467 F.3d 170, 174–175 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that a “drug treatment campus” was a “jail, prison, or other correctional facility” and that term “includes within its ambit all facilities in which prisoners are held involuntarily as a result of violating the criminal law”); William G. v. Pataki, No. 03 Civ. 8331 (RCC), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16716, at *11–14 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 12, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that the question of whether persons incarcerated pending parole revocation proceedings were entitled to be placed in less restrictive residential treatment programs for mental illness and drug addiction involved prison conditions).

248. See Monahan v. Winn, 276 F. Supp. 2d 196, 204 (holding that a Bureau of Prisons rule revision that abolished its discretion to designate certain offenders to community confinement facilities did not involve prison conditions); Bost v. Adams, No. 1:04-0446, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38919, at *5 (S.D. W. Va. June 12, 2006) (unpublished) (explaining that BOP’s decision about placement in a halfway house, affecting duration of the sentence, does not go to the “conditions of her confinement as the term “conditions” is commonly understood.”).

249. See Bolden v. Stroger, No. 03 C 5617, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7473, at *5 (N.D. Ill. Feb. 1, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a claim of exclusion of persons with mental illness from pre-release programs was about conditions).

250. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1862, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 126–127 (2016).

251. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 736, 740–741, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1823, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 963 (2001).

You may believe that the complaint system in your prison is unfair or a waste of time, but you must use it and go through all of the steps and give the prison a chance to fix the problem first.²⁵²

Step one in finding out if there is an available remedy for your problem is to read the prison grievance procedure to see if addresses your problem. Often there are certain issues that are “non-grievable” in a particular grievance system, and you are not required to pursue a grievance about those issues that the grievance system does not address.²⁵³ If you have any doubt about whether your issue is grievable, you should try to pursue a grievance about it. In reviewing the prison grievance policy, you should see whether an issue that is non-grievable is directed to another administrative procedure, such as a disciplinary appeal, a special medical complaint procedure, a classification review system, or a separate system for reviewing denial of correspondence of publications.²⁵⁴ If there is a specialized procedure that addresses your problem, you must use it in order to exhaust the procedures available to you.²⁵⁵ If it is not clear which one is right, it is worth it to try all relevant procedures.

For example, the New York State grievance rule says:

- (1) An individual decision or disposition of any current or subsequent program or procedure having a written appeal mechanism which extends review to outside the facility shall be considered non-grievable.
- (2) An individual decision or disposition of the temporary release committee, time allowance committee, family reunion program or media review committee is not grievable. Likewise, an individual decision or disposition resulting from a disciplinary proceeding, inmate property claim (of any amount), central monitoring case review or records review (freedom of information request, expunction) is not grievable. In addition, an individual decision or disposition of the Commissioner, or his designee, on a foreign national prisoner application for international transfer is not grievable.
- (3) The policies, rules, and procedures of any program or procedure, including those above, are grievable.²⁵⁶

This means when some committees make their decisions, the decisions themselves cannot be challenged through the complaint system. However, the rules and procedures that these committees followed when they made that decision can be challenged. So, for example, you cannot use the grievance system to challenge the denial of temporary release (under article 2), but your complaint

252. Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741 n.6, 1825 n.6, 966 n.6 (2001) (“[W]e will not read futility or other exceptions into statutory exhaustion requirements where Congress has provided otherwise.”). This means, for example, that if another prisoner has just grieved the same issue and lost, you still need to grieve it yourself, even though you are certain that you will get the same ruling. See Hattie v. Hallock, 16 F. Supp. 2d 834, 836 (N.D. Ohio 1998) (dismissing incarcerated person’s action because he had not exhausted his remedies before filing).

253. Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 769–770 (6th Cir. 2006) (noting exclusion of classification disputes from grievance system); Taylor v. Swift, 21 F. Supp. 3d 237, 241–242 (E.D.N.Y. May 21, 2014) (holding exclusion of “inmate allegations of assault or harassment” means prisoners may rely on that language and refrain from exhausting such allegations, notwithstanding defendants’ construction of the phrase to mean something else), appeal dismissed, No. 14-3382 (2d Cir., Mar 10, 2015) (unpublished).

254. The relationship between disciplinary appeals and grievance procedures has been a particular source of confusion. Please see discussion between footnotes 291 and 294 of Part E(3) of this Chapter for more information regarding the relationship between disciplinary appeals and grievance procedures.

255. See, e.g., Owens v. Keeling, 461 F.3d 763, 769–772 (6th Cir. 2006) (holding prisoner who filed classification appeal exhausted his claim, despite his failure to complete an inapplicable grievance procedure); Timley v. Nelson, No. 99-3038-JWL, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10117, at *4–5 (D. Kan. Feb. 16, 2001) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person’s failure to pursue “religious accommodation” exception procedure meant that administrative remedies were not exhausted).

256. State of New York, Dept. of Corr. Servs., Directive No. 4040 § 701.3(e), Inmate Grievance Program (2016), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4040.pdf> (last visited Nov. 3, 2019). The state regulations say the same thing. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3 (2020). This directive notes, “if an inmate is unsure whether an issue is grievable, he or she should file a grievance and the question will be decided through the grievance process...”

that the Temporary Release Committee followed unfair procedures can be pursued through the grievance system (under article 3).

Sometimes issues that are grievable on paper are not actually grievable, either because of informal practice²⁵⁷ or just because grievance personnel decline to process a particular grievance.²⁵⁸ In those situations you should appeal the rejection all the way to the end of the process so officials cannot claim after you bring suit that the remedy was really available but you just didn't complete the process.

The Supreme Court has acknowledged that sometimes an administrative procedure “though officially on the books, is not capable of use to obtain relief” and is therefore not an available remedy.²⁵⁹ It described, “[a]s relevant here,” three kinds of situations where that may be the case.²⁶⁰ One of these is “when (despite what regulations or guidance materials may promise) it operates as a simple dead end—with officers unable or consistently unwilling to provide any relief to aggrieved inmates. . . . When the facts on the ground demonstrate that no such potential [for relief] exists, the inmate has no obligation to exhaust the remedy.”²⁶¹ The situation described above, where there is an informal policy not to process certain kinds of grievances, fits this “dead end” category because you cannot get relief. In several cases lower courts have found a grievance procedure to be such a “dead end” or have otherwise found that there is no potential for relief, usually because of some identifiable breakdown in the system.²⁶² Courts will require a lot of persuasion and factual support, and not just your say-so, to find that a grievance system is a “dead end” or that no relief is available.

257. See, e.g., Marr v. Fields, No. 1:07-cv-494, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24993 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 27, 2008) (unpublished) (holding evidence that hearing officers interpreted grievance policy exclusion broadly to exclude all grievances with any relationship to a disciplinary charge could excuse failure to exhaust); Casanova v. Dubois, Civil Action No. 98-11277-RGS, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13264 (D. Mass. July 22, 2002) (unpublished) (finding that, contrary to written policy, practice was “to treat complaints of alleged civil rights abuses by staff as ‘not grievable’”), remanded on other grounds, 304 F.3d 75 (1st Cir. 2002).

258. See, e.g., Williams v. Strout, No. 1:17-cv-03520-WTL-TAB, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 154435 (S.D. Ind. Sept. 11, 2018) (unpublished) (holding the remedy unavailable where plaintiff's grievance was rejected because “a tort claim is not a grievable issue,” which is not supported by the grievance policy); Mooney v. Beard, No. 2:13-cv-2290 KJN P, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82535 (E.D. Cal. June 17, 2014) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person whose grievance was cancelled because it was “outside the scope of the Inmate Appeals process” was not required to exhaust); Jackson v. Phelps, No. 10-919-SLR, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 169490 (D. Del. Nov. 19, 2013) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff had exhausted because he filed a grievance but it was returned as non-grievable), aff'd, 575 F. App'x 79 (3d Cir. 2014) (unpublished).

259. Ross v. Blake, 139 S. Ct. at 1859.

260. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. at 1859. The phrase “as relevant here” means that the Court was not claiming to describe all the possible situations in which a remedy could be unavailable, just those that seemed relevant to the facts in the Ross case. See Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 538 (7th Cir. 2018); Andres v. Marshall, 867 F.3d 1076, 1078 (9th Cir. 2017) (per curiam); Williams v. Corr. Officer Priatno, 829 F.3d 118, 123 n. 2 (2d Cir. 2016) (all holding that the three categories do not exclude the possibility that a remedy might be unavailable for other reasons).

261. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1859, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 126–127 (2016).

262. See, e.g., Brant v. Reddish, No. 3:13-cv-412-J-34MCR, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161899 (M.D. Fla. Sept. 23, 2019) (unpublished) (finding “systemic dead end” where four different incarcerated people challenging state execution protocols had received “identical, boilerplate responses” showing a “general practice of denying these types of requests for administrative relief,” and that the agency “does not intend to consider any challenge to its lethal injection protocol based on Plaintiffs’ grievances”); McArdle v. Ponte, No. 17cv2806, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 178661 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 17, 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who alleged he “never received any response to his grievances and that he ‘observed hundreds of inmates’ grievances in the grievance box . . . for days without being processed by the . . . committee” sufficiently alleged defendants were “consistently unwilling” to provide relief, supporting a “dead-end” argument); Battle v. S.C. Dept. of Corr., No. 2:18-cv-00719-TMC-MGB, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 224921 (D.S.C. Oct. 2, 2018) (unpublished) (rejecting argument that plaintiff's grievance was limited to a complaint about doorknobs where he complained of violent assault made possible by the absence of doorknobs; describing system as a “dead end” in failing to address the assault), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, No. 2:18-cv-719-TMC, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29997 (D.S.C. Feb. 26, 2019) (unpublished); V.W. by and through Williams v. Conway, 236 F. Supp. 3d 554, 585 (N.D.N.Y. Feb. 22, 2017) (finding officials “consistently unwilling to provide any relief” where defendants did not contest allegations that “administrative remedies were unavailable to the plaintiff class, with Justice Center staff

A second “on the books, but not capable of use” situation is a grievance system that incarcerated people cannot understand, or as Ross put it, is “so opaque that it becomes, practically speaking, incapable of use. In this situation, some mechanism exists to provide relief, but no ordinary prisoner can discern or navigate it. . . . [W]hen a remedy is . . . essentially ‘unknowable’—so that no ordinary prisoner can make sense of what it demands—then it is also unavailable.”²⁶³ Courts have found a number of grievance systems too opaque or unknowable to be considered available, and there have been a number of cases where the prison authorities did not even seem to understand how their systems worked.²⁶⁴

Part of making a remedy available, and not opaque, is telling the incarcerated people about it.²⁶⁵ Prison officials must take “reasonable steps to inform the inmates about the required procedures. . .

consistently refusing to provide grievance forms, ignoring grievances, and in some cases throwing grievances in the trash”); Dunn v. Dunn, 219 F. Supp. 3d 1100, 1116 (M.D. Ala. 2016) (finding mental health grievance system “so full of blind alleys and dead ends that even those who run it cannot manage to accurately and consistently describe how it works”; prisoners received no instructions in how to file and pursue a grievance, and what instructions did exist were incomprehensible and contradictory); Apodaca v. Raemisch, Civil Action No. 15-cv-00845-REB-MJW, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 148308 (D. Colo. Sept. 8, 2015) (unpublished) (holding evidence that defendants “prevented [plaintiff] from timely filing his grievances by creating an institution-wide hostile environment of retaliation and of routinely thwarting grievances,” and supported his claim with 33 non-hearsay affidavits from other incarcerated people, “each alleging frustration or fear arising from the grievance process,” was cognizable on summary judgment and created a factual dispute barring summary judgment as to whether the prison agency actively thwarted the administrative-grievance process), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 Dist. LEXIS 148307 (D. Colo. Oct. 30, 2015) (unpublished, rev’d and remanded on other grounds, 864 F.3d 1071 (10th Cir. 2017), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 5 (2019); Maxwell v. Wilcher, No. CV419-018, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35032 (S.D. Ga. Mar. 5, 2019) (unpublished) (holding allegation that his “grievance slot on the facilities [sic] kiosk machine has been full and unable to accept any grievance . . . since 2016” sufficiently alleged that the remedy was unavailable), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49492 (S.D. Ga. Mar. 25, 2019) (unpublished); see also Smith v. Lagana, 574 F. App’x 130, 132–133 (3d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (per curiam) (pre-Ross case holding allegations of a “culture of not processing, nor responding to . . . complaints against correctional guards” combined with evidence of the plaintiff’s fruitless attempts to exhaust raised a factual question of unavailability barring summary judgment); Scott v. Clarke, 64 F. Supp. 3d 813, 829 n. 9 (W.D. Va. 2014) (pre-Ross case holding evidence that the grievance coordinator was on leave and grievances were not answered, and upon her return plaintiff’s grievance could not be found, supported plaintiff’s claim of non-exhaustion); Meador v. Hammer, No. 2:11-cv-3342 LKK AC P, 2013 U.S. Dist. Lexis 27203 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 26, 2013) (unpublished) (pre-Ross case holding the remedy unavailable to the plaintiff because the prison’s internal mail system “was effectively broken at the time he was attempting to exhaust his remedies, report and recommendation adopted, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50495 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 8, 2013) (unpublished).

263. See Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1860, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 127 (2016).

264. See Does 8-10 v. Snyder, 945 F.3d 951, 963–965 (6th Cir. 2019) (describing administration of sexual abuse complaint system as too opaque and dysfunctional to be enforceable under Ross); Moore v. Lamas, No. 3:12-CV-233, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153964 (M.D. Pa. Sept. 21, 2017) (unpublished) (noting prison system’s witnesses were “not able to provide answers to key questions and [one] could not clarify the interaction between” two separate remedies, “did not elucidate certain areas of confusion,” and gave testimony that was “at best, difficult to decipher” on a fundamental point that was not clarified in written policy either”); Springer v. Unknown Rekoff, No. 3:14-CV-300, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73005 (S.D. Tex. May 12, 2017) (unpublished) (“At best, there is a loose collection of amorphous ad hoc policies that are not memorialized anywhere (not even in the employees’ handbook) and the origin of which is uncertain.”); Dunn v. Dunn, 219 F. Supp. 3d 1100, 1116 (M.D. Ala. 2016) (describing system as “so full of blind alleys and dead ends that even those who run it cannot manage to accurately and consistently describe how it works”).

265. Hernandez v. Dart, 814 F.3d 836, 842 (7th Cir. 2016) (“It is not incumbent on the prisoner ‘to divine the availability’ of grievance procedures. . . . Rather, prison officials must inform the prisoner about the grievance process. . . . The prison cannot shroud the prisoner in a veil of ignorance and then hide behind a failure to exhaust defense to avoid liability.” The incarcerated person had never been provided with the grievance policy or had an opportunity to learn about it.); Goebert v. Lee County, 510 F.3d 1312, 1322–1323 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding an appeal procedure not described in the inmate handbook, but only in the operating procedures the inmates did not have access to, was not an available remedy); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 936–937 (9th Cir. 2005) (stating “information provided [to] the prisoner is pertinent because it informs our determination of whether relief was, as a practical matter, ‘available.’”).

.²⁶⁶ This obligation can generally be satisfied by providing the prisoners with the grievance policy, describing it accurately in a handbook that is given to incarcerated people, or similar measures.²⁶⁷ The remedy may be unavailable to incarcerated people who do not get the benefit of these measures.²⁶⁸ Courts have held that prisons must inform incarcerated people of the procedures in a language that they can understand.²⁶⁹ Some courts have made statements that seemingly reject any obligation to inform incarcerated people of grievance procedures. For example, “A plaintiff’s failure to exhaust cannot be excused by his ignorance of the law or the grievance policy.”²⁷⁰ We do not think those statements accurately state the law. A more accurate statement is: “The PLRA does not excuse a failure to exhaust based on a prisoner’s ignorance of administrative remedies, so long as the prison has taken reasonable steps to inform the inmates about the required procedures.”²⁷¹ Once a policy is made known, courts will hold prison officials to it, and “will not condition exhaustion on unwritten or ‘implied’ requirements.”²⁷² Such requirements unfortunately appear rather frequently in prison

266. Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 538 (7th Cir. 2018); accord, Small v. Camden County, 728 F.3d 265, 271 (3d Cir. 2013) (“Remedies that are not reasonably communicated to inmates may be considered unavailable for exhaustion purposes.”).

267. See Davis v. Fernandez, 798 F.3d 290, 295 (5th Cir. 2015) (stating “courts may not deem grievance procedures unavailable merely because an inmate was ignorant of them, so long as the inmate had a fair, reasonable opportunity to apprise himself of the procedures”; holding that standard satisfied where “the jail’s grievance procedures are published in an inmate handbook, which is in the record, and explained on jail television, and Davis does not contend that any circumstances precluded him from accessing either source”); Gibson v. Weber, 431 F.3d 339, 341 (8th Cir. 2005) (holding that incarcerated people who admitted receiving guidance that explained the grievance procedure were not excused from using it to prove their allegations even when prison personnel had “made it clear” that they should instead voice complaints informally to medical personnel); Valerio v. Wrenn, Civil No. 15-cv-248-LM, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48847 (D.N.H. Mar. 25, 2019) (unpublished) (holding policy sufficiently communicated where it was explained in an Inmate Manual and the manual referred incarcerated people to the policy, available in prison libraries); Kelly v. Peterson, No. 13-cv-651-bbc, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94291 (W.D. Wis. July 11, 2014) (unpublished) (barring summary judgment for non-exhaustion where the plaintiff said that he never received the inmate handbook containing instructions for grievance appeals); Smith v. City of New York, No. 12 Civ. 3303, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 144122 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2013) (unpublished) (holding provision of an Inmate Handbook describing the grievance process satisfied defendants’ obligation); Minor v. Brown, No. CV 111-070, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162920 (S.D. Ga. Oct. 16, 2012) (rejecting argument that prisoner did not know retaliatory transfers were grievable where it was clear in the policy to which incarcerated people had access; distinguishing Goebert v. Lee); report and recommendation adopted, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162780 (S.D. Ga. Nov. 13, 2012); see also Watson v. Fisher, 558 F. App’x 141, 144 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding the failure to provide a handbook did not make appeal procedure unavailable where grievance appeal rejection contained instructions for how to file properly).

268. Presley v. Scott, 679 F. App’x 910, 912 (11th Cir. 2017) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding remedy unavailable where the grievance policy was omitted from the list of regulations available on the law library computer, and defendants provided no evidence that anyone informed the plaintiff of it); Hernandez v. Dart, 814 F.3d 836, 842 (7th Cir. 2016) (holding remedy unavailable to injured incarcerated person who was first hospitalized, then brought to the jail but hospitalized again in another facility, shackled all the while, and who did not receive the jail handbook or information about the grievance procedure during the 15-day period for filing a grievance); Albino v. Baca, 747 F.3d 1162, 1175–1176 (9th Cir. 2014) (en banc) (granting summary judgment to plaintiff who declared without contradiction that he was never given any orientation; had never seen the jail’s personnel manual, a complaint box, or a complaint form; and that when he repeatedly sought and was denied help from prison staff he was not provided complaint forms or told how to file a grievance, but was just referred to his criminal defense attorney; manual detailing procedures was not provided to incarcerated people).

269. Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 533 (7th Cir. 2018); Martinez v. Fields, 627 F. App’x 573, 574 (8th Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (unpublished) (noting that the grievance rules and forms were not shown to be available in Spanish).

270. Napier v. Laurel Cty., Ky., 636 F.3d 218, 222 n.2 (6th Cir. 2011) (citing cases). In that case, the court acknowledged after its sweeping statement that the grievance policy was distributed to all incarcerated people in the institution in the inmate orientation manual, 636 F.3d at 222 n.2, which generally satisfies officials’ obligation to make the procedures known.

271. Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 538 (7th Cir. 2018) (emphasis supplied).

272. Jackson v. Ivens, 244 F. App’x 508, 514 (3d Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (citing Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 234 (3d Cir. 2004)); accord, West v. Emig, 787 F. App’x 812, 816 (3d Cir. 2019) (unpublished).

exhaustion litigation.²⁷³ Since Ross v. Blake was decided, courts determining whether incarcerated people were adequately informed of the procedures have focused on the materials provided to the incarcerated people, and have often declined to hold incarcerated people to requirements that appeared in some other place.²⁷⁴

A remedy is also unavailable “when prison administrators thwart incarcerated people from taking advantage of a grievance process through machination, misrepresentation, or intimidation. . . . [W]e [have] recognized that officials might devise procedural systems (including the blind alleys and quagmires just discussed) in order to ‘trip[] up all but the most skillful prisoners.’ And appellate courts have addressed a variety of instances in which officials misled or threatened individual incarcerated people so as to prevent their use of otherwise proper procedures. As all those courts have recognized, such interference with an incarcerated person’s pursuit of relief renders the administrative process unavailable.”²⁷⁵

The Court in Ross did not explain what it meant by “machinations,” but it probably includes failing to treat incarcerated people’s grievances consistently with the prison’s own grievance rules.²⁷⁶ One (stating “regardless of whether West could have availed himself of an unofficial verbal grievance policy, his obligation to exhaust extended only to the then-existing on-the-books administrative remedies”).

273. Banks v. Patton, 743 F. App’x 690, 695–696 (7th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff could not be held to a rule that incarcerated people must cite in their grievances any prior grievances on the same subject because it did not appear in the inmate handbook); Hill v. Snyder, 817 F.3d 1037, 1040 (7th Cir. 2016) (noting that under the grievance policy, an error in time or date of the events at issue did not justify declining to decide a grievance; “Because the prison refused to process Hill’s grievance based on his deviation from an unannounced rule, no further administrative remedies were available to Hill.”); Williams v. Wilkinson, 659 F. App’x 512, 520–521 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (declining to credit claim that under “facility practice” the incarcerated person must have obtained a receipt for his Request to Staff; “the prison’s regulations, not ‘facility practice,’ define proper exhaustion” (citing Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218 (2007))); holding that rule requiring submission of Request to Staff was too vague to dismiss for non-exhaustion for submitting it to the warden, notwithstanding defendants’ argument that as a “knowledgeable inmate” the plaintiff surely knew better); Conley v. Anglin, 513 F. App’x 598, 601–602 (7th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (declining to enforce regulation requiring name or description of persons involved where the grievance form still called only for “Brief Summary of Grievance”; refusing to credit claim that adding additional facts to grievance appeal violated rules absent some evidence that such a rule existed); Hurst v. Hantke, 634 F.3d 409, 411 (7th Cir. 2011) (refusing to find non-exhaustion where incarcerated person violated apparent “secret supplement to the state’s administrative code, requiring that claims of good cause for an untimely filing be accompanied by evidence”); Glick v. Walker, 385 F. App’x 579, 583 (7th Cir. 2010) (unpublished) (declining to hold incarcerated person to a supposed grievance rule not found in the Administrative Code); Miller v. Tanner, 196 F.3d 1190, 1194 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that failing to sign and date a grievance was not a failure to exhaust since no rule required it); Apodaca v. Franco, No. CIV 15-61 JP/LF, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 213433 (D.N.M. Dec. 29, 2017) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person could rely on policy statement that a grievance not timely disposed of could be deemed exhausted, and rejecting claim that an appeal of a non-decision was available in the absence of support in the grievance policy), aff’d, 737 F. App’x 428 (10th Cir. 2018) (unpublished); Lewis v. Carswell, No. 5:15-CV-254-DPM-BD, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 201705 (E.D. Ark. May 26, 2016) (unpublished) (rejecting officials’ claim that plaintiff was obliged to send the original grievance, and not a photocopy, with his appeal, where no such rule appeared in the grievance policy), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112839 (E.D. Ark. Aug. 24, 2016).

274. See, e.g., Lanaghan v. Koch, 902 F.3d 683, 689–690 (7th Cir. 2018) (declining to hold an incarcerated person to a procedure for late grievances that was in the state Administrative Code but not in the handbook provided to prisoners); West v. Rakers, No. 3:16-cv-984-NJR-DGW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37386 (S.D. Ill. Feb. 9, 2018) (unpublished) (holding state regulation requiring grievances to be filed where the incarcerated person is “assigned,” which defendants claimed means the incarcerated person’s “parent institution,” could not be enforced where the grievance form asked for the prisoner’s “present facility” and the one where the grievance arose, and did not use the word “assigned”); Daniel v. Harper, No. 5:17-CV-19-TBR, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 208235 (W.D. Ky. Dec. 19, 2017) (declining to hold incarcerated person to an appeal procedure described in a Policy and Procedure Manual but not mentioned in the handbook provided to inmates).

275. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1860, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 127 (2016) (internal citations and footnote omitted).

276. See, e.g., Mills v. Mitchell, 792 F. App’x 511, 512 (9th Cir. 2020) (“CDCR’s repeated failure to meet the statutorily required deadlines and failure to provide proper notice made remedies effectively unavailable”); Carr v. Higgins, 700 F. App’x 598, 600–601 (9th Cir. 2017) (holding defendants not entitled to summary judgment for variety of this conduct is to treat a grievance as some other kind of request so it is not processed correctly and the plaintiff is unable to appeal and complete exhaustion.²⁷⁷ Others include making impossible demands on the person filing the grievance, such as requiring them to produce documents that the incarcerated person has no access to,²⁷⁸ placing incarcerated people in procedural impasses that prevent exhaustion,²⁷⁹ and refusing to provide necessary forms in those grievance systems that require use of a specified form.²⁸⁰ Courts are sometimes suspicious of incarcerated people's claims that they couldn't get forms, holding that they should have tried harder or should have asked more staff members.²⁸¹

As to misrepresentation, Ross was more explicit, citing with approval cases holding that “[g]rievance procedures are unavailable . . . if the correctional facility's staff misled the inmate as to the existence or rules of the grievance process so as to cause the inmate to fail to exhaust such process,” and “if prison officials misled [a prisoner] into thinking that . . . he had done all he needed to initiate the grievance process,” then “[a]n administrative remedy is not ‘available.’ ”²⁸² There are many other lower court cases finding staff misrepresentations made remedies unavailable.²⁸³ However, statements non-exhaustion where plaintiff “timely submitted a ‘concern form’ . . . but IDOC officials did not respond, and subsequently refused to collect his grievance forms”); Michel v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons FCI, No. 7:16-cv-00863-RDP-HNJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23004, *4–5 (N.D. Ala. Feb. 13, 2018) (noting apparent random assignment of plaintiff's grievances to initial and appellate levels, causing erroneous rejections for procedural defects).

277. See, e.g., Coleman v. Dart, No. 17 C 2460, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25817, at *7–8 (N.D. Ill., Feb. 19, 2019) (noting grievance was treated as a “request for services” that could not be exhausted); Thompson v. Clarke, No. 7:17cv00010, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 70508, at *21 (W.D. Va. Apr. 25, 2018) (similar to Coleman); Lewis v. Garcia, No. CV 15-9736-FMO (PLA), 2016 WL 6603997, at *8–10 (C.D. Cal. Sept. 26, 2016) (noting incarcerated person's grievance about conduct of a disciplinary proceeding was repeatedly rejected with instructions to pursue a disciplinary appeal, even though he had already prevailed on appeal and was now grieving misconduct during the proceedings), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 WL 6602554 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 7, 2016).

278. See DeBrew v. Atwood, 792 F.3d 118, 126–129 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (noting repeated rejection of incarcerated person's appeal for failure to attach a prior decision despite his showing he did not have it and could not get it).

279. See, e.g., Jamison v. Varano, No. 1:12-CV-1500, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103325, at *4 (M.D. Pa. Aug. 6, 2015) (holding the remedy unavailable where prison officials provided illegible photocopies of required documents and the plaintiff's grievance was then dismissed because of the documents' illegibility); Lee v. Sorrels, No. CIV-12-1061-C, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 166847, at *9 (W.D. Okla. Nov. 25, 2013) (noting grievance official's direction to resubmit complaint about deprivation of wheelchair to the medical office and medical officer's direction that it should be treated as a property grievance).

280. Almy v. Davis, 726 F. App'x. 553, 556–557 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (vacating summary judgment for non-exhaustion where plaintiff declared under penalty of perjury that defendants provided too few grievance forms to exhaust all of his claims); Stine v. U.S. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 508 F. App'x. 727, 729–730 (10th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (holding affidavits confirming plaintiff's claim he had been denied forms raised an issue of material fact).

281. See, e.g., Watson v. Hughes, 439 F. App'x 300, 302 (5th Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding allegation plaintiff was told grievance forms were unavailable did not excuse his non-exhaustion since he did not make the same allegation about the remaining 14 days of the period for submitting a grievance); Lowery v. Strode, No. 1:11CV-P171-M, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137184, at *4 (W.D. Ky. Sept. 25, 2012) (granting summary judgment against incarcerated person who said he was refused grievance forms but “fails . . . to describe the attempts, if any, he made to obtain a grievance form from Defendants or other officers within 48 hours of the incident and the circumstances surrounding their alleged denial/refusal”). The Seventh Circuit made an appropriate response to this sort of argument, rejecting the claim that incarcerated person must pursue all alternatives to obtain a form and holding “[u]nder defendants' proposed rule, there would be no way for a prisoner to know when he had truly tried all available alternatives at the very first step—just obtaining the right form. The exhaustion requirement would invite prison staff to require prisoners to go on scavenger hunts just to take the first step toward filing a grievance. The PLRA does not impose such a requirement.” Hill v. Snyder, 817 F.3d 1037, 1041 (7th Cir. 2016).

282. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1860 n.3, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 127 (2016) (quoting Davis v. Hernandez, 798 F.3d 290, 295 (5th Cir. 2015) and Pavey v. Conley, 663 F.3d 899, 906 (7th Cir. 2011)).

283. See, e.g., Hardy v. Shaikh, 959 F.3d 578, 587–588 (3d Cir. 2020) (holding misleading or deceptive instructions from officials can make the remedy unavailable; “clear misrepresentation” is not needed; incarcerated people must show that they were actually misled); Townsend v. Murphy, 898 F.3d 780, 783–784 (8th Cir. 2018) that are merely ambiguous (unclear in their meaning) and do not directly mislead a prisoner about using the grievance system may not be held to make the remedy unavailable.²⁸⁴ Your best course of action is to pursue the grievance process or other available administrative remedy, and do it according to the written rules, regardless of what anybody tells you.

With respect to intimidation, there is a large amount of case law, some of it cited in Ross v. Blake.²⁸⁵ Most circuits agree that threats or assaults directed at preventing prisoners from complaining may make available remedies unavailable in fact if “a similarly situated individual of ordinary firmness’ [would] have deemed [the remedy] available.”²⁸⁶ Some circuits hold that the incarcerated person must also show that the threat or intimidation actually did deter the plaintiff from pursuing administrative remedies.²⁸⁷ Intimidation from exhaustion cannot be shown by “general and unsubstantiated fears about possible retaliation” but instead requires “factual statements supporting an actual and objectively reasonable fear of retaliation for filing grievances.”²⁸⁸ However, threats of retaliation need not be graphically explicit in order to support a claim of unavailability of the remedy.²⁸⁹ Threats short of physical violence may make the remedy unavailable.²⁹⁰

There are a number of situations that frequently raise questions whether a remedy is available or what the proper available remedy is.

(reversing summary judgment for non-exhaustion where the plaintiff declared that his formal grievance was late because a sergeant wrongly advised him not to file it until he had received a response to his informal grievance—misinformation whose effect was “magnified” by lack of access to the library, which held the only available copy of the grievance directive); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 935 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding “a prisoner need not press on to exhaust further levels of review once he has . . . been reliably informed by an administrator that no remedies are available”).

284. See, e.g., Lyon v. Vande Krol, 305 F.3d 806, 809 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding that warden’s statement that a decision about religious matters rested in the hands of “Jewish experts” did not excuse non-exhaustion, but was at most a prediction that the plaintiff would lose; courts will not consider incarcerated people’s subjective beliefs in determining whether procedures are “available”); Gibson v. Weber, 431 F.3d 339, 341 (8th Cir. 2005) (holding that incarcerated people who admitted receiving a guidebook that explained a grievance procedure were not excused from following the procedure even if prison personnel had “made it clear” that they should instead voice complaints informally to medical personnel); Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 269–270 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (holding that a plaintiff who complained to three prison officials and was told by the warden to “file it in the court” had not exhausted); Yousef v. Reno, 254 F.3d 1214, 1221–1222 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding that plaintiff who was confused by prison officials’ erroneous representations that the grievance system could not address “legality and fairness” of restrictive Special Administrative Measures failed to exhaust, since in fact it could address their fairness if not their legality).

285. Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1860 n.3, 195 L. Ed. 2d 117, 127 (2016) (citing Schultz v. Pugh, 728 F.3d 619, 620 (7th Cir. 2013); Tuckel v. Grover, 660 F.3d 1249, 1252–1253 (10th Cir. 2011)).

286. Hemphill v. New York, 380 F.3d 680, 688 (2d Cir. 2004) (citation omitted); accord, Rinaldi v. United States, 904 F.3d 257, 269 (3d Cir. 2018); McBride v. Lopez, 807 F.3d 982, 987–988 (9th Cir. 2015); Himmelreich v. Federal Bureau of Prisons, 766 F.3d 576, 578 (6th Cir. 2014), aff’d and remanded on other grounds sub nom. Simmons v. Himmelreich, 136 S. Ct. 1843 (2016); Tuckel v. Grover, 660 F.3d 1249, 1252–54 (10th Cir. 2011); Verbanik v. Harlow, 441 F. App’x 931, 933 (3d Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished); Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1084 (11th Cir. 2008); Kaba v. Stepp, 458 F.3d 678, 684–686 (7th Cir. 2006).

287. Rinaldi v. United States, 904 F.3d 257, 268–269 (3d Cir. 2018); McBride v. Lopez, 807 F.3d 982, 987–988 (9th Cir. 2015); Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1085 (11th Cir. 2008).

288. Rodriguez v. Cty. of Los Angeles, 891 F.3d 776, 794 (9th Cir. 2018).

289. Kincaid v. Sangamon County, 435 F. App’x 533, 536–537 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding “[a] threat from the superintendent that [plaintiff] and his family needed to ‘shut the fuck up’ may have intimidated [plaintiff] and rendered the grievance process unavailable to him”).

290. Handy v. Varner, Civil Action No. 12-1091, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53121, at *1, 6 (W.D. Pa. Apr. 12, 2013) (finding threat to issue disciplinary charges and a negative recommendation to prevent plaintiff’s release on parole if he didn’t stop seeking a transfer deterred plaintiff from grieving and would have deterred a person of ordinary firmness); Ward v. Rabideau, 732 F. Supp. 2d 162, 165, 171–172 (W.D.N.Y. 2010) (holding plaintiffs’ fears of retaliatory conduct such as “unnecessary and harassing frisk searches, urine testing, misbehavior tickets and reports,” some of which they alleged had already occurred, raised a factual issue barring summary judgment for non-exhaustion).

For example, it can be confusing to determine how to satisfy exhaustion for discipline-related claims. There is usually a procedure for disciplinary appeals that is separate from the grievance procedure, and exhausting it will usually exhaust your discipline-related claim.²⁹¹ However, it is not always clear which procedure to use for which claim. The prison's rules should govern this question, but sometimes they do not address it, and sometimes officials do not apply their rules consistently.²⁹² The best rule of thumb is that if the rules don't spell things out, a claim that attacks the disciplinary proceeding itself requires a disciplinary appeal for exhaustion, while claims about other issues related to the proceeding—such as challenges to prison policies underlying the proceeding or claims about the conduct that led to the disciplinary proceeding—must be exhausted by grievance. This second category includes disputes about who assaulted whom in a use of force case that resulted in disciplinary charges, claims of falsification of evidence or improper motives such as retaliation for the charges, or claims that conditions of punitive confinement are unlawful.²⁹³ If you wish to challenge both the disciplinary proceeding itself as well as one of these other issues, both remedies may be required under the rules, and if there is any doubt about what the rules require, you should probably pursue both routes to be safe.²⁹⁴

291. Jenkins v. Haubert, 179 F.3d 19, 23 n.1 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that plaintiff's exhaustion of administrative remedies meant plaintiff was not barred by the PLRA exhaustion requirement); Murray v. Palmer, No. 9:03-CV-1010, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32014, at *42 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2010) (dismissing a complaint for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, including a disciplinary appeal).

292. For example, New York's rules did not say whether a claim that evidence for a disciplinary charge was fabricated should be raised by disciplinary appeal or a separate grievance, and courts have made contradictory arguments on the point. Compare Giano v. Goord, 380 F.3d 670, 679 (2d Cir. 2004) (noting defendants' argument that the plaintiff, who pursued a disciplinary appeal, should have filed a grievance to exhaust) with Larkins v. Selsky, No. 04 Civ. 5900 (RMB) (DF), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89057, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 6, 2006) (noting defendants' contrary argument that a prisoner who filed a grievance should have pursued a disciplinary appeal) and Washington v. Chaboty, No. 09 Civ. 9199 (PGG), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40245, at *8 (S.D.N.Y., Mar. 30, 2015) (noting defendants' argument that plaintiff should have raised his First Amendment claim arising from a grievance in the grievance appeal, where he had filed a grievance about it and the grievance body declined to hear it because it said the plaintiff's disciplinary appeal had exhausted his claim). New York has never clarified its rule. See also Siggers v. Campbell, No. 07-12495, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107407, at *4 (E.D. Mich. Dec. 10, 2008) (unpublished) (noting officials' argument that an incarcerated person who had tried to seek review within the disciplinary process should have pursued a grievance, even though he had pursued a grievance and it was rejected), aff'd, 652 F.3d 681 (6th Cir. 2011); Woods v. Lozer, No. 3:05-1080, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4923, at *3 (M.D. Tenn. Jan. 18, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person exhausted his administrative remedies when he appealed a decision that his use of force claim was not grievable because it was mistakenly said to seek review of disciplinary procedures and punishments); Livingston v. Piskor, 215 F.R.D. 84, 86–87 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that evidence of grievance personnel refusal to process grievances where a disciplinary report had been filed covering the same events created a factual issue preventing summary judgment).

293. Mayo v. Lavis, 689 F. App'x 23, 25 (2d Cir. 2017) (unpublished) (holding a disciplinary appeal did not exhaust a claim of excessive force arising from the same incident); Howard v. Chatcavage, 570 F. App'x 117, 118–119 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding disciplinary appeal of fighting charge did not exhaust Eighth Amendment claim of failure to protect from assault); Farid v. Ellen, 593 F.3d 233, 248 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding disciplinary appeal of contraband and smuggling charges did not exhaust claim of confiscation of papers and personal effects where confiscation was not a “constituent element of the disciplinary hearing”); Ortiz v. McBride, 380 F.3d 649, 654 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding challenge to conditions of segregation required grievance exhaustion and not a disciplinary appeal); Hamilton v. Edwards, No. 14-CV-6308 CJS, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69931, at *4 (W.D.N.Y., Apr. 25, 2019) (holding disciplinary appeal exhausted plaintiff's due process claim but not his retaliation claim); Singh v. Goord, 520 F.Supp.2d 487, 497–498 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (holding successful disciplinary appeal challenging discipline for refusing work contrary to religious beliefs did not exhaust plaintiff's challenge to the underlying disciplinary rule; a separate grievance was required); Hattie v. Hallock, 8 F. Supp. 2d 685, 689 (N.D. Ohio 1998) (holding that in order to challenge a prison rule, the incarcerated person must not only appeal from the disciplinary conviction for breaking it, but must also grieve the validity of the rule), judgment amended, 16 F. Supp. 2d 834 (N.D. Ohio 1998).

294. See, e.g., Singh v. Goord, 520 F. Supp. 2d 487, 497–498 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (holding successful disciplinary appeal challenging discipline for refusing work contrary to religious beliefs did not exhaust plaintiff's challenge to the underlying disciplinary rule; a separate grievance was required).

If you are transferred out of your prison or jail before you can file a grievance, or while your grievance is pending, that does not automatically end your exhaustion obligation or make the remedy unavailable.²⁹⁵ There may be a way to file and pursue a grievance even after you are transferred. If there is, you must try to use it to satisfy the exhaustion requirement. There is more likely to be a way to exhaust after transfer if you are transferred within the same jail or prison system. Read the grievance policy for instructions, and if there are none, ask the grievance personnel at your new institution how to proceed.²⁹⁶

If you are transferred to another jail or prison system (for example, from a county jail to a state prison after sentencing), you should also read the grievance policy from the facility where your problem arose, if you have access to it. There may be instructions you should follow for how to pursue a grievance from outside the facility, which you should follow. There may also be a statement about who may pursue grievances. If the policy says that the system is for people in the institution, or has no instruction for how people no longer in the institution can use it, then you have a good argument that the system is not available to you once you are transferred.²⁹⁷ If you can't get any information about what to do or whether you are even allowed to exhaust after transfer, it's a good idea to write to the grievance program at the previous prison and ask them to send you information about how to pursue a grievance and any necessary forms.

The point is that, unless the system is unavailable to transferred prisoners, you should do as much as you can to exhaust after transfer, because if you don't, you are bound to get an argument that your case should be dismissed for non-exhaustion. You need to be able to describe the things you did or tried to do in order to exhaust. You should also be prepared to describe any obstacles you encountered that prevented you from exhausting. For example, if you are transferred from one prison or jail system to another, you may not have access to the grievance policy of the system you were transferred from or the forms that are required by that system; you may not get your property immediately after transfer and therefore lack access to documents you need; you may not receive a decision timely, or at all, if you filed a grievance just before your transfer, so you may not be able to take a timely appeal.²⁹⁸ If you 295. Napier v. Laurel Cty., Ky., 636 F.3d 218, 223 (6th Cir. 2011) ("Generally, the transfer of a prisoner from one facility to another does not render the grievance procedures at the transferor facility 'unavailable' for purposes of exhaustion." (citation and internal quotation marks and brackets omitted); accord, Medina-Claudio v. Rodriguez-Mateo, 292 F.3d 31, 35 (1st Cir. 2002); Mills v. United States, No. CV-02-5597 (SJF)(LB), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82903, at *7 (E.D.N.Y. Nov. 14, 2006) (holding transfer "does not relieve [prisoner] of the obligation to pursue the grievance procedures available in the facility where the conduct occurred").

296. Ammouri v. ADAPPT House, Inc., No. 05-3867, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47129, at *10–13 (E.D. Pa. June 13, 2008) (noting that plaintiff was repeatedly told he could not file a grievance about matters from his previous institution).

297. See Gonzales v. Lnu, No. 14-484 WJ/KK, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 196527, at *5 (D.N.M. Sept. 8, 2015) (holding remedy unavailable to an incarcerated person transferred out of the jail four days before his time to file a grievance had expired, where the grievance policy stated it was for use by persons "in the custody" of the jail), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 WL 13651117 (D.N.M. Sept. 28, 2015); Huspon v. Rains, No. 1:11-cv-109-TWP-DML, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13732, at *4 (S.D. Ind. Feb. 1, 2013) (finding remedy unavailable to incarcerated person removed from prison immediately after injury because policy allowed formerly incarcerated people to grieve only if they had commenced the process before transfer); Rivera v. Mgmt. & Training Corp., No. CV 07-8043-PCT-SMM (MHB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45452, at *3 (D. Ariz. June 10, 2008) (noting grievance policy made no provision for exhaustion by incarcerated person during temporary transfer out of the prison system to a county jail).

298. For cases acknowledging some of these obstacles, see Miller v. Norris, 247 F.3d 736, 738, 740 (8th Cir. 2001) (holding allegation that transferred incarcerated person could not get grievance forms for transferring prison system sufficiently alleged exhaustion of available remedies); Carter v. Supnick, No. 2:18-cv-00003, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25063, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 7, 2019) (denying summary judgment for non-exhaustion where plaintiff's untimely appeals were caused by his transfer and delayed delivery of grievance decisions), report and recommendation adopted, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23244 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 13, 2019); Lawson v. Youngblood, No. 1:09-cv-00992-LJO-MJS (PC), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8577, at *3–4 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 23, 2014) (holding remedy unavailable where incarcerated person made a verbal complaint but was immediately transferred, had received no guidance as to post-transfer grievance filing and was out of contact with officers responsible for the process), report and recommendation adopted, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22203 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 20, 2014); Wright v. Smith, No.

could not exhaust after transfer, you should be prepared to explain why that was, and what you did to try to exhaust.²⁹⁹

If you did not realistically have time to file a grievance before transfer, and there is no provision for doing so after transfer, the remedy is unavailable.³⁰⁰ But if you did have time to file a grievance before being transferred but did not, the court is likely to decide that you failed to exhaust an available remedy.³⁰¹ In that situation, you should point out to the court that the statute doesn't require prisoners to file a grievance; it requires them to exhaust. So, if you had time enough to file a grievance, but not time to complete the process, and if the policy doesn't provide a way to complete the process after transfer, you may convince the court that the remedy was not available. One thing that courts seldom consider, but should, is that as a practical matter, in most cases the remedy is not really available after you are transferred, because the grievance process can no longer give you any relief after you're gone.³⁰²

People's individual characteristics and circumstances may make a remedy unavailable in some cases. For example, the grievance system was held unavailable to an incarcerated person with a broken hand who couldn't write, couldn't get assistance writing a grievance, and was not allowed to file a late

1:10-cv-00011-AWI-GSA-PC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1008158, at *7–8 (E.D. Cal. July 18, 2013) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where person incarcerated in federal prison was transferred to state prison, did not receive federal grievance decision, had no access to federal forms or process, and could not get a response by writing to federal officials; court notes defendants' burden of proof), report and recommendation adopted, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 137871 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 25, 2013); Dubois v. Washoe Cty. Jail, No. 3:12-cv-00415-MMD-VPC, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2793, *2 (D. Nev. Jan. 7, 2013) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where plaintiff was extradited the day after his complaint arose, but defendants failed to show he could have exhausted in a day or could have started the process from his new location); Rodriguez v. Mount Vernon Hosp., No. 09 Civ. 5691 (GBD) (JLC), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103494, at *12–13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 7, 2010) (finding factual dispute with respect to incarcerated person's ability to appeal a grievance during a temporary transfer from state prison to local jail), report and recommendation adopted, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103539 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2010), order aff'd, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112325 (S.D.N.Y., Oct. 5, 2010); Key v. Toussaint, 660 F. Supp. 2d 518, 524–525 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (denying summary judgment for non-exhaustion where grievance policy prescribed submitting grievances to the grievance clerk, which a transferred incarcerated person could not do, and using a particular appeal form, which a transferred person had no access to); Green v. Roberts, No. 2:06-CV-667-WKW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87969, at *4 (M.D. Ala. Oct. 29, 2008) (holding incarcerated person who was transferred from jail, wrote to the jail seeking to exhaust, and received no response for almost three months and then filed suit, satisfied the exhaustion requirement); Basham v. Corr. Med. Servs., No. 5:06-cv-00604, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66423, at *5 (S.D.W. Va. Aug. 29, 2007) (holding defendants failed to show a grievance appeal was available to a hospitalized prisoner separated from his grievance documents); see King v. Coleman, No. CIV S-04-1158 MCE KJM P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58991, at *1–3 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 13, 2007) (holding incarcerated person injured in a jail van who was not incarcerated in that jail was not shown to have access to the jail's orientation handbook, the grievance form, or the grievance process), report and recommendation adopted, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72641 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 28, 2007).

299. See Mellender v. Dane County, No. 06-C-298-C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80103, at *7–12 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 27, 2006) (finding that an incarcerated person's attempts to mail a grievance from prison after his transfer and to use the prison's grievance system to complain about an incident that occurred at another facility, combined with the prison's refusal to cooperate were good reasons for him being unable to exhaust remedies).

300. See, e.g., Berry v. Kerik, 366 F.3d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding dismissal proper where March and October complaints could have been exhausted before release the following January; also citing, dubiously, subsequent returns to the jail system); Mitchell v. Hammons, No. 5:11-cv-00029, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 167687, at *3 (S.D.W. Va., Nov. 26, 2013) (dismissing for non-exhaustion where plaintiff remained at sending facility for almost two months before transfer because he had "more than adequate time to begin and potentially complete the administrative remedy process;" process was supposed to be completed within 60 days, and plaintiff remained in the jail for about 50 days).

301. James v. Williams, No. 1:04CV69-1-MU, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10076, at *6 (W.D.N.C. May 24, 2005) (noting incarcerated person had 11 days to file a new grievance after his first grievance was rejected and that under the grievance policy he could have filed it at the new prison too).

302. See White v. Bukowski, 800 F.3d 392, 397 (7th Cir. 2015) (noting that the grievance system at issue did not entertain grievances from persons no longer in the jail, "presumably because the jail could do nothing for such a person unless it awards damages to successful grievants, which the jail in this case does not").

grievance when his hand had recovered.³⁰³ Courts have agreed that other medical conditions can make remedies unavailable, though they look closely at such claims and reject many as unconvincing, and others on the ground that the system made provisions for injured incarcerated people.³⁰⁴ Decisions are similarly mixed in cases involving other characteristics, including:

- a) Physical disability. Courts have acknowledged that some incarcerated people are unable to use grievance systems by reason of disability,³⁰⁵ though they have rejected such claims in cases where the individual had previously used the system, or where assistance in grieving was available.³⁰⁶
- b) Illiteracy or lack of education. Some courts have held remedies unavailable to persons unable to use them because of lack of education or literacy, though usually in conjunction

303. Days v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 863, 867 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting that “one’s personal inability to access the grievance system could render the system unavailable”).

304. See, e.g., Hurst v. Hantke, 634 F.3d 409, 411–412 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding remedy would be unavailable if incarcerated person were incapacitated by stroke during time when he was required to file grievance, and he was not allowed to file a late grievance); Pavey v. Conley, 170 F. Appx 4, 9 (7th Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (holding grievance procedure might be unavailable to a prisoner who couldn’t write because of injury and was isolated from anyone who could help him); Franklin v. Fewell, No. 3:13-CV-673 JD, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15322, at *4 (N.D. Ind. Feb. 7, 2014) (rejecting defendants’ argument that plaintiff was capable of filing a grievance upon his return from an outside hospital after emergency surgery, and noting plaintiff spent nine days in the prison infirmary and was taking prescription pain medication. An evidentiary hearing was required to resolve the question); Childers v. Bates, No. C-08-338, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71170, *6–7 (S.D. Tex. Jan. 14, 2010) (holding remedy that required identification of defendants was not “personally available” to prisoner who could not do so because of a head injury and memory loss), report and recommendation rejected on other grounds, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29186 (S.D. Tex. Mar. 26, 2010). See, e.g., Wilborn v. Ealey, 881 F.3d 998, 1005–1006 (7th Cir. 2018) (rejecting claim of incapacity from incarcerated person held in the infirmary who failed to show a basis for inability to grieve because “[h]e ha[d] not shown, for example, that he lacked access to the grievance forms or that his injuries prevented him from researching or writing,” and he filed a different grievance immediately upon release); Ferrington v. Louisiana Dept. of Corr., 315 F.3d 529, 532 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding plaintiff’s near blindness did not exempt him from exhausting because he managed to file suit, as well as other grievances and appeals). Also see, e.g., McCormick v. Corizon Health, Inc., No. 13-11098, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28645, *4 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 6, 2014) (holding temporary loss of vision did not excuse non-exhaustion where grievance policy provided for staff assistance filing grievances); Lopez v. Goodman, No. 10-CV-6413, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85565, at *3 (W.D.N.Y. June 18, 2013) (holding incarcerated person was not excused from exhaustion by his hospitalization where the grievance system provided for extensions of time for mitigating circumstances), reconsideration denied, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 135046 (W.D.N.Y. Sept. 20, 2013).

305. See, e.g., Lanaghan v. Koch, 902 F.3d 683, 686, 688–689 (7th Cir. 2018) (holding remedy was not available to a incarcerated person with limited use of his hands who was not shown to have been able to complete the grievance form under the circumstances); Johnson-Ester v. Elyea, No. 07-CV-4190, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18049, at *6–8 (N.D. Ill. Mar. 9, 2009) (holding incarcerated person who could not write, ambulate, or make himself understood, and may have been irrational or delusional at times, was not capable of pursuing a grievance; letters from his mother and lawyer about his condition put officials on sufficient notice they should have assisted him in filing a grievance; grievance system made no provision for outside persons to use it on a incarcerated person’s behalf); Williams v. Hayman, 657 F. Supp. 2d 488, 495–497 (D.N.J. 2008) (holding evidence of the deaf plaintiff’s inability to communicate in writing or with his counselor raised a factual issue concerning availability to him of the grievance remedy).

306. Thomas v. Holder, No. PJM-10-246, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84764, at *3 (D. Md. Aug. 18, 2010) (dismissing claim of blind incarcerated person for non-exhaustion where he had filed 15 grievances in the preceding several years); Oliver v. Va. Dept of Corr., No. 3:09-CV-00056, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33931, at *6 (W.D. Va. Apr. 6, 2010) (dismissing claim of legally blind incarcerated person who had filed numerous complaints and grievances, without inquiry into her access to the system for this grievance); Elliott v. Monroe Corr. Complex, No. C06-0474RSL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5242, at *3 (W.D. Wash. Jan. 23, 2007) (dismissing for non-exhaustion where plaintiff with cerebral palsy was provided with assistance and had filed numerous grievances, though he hadn’t actually exhausted any).

- with other barriers.³⁰⁷ Others have rejected such claims, often based on the availability of assistance.³⁰⁸
- c) Lack of proficiency in English. A number of cases have held that when incarcerated people who do not have access to grievance procedures, or to assistance in filing grievances, in a language that they can understand, the remedy may be unavailable.³⁰⁹ Others have rejected such claims, either generally³¹⁰ or based on the individuals' having used the system previously,³¹¹ or the availability of assistance.³¹²
 - d) Age. Courts have generally rejected claims that being young makes remedies unavailable.³¹³ However, one court declined to find remedies unavailable without evidence

307. See, e.g., Womack v. Smith, No. 1:06-CV-2348, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20750, at *9 (M.D. Pa. Mar. 2, 2011) (holding plaintiff's illiteracy in combination with other factors made the remedy unavailable; illiteracy by itself would not excuse non-exhaustion where prisoner did not ask for assistance as provided in grievance policy); Robertson v. Dart, No. 07 C 4398, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66794, at *3 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 3, 2009) (denying summary judgment on exhaustion where the illiterate plaintiff alleged that a staff member gave him wrong information about how to mark a form to appeal his grievance decision); Langford v. Ifediora, No. 5:05CV00216WRW/HLJ, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34915, at *3–4 (E.D. Ark. May 11, 2007) (holding plaintiff's age, deteriorating health, and lack of general education, combined with the prison's failure to provide him assistance in preparing grievances, raised a factual issue concerning the availability of the remedy to him); Kuhajda v. Illinois Dept. of Corr., No. 05-cv-3236, 2006 WL 1662941, at *1 (C.D. Ill. June 8, 2006) (holding that an incarcerated who is hearing-impaired and has limited ability to read and write, and who did not have the assistance of a sign language interpreter, raised a factual issue concerning availability of remedies).

308. See, e.g., Ramos v. Smith, 187 F. App'x 152, 154 (3d Cir. 2006) (per curiam) (unpublished) (rejecting claim of illiteracy as a defense to non-exhaustion, since federal regulations require assistance to illiterate prisoners, and plaintiff did not allege that he asked for such assistance); Levan v. Thomas, No. CV 10-2278-PHX-GMS (LOA), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73532, at *2 (D. Ariz. July 7, 2011) (rejecting claim of illiteracy, since grievance policy provided for assistance to illiterate persons, and defendants said grievance staff would help individuals as needed).

309. See, e.g., Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 533 (7th Cir. 2018); Martinez v. Fields, 627 F. App'x. 573, 574 (8th Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (unpublished) (reversing summary judgment for non-exhaustion by Spanish-speaking incarcerated person who did not understand English where grievance rules and forms were only in English); Salcedo-Vazquez v. Nwaobasi, No. 3:13-CV-00606-NJR-DGW, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78123, at *4 (S.D. Ill. June 9, 2014) (finding that plaintiff "never was given an Orientation Manual in Spanish and that no person in the jail, especially not his Counselor, made any effort to inform him of the grievance process in a language that he readily understood. Assistance from other inmates cannot be a substitute for assistance from actual jail personnel."); Beltran-Ojeda v. Doe, No. CV 12-1287-PHX-DGC (MEA), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 163803, at *3 (D. Ariz. Nov. 18, 2013) (holding allegations of failure to provide an interpreter, to accept Spanish grievances, or to reply in a language other than English may support a claim of unavailability), reconsideration denied, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35076 (D. Ariz. Mar. 18, 2014).

310. Linares-Alcantara v. Longley, No. 3:13-cv-1085-DCB-MTP, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 124163, at *5 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 5, 2014) ("Inability to fully understand the language does not create a special circumstance justifying departure from the exhaustion requirement.").

311. Figueroa v. Bass, 522 F. App'x. 643, 644 (11th Cir. 2013) (per curiam) (unpublished) (rejecting claim of limited English proficiency because the plaintiff had filed other grievances later and didn't explain why he couldn't have done so at this point); Zarate v. S.C. Dept. of Corr., No. 0:13-cv-3079 DCN, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150935, at *4 (D.S.C. Oct. 24, 2014) (noting that plaintiff was able to file pleadings in English and has submitted letters to defendants in English).

312. Mendez v. Sullivan, 488 F. App'x. 566, 568 (3rd Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (unpublished) (affirming summary judgment for non-exhaustion based on evidence of bilingual handbook, availability of interpreters and of counselors to assist Spanish-speaking prisoners); Zarate v. S.C. Dept. of Corr., No. 0:13-cv-3079 DCN, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 150935, at *4 (D.S.C. Oct. 24, 2014) (citing plaintiff's failure "to allege that he requested, or was denied, any assistance from prison officials in relation to filing a prison grievance" in granting summary judgment for non-exhaustion).

313. See, e.g., Brock v. Kenyon County, KY, 93 F. App'x 793, 797–798 (6th Cir. 2004) (unpublished); Doe v. Michigan Dept. of Corr., No. 13-14356, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14823, at *16–17 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 8, 2016) (unpublished) (declining to "relax or create an exception to the PLRA's exhaustion requirement based on a prisoner's status as a youth"), reconsideration denied, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59683 (E.D. Mich., May 5, 2016) (unpublished). But see Moore v. Louisiana Dept. of Pub. Safety and Corr., No. CIV.A. 99-1108, 2002 WL that “the relevant administrative procedures were explained in terms intelligible to [average] persons, particularly taking into consideration plaintiff’s age (14 years old).”³¹⁴ Others have interpreted grievance rules especially leniently in cases involving juvenile incarcerated people.³¹⁵

- e) Mental illness. Many courts have acknowledged that mental illness or cognitive disabilities may make remedies unavailable.³¹⁶ Others have rejected such claims, sometimes because they believed the plaintiff’s prior use of the grievance system or the courts disproved the claim of unavailability, others because the plaintiff did not sufficiently plead or provide evidentiary support for the claim.³¹⁷

1791996, at *4 (E.D. La. Aug. 5, 2002) (unpublished) (declining to enforce 30-day grievance time limit; declaring 30-day delay in filing complaint “not unreasonable” given that the plaintiff was a juvenile in state custody).

314. Bailey v. Wienandt, No. 17-CV-943-BBC, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 185808, at *8 (W.D. Wis. Oct. 30, 2018) (unpublished) (citing Ramirez v. Young, 906 F.3d 530, 535 (7th Cir. 2018)).

315. See, e.g., Q.F. v. Daniel, 768 F. App’x 935, 942–943 (11th Cir. 2019) (unpublished); Troy D. v. Mickens, 806 F. Supp. 2d 758, 768–769 (D.N.J. 2011) (holding administrative procedure was exhausted by an attorney’s letter to juvenile institution superintendent, since it created an opportunity for investigation and resolution at the facility level); Lewis v. Gagne, 281 F. Supp. 2d 429, 433–435 (N.D.N.Y. 2003). See also Apkarian v. McAllister, No. 17-CV-309-JDP, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12959, at *8–13 (W.D. Wis. Jan. 28, 2019) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment for non-exhaustion in youth facility where plaintiffs had to submit their grievances to the staff members they complained about, since the option for submitting directly to the superintendent was omitted from the inmate handbook, and there was no evidence that the underlying regulations permitting that option were made available to the incarcerated people despite a policy requirement to do so).

316. See, e.g., Lynch v. Corizon, Inc., 764 F. App’x 552, 554 (7th Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff’s affidavit stating “that the defendants altered his medication, that doing so left him too confused to complete the grievance process, and that they did this for the non-medical reason of creating that disabling confusion” raised factual issues barring summary judgment and requiring an evidentiary hearing); Weiss v. Barribeau, 853 F.3d 873, 875 (7th Cir. 2017) (denying summary judgment for non-exhaustion where defendants failed to show that their procedures could be used by incarcerated person suffering from mental breakdown requiring hospitalization); Beaton v. Tennis, 460 F. App’x 111, 113–114 (3d Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (evidence that prison staff took advantage of plaintiff’s confused mental state arising from a skull fracture and post-concussion syndrome to make him withdraw his grievance raised a factual issue barring summary judgment for non-exhaustion); Braswell v. Corr. Corp. of America, 419 F. App’x 622, 625–626 (6th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (noting defendants failed to explain how the plaintiff could have exhausted “while suffering a mental breakdown requiring hospitalization”); Adams v. Wexford Health Sources, Inc., No. 15-CV-604-NJR-DGW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168030, at *19 (S.D. Ill. Sept. 28, 2018) (unpublished) (concluding on summary judgment that plaintiff “was not mentally or physically capable of filing a grievance regarding the medical treatment he received at Menard while he was incarcerated there, and therefore administrative remedies were not available to him”); Carter v. Paramo, No. 3:17-CV-1833-JAH-AGS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 164606, at *17–18 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 25, 2018) (unpublished) (holding allegation of head and facial injuries including multiple fractures resulting in cognitive impairment raised a factual issue barring summary judgment as to plaintiff’s ability to exhaust properly); Smith v. Singh, No. 3:17-CV-170-NJR-DGW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141811, at *10–11, 4 (S.D. Ill. July 27, 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person with schizoaffective disorder who was hospitalized for lithium toxicity “was incapable of filing a grievance for much of the time ... after his release from the hospital. While the record contains instances of lucidity, Plaintiff continued to suffer periods of mental insufficiency, confusion, and lack of memory such that he was incapable of filing a grievance.”).

317. Geter v. Baldwin State Prison, 974 F.3d 1348, 1354–1357 (11th Cir. 2020) (affirming rejection of claim that mental disability barred exhaustion based on plaintiff’s performance in filing and pursuing the lawsuit); Washington v. Fresno Cty. Sheriff, No. 1:14-CV-00129-SAB, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27997, at *27–29 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 21, 2018) (unpublished) (holding evidence of lack of competency was stale and there was no current evidence of inability to exhaust for mental health reasons); Wakeley v. Giroux, No. 1:12-CV-2610, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52121 (M.D. Pa. Apr. 15, 2014) (unpublished) (rejecting claim of inability to file a grievance where mental health records and cooperation with investigators showed plaintiff was capable of filing); Marella v. Terhune, No. 03CV660-BEN MDD, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105282, at *21–24 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 16, 2011) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that plaintiff was unable to grieve because of medication, shock, and pain, relying on expert opinion based on review of his medical records, and his ability to perform other tasks during the same time period). Jones v. Nelson, 729 F. App’x 467, 469 (7th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that “mental limitations” prevented plaintiff from grieving where he had filed 23 grievances); Lopez v. Swift, No. 12-CV-4099-TOR, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130469, at *9–10 (E.D. Wash. Sept. 16, 2014) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that depression prevented

Some courts in mental health cases have gone further than saying the plaintiff's claim was not convincing enough. They have said that under Ross v. Blake, claims that a remedy was unavailable because of a characteristic of the incarcerated person are no longer allowed.³¹⁸ So far, appellate courts reviewing these decisions have not adopted that view, but have said that the incarcerated people in those cases failed to show that they were mentally disabled enough to make the remedy unavailable.³¹⁹ There is no basis for claiming that Ross eliminated claims of unavailable remedies based on medical or mental health condition, disability, language barriers, etc.

Prison rules and practices may also make remedies unavailable. Examples include refusing to provide postage and other supplies for indigent (poor) incarcerated people where incarcerated people must use the mail to exhaust, requiring incarcerated people to supply copies of documents but not providing a means to obtain them, or refusing to allow writing materials or documents to incarcerated plaintiff from exhausting where he had filed another grievance within the same month); Williams v. Crosby, No. 5:12-CT-3056-F, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32769, at *15–19 (E.D.N.C. Mar. 4, 2013) (unpublished) (rejecting mental-health related claim as “self-serving and conclusory” since the plaintiff had previously used the grievance system, despite evidence of “paranoid ideation and hallucinatory delusions of conversations with God and sexual threats from inmates and staff” immediately preceding the incident). Brinson v. Kirby Forensic Psychiatric Ctr., No. 16-CV-1625 (VSB), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168163, at *19 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff in psychiatric facility “failed to provide competent evidence that he was so impaired as to be unable to pursue any of the administrative remedies available to him”); Harvey v. Corr. Officers 1–6, No. 9:09-CV-0517 LEK/TWD, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83466, at *7 (N.D.N.Y. June 19, 2014) (unpublished) (stating “although Plaintiff’s medical records do show a history of mental illness, Plaintiff has not shown that his failure to follow the grievance procedure resulted from this condition”; finding confusion from mental illness or other sources was not the cause of non-exhaustion), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 612 F. App’x 35 (2d Cir. 2015) (unpublished).

318. The Ross case is discussed at the beginning of Part E(3) of this Chapter, “What Are Available Remedies?” For more information on Ross, please see the discussion about Ross, and subsequent cases, from footnotes 250 through footnote 285. Osborn v. Williams, No. 3:14-CV-1386 (VAB), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 212954, at *21 (D. Conn. Dec. 29, 2017) (unpublished) (holding Ross’s elimination of the “special circumstances” exception to exhaustion means that the only question before the court is whether the regulations provide “a procedural route to obtain administrative relief”); Griggs v. Holt, No. CV 117-089, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS, at *16–19 (S.D. Ga. Oct. 24, 2018) (unpublished); Geter v. Baldwin State Prison, No. 516CV00444TESCHW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 138409, at *17 (M.D. Ga. Aug. 16, 2018) (unpublished) (stating “subjective considerations of a prisoner’s assumed particular mental deficiencies effectively creates a ‘fourth avenue’ to show a prison’s grievance procedure was unavailable under the PLRA. To do so would effectively carve out a ‘special circumstance’ for a particular plaintiff that the United States Supreme Court unequivocally rejected in Ross.”); Galberth v. Washington, No. 14 CIV. 691 (KPF), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 120595, at *29 (S.D.N.Y. July 31, 2017) (unpublished) (stating in connection with a claim of mental disability that in Ross “the Court seems to have affirmed the outward-looking inquiry focused on what is made available by a prison, and rejected the inward-looking inquiry concerned with [what] is perceived to be available by a prisoner”).

319. Geter v. Baldwin State Prison, 974 F.3d 1348, 1354–1357 (11th Cir. 2020); Osborn v. Williams, 792 F. App’x 88, 90–91 (2d Cir. 2019) (unpublished); Galberth v. Washington, 743 F. App’x. 479, 480 (2d Cir. 2018) (unpublished).

people in restrictive housing units.³²⁰ In some cases, particular categories of incarcerated people are simply excluded from using the grievance system.³²¹

Some prisons and jails have rules that are explicitly designed to limit incarcerated people's use of the grievance system, and, depending on their severity, those rules may have the effect of making the remedy unavailable.³²² In a system of "modified access status," which requires some incarcerated

320. Williams v. Pollard, No. 07-C-1157, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86332, at *26–27 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 21, 2009) (unpublished) (holding remedies were unavailable to an incarcerated person who could not obtain envelope for an appeal that had to be mailed); Bey v. Caruso, No. 06-14909, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72462, at *2 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (noting that denial of "postal loan" was based on plaintiff's using his religious name suffix on the relevant form, contrary to the policy he was trying to challenge; "the procedural question of exhaustion is inextricably intertwined with the merits of this case"); Cordova v. Frank, No. 07-C-172-C, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54789, at *16 (W.D. Wis. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (noting that "insofar as defendants have devised a grievance system that prevents [poor] prisoners from filing appeals of their inmate grievances, they have made the grievance process unavailable to those inmates and may not use failure to file timely appeals as a ground for dismissing subsequent lawsuits."); Almy v. Davis, 726 F. App'x. 553, 557 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (vacating dismissal for non-exhaustion where grievance was rejected because plaintiff failed to attach a copy of the challenged disciplinary decision because he did not have the funds to pay for it, and prison officials already had the charges anyway); DeMartino v. Zenk, No. 04-CV-3880(SLT)(LB), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75600, (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 21, 2009) (unpublished) (holding factual question whether plaintiff had access to a copier in order to comply with the grievance procedure barred summary judgment for non-exhaustion); Iseley v. Beard, No. CIV. 1:CV-02-2006, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52014, *19 (M.D. Pa. June 15, 2009) (unpublished) (holding remedy unavailable where copies of documents were required to appeal but there was no copier access in Restricted Housing Unit). West v. Emig, 787 F. App'x. 812, 815–816 (3d Cir. 2019) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's assertion that he was denied a pen in "Psychological Close Observation" barred summary judgment for non-exhaustion); Pierce v. Cook County, No. 12 C 5725, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122889, at *6–16 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 4, 2014) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment for non-exhaustion where the plaintiff averred that he had no access to writing materials while in the hospital during the period for filing a timely grievance); Saenz v. Nickel, No. 13-CV-697-BBC, 2014 U.S. Dist. 93007, at *3–11 (W.D. Wis. July 9, 2014) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment where the defendants failed to show the plaintiff had access to necessary grievance forms system in observation unit); Woods v. Carey, No. CIV S-04-1225 LKK GGH P, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69832, at *1–2, 4–5 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 13, 2007) (unpublished) (vacating recommendation for dismissal because of failure to exhaust and demanding an inquiry into plaintiff's access to his legal property, which he claims he did not have, thereby preventing his timely appeal).

321. Hurtado-Gomez v. McCleary, No. 1:12-CV-00606-BLW, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32825, *14–18 (D. Idaho Mar. 12, 2014) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion in light of plaintiff's allegations that he was told upon conviction that he was no longer a jail inmate and was refused jail grievance forms); Zuege v. Geffers, No. 08-C-1124, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102406, at *8–11 (E.D. Wis. Sept. 28, 2010) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where incarcerated person was in program in which right to use the grievance system was suspended); Daker v. Ferrero, No. 1:03-CV-2526-RWS, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30591, at *6–8 (N.D. Ga. Nov. 24, 2004) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person placed in "sleeper" status, meaning he remained officially assigned to another prison and was not allowed to file grievances where he was actually located, lacked an available remedy); see also Sease v. Phillips, No. 06 Civ. 3663 (PKC), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60994, at *15–16 (S.D.N.Y. July 25, 2008) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment where incarcerated person in "transient" status was told his grievance could not be processed, and when he filed one it was never processed);

322. Pleasant-Bey v. Luttrell, No. 2:11CV-0218-TLP-TMP, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152864, *8 (W.D. Tenn. Sept. 7, 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff exhausted where he filed grievances that were rejected for exceeding a limit of five grievances within a 30-day period followed by a restriction to two more grievances within the following six months; he "took advantage of each step that the Jail offered for resolving the claims that he had"), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, and remanded, No. 18-6063, Order (6th Cir. Nov. 7, 2019) (unpublished); Peck v. Nevada, No. 2:18-CV-00237-APG-VCF, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112079, at *15 (D. Nev. July 5, 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person stated a "colorable claim of denial of access to the courts" where his allegations showed "he is unable to grieve all the issues he wishes to pursue in civil rights and habeas litigation due to the restrictions in AR 740 to one grievance per week and one issue per grievance"; allegation that staff are being trained to "fraudulently defeat" exhaustion attempts also states a claim); Lerajjareanra-O-Kel-Ly v. Zmuda, No. 1:10-CV-263-MHW, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127806, at *8 (D. Idaho Sept. 7, 2012) (unpublished) ("Should a prisoner have four legitimate grievances at roughly the same time, he will be able to pursue only three, and whether he can file the fourth in time is wholly dependent upon whether prison officials process the other three before the time for the filing of the fourth grievance expires. Here, the prison has chosen to make the grievance system unavailable to any prisoner who already has three pending grievances."); Stine v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 11-CV-00109-WJM-CBS, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34836, at *7 (D. Colo. Mar. 15, 2012) (unpublished) ("If a people to obtain prior permission to file a grievance, if permission is not granted for a non-frivolous claim, the remedy is not available.³²³ However, some courts have held that rules that limit the number of grievances that will be processed do not make the remedy unavailable, but merely make the incarcerated person “prioritize his grievances.”³²⁴ We think that a rule that requires incarcerated people to abandon some valid grievances violates the “unconstitutional conditions” doctrine, which “vindicates the Constitution's enumerated rights by preventing the government from coercing people into giving them up.”³²⁵

Courts may be skeptical of a claim that you have exhausted your remedies, or a claim that you were not informed or were misinformed about the grievance process, without further evidence.³²⁶ You should therefore do everything you can to exhaust even if you know the effort is going to fail, and also keep records so you can prove you tried. In other words, file a grievance no matter what. For example, if prison staff refuse to provide you with grievance forms, write your grievance on a sheet of paper, explain that you cannot get the forms, and appeal if they reject the grievance for not being on the right form.³²⁷ If prison staff tell you that you do not need to file a grievance, file a grievance anyway; if they prisoner is pursuing a case that involves multiple claims, the Court could see how the BOP policy of only issuing one Informal Resolution form at a time could hinder the prisoner's ability to exhaust his administrative remedies. This is especially true given the short time constraints typically associated with the prison grievance system.”), motion to amend denied, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108720 (D. Colo. Aug. 3, 2012) (unpublished), affirmed in part, reversed in part, 508 F. App'x 727 (10th Cir. 2013) (unpublished);

323. Walker v. Mich. Dept of Corr., 128 F. App'x 441, 446 (6th Cir. 2005) (unpublished); Reeves v. Corr. Med. Servs., No. 08-13776, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107122, at *1–7 (E.D. Mich. Nov. 17, 2009) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff exhausted by asking for a form and being denied); Marr v. Jones, No. 1:07-CV1201, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 4065, at *5–8 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 22, 2009) (unpublished) (holding defendants failed to identify any available remedy where incarcerated person on modified grievance status was denied grievance forms) Marr v. Jones, No. 1:08-CV-1201, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50130 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 22, 2009) (unpublished); Dawson v. Norwood, No. 1:06-CV-914, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82205, at *9 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 6, 2007) (unpublished) (“If a prisoner has been placed on modified access to the grievance procedure and attempts to file a grievance which is deemed to be non-meritorious, he has exhausted his ‘available’ administrative remedies as required by § 1997e(a).” (citation omitted)) Dawson v. Norwood, No. 1:06-CV-914, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115088 (W.D. Mich. Sept. 16, 2008) (unpublished).

324. Pearson v. Taylor, 665 F. App'x 858, 867–868 (11th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (holding a rule that an incarcerated person could only have two grievances pending at a time did not make the remedy unavailable; stating that incarcerated people must comply with grievance rules, and the two-grievance limit was a grievance rule); Wilson v. Epps, 776 F.3d 296, 300–301 (5th Cir. 2015) (holding “backlogging” system under which only one grievance would be processed at a time is not unconstitutional and does not abrogate the exhaustion requirement); Wilson v. Boise, 252 F.3d 1356, 2001 WL 422621, at *4 (5th Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (Table, text in Westlaw) (upholding “backlogging” system under which only one grievance would be processed at a time) Wilson v. Boise, No. 00-30803, 2001 U.S. App. LEXIS 31249 (5th Cir. Mar. 30, 2001); Williams v. Owens, No. 5:13-CV-254 MTT, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 128476, * (M.D. Ga. Sept. 15, 2014) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that plaintiff could not exhaust because of rule that no incarcerated person could have more than two grievances pending; “... Plaintiff must adhere to the procedural rules in the grievance procedure when exhausting his administrative remedies. His inability to file a grievance because he already had two grievances pending is consequently immaterial to whether he exhausted.”), appeal dismissed, No. 14-14287 (11th Cir. Oct 30, 2014) (unpublished) Williams v. Owens, No. 5:13-CV-0254-MTT-MSH, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129509 (M.D. Ga. Aug 20, 2014) (unpublished). Pearson v. Taylor, 665 F. App'x 858, 868 (11th Cir. 2016) (unpublished).

325. Koontz v. St. Johns River Water Mgmt. Dist., 570 U.S. 595, 604 (2013).

326. See, e.g., Gaughan v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, No. 02-C-0740, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 23297, at *3–5 (N.D. Ill. Dec 30, 2003) (unpublished) (rejecting claim that incarcerated person had exhausted where defendants had not made a record of it); Thomas v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., No. 00 Civ. 7163 (NRB), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20286, at *13–14 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 10, 2003) (unpublished) (dismissing case for failure to exhaust remedies where prison staff told the incarcerated person a grievance was unnecessary, but did not tell him he could not file a grievance).

327. Kendall v. Kittles, No. 03 Civ. 628 (GEL), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16129, at *10–13 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2003) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss where incarcerated person in New York City jails said he could not get grievance forms; the fact that he filed grievances at other times showed only that forms were available on the dates those grievances were filed, and not that such forms were always available). This is not an issue in the New York State grievance system. The directive states that under New York's administrative grievance procedure, if tell you that the issue is not “grievable”—that is, if the grievance system is not available to you for that issue—file the grievance anyway so that you will get a decision in writing telling you that it isn’t grievable.³²⁸ If they refuse to accept your grievance, write to the Warden or Superintendent and tell him that you were not allowed to file your grievance. Ask him to either investigate it as a non-grievance complaint or treat it as a grievance in case you were misinformed by the lower-level staff. You should also file a grievance about a refusal to accept your grievance. It is extremely important to keep copies of everything that you file so that you can later prove that you did in fact file those documents.

4. What Must You Put in Your Grievance or Administrative Appeal?

Exhausting means you must raise all of the issues that you intend to raise in your lawsuit in your grievance or appeal. Issues you do not include in your grievance or appeal cannot be brought up later in a lawsuit.³²⁹ You may have to file more than one grievance about a complicated situation if the grievance policy prohibits “multiple issues” in a grievance.³³⁰ Sometimes, most often in connection with disciplinary proceedings, you have to use more than one remedy to exhaust all your issues.³³¹

How specific and detailed must you be in a grievance or appeal to satisfy the exhaustion requirement? Read the grievance policy to find out. The best way to determine how specific and detailed you must be in a grievance or appeal to satisfy an exhaustion requirement is by reading the grievance policy of your institution. The Supreme Court has held “[t]he level of detail necessary in a grievance to comply with the grievance procedures will vary from system to system and claim to claim, but it is the prison’s requirements, and not the PLRA, that define the boundaries of proper exhaustion.”³³² Therefore, it said, courts could not require incarcerated people to have named all their litigation defendants in their earlier grievances if the grievance system itself did not have such a requirement.³³³ If the prison grievance system does require you to name the responsible employees in forms are not available, your grievance can be submitted on plain paper. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(1) (2020). New York state grievance procedures are available in the state regulations. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5 (2020). New York City has now changed its policy as well: the current policy provides that grievances that are not on the prescribed form will be accepted and grievance staff will provide the form and will assist the prisoner in transferring the information to the form. City of New York Department of Correction, Directive 3376R-A, Inmate Grievance Procedures § (V)(F) (2012) (as revised Dec. 10, 2018), available at https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/doc/downloads/directives/Directive_3376R-A.pdf (last visited Dec. 2, 2020).

328. Some courts have refused to accept incarcerated people’s statements that an unidentified person told them that their issues were not grievable. See, e.g., Perez v. Arpaio, No. CV 06-0038-PHX-SMM (ECV), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86559, at *5–6 (D. Ariz. Nov. 21, 2006) (unpublished) (dismissing claim for failure to exhaust, even though an unnamed official told plaintiff he did not have to file).

329. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 211, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 810 (2007) (noting that “unexhausted claims cannot be brought in court”); Tucker v. Collier, 906 F.3d 295, 306 (5th Cir. 2018) (holding a grievance challenging a ban on assembly by Nations of Gods and Earths members did not exhaust claims concerning wearing of Nation headgear, displaying its flag, assistance in finding a cultural representative, and ability to carry lessons to services); Mattox v. Edelman, 851 F.3d 583, 596 (6th Cir. 2017) (holding that grievances requesting cardiac catheterization did not exhaust a claim about failure to provide a particular medication); Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 517–523 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding an incarcerated person who complained of sexual assault and referred to his sexual orientation in his grievance, but said nothing about his race, did not exhaust his racial discrimination claim).

330. Such prohibitions have caused much confusion and some courts have rejected the way prison officials have applied them. See Lafountain v. Martin, 334 F. App’x 738, 741 & n.2 (6th Cir. 2009) (unpublished) (holding the grievance body was wrong to characterize a claim of multiple retaliatory incidents as involving multiple issues); Moore v. Bennette, 517 F.3d 717, 722, 730 (4th Cir. 2008) (holding plaintiff had properly exhausted despite application of a “no multiple issues” rule to prevent him from pursuing his grievance about repeated instances of punishment without notice or charge).

331. For more information regarding disciplinary hearings and exhaustion, please see discussion in Part E(3) of this Chapter, which begins at the paragraph containing footnote 291 and ends at footnote 294.

332. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910, 923, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007).

333. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 814–815 (2007).

your grievance, and you have that information, if you don't name them in your grievance, you can't name them as defendants in a lawsuit.³³⁴

Grievance policies often say little or nothing about how much detail is required in a grievance.³³⁵ One often-cited decision has said that if the prison grievance policy does not have more specific requirements, then a grievance counts as exhausting "if it alerts the prison to the nature of the wrong for which redress is sought ... [T]he grievant need not lay out the facts, articulate legal theories, or demand particular relief. All the grievance need do is object intelligibly to some asserted shortcoming."³³⁶ This makes sense because the purpose of the PLRA exhaustion requirement is to give prison officials time and opportunity to resolve problems before they turn into lawsuits.³³⁷ An example of a grievance that satisfied the "object intelligibly" standard (though just barely) is found in a sexual assault case where the incarcerated person said only: "[T]he administration don't . . . do there . . . job. [A sexual assault] should've never . . . happen again," and requested that the assailant be criminally prosecuted.³³⁸

Even courts that do not use the Strong v. David standard generally do not require grievances to be very specific or detailed where the grievance policy does not have a requirement of greater detail.³³⁹ They generally hold grievances inadequate when they are so vague that prison officials could not reasonably have been expected to understand what the incarcerated person was complaining about.³⁴⁰

334. Garrison v. Dutcher, 1:07-CV-642, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90504, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Sept. 30, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that "[the Michigan Department of Corrections] requires prisoners to include the 'names of all those involved'. . . . Plaintiff's failure to name [a prison supervisor] as a responsible party in his grievances thus constitutes failure to exhaust").

335. For example, the New York State grievance system requires only that incarcerated people include a "concise, specific description of the problem and the action requested and indicate what actions the grievant has taken to resolve the complaint, [that is], specific persons/areas contacted and responses received." N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(2) (2020).

336. Strong v. David, 297 F.3d 646, 650 (7th Cir. 2002); Wilcox v. Brown, 877 F.3d 161, 167 n.4 (4th Cir. 2017) (stating "grievances generally need only be sufficient to 'alert[] the prison to the nature of the wrong for which redress is sought.'" (quoting Strong v. David, 297 F.3d 646 (7th Cir. 2002))); Fennell v. Cambria Cty. Prison, 607 F. App'x 145, 149 (3d Cir. 2015) (unpublished) (citing Strong v. David and "object intelligibly" language with approval); Griffin v. Arpaio, 557 F.3d 1117, 1120 (9th Cir. 2009) ("Strong held that, when a prison's grievance procedures are silent or incomplete as to factual specificity, 'a grievance suffices if it alerts the prison to the nature of the wrong for which redress is sought.' . . . We adopt Strong as the appropriate standard." (citation omitted)). Kikumura v. Osagie, 461 F.3d 1269, 1283 (10th Cir. 2006); Johnson v. Testman, 380 F.3d 691, 697 (2d Cir. 2004), overruled on other grounds. Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 378 (2006); Burton v. Jones, 321 F.3d 569, 575 (6th Cir. 2003) (quoting "object intelligibly" language with approval).

337. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 525, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12 (2002).

338. Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 524 (7th Cir. 2004); see also Westefer v. Snyder, 422 F.3d 570, 580–581 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that plaintiffs sufficiently exhausted complaints about transfers to a high-security prison by listing "Transfer from Tamms" as a requested remedy, or by expressing concern about not being given a reason for the transfer, in grievances about the conditions at that prison).

339. See, e.g., McAlphin v. Toney, 375 F.3d 753, 755 (8th Cir. 2004) (treating two claims that: (1) two defendants failed to treat plaintiff's dental grievances as emergency matters, and (2) others refused to escort him to the infirmary for emergency treatment, as just a single exhausted claim of denial of emergency dental treatment for exhaustion purposes); Kikumura v. Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 956 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding complaint sufficient to meet the exhaustion requirement where the plaintiff complained that he was denied Christian pastoral visits, though the defendants said his claim should be dismissed because he had not stated in the grievance process that his religious beliefs included elements of both the Buddhist and Christian religions); Carter v. Symmes, No. 06-10273-PBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7680, at *9 (D. Mass. Feb. 4, 2008) (unpublished) (adopting administrative law rule that "claims not enumerated in an initial grievance are allowed notwithstanding the exhaustion requirement if they 'are like or reasonably related to the substance of charges timely brought before [the agency]'").

340. See Beltran v. O'Mara, 405 F. Supp. 2d 140, 152 (D.N.H. 2005) (holding that allegations the plaintiff was "being punished for no reason" and isolated from other incarcerated people were "too vague" to allow officials to make any response); Aguirre v. Feinerman, No. 3:02 cv 60 JPG, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45520, at *20 (S.D. Ill. May 10, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance that specifically mentioned physical therapy, but mentioned other medical care only generally, did not exhaust a claim concerning failure to diagnose the plaintiff's

They generally do not require grieving of legal theories.³⁴¹ But you should be careful about this last point. There are some issues that some courts say are legal theories, but that other courts require to be exhausted, notably the existence of retaliatory motive,³⁴² conspiracy,³⁴³ and discriminatory intent,³⁴⁴ and occasionally other matters.³⁴⁵ You should probably err on the side of being explicit in such cases.

If the prison grievance system actually investigates and addresses your complaint, and does not throw it out for lack of detail, a court will generally consider it to be exhausted. This will be the case even if the defendants' lawyers later claim that you should have said more in the grievance.³⁴⁶

You can expect prison officials to attack your claim for failure to exhaust. There are some things you can do to protect yourself. If the prison grievance system requires you to name all the individuals involved, you may not necessarily know who they all are. Make it clear in your grievance that you do not know their names. For example, if you were beaten by several officers while others looked on, you might write in your grievance: "Officers Smith and Jones beat me, along with the other officers present congestive heart failure). Compare Westefer v. Snyder, 422 F.3d 570, 580–581 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that incarcerated people who mentioned concern with their transfers to a high-security prison in the course of grievances complaining about the conditions there exhausted their claims about transfer) with Shoucair v. Warren, No. 07-12964, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37961, at *7–8 (E.D. Mich. May 9, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting grievance body's finding of undue vagueness where incarcerated person provided enough information to investigate his complaint and grievance policy required investigation).

341. Reyes v. Smith, 810 F.3d 654, 659 (9th Cir. 2016) ("A grievance need not include legal terminology or legal theories unless they are in some way needed to provide notice of the harm being grieved." (citing Griffin v. Arpaio, 557 F.3d 1117, 1120 (9th Cir. 2009)); Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 517–518 (5th Cir. 2004) (agreeing legal theories need not be presented in grievances); Burton v. Jones, 321 F.3d 569, 575 (6th Cir. 2003) (holding grievances need not "allege (state) a specific legal theory or facts that correspond to all the required elements of a particular legal theory").

342. Petzold v. Rostollan, 946 F.3d 242, 254–255 (5th Cir. 2019) (holding retaliation claim was not "sufficiently specific" in grievance to exhaust); Shifflett v. Korszniak, 934 F.3d 356, 366 (3d Cir. 2019) ("Retaliation is a separate claim, . . . and therefore must be separately grieved."). But see, Maldonado v. Unnamed Defendant, 648 F. App'x 939, 953 (11th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff was not required to allege retaliatory motive in a grievance since there is no requirement to exhaust legal theories).

343. Cleveland v. Harvanek, 607 F. App'x 770, 773 (10th Cir. 2015) (unpublished); Siggers v. Campbell, 652 F.3d 681, 694–695 (6th Cir. 2011) (holding failure to mention alleged conspiracy in grievance meant claim was not exhausted). But see, Espinal v. Goord, 558 F.3d 119, 127–128 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that conspiracy is a legal theory which incarcerated people need not grieve; it is sufficient to describe the alleged misconduct adequately).

344. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 518 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that an incarcerated person who complained of sexual assault, made repeated reference to his sexual orientation, but said nothing about his race had exhausted his sexual orientation discrimination claim, but not his racial discrimination claim); Waddy v. Sandstrom, No. 7:11CV00320, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77937, at *10 (W.D. Va. June 5, 2012) (unpublished) (holding racial discrimination claim unexhausted where plaintiff grieved a use of force but did not mention the racial comments on which the claim was based). But see, Gonzalez v. Morris, No. 9:14-cv-1438 (GLS/DEP), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42534, at *6–7 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 15, 2018) (unpublished) (holding Santeria follower who complained of denial of privileges accorded to Native American incarcerated people exhausted his discrimination claim, even though he did not mention discrimination until the final stage, since "equal protection is a legal theory" that need not be articulated in grievances).

345. See Dye v. Kingston, 130 F. App'x 52, 56 (7th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person who complained in his grievance of missing property items, including his Bibles, failed to exhaust his 1st Amendment claim by failing to state that the Bibles' loss was "infringing on his religious practice").

346. Reyes v. Smith, 810 F.3d 654, 659 (9th Cir. 2016) (holding incarcerated person who grieved doctors' failure to provide pain medication exhausted claim about Pain Management Committee's involvement where grievance responses themselves cited the Committee's decision); Patterson v. Stanley, 547 F. App'x 510, 512 (5th Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (holding claim exhausted where appeal decision acknowledged it and said it had been referred to Office of Professional Standards and plaintiff was scheduled for an ophthalmology exam); Espinal v. Goord, 558 F.3d 119, 128 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding medical care complaint not raised explicitly in grievance was exhausted where grievance decision addressed it; medical care complaint stated in very general terms was exhausted where grievance decision addressed plaintiff's care with specificity).

who beat me or who stood by and did not intervene to stop the beating, and whose names I do not know.” If you think there is a practice of beating prisoners that higher-ups in the prison are responsible for, you might add something like: “Sergeant Black, Lieutenant White, Deputy Superintendent Green and Superintendent Red, and any other supervisors unknown to me who fail to train and supervise the security staff and keep them from using excessive and unnecessary force.” Or, if the mail room officer denies you a book you have ordered by telling you only “it’s not allowed,” you might say your grievance was against “Officer Jones in the mail room, and any other person unknown to me who made the policy resulting in this book being denied to me, or if there is no such policy, the supervisor of the mail room operation, unknown to me, who allows mail room staff to deny books to prisoners in the absence of a policy permitting such denial.”

Even if your prison’s grievance policy does not require the naming of all individuals involved, you should still think about the different people, events, and policies that might be involved in the problem you are filing a grievance about, and mention them. That is because some courts require that if you raise claims about policy, training, or supervision in your grievance, you must have explicitly exhausted those claims in addition to describing what happened to you.³⁴⁷ For instance, in a use of force case, if the grievance policy requires only a “concise, specific statement of the problem,” you might say: “I was beaten without justification by Officers Smith and Jones and others, while other officers stood by and did not intervene. I am also complaining about the lack of training and supervision that allows security staff to use excessive and unnecessary force and get away with it.” If you were denied a book, you might say: “I was denied the book A Time to Die about the 1971 Attica disturbance. I am also complaining about the policies and practices that allow the denial of books to incarcerated people without good reason and without clear written criteria and procedures.” (Or, if there are clear criteria and procedures, but you wish to challenge them as unlawful, mention those in the grievance, too.)

Similarly, if you get more information about a problem after you have filed a grievance about it (or more information about the people responsible), you should consider filing a separate grievance including the new information.³⁴⁸ If you discover new information after the grievance deadline has passed that might be important for what you plan to file suit about after exhaustion, file a grievance anyway and explain that you couldn’t file it within the deadline because you didn’t have the information. For example, if you file a grievance stating that you have been denied certain medical care by the prison’s medical director, and then later on learn that your care was denied by the prison system’s central office through a “utilization review,” you might wish to file and exhaust a new grievance about the utilization review decision. Courts have disagreed about whether these sorts of grievances are enough to exhaust, but it is the best way to protect yourself when you learn new information after filing an initial grievance.³⁴⁹

347. See Kozohorsky v. Harmon, 332 F.3d 1141, 1143 (8th Cir. 2003) (holding that a grievance complaining of excessive force by line staff did not exhaust plaintiff’s claim that a supervisor failed to supervise and take action against them), overruled on other grounds by Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 127 S. Ct. 910, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007).

348. If the grievance system contains a “name all responsible persons” rule, courts might require you to file a new grievance including newly identified defendants or other new information. In Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 312–313 (2d Cir. 2006), the court rejected the argument that the plaintiff should have filed a new grievance reflecting new information, but only because the system did not seem to provide for supplementing or re-filing existing grievances to reflect new information.

349. Compare Sullivan v. Caruso, No. 1:07cv367, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9090 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 7, 2008) (unpublished) (holding defendants improperly rejected a grievance as duplicative where it named a defendant not named in a previous grievance) with Laster v. Pramstaller, No. 06-13508, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11435, at *3 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 15, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance naming a defendant that is dismissed because it duplicates an earlier grievance that did not name that defendant fails to exhaust). In Dunbar v. Jones, No. 1:05-CV-1594, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 49278, at *21–22 (M.D. Pa. July 9, 2007) (unpublished), the court rejected the argument that the plaintiff should have amended his grievance to name a defendant whose identity he did not initially know since the rules did not provide for such amended grievances. The court nonetheless dismissed the claim against that particular defendant because the plaintiff didn’t add her name in his grievance appeals. The court did not, however, cite anything in the grievance policy that permits adding new material in grievance appeals.

Prison officials and their lawyers want to try to get your case thrown out for non-exhaustion so they can avoid facing facts and arguments of your lawsuit. You should do your best to make your grievance reflect all aspects of the problem, so the judge will see that you did your best to bring everything to prison officials' attention before suing.

5. What If You Make a Mistake Trying to Exhaust?

Incarcerated people not only must exhaust, they must do it correctly. The Supreme Court has held that the PLRA exhaustion requirement requires you to obey an agency's deadlines and other important procedural rules because no decision-making system can work well without having an orderly structure.³⁵⁰ If your grievance or other complaint is rejected because you did not follow the required procedures, the court will find that you failed to exhaust and will not allow your lawsuit to go forward.³⁵¹

This does not mean that you should just give up if you fail to follow the proper procedure. You should pursue your grievance and all available appeals, and if the grievance is rejected for a procedural mistake, request that your error be excused or that you be permitted to re-file your grievance and start over, and explain any circumstances that might have caused you to make a mistake. Sometimes grievance systems allow incarcerated people to correct mistakes and re-file (in fact, sometimes they instruct incarcerated people to do so).³⁵² If prison officials don't reject your grievance for procedural mistakes, but decide the merits anyway, they have waived their right to claim your mistakes mean you didn't exhaust.³⁵³ That is because the purpose of the "proper exhaustion" rule is to allow the 350. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 93, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386–2387, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 378, 380 (2006) (describing the Court's "proper exhaustion" requirement); see also Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 218, 127 S. Ct. 910, 922–923, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 815 (2007) (holding that "[c]ompliance with prison grievance procedures ... is all that is required by the PLRA to properly exhaust").

351. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 83–84, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2382, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 374 (2006).

352. If they do allow you to re-file your grievance, and give you instructions, you should follow the directions even if you disagree with them.

353. See Does 8-10 v. Snyder, 945 F.3d 951, 962 (6th Cir. 2019); Rinaldi v. United States, 904 F.3d 257, 271 (3d Cir. 2018) ("We simply reaffirm . . . that when an inmate's allegations 'have been fully examined on the merits' and 'at the highest level,' they are, in fact, exhausted." (quoting Camp v. Brennan, 219 F.3d 279, 281 (3d Cir. 2000))); Whatley v. Smith, 898 F.3d 1072, 1083 (11th Cir. 2018) ("[A] prisoner has exhausted his administrative remedies when prison officials decide a procedurally flawed grievance on the merits. . . . [D]istrict courts may not enforce a prison's procedural rule to find a lack of exhaustion after the prison itself declined to enforce the rule." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)); Reyes v. Smith, 810 F.3d 654, 658 (9th Cir. 2016); Whatley v. Warden, Ware State Prison, 802 F.3d 1205, 1213–14 (11th Cir. 2015) ("We join our sister Circuits in holding that district courts may not find a lack of exhaustion by enforcing procedural bars that the prison declined to enforce."); Spada v. Martinez, 579 F. App'x 82, 85 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (dicta: quoting Hill v. Curcione); Hammett v. Cofield, 681 F.3d 945, 947 (8th Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (stating "all circuits that have addressed it have concluded that the PLRA's exhaustion requirement is satisfied if prison officials decide a procedurally flawed grievance on the merits"); Hill v. Curcione, 657 F.3d 116, 125 (2d Cir. 2011) (holding "the exhaustion requirement of the PLRA is satisfied by an untimely filing of a grievance if it is accepted and decided on the merits by the appropriate prison authority."); Maddox v. Love, 655 F.3d 709, 722 (7th Cir. 2011) ("Where prison officials address an inmate's grievance on the merits without rejecting it on procedural grounds, the grievance has served its function of alerting the state and inviting corrective action, and defendants cannot rely on the failure to exhaust defense."); Reed-Bey v. Pramstaller, 603 F.3d 322, 324–26 (6th Cir. 2010) (declining to dismiss claims against defendants not named in grievance where officials reached the merits despite noncompliance with "name the defendant" grievance rule; "When the State . . . decides to reject the claim on the merits, who are we to second guess its decision to overlook or forgive its own procedural bar?"); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 331–332 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that the plaintiff sent a form to the Commissioner rather than the Legal Adjudicator, but that defendants did not reject it for noncompliance; in addition, the grievance was submitted by the prisoner's lawyer and not by the prisoner, as the rules specify); Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 234 (3d Cir. 2004) (holding that the prison grievance officer's recognition that a particular defendant was involved in the events the prisoner complained of, even though the prisoner had not named the defendant in his grievance, excused the procedural mistake and the case could continue).

grievance system to “function effectively,”³⁵⁴ and if it decided the merits, obviously it did function effectively. Courts have disagreed over whether a grievance is exhausted if it is rejected both on the merits and for procedural reasons.³⁵⁵ In any event, the harder you have tried to exhaust correctly, the more likely the court is to rule in your favor in a close case. Also, if there is some reason you cannot comply with all the procedural rules of the grievance system, pursue your grievance anyway and explain why you couldn't comply. If your grievance is rejected or denied because you failed to do something you couldn't do, the remedy was unavailable and your suit should go forward.³⁵⁶ Courts will look very closely at this kind of claim, and you should make every effort to exhaust properly so you will have a convincing explanation of why you were not able to do so.

Courts have generally held that to exhaust properly, incarcerated people must follow instructions given by grievance staff, in addition to the grievance rules.³⁵⁷ However, a number of courts have refused to find non-exhaustion where incarcerated people have failed to follow staff instructions that were not supported by the grievance policy.³⁵⁸ The best practice is probably to follow staff instructions if you can unless they are contrary to the written policy.

Suppose you follow the grievance rules, but get a grievance decision rejecting your grievance and claiming wrongly that you didn't follow the rules. Courts have generally been willing to examine

354. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2386, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 378 (2006).

355. Compare Cobb v. Berghuis, No. 1:06-CV-773, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 93890, at *3–4 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a grievance rejected for both reasons does not exhaust), with McCarroll v. Sigman, No. 1:07-cv-513, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17254, at *10–11, (W.D. Mich. Mar. 6, 2008) (unpublished) (finding exhaustion on those facts), reconsideration granted on other grounds, No. 1:07-CV-513, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38710 (W.D. Mich. May 13, 2008) (unpublished).

356. See, e.g., DeBrew v. Atwood, 792 F.3d 118, 126–29 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (holding remedy was unavailable where the grievance was denied for failure to attach a document that the incarcerated person could not obtain); Risher v. Lappin, 639 F.3d 236, 240 (6th Cir. 2011) (same as DeBrew); Jamison v. Varano, No. 1:12-C-1500, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 103325, at *4 (M.D. Pa. Aug. 6, 2015) (unpublished) (holding the remedy unavailable where prison officials provided illegible photocopies of required documents and the plaintiff's grievance was then dismissed because of the documents' illegibility); Lee v. Gulick, No. 2:17-CV-42-PK, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106294, at *8 (D. Or. June 26, 2018) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff exhausted available remedies where a staff member ordered him to stop placing grievances in the grievance box, he had no other way of filing them, and when he filed his accumulated grievances later when he was able they were rejected as untimely). Please see footnotes 280 and 281 of this Chapter for more information regarding denials of forms and/or grievances.

357. See Thomas v. Parker, 609 F.3d 1114, 1118–19 (10th Cir. 2010); Cannon v. Washington, 418 F.3d 714, 718 (7th Cir. 2005); Ford v. Johnson, 362 F.3d 395, 397 (7th Cir. 2004) (“Just as courts may dismiss suits for failure to cooperate, so administrative bodies may dismiss grievances for lack of cooperation; in either case this procedural default blocks later attempts to litigate the merits.”); Jernigan v. Stuchell, 304 F.3d 1030, 1032–33 (10th Cir. 2002) (holding that an incarcerated person who received no response to a grievance and refused the appeals body's direction to try to get one had failed to exhaust); Kelley Bey v. Keen, No. 3:13-CV-01942, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97649, at *37 (M.D. Pa. May 29, 2014) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who failed to explain when asked why the Halal diets on offer were unacceptable did not exhaust).

358. See, e.g., Fisher v. Figueroa, No. CIV-12-231-F, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26099, *3–4 (W.D. Okla. Jan. 7, 2013) (unpublished) (holding remedies unavailable where the incarcerated person followed correct procedure, was erroneously told to re-file his grievance after grievance staff misrouted it; since he had followed the rules, his appeal of the initial grievance should have been processed), report and recommendation adopted, Fisher v. Figueroa, No. CIV-12-231-F, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24931 (W.D. Okla. Feb. 22, 2013); Chavez v. Granadoz, No. 2:11-cv-1015 WBS CKD P, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58282, *2–4 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 23, 2013) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where grievance personnel demanded the names of involved staff, which were not required by the rules, and denied plaintiff's request for documentation that would include that information); Andrews v. Cervantes, No. CIV S-03-1218 EFB P, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28530, at *6 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 25, 2009) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person exhausted though his grievance was rejected because he refused to resubmit it without the word “moron,” since the grievance policy did not support this basis for rejection). Contra, Starks v. Lewis, No. CIV-06-512-M, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48444, at *5 (W.D. Okla. June 24, 2008) (unpublished) (“Even when prison authorities are incorrect about the existence of the perceived deficiency, the inmate must follow the prescribed steps to cure it....An inmate's disagreement with prison officials as to the appropriateness of a particular procedure under the circumstances, or his belief that he should not have to correct a procedural deficiency does not excuse his obligation to comply with the available process...”).

incarcerated people's compliance with the rules independently rather than being bound by what grievance officials say about it.³⁵⁹

6. What If You Miss a Time Limit?

The Supreme Court's ruling requiring "proper exhaustion" means that you must follow time limits in the grievance system.³⁶⁰ That means you should learn the time limits and meet the deadlines. But if you miss a grievance deadline, do not give up. Continue with your grievance as quickly as possible. If there is a provision allowing late grievances under certain circumstances,³⁶¹ request permission to file late if the provision fits your situation. (The fact that late grievances are sometimes allowed won't help you if you don't use the procedure for getting one approved.³⁶²) Take all available appeals if the grievance officials reject your grievance for lateness. If the appeals body decides the merits of your grievance, then you will have exhausted; the lateness of your grievance will be deemed waived by the grievance body.³⁶³ If they do not decide the merits, you can still argue in court that the remedy was unavailable if something prevented you from filing on time.³⁶⁴ Most courts have held that if the 359. See, e.g., Pyles v. Nwaobasi, 829 F.3d 860, 865 (7th Cir. 2016) (holding incarcerated person had "good cause" for a late grievance even though grievance officials had said otherwise); Dimanche v. Brown, 783 F.3d 1204, 1211–1214 (11th Cir. 2015) (holding plaintiff's grievance qualified as a "grievance of reprisal" under the state's grievance rules, even though it had been procedurally rejected by grievance authorities); Sapp v. Kimbrell, 623 F.3d 813, 824 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding remedies are unavailable if officials "screened [the plaintiff's] grievance or grievances for reasons inconsistent with or unsupported by applicable regulations"); Little v. Jones, 607 F.3d 1245, 1250 (10th Cir. 2010) (holding dismissal was wrong under a "plain reading" of the grievance rules, and made the remedy unavailable to the plaintiff); Lafountain v. Martin, 334 F. App'x 738, 741, 741 n.2 (6th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding officials improperly applied their rule against multiple issues in grievances); Price v. Kozak, 569 F. Supp. 2d 398, 406–407 (D. Del. 2008) (holding the prisoner's grievances timely despite the defendant, a prison employee, rejecting them as late); Moton v. Cowart, No. 8:06-CV-2163-T-30EAJ, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40419, at *15–18 (M.D. Fla. May 19, 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting the prison's decision that the incarcerated person's complaint was not grievable and rejecting an appeal decision that it must be re-filed at the facility, as contrary to the prison system's own policy).

360. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 90–91, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2389, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 381–382 (finding that enforcing strict time limits was necessary to promote an effective adjudicatory system) (2006).

361. For example, the New York State grievance system allows late grievances if there are "mitigating circumstances," which include "attempts to resolve informally by the inmate." N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(g)(1)(i)(a) (2020); State of New York, Department of Correctional Services, Directive No. 4040 § 701.6(g)(1)(i)(a), Inmate Grievance Program (2016), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4040.pdf> (last visited Nov. 4, 2019). It provides: "An exception to the time limit may not be granted if the request was made more than 45 days after an alleged occurrence."

362. See Patel v. Fleming, 415 F.3d 1105, 1110–1111 (10th Cir. 2005) (holding that the existence of provisions for time extensions did not save the untimely grievance of an incarcerated person who never officially sought an extension); Harper v. Jenkin, 179 F.3d 1311, 1312 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that an incarcerated person whose grievance was dismissed as untimely had to appeal that decision before turning to a court, whether or not the incarcerated person believed his appeal would be heard, since the system allowed for waiver of time limits for "good cause"); Soto v. Belcher, 339 F. Supp. 2d 592, 596 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding that an incarcerated person who learned of his problem after the deadline passed should have tried to file a late grievance).

363. See Spada v. Martinez, 579 F. App'x 82, 85 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (dicta; quoting Hill v. Curcione); Hill v. Curcione, 657 F.3d 116, 125 (2d Cir. 2011); Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 524 (7th Cir. 2004); Ross v. County of Bernalillo, 365 F.3d 1181, 1186 (10th Cir. 2004); Cordero v. FNU Ricknauer, Civ. No. 13-2023 (RBK) (AMD), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129822, *6 (D.N.J. Sept. 17, 2014) (unpublished); Miller v. Coning, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25843, *6 (D.Del., Feb. 28, 2014) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 108858, (D.Del., Aug. 7, 2014) (unpublished).

364. See Green v. Burkhart, 767 F. App'x 342, 346 (3d Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding grievance appeal unavailable where plaintiff could not appeal without a document he had no access to, and did not obtain until after he had filed suit); Jackson v. Griffin, 762 F. App'x 744, 746 (11th Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding untimeliness caused by defendants' failure to pick up submitted grievances on their own announced schedule would make the remedy unavailable); Pyles v. Nwaobasi, 829 F.3d 860, 865–869 (7th Cir. 2016) (holding plaintiff had exhausted "such remedies as were available to him" when his grievance was dismissed as untimely after the prison failed to make copies of it timely); Nunez v. Duncan, 591 F.3d 1217, 1225–1226 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding remedy was unavailable and incarcerated person's lack of timely exhaustion excused where grievance body determines a grievance was late, the court makes its own independent determination if that is correct.³⁶⁵ If you miss a deadline for some reason outside your control, don't bypass the grievance process and just argue in court that the remedy is unavailable. A number of courts have said that if you are prevented from filing your grievance on time, you must file a grievance as soon as you can,³⁶⁶ even though the Supreme Court said in the Woodford case that an untimely grievance does not exhaust. Some courts have rejected this idea where there is no instruction to that effect in the grievance policy.³⁶⁷ Your best strategy is to pursue the grievance regardless.

If a grievance system has no time limit, delay in filing cannot bar an incarcerated person's claim for non-exhaustion.³⁶⁸ In that scenario, an unexhausted claim should be dismissed without prejudice, and the incarcerated person will then have the opportunity to try to exhaust.³⁶⁹

Warden led plaintiff to believe he had to have a particular document to appeal, and he spent months trying to get it); Days v. Johnson, 322 F.3d 863, 867–868 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding remedy unavailable where incarcerated person was injured and unable to write during the prescribed time period for filing).

365. Pyles v. Nwaobasi, 829 F.3d 860, 865 (7th Cir. 2016) (holding incarcerated person had shown “good cause” for filing an untimely grievance, despite the grievance authorities’ contrary decision); Marella v. Terhune, 568 F.3d 1024, 1027 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding district court should have determined whether plaintiff’s grievance fell into an exception to the time limits, even though state officials had rejected it as untimely); Williams v. Franklin, 302 F. App’x 830, 832 (10th Cir. 2008) (unpublished) (rejecting determination of untimeliness that was obviously wrong); Miller v. Coning, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25843, *6 (D. Del. Feb. 28, 2014) (unpublished) (holding officials measured timeliness from the wrong date under their own rule); Jaros v. Illinois Department of Corrections, No. 11–cv–168–JPG, 2013 WL 5546189, at *3 (S.D. Ill. Oct. 8, 2013) (unpublished) (holding prison officials were “demanding the prisoner do more than the administrative rules require” when they measured timeliness of an appeal by when it was received, and not when it was sent, under a rule that said appeal must be “submitted” within 30 days);

366. Jones v. Nelson, 729 F. App’x 467, 469 (7th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who was physically incapacitated during filing period was obliged to file as soon as reasonably possible thereafter, and appeal if denied); Burnett v. Miller, 738 F. App’x 951, 953 (10th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who was in the hospital and under the influence of incapacitating medications during the grievance-filing period should have pursued an out of time grievance under prison procedure); Lamont-Goldsby v. Kaschmitter, 712 F. App’x 701, 702 (9th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who showed remedy was unavailable during three months in segregation should have pursued an untimely grievance after release from segregation); Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1373 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding an incarcerated person who said he could not submit a grievance for fear of assault at his place of detention should have exhausted that ability after transfer to another facility); Green v. McBride, No. 5:04-cv-01181, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71189, at *8–9 (S.D. W.Va. Sept. 25, 2007) (unpublished) (holding an incarcerated person who was kept on suicide watch without necessary materials until past the grievance deadline should have grieved as soon as he was released from suicide watch and his failure to do so without justification means he failed to properly exhaust his administrative remedies).

367. See Lanaghan v. Koch, 902 F.3d 683, 689–690 (7th Cir. 2018) (holding incarcerated person unable to file a timely grievance was not obliged to file an untimely one where the provision allowing late grievances did not appear in the handbook provided to incarcerated people); Forde v. Miami Fed. Dept. of Corr., 730 F. App’x 794, 799–800 (11th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished); Spada v. Martinez, 579 F. App’x 82, 86 (3d Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person who was denied grievance forms during the period a grievance was timely was not required to file an untimely grievance where the grievance policy did not provide for untimely grievances under the circumstances); Cotton-Schrichte v. Peate, No. 07-4052-CV-C-NKL, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 59452, at *4 (W.D. Mo. Aug. 5, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person who was raped by a staff member exercising a position of authority over the incarcerated person and who had been threatened into silence was not required to file a grievance after the threats were removed because she did not have administrative procedures available to her at the appropriate time).

368. See Schonarth v. Robinson, No. 06-CV-151-JM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13596, at *10–12 (D.N.H. Feb. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that a grievance that was filed two years after the jail was demolished, but otherwise in compliance with grievance rules, was exhausted).

369. See Alexander v. Dickerson, No. 6:07-CV-423, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32866, at *17 (E.D. Tex. Apr. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (indicating that when no deadline for filing grievances exists in the jail’s policy, the lawsuit does not have to be dismissed with prejudice and the plaintiff can re-file the suit once he exhausts his administrative remedies).

7. Dealing with Exhaustion in Your Lawsuit

Exhaustion is an “affirmative defense,” so you do not have to put it in a complaint—the defendants must raise it in order to claim you didn’t exhaust.³⁷⁰ However, if a grievance is properly exhausted, it may be helpful to put that information (and nothing else) in the complaint anyway. Then, if the defendants make a motion to dismiss, you can simply refer to that part of the complaint in response, since the court must assume that the facts alleged in a complaint are true for purposes of a motion to dismiss.³⁷¹ If you did not properly exhaust but you have a good argument that administrative remedies were not available, you should not put that in the complaint.³⁷² In that case, you should leave exhaustion out of the complaint and let the defendants raise it, probably by motion for summary judgment. If the defendants do raise the defense, you will then have the opportunity to provide a fuller explanation. Here is the rule of thumb: If you can truthfully write in your complaint, “Plaintiff has exhausted all available administrative remedies for his claims,” you should do it; if it is more complicated than that, you should leave it out.

Since exhaustion is not a pleading requirement, it cannot be addressed at initial screening or by motion under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 12(b)(6) to dismiss for failure to state a claim, except in cases where non-exhaustion is clear on the face of the complaint. Motions under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure Rule 12(b)(1) to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction are equally inappropriate, since failure to exhaust is not jurisdictional.³⁷³

In most courts, defendants who claim an incarcerated person did not exhaust will generally have to raise that claim in a motion for summary judgment, which requires the defendant to submit factual evidence showing that an incarcerated person did not exhaust.³⁷⁴ Sometimes defendants say they are moving to dismiss the complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), but then also include factual materials like documents or affidavits. These should not be considered on such a motion to dismiss. The court may decide to convert the Rule 12(b)(6) motion to a summary judgment motion.³⁷⁵ Courts are not required to convert such motions to summary judgment, and many have declined to do so.³⁷⁶

If you are faced with a summary judgment motion claiming you didn’t exhaust, you will have to respond to the defendant’s facts with your own admissible evidence. This evidence can include your declaration or sworn affidavit³⁷⁷ (not just a statement in a brief or a letter) establishing that you

370. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 211–217, 127 S. Ct. 910, 919–922, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 811–813 (2007).

371. See Wright v. Dee, 54 F. Supp. 2d 199, 206 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding claim of exhaustion made in response to the defendants’ motion to dismiss was sufficient to survive the motion).

372. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 213–215, 127 S. Ct. 910, 920–921, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 812–813 (2007)

373. See Woodford v. Ngo, 548 U.S. 81, 101, 126 S. Ct. 2378, 2392, 165 L. Ed. 2d 368, 384 (2006) (“[T]he PLRA exhaustion requirement is not jurisdictional.”).

374. See FED. R. CIV. P. 56. See, e.g., Brownell v. Krom, 446 F.3d 305, 310 (2d Cir. 2006); Brown v. Croak, 312 F.3d 109, 111–112 (3d Cir. 2002); Fields v. Oklahoma State Penitentiary, 511 F.3d 1109, 1111–1112 (10th Cir. 2007) (upholding the decision to grant summary judgment for the defendant and dismiss the case because Mr. Fields failed to exhaust his remedies, as required under the PLRA before bringing suit).

375. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(d). See McCoy v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 233, 251 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (discussing why such a conversion may not fit the goals of exhaustion).

376. See, e.g., Escalera v. Harry, NO: 1:15-CV-02132, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 136010, at *7 (M.D.Pa. Sept. 28, 2016), report and recommendation adopted, Escalera v. Harry, NO: 1:15-CV-02132, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 153924, (M.D.Pa. Nov. 7, 2016) (unpublished); Endicott v. Allen, No. 2:17-CV-29-DDN 2019, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19890, *3 (E.D. Mo. Feb. 7, 2019) (unpublished) (citing deficiencies of parties’ presentations, plaintiff’s incarceration and pro se status, and lack of any discovery); Vaillette v. Lindsay, 11-CV-3610 (NGG) (RLM), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 114701, at *8 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 18, 2014) (unpublished) (citing lack of opportunity for discovery by plaintiff); McNair v. Rivera, 12 Civ. 06212 (ALC) (SN); 12 Civ. 8325 (ALC)(SN); 13 Civ. 0352 (ALC)(SN), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 127642, at *6–7 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 6, 2013) (unpublished) (declining to convert where defendants had not provided or alluded to any documents that would be dispositive; noting bifurcating discovery between exhaustion and the merits risked complication and delay); Taylor v. Hillis, No. 1:10-cv-94 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145694, at *4 (W.D. Mich. Nov. 28, 2011), report and recommendation adopted, Taylor v. Hillis, No. 1:10-cv-94, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 145429 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 19, 2011) (unpublished).

377. See Chapter 6, “An Introduction to Legal Documents,” for more information on affidavits.

exhausted, or that you were unable to exhaust for some legitimate reason, along with documentary evidence, such as a final grievance decision showing exhaustion, or a statement in the grievance policy or a memo to you from the grievance body telling you your complaint is not grievable. You should also look closely at the defendant's evidence and, if it does not really show that you failed to exhaust, explain why to the court.³⁷⁸ If the defendant cannot show that it is undisputed that you have failed to exhaust, and you do not have an adequate excuse or explanation, summary judgment will be denied.

If the court finds disputed issues of fact bearing on whether you exhausted, or on whether the remedy was unavailable so you couldn't exhaust, the court will have to decide the issue before trial. Courts are now agreed that exhaustion is not an issue for the jury at trial.³⁷⁹ Most but not all have held that disputed facts must be decided at an evidentiary hearing.³⁸⁰

Exhaustion is an affirmative defense. This means that the defendant will have the burden of proof that the plaintiff did not exhaust his prison remedies.³⁸¹ One often-cited decision has stated that once defendants have produced evidence that there was an available administrative remedy and the plaintiff did not exhaust it, "the prisoner has the burden of production . . . to come forward with evidence showing that there is something in his particular case that made the existing and generally available administrative remedies effectively unavailable to him. . . . However, as required by Jones [v. Bock], the ultimate burden of proof remains with the defendant."³⁸²

To prove you didn't exhaust, then, the defendant will have to show three things:

- 1) That there actually was an available administrative solution that would address your problem.³⁸³ Defendants must also show the court exactly what prisoners were required to

378. See cases cited in notes in footnotes 375–382, below, for examples of reasons courts have found that defendants' evidence did not really show you didn't exhaust.

379. See Lee v. Willey, 789 F.3d 673, 678 (6th Cir. 2015); Small v. Camden County, 728 F.3d 265, 271 (3d Cir. 2013) (holding "judges may resolve factual disputes relevant to the exhaustion issue without the participation of a jury"); Messa v. Goord, 652 F.3d 305, 309–310 (2d Cir. 2011) (holding jury trial right does not extend to "the 'threshold issue[s]' that courts must address to determine whether litigation is being conducted in the right forum at the right time."); Dillon v. Rogers, 596 F.3d 260, 272 (5th Cir. 2010); Pavey v. Conley, 544 F.3d 739, 741–742 (7th Cir. 2008); Turner v. Burnside, 541 F.3d 1077, 1082 (11th Cir. 2008).

380. Compare Lee v. Willey, 789 F.3d 673, 678 (6th Cir. 2015) (stating "disputed issues of fact regarding exhaustion under the PLRA presented a matter of judicial administration that could be decided in a bench trial"); Roberts v. Neal, 745 F.3d 232, 234 (7th Cir. 2014) (holding a "swearing contest" cannot be resolved without hearing testimony); Dillon v. Rogers, 596 F.3d 260, 273 (5th Cir. 2010) (stating "the judge may resolve disputed facts concerning exhaustion, holding an evidentiary hearing if necessary") with Paladino v. Newsome, 885 F.3d 203, 211 (3d Cir. 2018) (leaving necessity for a hearing to discretion of district courts); Bryant v. Rich, 530 F.3d 1368, 1377 & n.16 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding the court may decide exhaustion disputes without a hearing if no one asks for a hearing).

381. Roberts v. Barreras, 484 F.3d 1236, 1240–1241 (10th Cir. 2007) (citing established rules that the burden of proving affirmative defenses is on the defendant and that burden of proof follows burden of pleading).

382. Albino v. Baca, 747 F.3d 1162, 1172 (9th Cir. 2014) (en banc) (emphasis supplied); accord, Dillon v. Rogers, 596 F.3d 260, 266 (5th Cir. 2010) (stating defendants "must establish beyond peradventure all of the essential elements of the defense of exhaustion to warrant summary judgment in their favor"); Surles v. Anderson, 678 F.3d 452, 456 (6th Cir. 2012) (rejecting argument that once defendants come forward on summary judgment with some evidence of non-exhaustion, burden shifts to plaintiff to show exhaustion; defendants must show the absence of factual disputes); Grant v. Kopp, No. 9:17-cv-1224 (GLS/DEP), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1758, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 3, 2019) (unpublished) (same as Albino), report and recommendation adopted, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14368 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 30, 2019); Sarvey v. Wetzels, C.A.No. 16-157ERIE, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51487, at *2 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 28, 2018) (unpublished) (citing Njos v. Argueta, No. 2:13-cv-01038, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26222, at *2 (M.D. Pa. Feb. 23, 2017)), report and recommendation adopted, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52906 (M.D. Pa. Apr. 6, 2017); Widener v. City of Bristol, Va., No. 1:13CV00053, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90121, at *2 (W.D. Va. July 2, 2014) (unpublished) (stating to obtain summary judgment, "the defendant must adduce evidence which supports the existence of each element of its affirmative defense, and the evidence must be so powerful that no reasonable jury would be free to disbelieve it" (citation omitted)).

383. See, e.g., Hubbs v. Suffolk Cty. Sheriff's Dept., 788 F.3d 54, 59 (2d Cir. 2015) (holding that defendants failed to establish that their grievance procedure provided a remedy for abuses in a court holding pen); Cantwell v. Sterling, 788 F.3d 507, 509 (5th Cir. 2015) (reversing summary judgment for non-exhaustion; stating that "the defendants have not put before the district court or this court the applicable grievance procedures (and we stress

- do to exhaust, and failed to do.³⁸⁴ The Second Circuit has held that complaints by incarcerated people should not be dismissed for non-exhaustion without the court having “establish[ed] the availability of an administrative remedy from a legally sufficient source.”³⁸⁵ This generally means submitting the actual grievance policy that was in effect at the time of the problem you have brought suit about. To establish availability, defendants must also show that the remedy was made known to the incarcerated people.³⁸⁶
- 2) That you were incarcerated when you filed your complaint, so you were required to exhaust.³⁸⁷
 - 3) That you did not exhaust. Many courts have found that prison officials’ evidence of non-exhaustion was insufficient, because the evidence did not respond to plaintiffs’ specific applicable—the ones in force at the relevant time, in the relevant place.”); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 940 (9th Cir. 2005) (“Establishing, as an affirmative defense, the existence of further ‘available’ administrative remedies requires evidence, not imagination.”); Chamblis v. Bland, No. 5:17-CV-000254, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 158103, at *4–5 (E.D. Ark. Mar. 19, 2018) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where defendants provided no information explaining their grievance policy), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 157565 (E.D. Ark. Sept. 17, 2018) (unpublished); Fernandez v. Morris, No. 08-CV-0601 H (PCL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54298, at *8–9 (S.D. Cal. Jul. 16, 2008) (unpublished) (holding defendants who failed to show availability of remedies in segregation were not entitled to dismissal for non-exhaustion); Ayala v. C.M.S., No. 05-5184 (RMB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50692, at *7 (D.N.J. Jul. 2, 2008) (unpublished) (holding defendants who failed to specify what the administrative grievance procedure required were not entitled to dismissal for non-exhaustion).

384. English v. Payne, 720 F. App’x 810, 810–811 (8th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding defendants failed to establish non-exhaustion where plaintiff’s grievances were “Not Processed” (a designation for grievances that include insufficient information, are incomplete, or which the filer did not attempt informal resolution) when defendants did not submit the grievances or other evidence showing a deficiency in any of those respects); Breeland v. Baker, 439 F. App’x 93, 96 (3d Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished) (“Without any showing concerning the specific policy that Breeland allegedly violated,” summary judgment for non-exhaustion was inappropriate); Ayala v. C.M.S., No. 05-5184 (RMB), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50692, at *7 (D.N.J. July 2, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that, where plaintiff said he was unable to pursue administrative remedies, defendants’ failure to establish their policy’s requirements made it impossible for the court to assess plaintiff’s claim).

385. Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 609 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Snider v. Melindez, 199 F.3d 108, 114 (2d Cir. 1999) (noting that a party’s admission is not a “legally sufficient source”)); see Hubbs v. Suffolk Cty. Sheriff’s Dept., 788 F.3d 54, 59 (2d Cir. 2015) (holding “defendants bear the initial burden of establishing, by pointing to ‘legally sufficient source[s]’ such as statutes, regulations, or grievance procedures, that a grievance process exists and applies to the underlying dispute”). In Mojias, the court criticized the lower court for relying on check marks and questionnaire answers on a form complaint to determine exhaustion. Mojias v. Johnson, 351 F.3d 606, 609–610 (2d Cir. 2003); accord, Robinson v. Cty. of Riverside, No. ED CV 17-323-DSF (SP), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143029, at *11 (C.D. Cal. July 3, 2018) (unpublished) (noting difficulty of interpreting checks in boxes, declining to infer non-exhaustion from them, especially in light of allegations suggesting unavailability), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 143023 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 21, 2018) (unpublished); Cole v. Stepp, No. 09-22492-CIV-SEITZ, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140285, at *7–8 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 1, 2010) (unpublished) (“It cannot be assumed . . . that because the plaintiff checked no for availing himself of grievance procedures, that he did not actually file grievances, nor is it clear what grievances were available to him if he was transferred to another facility. It is apparent that any determination as to whether the operative complaint may be subject to dismissal under § 1997e(a), will require further development of the record.”), report and recommendation adopted, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6261 (S.D. Fla. Jan. 24, 2011) (unpublished). That harmful practice is still alive in some jurisdictions. See Winfield v. Soloman, No. CIV S-08-0875 WBS DAD P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46880, at *3 (E.D. Cal. May 23, 2008) (unpublished) (finding for the defendant and that the plaintiff did not exhaust where he conceded to non-exhaustion in a questionnaire).

386. Please see footnotes 265 through 268 of this Chapter, above, for examples of cases in which defendants were required to prove that they made a remedy known to individuals who were incarcerated.

387. Brown v. Burnett, Civil Action No. 15-284, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1671, *10 (W.D. Pa. Jan. 7, 2016) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff was not an incarcerated person where her amended complaint stated that she had been released and defendants merely provided evidence of bench warrants and criminal dockets); Abner v. County of Saginaw County, 496 F. Supp. 2d 810, 823 (E.D. Mich. 2007) (“There is no clear evidence that this plaintiff was subject to the requirements of the PLRA, and the defendants are not entitled to summary judgment on that ground”).

allegations concerning exhaustion efforts,³⁸⁸ or defendants relied on their grievance records but the way they searched their records was inadequate or unexplained,³⁸⁹ or the records themselves were unreliable,³⁹⁰ or the records rested on hearsay,³⁹¹ or they simply did not establish the incarcerated person's failure to exhaust.³⁹² In numerous cases, 388. To better understand non-responsiveness to plaintiff's specific allegations concerning exhaustion see Surles v. Anderson, 678 F.3d 452, 457 & n.10 (6th Cir. 2012) (holding defendants must negate allegations that defendants interfered with plaintiff's efforts to exhaust); Burns v. Apollo, No. 2:12-CV-158, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25038, at *6–7 (N.D. Ind. Feb. 27, 2014) (unpublished) (noting defendants did not respond to plaintiff's assertion that he did not file special appeal forms because the forms in use were designed to be used for grievances and appeals, and the appeal form proffered by the defendants was no longer used); Laws v. Walsh, No. 02-CV-6016, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12600, at *10 n.3 (W.D.N.Y. Jun. 27, 2003) (unpublished) (holding conclusory affidavit about records search and lack of appeals inadmissible).

389. To better understand inadequate or unexplained searches of records see Boykin v. Sandholm, 801 F. App'x 417, 420–421 (7th Cir. 2020) (unpublished) (remanding based on defendants' concession that the grievance log they produced would not have reflected the emergency grievance the plaintiff alleged he filed); Roberts v. Neal, 745 F.3d 232, 236 (7th Cir. 2014) (noting it was unclear whether defendants' records search would have uncovered the emergency grievance the plaintiff said he had submitted); Stout v. North-Williams, 476 F. App'x 763, 765–766 (5th Cir. 2012) (per curiam) (unpublished) (noting absence of verified statement that defendants had reviewed plaintiff's grievance history for the relevant time period); Howard v. Gambino, 457 F. App'x 642, 643 (9th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (holding defendants' presentation inadequate where they “relied on a declaration by their attorney stating that she reviewed documents contained in her office file, rather than conducting a complete search of the jail's tracking system for inmate grievances and their dispositions”); White v. Whorton, 430 F. App'x 621 (9th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (holding defendants' submission of unverified grievance report “unaccompanied by a declaration describing its import or completeness, is insufficient to meet the defendants' burden to show nonexhaustion”); Wyatt v. Terhune, 315 F.3d 1108, 1120 (9th Cir. 2003) (noting that defendants' affidavit does not state whether the plaintiff exhausted his appeals; their “Appeal Record” lacks a foundation and is not shown to be complete); Livingston v. Piskor, 215 F.R.D. 84, 85–86 (W.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding defendants' affidavits stating that they had no record of grievances and appeals by the plaintiff were inadequate where they did not respond to his allegations that his grievances were not processed as policy required and gave no detail as to “the nature of the searches . . . their offices' record retention policies, or other facts indicating just how reliable or conclusive the results of those searches are”).

390. To better understand unreliable records, see Paladino v. Newsome, 885 F.3d 203, 211 (3d Cir. 2018) (noting “the record is bereft of evidence that the Prison's recordkeeping system is reliable,” and holding such evidence is necessary to determine whether the plaintiff exhausted); Banks v. Patton, 743 F. App'x 690, 694 (7th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (noting finding below that the jail's “informal and disorganized filing system” made it difficult to “track which complaints the [jail] staff responded to, which they ignored, and which, if any, the plaintiff appealed”); Turley v. Cowan, No. 09-CV-829-SCW, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39825, at *21–22 (S.D. Ill. Mar. 23, 2012) (unpublished) (finding defendants' records sufficiently inaccurate, based on documentation in the record, that the court declines to infer lack of exhaustion from them).

391. To better understand non-responsiveness when defendant's argument rests on hearsay see Britt v. Rahana, No. 1:13-CV-01795-WTL-DML, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63423, at *6–7 (S.D. Ind. May 8, 2014) (unpublished) (holding defendant's affidavit that mailroom clerk delivered grievance response to plaintiff, with no indication of personal knowledge by affiant, was inadmissible to support non-exhaustion finding); Hicks v. Irvin, No. 06-CV-645, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 68262, at *20–21 (N.D. Ill. July 8, 2010) (unpublished) (refusing to consider defendants' “Sentry” records system where they failed to establish its status as business records); Bey v. Williams, No. L-09-2181, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42145, at *5–6 (D. Md. Apr. 29, 2010) (unpublished) (declining to dismiss for non-exhaustion where defendants cited documents, but did not produce them because they were archived); Donahue v. Bennett, No. 02-CV-6430, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12601, at *10 (W.D.N.Y. Jun. 23, 2003) (unpublished) (holding counsel's hearsay affirmation about a telephone call with grievance officials did not properly support their motion).

392. To better understand when cited records fail to establish non-exhaustion simply because they do not stand for that proposition see Ray v. Kertes, 130 F. App'x 541, 543 (3d Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (holding “conclusory statement” that “does not constitute a factual report describing the steps Ray did or did not take to exhaust his grievances” did not meet defendants' burden); Wyatt v. Terhune, 315 F.3d 1108, 1120 (9th Cir. 2003) (noting that defendants did not show that the administrative remedies had been exhausted because “[t]he affidavit, although describing the inmate appeals process, does not state whether or not [the plaintiff] has exhausted his appeals”); Thixton v. Berge, No. 05-C-620-C, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 92193, at *7 (W.D. Wis. Dec. 19, 2006) (unpublished) (noting that the absence of an appeal about lack of a working toilet and sink did not incarcerated people have produced evidence of grievances that prison officials claimed did not exist.³⁹³ Courts have repeatedly held that they must review plaintiffs' actual grievances to assess exhaustion; prison officials' summaries or characterizations of them are not adequate for that purpose.³⁹⁴

Since exhaustion is an affirmative defense, the defendants should raise it in their answer, or in a motion to dismiss filed in lieu of an answer, or in theory it is waived.³⁹⁵ However, courts are very lenient in allowing defendants to raise the defense at a "pragmatically sufficient time," such as in a summary judgment motion.³⁹⁶ If you file an amended complaint, defendants can assert exhaustion in the answer to it even if they omitted it from their initial answer.³⁹⁷ Courts enforce waiver of the establish non-exhaustion, since if the plaintiff prevailed at the first stage he would not have needed to appeal, and he might have filed an appeal about conditions in general including the sink and toilet issue).

393. See, e.g., Whitmore v. Jones, 456 F.App'x 747, 749–750 (10th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (noting plaintiff's production of the grievance defendants denied was filed); Spires v. Harbaugh, 438 F. App'x 185, 187 n.2 (4th Cir. 2011) (per curiam) (unpublished) (noting "the State alleged to the district court that Spires availed himself of none of the avenues of administrative relief. This highly material fact is clearly disputed by Spires' submission of copies of dismissals of his administrative remedy requests."); Frazier v. Kelley, No. 4:20-CV-00434-KGB, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90821, at *70 (E.D. Ark. May 19, 2020) (unpublished) ("Defendants claim to have no record of Mr. Frazier's grievance, yet there is record evidence of a grievance submitted by Mr. Frazier signed for by an ADC staff member."); Williams v. Hesse, No. 9:16-CV-1343 (GTS/TWD), 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29551, at *10–12 (N.D.N.Y. Feb. 19, 2020) (unpublished) (noting plaintiff produced documentation of an exhausted grievance defendants had denied existed, leading to withdrawal of the exhaustion defense), report and recommendation adopted, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29551 (N.D.N.Y. Mar. 26, 2020) (unpublished); Dorlette v. Wu, No. 3:16-CV-318 (VAB), 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 45737, at *18 (D. Conn. Mar. 20 2019) (unpublished) (noting defendants claimed they had submitted all of plaintiff's requests seeking administrative relief, but the plaintiff produced a Health Services Review form defendants omitted), appeal dismissed, No. 19-1292, 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 14595 (2d Cir. Jan. 24, 2020) (unpublished); see also Banks v. Patton, 743 F. App'x 690, 695 (7th Cir. 2018) (unpublished) (noting that court found evidence in the record of two grievances defendants had denied existed).

394. Wyatt v. Terhune, 315 F.3d 1108, 1120 (9th Cir. 2003) (noting that "Appeal Record" did not sufficiently establish subject matter of plaintiff's appeal); Almy v. Dzurenda, No. 3:17-CV-00045-MMD-WGC, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27654, at *12 (D. Nev. Jan. 18, 2019) (unpublished) (admonishing defendants to produce actual grievance documentation rather than summaries in the future), report and recommendation adopted, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26713 (D. Nev. Feb. 20, 2019) (unpublished), appeal dismissed, No. 19-15422, 2019 U.S. App. LEXIS 18433 (9th Cir. June 19, 2019) (unpublished); Ned v. Rardin, No. 3:16-CV-251-KRG-KAP, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16767, at *8 (W.D. Pa. Jan. 31, 2019) (unpublished) (noting unreliability of Bureau of Prisons' "foundationless summary of the contents of grievances" where the grievances themselves are not retained), report and recommendation adopted as modified, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46779 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 21, 2019) (unpublished), aff'd sub nom. Ned v. Kardin, No. 19-1825, 779 F. App'x 75 (3d Cir. 2019) (per curiam) (unpublished); Yahtues v. Dionne, No. 16-cv-174-SM, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 161751, at *18 (D.N.H. Sept. 21, 2018) (unpublished) (noting inaccuracy of defendants' summary list of grievances and their subject matter).

395. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b).

396. See, e.g., Nottingham v. Finsterwald, No. 13-10398, 582 F. App'x 297, 298 (5th Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding defense not waived because it was "raised it at a pragmatically sufficient time and Nottingham was not prejudiced in his ability to respond"); Campfield v. Tanner, No. 10-1151 section "S" (5), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105584, at *14 (E.D. La. Aug. 16, 2011) (unpublished) (allowing exhaustion defense raised for the first time in response to plaintiff's summary judgment motion, since it was raised at a "pragmatically sufficient time" and plaintiff was not prejudiced), report and recommendation adopted as modified, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105577 (E.D. La. Sept. 19, 2011) (unpublished); see also Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 516 n.7 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding unpleaded non-exhaustion defense raised by motion for judgment on the pleadings was raised at a "pragmatically sufficient time" and was not waived). Contra, Louis-Charles v. Courtwright, No. 9:11-CV-147 (GLS/TWD), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14215, at *12 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 2014) (unpublished) (holding defendants who failed to preserve non-exhaustion defense by pleading it "are not entitled to summary judgment on exhaustion grounds"), report and recommendation adopted as modified by, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13448 (N.D.N.Y. Feb. 4, 2014) (unpublished); Santos v. Delaney, No. 09-3437, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6144, at *16–17 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 17, 2014) (unpublished) (holding failure to plead non-exhaustion bars defendant from "belatedly" raising it by summary judgment motion).

397. Massey v. Helman, 196 F.3d 727 (7th Cir. 1999); Castillo v. Rodas, No. 09 Civ. 9919 (AJN), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41282, at *48–49 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2014) (unpublished) (holding filing of amended complaints after an initial summary judgment motion meant that the defendants, who pled non-exhaustion in their amended exhaustion defense only in extreme cases and in those cases where you can show your case was harmed by the delay in raising it.³⁹⁸

Ordinarily, if a court refuses to dismiss your case for non-exhaustion, prison officials cannot appeal right away. They have to wait until the end of the case.³⁹⁹ However, a district court may grant permission for an interlocutory appeal if it thinks resolving the exhaustion issue is urgent enough.⁴⁰⁰

8. Exhaustion and Statutes of Limitations

Most courts have held that the statute of limitations (the amount of time you have to file your case) is tolled (paused) while you are exhausting administrative remedies.⁴⁰¹ Tolling during exhaustion means that the limitations period does not run while you are exhausting. Some decisions apply state law tolling rules to reach that conclusion.⁴⁰² Other decisions in a few jurisdictions say that state law answer, could pursue a second summary judgment motion claiming non-exhaustion); Jackson v. Gandy, 877 F. Supp. 2d 159, 176 (D.N.J. 2012). But see Carr v. Hazelwood, No. 7:07cv00001, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81753, at *4 (W.D. Va. Oct. 8, 2008) (unpublished) (holding defendant cannot as a matter of right add a new affirmative defense of exhaustion in response to an amended complaint that does not change the theory of plaintiff's case), report and recommendation adopted, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88672 (W.D. Va. Nov. 3, 2008) (unpublished).

398. Keup v. Hopkins, 596 F.3d 899, 903, 904-05 (8th Cir. 2010) (holding exhaustion defense was waived by failure to raise it at trial after earlier denial of summary judgment); Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 343 (2d Cir. 2006) (noting that plaintiffs could have exhausted and returned to court had the defense been timely raised); Sutton v. Ghosh, No. 10-C-08137, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 123352, at *25 n.12 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 16, 2015) (unpublished) (holding non-exhaustion defense forfeited by failure to assert it until after fact discovery was completed, in light of circuit precedent directing that exhaustion should be resolved before merits discovery and ruling; Norington v. Poland, No. 1:05-cv-0063-SEB-JMS, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117397, at *2-5 (S.D. Ind. Dec. 15, 2009) (unpublished) (holding exhaustion defense that was pled, but not pursued for four years until the time of trial, was waived); Abdullah v. Washington, 530 F. Supp. 2d 112, 115 (D.D.C. 2008) (denying amendment to answer asserting exhaustion defense five years after filing; plaintiff would be prejudiced because discovery was closed and plaintiff might have formulated discovery differently if exhaustion had been asserted); Hightower v. Nassau County Sheriff's Dept., 325 F. Supp. 2d 199, 205 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding defense waived where raised only after trial, after 23 months delay, and plaintiff lost opportunity to take discovery), vacated in part on other grounds, 343 F. Supp. 2d 191 (E.D.N.Y. 2004). Compare Curtis v. Timberlake, 436 F.3d 709, 711 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding that the plaintiff did not suffer any harm from the defendant's delay in asserting the exhaustion defense); Panaro v. City of North Las Vegas, 432 F.3d 949, 952 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that the exhaustion defense could be waived because the plaintiff suffered no harm from the delay). Norington v. Poland, No. 1:05-cv-0063-SEB-JMS, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117397, at *2-5 (S.D. Ind. Dec. 15, 2009) (unpublished) (holding exhaustion defense that was pled, but not pursued for four years until the time of trial, was waived).

399. Abu-Jamal v. Kerestes, 779 F. App'x 893, 899 (3d Cir. 2019) (unpublished); Henricks v. Pickaway Corr. Inst., 782 F.3d 744, 752 (6th Cir. 2015); Langford v. Norris, 614 F.3d 445, 456-457 (8th Cir. 2010); Davis v. Streekstra, 227 F.3d 759, 762-763 (7th Cir. 2000) (holding that the defendant had to wait until the case was decided before appealing on an exhaustion issue).

400. See 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b) (allowing certification for appeal of "controlling question of law" under specified circumstances, subject to court of appeals' discretion); Pavey v. Conley, No. 3:03-CV-662 RM, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90523, at *4 (N.D. Ind. Dec. 14, 2006) (unpublished) (certifying question of proper procedural handling of exhaustion for interlocutory appeal), rev'd, 544 F.3d 739 (7th Cir. 2008). But see Estrada v. White, No. 2:14-CV-149, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 106172, *6-7 (S.D. Tex. Aug. 12, 2015) (declining to certify for interlocutory appeal the question whether the remedy was available, since it was ultimately factual and not a question of law).

401. Gonzalez v. Hasty, 651 F.3d 318, 322 (2d Cir. 2011) (quoting decisions explaining that equitable tolling is meant to avoid unfairness to persons not at fault for a late filing, and citing earlier decisions holding limitations is tolled for PLRA exhaustion, without clarifying whether it relied on state law or federal common law principles); Brown v. Valoff, 422 F.3d 926, 943 (9th Cir. 2005) (stating "we agree with the uniform holdings of the circuits that have considered the question that the applicable statute of limitations must be tolled while a prisoner completes the mandatory exhaustion process;" citing cases relying on state law, but not referring directly to state law); Brown v. Morgan, 209 F.3d 595, 596 (6th Cir. 2000).

402. Johnson v. Rivera, 272 F.3d 519, 521 (7th Cir. 2001) (following state law that the statute of limitations is tolled); Roberts v. Barreras, 484 F.3d 1236, 1240-1243 (10th Cir. 2007) (holding claim was not tolled by state equitable tolling law but appeared to be tolled under statute providing tolling where filing is delayed for "any . . . lawful proceeding"); See, e.g., Harris v. Hegmann, 198 F.3d 153, 157 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that state prescribes that the limitations period is not tolled for exhaustion.⁴⁰³ You should be sure you know what rule is applicable in your federal circuit, and if you can't figure it out for sure (since it is not settled in some jurisdictions), it is safest to plan to file early enough that you don't need tolling. That means you should file your case within the limitations period calculated from the date of the occurrence you are suing about. For more information about statutes of limitations, please see Part C(5) of Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law."

If your case is dismissed for non-exhaustion and you want to try to exhaust and re-file it, or if you completed exhaustion while the now-dismissed case was pending, the limitations period will probably have expired.⁴⁰⁴ However, some states have tolling provisions that may apply to such situations, and that will be applied in federal courts, which usually adopt state tolling rules in cases under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.⁴⁰⁵ For example, a New York law says that in an action that started on time but was dismissed for any reason except for those named in the statute, the plaintiff has six months to file a new lawsuit about the subject matter of the dismissed lawsuit.⁴⁰⁶ That six-month period is available in cases dismissed for non-exhaustion.⁴⁰⁷ administrative proceeding tolled statute of limitations); Leal v. Ga. Dept. of Corr., 254 F.3d 1276, 1280 (11th Cir. 2001) (remanding a case back to the district court to determine if tolling should apply). Two appellate decisions have held that if state law tolls the limitations period for exhaustion, it is tolled under the PLRA, but if state law doesn't toll limitations, then federal law does. Battle v. Ledford, 912 F.3d 708, 713 (4th Cir. 2019); accord, Johnson v. Garrison, 805 F. App'x 589, 593 (10th Cir. 2020) (unpublished).

403. Pemberton v. Patton, 673 F. App'x 860, 866 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (holding neither § 1997e(a) nor Oklahoma law supports tolling for administrative exhaustion; holding claim time-barred where exhaustion took 21 months and suit was filed after the two-year statute of limitations had expired); Braxton v. Zavaras, 614 F.3d 1156, 1160 (10th Cir. 2010) (holding there is no tolling for exhaustion under Colorado law, and equitable tolling did not apply where plaintiffs were insufficiently diligent in pursuing their claim without tolling); Jackson v. Crawford, No. 12-4018, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14222, 2015 WL 506233, *10–11 (W.D. Mo. Feb. 6, 2015) (unpublished) (holding limitations was not tolled under Missouri law, which limits tolling to categories specified by the legislature and to instances where a plaintiff was "actively misled" or was "in some extraordinary way prevented [] from asserting his rights"); Adams v. Wiley, No. 09-cv-00612-MSK-KMT, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14229, *4–5 (D. Colo. Feb. 10, 2010) (unpublished) (similar to Braxton), aff'd, 398 F. App'x 372 (10th Cir. 2010); Smith v. Wilson, No. 3:09-CV-133, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98594, *6–7 (N.D. Ind. Oct. 22, 2009) (unpublished) (denying tolling where state law limited statutory tolling to persons less than eighteen years of age, mentally incompetent, or out of the United States, and plaintiff was not entitled to equitable tolling).

404. You may not be allowed to exhaust after your case is dismissed for non-exhaustion because your grievance, too, may be time-barred, unless you persuade prison officials there is a reason to hear your late grievance. See Part E(6) of this Chapter for more information. If you have been released in the interim, your release means that a new case will not be "brought by a prisoner," so you will no longer be subject to the PLRA and won't have to worry about this problem.

405. Hardin v. Straub, 490 U.S. 536, 538–539 (1989); Board of Regents v. Tomanio, 446 U.S. 478, 483–486 (1980) (holding that state tolling rules are applicable in § 1983 actions).

406. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 205(a) (1999). The statute provides that an action that "is terminated in any other manner than by a voluntary discontinuance, a failure to obtain personal jurisdiction over the defendant, a dismissal of the complaint for neglect to prosecute the action, or a final judgment upon the merits" is entitled to this six-month refiling period. It also requires that service of process be completed within the six-month period. However, courts have held that this service requirement is not binding in federal court, since state law governing the method or timing of service of process is not borrowed along with the statute of limitations for federal claims. Allaway v. McGinnis, 362 F. Supp. 2d 390, 395 (W.D.N.Y. 2005) (applying state law to tolling, but not to service of process); Gashi v. County of Westchester, 02 Civ. 6934 (GBD), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1215, at *27–30 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2005) (unpublished) (borrowing state tolling laws in a federal case). Tolling statutes vary from state to state and may not always be helpful. For example, the Indiana statute applies only if the case is dismissed for reasons other than negligence in prosecuting it. One court has held that failure to exhaust constitutes negligence under the Indiana statute. The statute was not tolled and the claim was time-barred in that case. Thomas v. Timko, 428 F. Supp. 2d 855, 857 (N.D. Ind. 2006).

407. See Villante v. Vandyke, 93 F. App'x 307, 309–310 (2d Cir. 2004) (unpublished) (noting Attorney General's office's concession that claims dismissed for non-exhaustion can be reinstated under this statute); Rivera v. Pataki, 01 Civ. 5179 (MBM), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11266, at *31, 32 n.13 (S.D.N.Y. July 1, 2003) (unpublished) (reading the statute the same way).

In some cases, courts have applied the doctrine of equitable tolling to toll the limitations period for exhaustion, and sometimes for actions brought and then dismissed for non-exhaustion, under circumstances where it would be unfair to dismiss the plaintiff's case based on the statute of limitations.⁴⁰⁸

Claims may be validly exhausted even if the exhaustion occurred outside the limitations period.⁴⁰⁹

F. Physical Injury Requirement: Section 1997e(e) of the PLRA

Section 1997e(e) of the PLRA states:

No Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury or the commission of a sexual act (as defined in section 2246 of title 18).⁴¹⁰

A similar requirement was added by the PLRA to the Federal Tort Claims Act ("FTCA"):

No person convicted of a felony who is incarcerated while awaiting sentencing or while serving a sentence may bring a civil action against the United States or an agency, officer, or employee of the Government, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury or the commission of a sexual act (as defined in section 2246 of title 18).⁴¹¹

Note that this FTCA section applies only to people convicted of felonies; it does not apply to detainees or those convicted of misdemeanors. However, section 1997e(e) applies to all people who are incarcerated. As of the publication of this Manual, courts have not addressed whether § 1997e(e) restricts FTCA cases that are not within the scope of the FTCA provision, though several courts have applied § 1997e(e) in FTCA cases where the differences between the provisions do not make any practical difference. When they conflict—that is, when a federal pre-trial detainee or misdemeanant brings a case under the FTCA—the well-known statutory construction principle that “the specific governs the general” suggests that § 1997e(e), the more general provision, would not apply, and the more specific FTCA provision limiting the physical injury requirement to persons serving time or awaiting sentencing for a felony would apply instead.⁴¹²

Courts have held the physical injury requirement is constitutional since it only applies to damage claims (damages are the money awarded by a court to a person who has suffered injury or harm).⁴¹³

408. Clifford v. Gibbs, 298 F.3d 328, 333 (5th Cir. 2002) (applying equitable tolling because otherwise the plaintiff would be unable to bring his claim); McCoy v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 233, 253 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (extending the statute of limitations as a matter of fairness). Courts are more likely to apply equitable tolling if there is some reason it would be unfair to dismiss your case as time-barred, like if you made a technical mistake the first time you tried to exhaust. But see Crump v. Darling, No. 1:06-cv-20, 2007 U.S. Dist LEXIS 20000, at *45–47 (W.D. Mich. Mar. 21, 2007) (unpublished) (denying equitable tolling to prisoner whose case was dismissed for non-exhaustion).

409. Beckett v. Dept. of Corr., No. 1:CV-10-0050, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 100890, at *54 n.9 (M.D. Pa. July 24, 2014) (unpublished) (holding claim exhausted where grievance was decided outside the limitations period (action was timely because limitations was tolled during exhaustion)), aff'd, 597 F. App'x 665 (3d Cir. 2015) (per curiam) (unpublished); Harrison v. Stalder, No. 06-2825, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88277, at *2 (E.D. La. Dec. 5, 2006) (unpublished) (granting defendants' motion to dismiss for failure to exhaust administrative remedies).

410. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

411. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(2).

412. See RadLAX Gateway Hotel, LLC v. Amalgamated Bank, 566 U.S. 639, 645, 132 S. Ct. 2065, 2071, 182 L. Ed. 2d 967 (2012) (holding that a more specific provision that seems to contradict a more general one should be regarded as an exception to the general provision).

413. See Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1346–1347 (D.C. Cir. 1998), a case in which an

Section 1997e(e) refers to actions “brought by a prisoner,” so the rule does not apply to people who sue after they are released from prison.⁴¹⁴ It does apply to people who file their lawsuits in prison and are later released.⁴¹⁵ If a case is dismissed under this statute, dismissal should be without prejudice. When dismissal is without prejudice, you may refile your case once you are no longer in jail or prison as long as the statute of limitations (the law that says how long you have to bring your case) has not expired.⁴¹⁶

The physical injury requirement applies to “injury suffered while in custody,” which is broader than “prison conditions,” the phrase used in the administrative exhaustion requirement.⁴¹⁷ “Injury suffered while in custody” includes injury sustained on arrest,⁴¹⁸ and as one court has said, “any situation in which a reasonable person would feel a restraint on his movement such that he would not feel free to leave.”⁴¹⁹ The same court has held that § 1997e(e) applies to injury suffered in custody, even if the custody had nothing to do with the plaintiff’s current incarceration.⁴²⁰ incarcerated person argued that 1997e(e) violated his right to equal protection and heavily burdened his Fifth Amendment right of access to the courts. The court determined that 1997e(e) did not restrict claims for declaratory or injunctive relief; it only limited the availability of damages. After conducting a rational basis review, the court concluded that 1997e(e) did not violate the plaintiff’s right to equal protection or his right of access to the courts. See also Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 461–463 (7th Cir. 1997) (explaining that immunity doctrines, like restrictions on damage remedies, are constitutional because a remedy of damages does not need to be available for every constitutional violation).

414. Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 976–980 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that 1997e(e) applies to a complaint filed while the plaintiff was detained in a jail, prison, or another correctional facility); Kerr v. Puckett, 138 F.3d 321, 323 (7th Cir. 1998) (holding that 1997e(e) did not apply to a formerly incarcerated person who filed a complaint after he was released from prison). A conflicting decision, Cox v. Malone, 199 F. Supp. 2d 135, 140 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), aff’d, Cox v. Malone, 56 F. App’x. 43, 44 (2d Cir. 2003) (unpublished), contradicts the statutory language and has been rejected by subsequent decisions. See Hayes v. City of New York, No. 4370 (LAK), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133919, at *1–2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2014) (unpublished); In re Nassau County Strip Search Cases, No. 99-CV-2844 (DRH), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99783, at *19–20 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2010) (unpublished) (holding that § 1997e(e) only applies when a plaintiff is incarcerated at the beginning of the lawsuit, and stating that Cox v. Malone is unpersuasive); Mills v. Grant Cnty. Detention Ctr., No. 07-74-DLB, 2009 WL 10675152, at *2 (E.D. Ky. Mar. 17, 2009) (unpublished) (stating the court is unpersuaded by Cox v. Malone, and noting that several other courts have also rejected the case’s reasoning); Sutton v. Hopkins County, No. 4:03CV-003-M, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34698, at *12–13 (W.D. Ky. Dec. 19, 2005) (unpublished) (rejecting Cox v. Malone and holding that § 1997e(e) does not apply to formerly incarcerated people); Rose v. Saginaw County, 232 F.R.D. 267, 277 (E.D. Mich. 2005) (rejecting the reasoning in Cox v. Malone because “it ignores the plain language of the statute.”).

415. Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 985 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that released plaintiffs remain “prisoners” for purposes of § 1997e(e) as long as they brought the lawsuit at the time they were still imprisoned, but dismissing their claims for monetary relief without prejudice so that they may re-file when they are no longer confined).

416. Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2008) (“We have interpreted this statute to require the dismissal of several prisoners’ complaints for emotional injury ‘without prejudice to their being re-filed at a time when the plaintiffs are not confined.’”) (citing Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 985 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc)). As explained in the next section, dismissal of the entire action may not be appropriate, since some courts hold that the statute restricts only compensatory (money) damages.

417. See 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) (exhaustion requirement).

418. Napier v. Preslicka, 314 F.3d 528, 533 (11th Cir. 2002) (holding § 1997e(e) applies to “injuries suffered during custodial episodes, even if such custody occurred outside prison walls,” and noting arrest “is considered the archetype of a situation that results in Miranda custody” (citing Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 444, 86 S. Ct. 1602, 1612, 16 L. Ed. 2d 694, 706 (1966)), rehearing denied, Napier v. Preslicka, 331 F.3d 1189 (11th Cir. 2003).

419. See Quinlan v. Personal Transport Servs. Co., 329 F. App’x 246, 249 (11th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (addressing a plaintiff who was restrained and caged during extradition).

420. Napier v. Preslicka, 314 F.3d 528, 532–534 (11th Cir. 2002) (holding that 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) of the Prison Litigation Reform Act applied to claims regarding the arrest of an imprisoned plaintiff and claims unrelated to the current incarceration of that plaintiff), rehearing denied, 331 F.3d 1189 (11th Cir. 2003), cert denied, 540 U.S. 1112, 124 S. Ct. 1038, 157 L. Ed. 2d 901 (2004). This interpretation sharply divided both the panel and the court as a whole and produced strong dissents.

The Eleventh Circuit has held that in a case removed to federal court from state court (in other words, when a case begins in state court and later is moved to federal court by the defendants), § 1997e(e) does not apply to claims based only on state law.⁴²¹ This holding is questionable. A number of lower courts have disagreed, holding the term “Federal civil action” means all “claims brought in federal court, not merely . . . claims founded on federal law.”⁴²² It is also questionable whether § 1997e(e) applies at all to actions originally filed in state court. The statute says that “no Federal civil action may be brought” for mental or emotional injury without physical injury.⁴²³ The phrase “no Federal civil action may be brought” suggests that whether § 1997e(e) applies depends on whether the case is a “Federal Civil Action” at the time the case is filed. If a “federal civil action” is a case in federal court, a lawsuit filed in state court is not a “[f]ederal civil action” when it is filed. That reasoning would mean section 1997e(e) of the PLRA should not apply to any part of a case filed in state court under any circumstances, even after the case was removed to federal court. Yet, there are no decisions interpreting § 1997e(e) in this way (and there is one case that interprets §1997e(e) in the opposite way).⁴²⁴

1. What Does Section 1997e(e) Do?

Section 1997e(e) prohibits “action[s] . . . for mental or emotional injury.”⁴²⁵ However, courts have interpreted it as prohibiting damages for mental or emotional injury, not prohibiting actions as a whole.⁴²⁶ Most courts have held that section 1997e(e) prohibits compensatory (money) damages for mental or emotional injury, while allowing punitive damages (damages to punish the defendant when his behavior was very harmful) and nominal damages (very small amounts of money).⁴²⁷ One circuit

421. Mitchell v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., 294 F.3d 1309, 1315 (11th Cir. 2002) (finding that section 1997e(e) did not apply because the action was filed in state court on “solely alleged state-law claims unrelated to prison conditions.”)

422. Hood v. Balido, No. 3:02-CV-0669-P, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10137, at *1 (N.D. Tex. June 4, 2002) (unpublished); accord, Wagner v. Texas Dept. of Criminal Justice, No. 1:15-CV-177-BL, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75278, at *20 (N.D. Tex. May 3, 2018) (unpublished); Jacobs v. Penn. Dept. of Corr., No. 04-1366, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60869, at *23 (W.D.Pa. June 7, 2011) (unpublished) (holding federal civil action means “an action in which civil claims over which the federal court has jurisdiction are brought, i.e., all claims over which the court has original jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, and supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367”); Schonarth v. Robinson, No. 06-cv-151-JM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13596, at *14 (D.N.H. Feb. 22, 2008) (unpublished) (“I agree with the line of cases which conclude that § 1997e(e) applies to all actions that are brought in federal court which seek damages for mental or emotional injury, regardless of whether the underlying cause of action is based on federal or state law.”); Hines v. Oklahoma, No. CIV-07-197-R, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 77291, at *6 (W.D. Okla. Oct. 17, 2007) (unpublished). Contra Vanvalkenburg v. Oregon Dept. of Corr., No. 3:14-cv-00916-BR, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58438, at *36–37 (D. Or. May 2, 2016) (unpublished) (concluding that the plaintiff’s claim which began in state court and moved to federal court was a “federal civil action”).

423. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (emphasis added).

424. Vanvalkenburg v. Oregon Dept. of Corr., No. 3:14-cv-00916-BR, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58438, at *35–36 (D.Or. May 2, 2016) (unpublished) (holding that where a plaintiff’s claim moved from state to federal court, § 1997e(e) applied and required a showing of physical injury).

425. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

426. Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 940 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding the statute is a limitation on damages for mental or emotional injury, not “a filing prerequisite for the federal action itself”); accord Rasho v. Elyea, 856 F.3d 469, 477 (7th Cir. 2017); Munn v. Toney, 433 F.3d 1087, 1089 (8th Cir. 2006).

427. Smith v. Peters, 631 F.3d 418, 421 (7th Cir. 2011) (“Prison officials who recklessly expose a prisoner to a substantial risk of a serious physical injury . . . are subject to those remedies that are not barred by section 1997e(e),” which include nominal and punitive damages); Hutchins v. McDaniels, 512 F.3d 193, 196–198 (5th Cir. 2007) (“We hold today that Hutchins may recover nominal or punitive damages, despite § 1997e(e), if he can successfully prove that McDaniels violated his Fourth Amendment rights.”); Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 723 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that nominal and punitive damages were available to plaintiff); Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 943 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding that nominal damages are included in the forms of a relief that a plaintiff is entitled to under § 1997e(e)); Oliver v. Keller, 289 F.3d 623, 629–630 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that where plaintiff alleged his constitutional rights were violated, his claims for nominal and punitive damages were allowed under § 1997e(e)); Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002) (“both parties and three of our sister circuits has held that section 1997e(e) prohibits punitive as well as compensatory damages for mental or emotional injury without physical injury,⁴²⁸ though it along with all other circuits to date holds that nominal damages are not restricted.⁴²⁹ Declaratory relief (when a court declares the plaintiff's rights) and injunctive relief (when the court orders a person to start or stop doing something) are not affected by section 1997e(e).⁴³⁰

If you have one claim for mental or emotional injury and some other claim, such as loss or damage to property, the second claim can go forward for all forms of damages.⁴³¹

Most courts assume that section 1997e(e) creates a pleading requirement, even though the statute does not say physical injury must be pled. Many claims for damages are dismissed at initial screening⁴³² or on a motion to dismiss⁴³³ because the plaintiff does not allege physical injury.⁴³⁴ One agree that Section 1997e(e) does not limit the availability of nominal damages for the violation of a constitutional right or of punitive damages.”); Searles v. Van Bebber, 251 F.3d 869, 878–881 (10th Cir. 2001) (“the rule seems to be that an award of nominal damages is mandatory upon a finding of a constitutional violation, as the jury found here.”); Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 251–252 (3d Cir. 2000); see Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 266 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (holding plaintiffs who allege “actual harms,” including intangible (nonphysical) harms that violate the Constitution, may seek punitive as well as nominal damages).

428. Al-Amin v. Smith, 637 F.3d 1192, 1196–1199 (11th Cir. 2011) (holding the question was decided previously in Smith v. Allen, 502 F.3d 1255, 1271 (11th Cir. 2007) and in Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970 (11th Cir. 2000)).

429. Brooks v. Warden, 800 F.3d 1295, 1308–1309 (11th Cir. 2015) (stating “both the text and purpose of the PLRA support the conclusion that § 1997e(e) does not bar a prisoner from recovering nominal damages without a showing of physical injury”).

430. Hutchins v. McDaniels, 512 F.3d 193, 197 (5th Cir. 2007) (noting that § 1997e(e) does not prohibit declaratory or injunctive relief when an incarcerated person's constitutional rights are violated); Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 723 (8th Cir. 2004) (stating that Congress did not intend for § 1997e(e) to prohibit all relief); Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 940 (7th Cir. 2003) (citing Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 462 (7th Cir. 1997)); Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 533 (3d Cir. 2003) (“We also agree with several other courts of appeals that § 1997e(e) does not apply to claims seeking injunctive or declaratory relief.”); Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2004) (“First, we agree with all the circuits to have addressed the issue . . . that Section 1997e(e) does not prevent a prisoner from obtaining injunctive or declaratory relief.”); Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 719 (5th Cir. 1999) (“Section 1997e(e) prohibits only recovery of the damages Harper seeks absent a physical injury. He also seeks a declaration that his rights have been violated, and he requests injunctive relief to end the allegedly unconstitutional conditions of his confinement; these remedies survive § 1997e(e).”) (footnote omitted); Perkins v. Kansas Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 808 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that even if the plaintiff could not receive money damages, he could still receive injunctive relief for restrictions placed on him); Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1346 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (rejecting the plaintiff's argument that § 1997e(e) prohibits declaratory and injunctive relief); see Mann v. Wilkinson, No. C2-00-706, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47089, at *1–2 (S.D. Ohio, May 20, 2009) (unpublished) (granting injunctive relief while holding damages were prohibited by § 1997e(e)).

431. Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 749 (7th Cir. 1999) (“If the suit contains separate claims, neither involving physical injury, and in one the prisoner claims damages for mental or emotional suffering and in the other damages for some other type of injury, the first claim is barred by the statute but the second is unaffected.”); see Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 222, 127 S. Ct. 910, 925, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 814 (2007) (“Section 1997e(e) contains similar language, ‘[n]o . . . action may be brought . . . for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury,’ yet respondents cite no case interpreting this provision to require dismissal of the entire lawsuit if only one claim does not comply, and again we see little reason for such an approach.”).

432. Please see Part D of this Chapter for more information on the initial screening.

433. Please see Part D of this Chapter for more information on Motions to Dismiss.

434. See, e.g., Brooks v. Warden, 800 F.3d 1295, 1298 (11th Cir. 2015) (“Because Brooks has not alleged any physical injury resulting from his hospital stay, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e), he cannot recover compensatory or punitive damages.”); DeMoss v. Crain, 636 F.3d 145, 151 (5th Cir. 2011) (stating compensatory damages for religious deprivation claim are “barred by 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) because [plaintiff] has not alleged any physical injury stemming from the cell restriction policy”); Brazil v. Rice, 308 F. App'x 186, 187 (9th Cir. 2009) (unpublished) (“The district court properly dismissed the Eighth Amendment claim because the amended complaint does not allege that Brazil suffered any physical injury.”); Harden-Bey v. Rutter, 524 F.3d 789, 795–796 (6th Cir. 2008) (“Even if we read his complaint to allege emotional or mental injuries, Harden-Bey cannot bring an Eighth Amendment claim for such injuries because he did not allege a physical federal circuit has held that § 1997e(e) creates an affirmative defense (a defense the defendant offers to justify his action, so that even if he committed the act, he should still be found not guilty),⁴³⁵ like the administrative exhaustion requirement.⁴³⁶ That would mean the defendants have to raise the physical injury requirement in their answer. A few courts have held that it does not create either a pleading requirement or an affirmative defense, but just a rule about what damages are recoverable.⁴³⁷ That seems to us the correct approach, but since most courts have held physical injury is a pleading requirement, you should probably describe in your complaint whatever physical injury, if any, that you are claiming.

If your case gets past screening and a motion to dismiss, it may be the subject of a motion for summary judgment, where you will need to provide evidence of any physical injury you claim you suffered (which can include your own affidavit or declaration describing your injury as well as documentary evidence).⁴³⁸

2. What Is “Mental or Emotional Injury”?

There is a strong conflict among federal courts about the meaning of “mental or emotional injury.” Some courts have interpreted the phrase narrowly. One court said, for example, “[t]he term ‘mental or emotional injury’ has a well understood meaning as referring to such things as stress, fear, and depression, and other psychological impacts.”⁴³⁹ A court taking this view will hold that deprivations of intangible constitutional rights—which are rights like freedom of speech and religion or the due process of law—are not “mental or emotional injury” and incarcerated people can receive damages for constitutional violations regardless of whether they sustained any physical injury. Several federal appeals courts have taken this view.⁴⁴⁰ injury. See 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). . . .”); Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 250 (3d Cir. 2000) (“Under § 1997e(e), however, in order to bring a claim for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody, a prisoner must allege physical injury. . . .”); Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748–749 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that actions or claims asserting mental or emotional injury should be dismissed if physical injury is not pled).

435. Douglas v. Yates, 535 F.3d 1316, 1320 (11th Cir. 2008) (“we conclude that the limitation of complaints by prisoners for emotional injury, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e), provides an affirmative defense.”).

436. Please see Part E(1) and Part E(3) of this Chapter for more information on the administrative exhaustion requirement.

437. Malik v. City of New York, No. 11 Civ. 6062 (PAC) (FM), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118358, at *47 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 15, 2012) (unpublished) (“Furthermore, a plaintiff need not plead physical injury in a complaint covered by the PLRA.”), report and recommendation adopted, No. 11 Civ. 6062 (PAC) (FM), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141305 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2012) (unpublished); In re Nassau County Strip Search Cases, No. 99-CV-2844 (DRH), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 99783, at *2 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 22, 2010) (unpublished) (“As § 1997e(e) is a limitation on recovery and not an affirmative defense to liability, it need not be pled [by defendants].”).

438. Please see Part E(7) of this Chapter for more information on summary judgment and exhaustion.

439. Amaker v. Haponik, No. 98 Civ. 2663 (JGK), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1568, at *22–23 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 17, 1999) (unpublished) (noting that requiring physical injury in all cases would make the term “mental or emotional injury” superfluous); see also Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748 (7th Cir. 1999) (restricting the domain of the statute to suits in which mental or emotional injury is claimed).

440. Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (holding “not every non-physical injury is by default a mental or emotional injury”); King v. Zamiara, 788 F.3d 207, 212–213 (6th Cir. 2015) (holding “the plain language of the statute does not bar claims for constitutional injury that do not also involve physical injury”); Wilcox v. Brown, 877 F.3d 161, 170 (4th Cir. 2017) (stating court is “squarely in the . . . camp” of circuits holding that First Amendment violations are compensable independently of physical, mental, or emotional injury (citing Piver v. Pender Cty. Bd. of Educ., 835 F.2d 1076, 1082 (4th Cir. 1987) (holding that an “injury to a protected first amendment interest can itself constitute compensable injury wholly apart from any emotional distress, humiliation and personal indignity, emotional pain, embarrassment, fear, anxiety and anguish suffered by plaintiffs” (internal quotation marks omitted))); Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 534 n.10 (3d Cir. 2003) (stating that requests for damages for loss of “status, custody level and any chance at commutation” resulting from a disciplinary hearing were “unrelated to mental injury” and “not affected by § 1997e(e)’s requirements.”); Cassidy v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 199 F.3d 374, 375–377 (7th Cir. 2000) (dismissing claims for mental and emotional harm stemming from an underlying constitutional violation but allowing plaintiff to pursue “all of his other claims for damages”—which included “(2) the loss of the opportunity to enjoy an early discharge from prison or the chance

Other courts have taken a much broader view of mental or emotional injury. In effect, they say any injury that is not physical is either mental or emotional—which means that constitutional violations, like being deprived of your right to due process and religious freedom, are merely mental or emotional and you cannot recover compensatory (money) damages for them unless they somehow caused physical injury.⁴⁴¹ So, for example, an incarcerated person who was held in solitary confinement for a year based on retaliation for exercise of his First Amendment rights was held entitled only to $1.00 in nominal damages because the court thought his injury—a year’s loss of the limited liberty of ordinary prison confinement—was only mental or emotional.⁴⁴² There are many similar decisions in “broader view” cases holding prisoners cannot recover compensatory damages for injuries such as unlawful arrest and confinement,⁴⁴³ racial discrimination,⁴⁴⁴ abusive conditions of confinement,⁴⁴⁵ and many others.⁴⁴⁶ However, you should argue that these types of constitutional violations are really injuries to your liberty, and not just a matter of mental or emotional injury. Property deprivations are of course not mental or emotional injury,⁴⁴⁷ though they may also cause mental or emotional injury for which prisoners cannot recover under the broader interpretation.⁴⁴⁸ of a pardon or clemency based on efforts to rehabilitate himself; (3) the loss of participation in and advantages of activities to which the non-disabled had access while in prison, and the loss of the freedom of movement and social contact; (4) a diminished quality of life; and (5) the loss of access to programs, services and activities guaranteed by federal law”); Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781–782 (7th Cir. 1999) (“A prisoner is entitled to judicial relief for a violation of his First Amendment rights aside from any physical, mental, or emotional injury he may have sustained.”); Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) (“[T]he deprivation of First Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show, or any mental or emotional injury he may have incurred. Therefore, § 1997e(e) does not apply to First Amendment [c]laims regardless of the form of relief sought.”).

441. Geiger v. Jowers, 404 F.3d 371, 374 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (holding claim that plaintiff was deprived of magazines in violation of the First Amendment involved only mental or emotional injury); Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 250 (3d Cir. 2000) (holding in a religious freedom case “the only actual injury that could form the basis for the award he seeks would be mental and/or emotional injury” (emphasis added)).

442. Pearson v. Welborn, 471 F.3d 732, 744–745 (7th Cir. 2006).

443. Brown v. Sudduth, 255 F. App’x 803, 808 (5th Cir. 2007) (applying § 1997e(e) to claim of false arrest; plaintiff “sought compensatory damages for the sole alleged injury of liberty deprivation. Having not alleged a physical injury, the district court correctly concluded that Brown’s claim for compensatory damages must fail.”); Brumett v. Santa Rosa County, No. 3:07cv448/LAC/EMT, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89061, at *4–6 (N.D. Fla. Dec. 4, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that claim of six months’ illegal detention was not sufficient for relief because it failed to demonstrate a physical injury); Campbell v. Johnson, No. 3:06cv365/RV/EMT, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 72146, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Oct. 3, 2006) (unpublished) (refusing to accept paperwork and collateral for release on bond).

444. Jones v. Pancake, No. 3:06CV-P188-H, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84309, at *6–8 (W.D. Ky. Nov. 9, 2007) (unpublished) (allowing plaintiff to amend a racial discrimination claim to include relief for nominal and punitive damages).

445. Merchant v. Hawk-Sawyer, 37 F. App’x 143, 145–146 (6th Cir. 2002) (unpublished) (barring damages because plaintiff did not allege that conditions in a segregated housing unit caused him physical injury); Harper v. Showers, 174 F.3d 716, 719–720 (5th Cir. 1999) (barring damages claims for placement in filthy cells formerly occupied by psychiatric patients and for exposure to deranged behavior of those patients).

446. Robinson v. Dept. of Corr., No. 3:07cv5/MCR/EMT, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50817, at *10 (N.D. Fla. July 13, 2007) (unpublished) (stopping mail and delaying filing of lawsuits as well as deprivation of religious materials), report and recommendation adopted, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 75961 (N.D. Fla. Oct. 12, 2007); Ivy v. New Albany City Police Dept., No. 3:06CV112-P-A, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79882, at *1–3 (N.D. Miss. Oct. 30, 2006) (unpublished) (being held naked in an isolation cell); Caudell v. Rose, Nos. 7:04CV00557, 7:04CV00558, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10251, at *8 (W.D. Va. May 27, 2005) (unpublished) (seizure of legal papers), report and recommendation adopted, 378 F. Supp. 2d 725 (W.D. Va. 2005); Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 559, 565–566 (W.D. Va. 2000) (holding that a complaint that an incarcerated person was routinely viewed in the nude by opposite-sex staff stated a constitutional claim sufficiently established to defeat qualified immunity, but was not actionable because of the mental/emotional injury provision).

447. Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002).

448. Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748 (7th Cir. 1999).

Based on the rulings discussed above that adopt the narrow view of what mental or emotional injury means, you could make a legitimate argument that mental or emotional injury means just what it sounds like,⁴⁴⁹ and deprivations of constitutional or statutory rights are separate injuries from mental or emotional injuries, regardless of whether they cause mental or emotional injury as well. If “mental or emotional injury” really meant any injury that is not physical, then there would be no need for the phrase “mental or emotional injury” in the statute; it could just say that no prisoner action can be brought without showing physical injury. That is contrary to one of the basic principles of interpreting statutes: they should not be interpreted in a way that makes any part of them superfluous, i.e., useless.⁴⁵⁰ Some courts adopting the narrow interpretation of “mental or emotional injury” have relied on that principle in reaching their conclusions.⁴⁵¹

That argument will probably not help you if you are in a circuit where the court of appeals has committed itself to the broad approach. However, at least one of those courts has expressed some doubt about the correctness of its position.⁴⁵² Note, if you make the argument in the district court, then you will be able to argue the point on appeal.

Some circuits have not yet decided whether to adopt the broader or narrower interpretation of § 1997e(e) as of late 2020. These include:

The First Circuit, where there is no relevant appellate decision. Several district courts there have held that intangible violations of constitutional or other rights are distinct from mental or emotional injury (the narrow interpretation).⁴⁵³

449. See Amaker v. Haponik, No. 98 Civ. 2663 (JGK), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1568, at *22–23 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 17, 1999) (unpublished) (noting that requiring physical injury in all cases would make the term “mental or emotional injury” superfluous); see also Robinson v. Page, 170 F.3d 747, 748 (7th Cir. 1999) (restricting the domain of the statute to suits in which mental or emotional injury is claimed).

450. See TRW Inc. v. Andrews, 534 U.S. 19, 31, 122 S. Ct. 441, 449, 151 L. Ed. 2d 339, 350 (2001) (“It is a cardinal principle of statutory construction that a statute ought, upon the whole, to be so construed that, if it can be prevented, no clause, sentence, or word shall be superfluous, void, or insignificant.” (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

451. Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 263 (D.C. Cir. 2016); King v. Zamiara, 788 F.3d 207, 213 (6th Cir. 2015) (citing Amaker v. Haponik, No. 98 Civ. 2663 (JGK), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1568, at *7 (S.D.N.Y., Feb. 17, 1999) (unpublished)).

452. See Carter v. Allen, 940 F.3d 1233, 1237 (11th Cir. 2019) (Martin, J., dissenting from the denial of rehearing en banc) (stating court’s broad interpretation of § 1997e(e) is wrong); Carter v. Allen, 940 F.3d 1233, 1235–1236 (11th Cir. 2019) (W. Pryor, J., respecting the denial of rehearing en banc) (acknowledging that circuit precedent may require reexamination on the interpretation of § 1997e(e)).

453. Cox v. Massachusetts Dept. of Corr., No. 13-10379-FDS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55482, *18 (D. Mass. Mar. 31, 2018) (unpublished) (holding in an ADA case, “in accordance with the reasoning of Aref [v. Lynch], that a prisoner’s inability to access prison programs and services is itself an injury, separate and distinct from a mental and emotional injury, for which the prisoner can recover compensatory damages absent any showing of physical injury or sexual assault”), appeal dismissed, No. 18-1399 U.S. App. LEXIS 31923 (1st Cir. July 11, 2018) (unpublished); Shaheed–Muhammad v. Dipaolo, 393 F.Supp.2d 80, 107 (D.Mass. 2005) (holding “the violation of a constitutional right is an independent injury that is immediately cognizable and outside the purview of [Section] 1997e(e)”; Shaheed–Muhammad v. Dipaolo 138 F.Supp.2d 99, 107 (D. Mass. 2001); see also Ford v. Bender, No. 07-11457-JGD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10090, at *13–14 (D.Mass. Jan. 27, 2012) (unpublished) (concluding that § 1997e(e) had to be raised as an affirmative defense, and, in any event, that compensatory damages were available for suits alleging deprivation of constitutional rights (citing Gordon v. Pepe, No. 00-10453-RWZ, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16707, at *2 (D.Mass. Aug. 24, 2004) (unpublished))), motion to amend denied, No. 07-11457-JGD, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54890 (D.Mass. Apr. 19, 2012) (unpublished) (citations omitted).

In the Second Circuit, there is an unpublished decision that adopts the narrow view (but unfortunately there has yet to be a published decision that adopts this view).⁴⁵⁴ District court decisions are mixed but tend towards the narrow view as well.⁴⁵⁵

The Seventh Circuit has at times taken the stance that the narrower interpretation of § 1997e(e) is correct, but has also taken opposite stance in other decision.⁴⁵⁶ Not surprisingly, so have district court decisions.⁴⁵⁷

454. Toliver v. City of New York, 530 F. App'x 90, 93 n.2 (2d Cir. 2013) (unpublished) (stating “even if [the plaintiff] is unable to establish that any of the injuries complained of in this action stemmed from an incident in which he suffered physical injuries, [he] may still recover damages for injuries to his First Amendment rights.”). A published decision stated that “Section 1997e(e) applies to claims in which a plaintiff alleges constitutional violations so that the plaintiff cannot recover damages for mental or emotional injury for a constitutional violation in the absence of a showing of actual physical injury,” Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411 (2d Cir. 2002) (emphasis added), but that statement does not establish how § 1997e(e) applies—that is, it doesn't say whether First Amendment and other intangible violations are merely “mental or emotional injur[ies].”

455. See, e.g., Jones v. Annucci, No. 16-CV-3516 (KMK), 2018 U.S. LEXIS 24359, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2018) (unpublished) (stating §1997e(e) does not bar compensatory damages for First Amendment violations, which “allege intangible violations of liberty and personal rights” (citations and internal quotation marks omitted)); Russell v. Pallito, No. 5:15-cv-126, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42009, at *6 (D.Vt. Mar. 23, 2017) (unpublished) (relying on King v. Zamiara, 788 F.3d 207 (6th Cir. 2015) and Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242 (D.C. Cir. 2016), cited earlier); Valdez v. City of New York, 11 Civ. 05194 (PAC) (DF), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188044, at *21–22 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 3, 2013) (unpublished) (holding in First Amendment religious rights case that “deprivations of liberty and personal rights can give rise to damages separate and apart from those recoverable for any physical injury or emotional suffering”), report and recommendation adopted, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82508 (S.D.N.Y. June 16, 2014) (unpublished); Rosado v. Herard, 12 Civ. 8943 (PGG) (FM), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40172, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Mar 25, 2014) (unpublished) (stating “courts in this Circuit have concluded that a physical injury is not required for a prisoner to recover compensatory damages for the loss of a constitutional liberty interest.”); Mendez v. Amato, 9:12-CV-560(TJM/CFH), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132346, at *20 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 17, 2013) (unpublished) (holding claims based on confinement in Involuntary Protective Custody “involve the loss of such intangibles as liberty through a lack of due process and equal protection” and thus “fall outside of the physical harm requirement of the PLRA”; distinguishing between loss of liberty and emotional suffering); Lipton v. County of Orange, 315 F. Supp. 2d 434, 457 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (“Although § 1997e(e) applies to plaintiff's First Amendment retaliation claim, a First Amendment deprivation presents a cognizable injury standing alone and the PLRA ‘does not bar a separate award of damages to compensate the plaintiff for the First Amendment violation in and of itself.’” (citation omitted))). Contra, e.g., Kimbrough v. Fischer, 9:13-CV-100 (FJS/TWD), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 58412, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2017) (unpublished) (holding in case involving segregated confinement that deprivations such as loss of recreation, inability to attend religious services, loss of contact visitations, and loss of certain privileges were not sufficiently distinguished from mental or emotional injury); Amaker v. Goord, 06-CV-490A(Sr), 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73133, at *1 (W.D.N.Y. June 5, 2015) (unpublished) (holding § 1997e(e) bars compensatory damages for religious rights violation and confinement in special housing).

456. Taking the broad view: Pearson v. Welborn, 471 F.3d 732, 744–745 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding § 1997e(e) bars damages for a year in solitary confinement); Reed v. Kemper, 673 F. App'x 533, 536–537 (7th Cir. 2016) (unpublished) (assuming deprivation of right to marry inflicted only emotional injury). Taking the narrow view: Cassidy v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 199 F.3d 374, 375–378 (7th Cir. 2000) (allowing damages claims in a disability case based on “the loss of participation in and advantages of activities to which the non-disabled had access while in prison, and the loss of the freedom of movement and social contact; . . . a diminished quality of life; and . . . the loss of access to programs, services and activities guaranteed by federal law” to go forward); Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781–782 (7th Cir. 1999) (“A prisoner is entitled to judicial relief for a violation of his First Amendment rights aside from any physical, mental, or emotional injury he may have sustained.”).

457. Narrow view: Baldwin v. Clarke, No. 14-CV-856, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20666, at *6 (E.D. Wis. Feb. 14, 2017) (unpublished) (in case involving denial of visit with plaintiff's minor child, holding Seventh Circuit “has recognized compensatory damages for non-mental and non-emotional damages in the PLRA context” (citing Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 264 (D.C. Cir. 2016), and its citation to Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781 (7th Cir. 1999)); Pippin v. Frank, 04-C-582-C, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5576, at *1 (W.D. Wis. Mar. 30, 2005) (unpublished) (stating that § 1997e(e) precludes claims for mental or emotional injury but not a claim that plaintiff was “falsely confined” in segregation as a result of constitutional violations). Broad view: Shaw v. Wall, 12-cv-497-wmc, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55259, at *1–3 (W.D. Wis. Apr. 28, 2015) (unpublished) (holding absence of non-de minimis (none minor) physical injury bars compensatory damages for disability discrimination in access to prison canteen; citing Cassidy v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 199 F.3d 374, (7th Cir. 2000) but ignoring its holding about damages for program

The narrow approach to § 1997e(e) is consistent with tort law, which is supposed to be the basis of the law of damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.⁴⁵⁸ Historically, tort law divided damages into six categories: injury to property, physical injuries, mental injuries, injuries to family relations, injuries to personal liberty, and injuries to reputation.⁴⁵⁹ Under that approach, deprivation of your religious freedom or placement in segregation without due process would injure your personal liberty. Those deprivations might inflict mental or emotional injury too, but that injury would be separate and in addition to the injury to your liberty.

A good example of the proper difference between mental or emotional injury and deprivation of personal liberty is the Second Circuit decision in Kerman v. City of New York.⁴⁶⁰ In that case, the plaintiff had been placed in a mental hospital against his will, and he claimed both that he had been seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment and that he had been subjected to the tort of false imprisonment. The court treated the plaintiff's mental and emotional injury as a different type of injury from his loss of liberty, stating: "[t]he damages recoverable for loss of liberty for the period spent in a wrongful confinement are severable from damages recoverable for such injuries as physical harm, embarrassment, or emotional suffering; even absent such other injuries, an award of several thousand dollars may be appropriate simply for several hours' loss of liberty."⁴⁶¹ A number of courts have relied on the Kerman decision in adopting the narrower view of the interpretation of § 1997e(e).⁴⁶²

If you are bringing a case about something that did not cause you physical injury, you should make it very clear that you are seeking damages for something other than mental or emotional injury. For access).

458. Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 34, 103 S. Ct. 1625, 1628, 75 L. Ed. 2d 632, 637 (1983) ("It was intended to create a 'species of tort liability' in favor of persons deprived of federally secured rights"); Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 253, 98 S. Ct. 1042, 1047, 55 L. Ed. 2d 252, 258 (1978) ("[Section 1983] was intended to '[create] a species of tort liability' in favor of persons who are deprived of 'rights, privileges, or immunities secured' to them by the Constitution.").

459. ARTHUR G. SEDGWICK, JOSEPH H. BEALE & THEODORE SEDGWICK, A TREATISE ON THE MEASURE OF DAMAGES, 50–51 (8th ed. 1891).

460. Kerman v. City of New York, 374 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2004).

461. Kerman v. City of New York, 374 F.3d 93, 125–126 (2d Cir. 2004).

462. Jones v. Annucci, No. 16-CV-3516 (KMK), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24359, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 14, 2018) (unpublished) (stating §1997e(e) does not bar compensatory damages for First Amendment violations, which "allege intangible violations of liberty and personal rights" (citations and internal quotation marks omitted)); Valdez v. City of New York, 11 Civ. 05194 (PAC) (DF), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188044, at *21–22 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 3, 2013) (unpublished) (holding in First Amendment religious rights case that "deprivations of liberty and personal rights can give rise to damages separate and apart from those recoverable for any physical injury or emotional suffering"), report and recommendation adopted, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82508 (S.D.N.Y., June 16, 2014) (unpublished); Rosado v. Herard, 12 Civ. 8943 (PGG) (FM), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40172, at *10 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 25, 2013) (unpublished) ("Herard's motion mistakenly assumes that, where no physical injury is alleged, the only injury that a plaintiff may suffer as a result of retaliation is mental or emotional harm. The Second Circuit has held, however, that intangible deprivations of liberty and personal rights are distinct from claims for pain and suffering, mental anguish, and mental trauma." (citing Kerman v. City of New York, 374 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2004))); claim was for violation of privacy rights by disclosure of HIV status), report and recommendation adopted as modified, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40172, at *13 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 25, 2014) (unpublished) ("Applying Kerman, courts in this Circuit have concluded that a physical injury is not required for a prisoner to recover compensatory damages for the loss of a constitutional liberty interest."); Mendez v. Amato, 9:12-CV-560(TJM/CFH), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 132346, at *20 (N.D.N.Y. Sept. 17, 2013) (unpublished) (holding claims based on confinement in Involuntary Protective Custody "involve the loss of such intangibles as liberty through a lack of due process and equal protection" and thus "fall outside of the physical harm requirement of the PLRA"; citing Kerman's distinction between loss of liberty and emotional suffering); Malik v. City of New York, No. 11 Civ. 6062 (PAC) (FM), 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 118358, at *16–17 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 15, 2012) (unpublished) ("The Defendants' motion mistakenly assumes that the only injury that a plaintiff may suffer without a physical injury is mental or emotional harm. The Second Circuit has held, however, that intangible deprivations of liberty and personal rights are distinct from claims for pain and suffering, mental anguish, and mental trauma. See Kerman Malik's religion and retaliation claims allege deprivations of personal rights under the First Amendment which do not fall under the PLRA's physical injury requirement for compensatory damages."), report and recommendation adopted, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 141305 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 28, 2012) (unpublished).

example, if you are suing for being placed in segregation for a long period without due process, and you were not physically injured as a result, do not write in your complaint that “plaintiff seeks damages for mental anguish and psychological torture.” You are better off with something like this:

Plaintiff seeks compensatory damages for the loss of privileges and quality of life in his prison living conditions, and loss of the limited liberty enjoyed by prisoners, resulting from his segregated confinement, in that he was confined for 23 hours a day in a cell roughly 60 feet square, and deprived of most of his personal property as well as the ability to work, attend educational and vocational programs, watch television, associate with other prisoners, attend outdoor recreation in a congregate setting with the ability to engage in sports and other congregate recreational activities, attend meals with other prisoners, attend religious services [and whatever other privileges you may have lost].

Plaintiff does not seek compensatory damages for mental or emotional distress.

Plaintiff seeks punitive damages against defendant(s) [names] for their willful and malicious conduct in confining the plaintiff to segregation after a hearing in which he was denied basic rights to due process of law.

You would take a similar approach in demanding damages for any other kind of constitutional violation that didn’t cause you physical injury, like loss of religious freedom, freedom of speech, placement in filthy and disgusting physical conditions, etc.

If you did suffer some physical injury from being segregated, you should still protect yourself (in case the court does not find your physical injury serious enough to satisfy the statute) with a damages demand similar to the one above, making clear that you are seeking damages for the constitutional deprivation separately from any claim of mental or emotional injury. If you did suffer a physical injury, you can recover not only for damages resulting from that physical injury, but also for the mental or emotional damages you suffered. In such a case you should say in your complaint “Plaintiff also seeks compensatory damages for the mental or emotional distress resulting from his prolonged confinement in segregation without due process of law” instead of the second paragraph in the above example.

There is no guarantee of success if you follow the suggestions above, since as previously explained some courts are committed to the broad approach to § 1997e(e). Also, even if you win on this point, constitutional rights are very hard to value or give dollar amounts to (meaning that courts will often just award “nominal damages,” which are damages in a very low amount).⁴⁶³ The Supreme Court has warned that non-compensatory damage awards cannot be based on the “abstract ‘importance’ of a constitutional right.”⁴⁶⁴ However, courts have made compensatory damage awards for violations of First Amendment and other intangible rights based on the particular circumstances of the violation and not on a claim of mental or emotional injury.⁴⁶⁵ You should bring this up to the court if prison officials argue that you can only recover nominal damages.

463. Williams v. Kaufman Cnty., 352 F.3d 994, 1014–1015 (5th Cir. 2003) (noting the possibility of nominal awards under § 1983); see also Carlo v. City of Chino, 105 F.3d 493, 495 (9th Cir. 1997) (noting nominal award for denial of phone access to overnight detainee); Sockwell v. Phelps, 20 F.3d 187, 189 (5th Cir. 1994) (noting nominal award for racial segregation).

464. Memphis Cmty. Sch. Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 309–310, 106 S. Ct. 2537, 2544, 91 L. Ed. 2d 249, 260 (1986).

465. See, e.g., Sallier v. Brooks, 343 F.3d 868, 880 (6th Cir. 2003) (affirming jury award of $750 in

3. What is “Physical Injury”?

Incarcerated people must show physical injury in order to recover damages for mental or emotional injury under 1997e(e)⁴⁶⁶, but courts have not fully explained what it takes to show physical injury. The injury “must be more than de minimis, but need not be significant.”⁴⁶⁷ A “de minimis” injury is one where the harm is very small. However, courts disagree over what kinds of injuries go past the de minimis threshold. One appeals court has said that injury does not need to be observable or diagnosable, or require treatment by a medical care professional, to meet the Section 1997e(e) standard.⁴⁶⁸ But a much-cited district court decision says that, under Section 1997e(e):

A physical injury is an observable or diagnosable medical condition requiring treatment by a medical care professional. It is not a sore muscle, an aching back, a scratch, an abrasion, a bruise, etc., which lasts even up to two or three weeks. . . . [It is] more than the types and kinds of bruises and abrasions about which the Plaintiff complains. Injuries treatable at home and with over-the-counter drugs, heating pads, rest, etc., do not fall within the parameters of 1997e(e).⁴⁶⁹ compensatory damages for each instance of unlawful opening of legal mail); Goff v. Burton, 91 F.3d 1188, 1192 (8th Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 512 U.S. 1209, 114 S. Ct. 2684, 129 L. Ed. 2d 817 (2004) (affirming $2250 award at $10 a day for lost privileges because of a vengeful retaliatory transfer to a higher security prison); Vanscoy v. Hicks, 691 F. Supp. 1336, 1338 (M.D. Ala. 1988) (awarding $50 for unwarranted exclusion from religious service, without evidence of mental anguish or suffering).

466. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

467. Siglar v. Hightower, 112 F.3d 191, 193 (5th Cir. 1997); accord, Mitchell v. Horn, 318 F.3d 523, 535–536 (3d Cir. 2003); Oliver v. Keller, 289 F.3d 623, 626–627 (9th Cir. 2002); Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 135 (2d Cir. 1999); Harris v. Garner, 190 F.3d 1279, 1286 (11th Cir. 1999), vacated in part and reinstated in part on reh’g, Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc).

468. Oliver v. Keller, 289 F.3d 623, 628 (9th Cir. 2002); accord, Mengesha v. Stokes, No. 3:16-cv-446-MCR-GRJ, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193411, at *7 (N.D. Fla., Nov. 22, 2017) (unpublished) (holding that a dislocated shoulder causing severe pain was more than de minimis even though it “popped back into the socket” before plaintiff received medical care and no injury was visible at that time), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107160 (N.D. Fla., June 27, 2018) (unpublished); Lamb v. Hazel, No. 5:12-CV-00070-TBR, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50238, at *9 (W.D. Ky., Apr. 8, 2013) (unpublished) (holding injury “can be more than de minimis even though it did not result in a need for medical treatment”). Courts have rejected efforts to read “long-term” into the physical injury requirement. Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App’x 884, 888 (5th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished); Glenn v. Copeland, No. 5:02CV158-RS/WCS, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38466, at *11 (N.D. Fla. June 9, 2006) (unpublished) (“Presumably . . . any physical injury, even if short-term, is sufficient” to meet the statutory threshold.).

469. Luong v. Hatt, 979 F. Supp. 481, 486 (N.D. Tex. 1997); see Jarriett v. Wilson, 162 F. App’x 394, 401 (6th Cir. 2005) (unpublished) (citing Luong, holding pain and swelling of previously injured leg while required to stand for hours in “strip cage” were de minimis); Johnson v. Correction Corp. of Am., No. 15-cv-2320, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165099, at *1 (W.D. La. Nov. 17, 2015) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff who alleged an officer stepped on his hand, causing “pain and suffering, swelling, and the loss of use of his hand for some period of time . . . has not alleged an injury that is more than de minimis” (citing Luong, 979 F. Supp. at 486)), report and recommendation adopted, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 165103 (W.D. La. Dec. 8, 2015) (unpublished). But see Pierce v. County of Orange, 526 F.3d 1190, 1224 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that the circuit court had rejected the “overly restrictive” Luong standard, and further finding that bedsores and bladder infections resulting from inadequate accommodation of a paraplegic’s disabilities qualified as physical injuries even under the restrictive Luong standard).

Not surprisingly, several courts have dismissed painful traumatic injuries as de minimis.⁴⁷⁰ But others have found somewhat minor injuries to be actionable under section 1997e(e).⁴⁷¹

Several courts have held that the physical results of emotional distress do not qualify as physical injuries under this statute.⁴⁷² That view is not supported by the statute's language, and other courts

470. See, e.g., Dixon v. Toole, 225 F. App'x 797, 799 (11th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding "mere bruising" from 17.5 hours in restraints was de minimis; incarcerated person actually complained of "welts"); Springer v. Caple, No. 6:15-cv-06026-PKH-BAB, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36189, at *5 (W.D. Ark. Jan. 25, 2017) (unpublished) (holding sprained ankle treated with over-the-counter pain medication, an ice pack, and an ace bandage was de minimis); report and recommendation adopted, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35874 (W.D. Ark. Mar. 14, 2017) (unpublished); judgment entered, 2017 WL 988121 (W.D. Ark., Mar. 14, 2017), aff'd as modified, 717 F. App'x 650 (8th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished); cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 416, (2018); Jeter v. Sample, No. 4:13CV00896, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25048, at *14 (N.D. Ohio Feb. 27, 2015) (holding "cut [and] bleeding also slightly swollen" lip to be de minimis); Harvard v. Beaudry, No. 3:12cv289/LC/CJK, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 129402, at *10 (N.D. Fla. Sept. 12, 2014) (holding sore right shoulder and forearm, knot on index finger knuckle, swollen fingers on right hand, scratch on back of right arm were de minimis injury); Hollingsworth v. Thomas, No. 13-00480-WS-B, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116890, at *4 (S.D. Ala. Aug. 22, 2014) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff failed to allege a non-de minimis injury where plaintiff alleged that his hand and fingers were struck with a baton, causing him to scream in severe pain, and resulting in dispensing of pain medication and wrapping of his wrist; "There are no allegations of a broken bone, bruising, swelling, or an abrasion; of the type of medication that he received or the type of wrapping applied; or of the length of time he took pain medication or wore the wrapping."); Griggs v. Horton, No. 7:05-CV-220-R, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24888, at *2-3 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that wrist abrasion and tenderness to rib cage were de minimis injuries); Diggs v. Emfinger, No. 07-1807 SECTION P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19140, at *9 (W.D. La. Jan. 10, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that allegation of "an 'open wound' causing 'severe pain' was a de minimis injury).

471. See, e.g., Moneyham v. United States, No. EDCV 17-329-VBF (KK), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133886, at *6 (C.D. Cal., May 31, 2018) (unpublished) (holding allegation that plaintiff "suffered bruises and cuts after being slammed into the concrete block and pulled in opposing directions by his restraints satisfies the physical injury requirement"); report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 133887 (C.D. Cal. Aug. 6, 2018) (unpublished); Curry v. Johnson, No. 3:16cv483/MCR/EMT, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 211341, at *5 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 22, 2017) (unpublished) ("Curry's allegation of pain and swelling which required pain relievers and diagnostic testing, coupled with his allegations of continuing pain which has persisted during the year between the use of force and the submission of his affidavit and affects use of his hand, appear to allege more than the vague injury or periodic episodes of pain found by the Eleventh Circuit to be de minimis as a matter of law for purposes of § 1997e(e)."); report and recommendation adopted, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 210923 (N.D. Fla. Dec. 22, 2017) (unpublished); Young v. Dep't of Corr., No. 1:16-cv-00407-JCN, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110178, at *2 (D. Me. July 17, 2017) (unpublished) (declining to hold a fractured finger is de minimis); McFadden v. Nicholson, No. 1:14CV664, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36044, at *4 (M.D.N.C. Mar. 13, 2017) (unpublished) (holding in inmate-inmate assault case that a blow to the head causing bleeding and bad headaches satisfied § 1997e(e)); Sanders v. Day, No. 5:06-CV-280 (HL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21713, at *4 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 19, 2008) (unpublished) (holding that the allegation of kicking and using pepper spray on a handcuffed suspect demonstrate more than de minimis injury); Edwards v. Miller, No. 06-CV-00933-MSK-MEH, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22639, at *4 (D. Colo. Mar. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that plaintiff's allegation that she was punched in the face and bitten on the arm over a 10-minute period, causing damage to her forehead, facial injuries, and subsequent severe headaches, demonstrates more than de minimis injury); Cotney v. Bowers, No. 2:03-cv-1181-WKW (WO), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69523, at *25 (M.D. Ala. Sept. 26, 2006) (unpublished) (holding bruised ribs that took weeks to heal could be more than de minimis, and thus that such allegations could withstand a motion for summary judgment).

472. Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1349 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that weight loss, appetite loss, and insomnia that occurred after and because of the emotional harm could not qualify as "physical injuries" under § 1997e(e) because the statute explicitly requires that the physical injuries predate the emotional harm); Williams v. Roper, No. 4:13-CV-2440 CAS, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47147, at *8 (E.D. Mo. Mar. 22, 2018) (unpublished) ("Headaches caused by stress, . . . are not a physical injury within the meaning of the PLRA."); Session v. Clements, No. 14-cv-02406-PAB-KLM, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15702, at *9 (D. Colo. Jan. 31, 2018) (unpublished) (holding that physical injuries among "hearing voices, hallucination, cognitive dysfunction, uncontrollable jumping, severe depression, anxiety, appetite loss, sleep disruption, muscle tightening, panic, traumatic re-enactment of being shot at point blank range, PTSD, continued fear and paranoia, large very painful lump on lower left side rib-cage area" were not distinct from mental/emotional injuries claimed to result from confinement in segregation); report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53171 (D. Colo. Mar. 29, 2018) (unpublished); Clark v. Raemisch, No. 14-cv-01594-RBJ-MJW, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47159, at *9 (D. Colo. Feb. 26, 2016) (unpublished) ("Plaintiff's only alleged physical harm is weight loss caused by stress and have rejected it.⁴⁷³ Courts are also split on the question of whether the risk of future injury meets the standard.⁴⁷⁴

There must be some relationship between the physical injury and the legal claims in the case.⁴⁷⁵ The injury does not need to have been caused by the legal violation alleged.⁴⁷⁶ There are contrary anxiety. This is insufficient.”), report and recommendation adopted, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47166 (D. Colo. Apr. 7, 2016) (unpublished); Darvie v. Countryman, No. 9:08-CV-0715 (GLS/GHL), 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52797, at *23 (N.D.N.Y. July 10, 2008) (unpublished) (characterizing “anxiety, depression, stress, nausea, hyperventilation, headaches, insomnia, dizziness, appetite loss, weight loss, etc.” as “essentially emotional in nature”); Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 905 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (“Physical symptoms that are not sufficiently distinct from a plaintiff’s allegations of emotional distress do not qualify as a prior showing of physical injury.”); Todd v. Graves, 217 F. Supp. 2d 958, 960 (S.D. Iowa 2002) (holding that allegations of stress-related aggravation of hypertension, dizziness, insomnia and loss of appetite were not actionable).

473. Wilkinson v. Kenneth, No. 12-CIV-80404-RYSKAMP, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188974, at *9 (S.D. Fla. Nov. 10, 2015) (unpublished) (holding complaint of persistent headaches over a period of two and one-half years, insomnia, dizziness and fainting, weight loss, and vomiting resulting from mental and emotional distress over plaintiff’s inability to practice his religion, supported by a variety of medical records, were more than de minimis at least at the pleading stage), report and recommendation adopted sub nom. Wilkinson v. GEO Grp., Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 188973 (S.D. Fla. Dec. 11, 2015) (unpublished); Peterson v. Burris, No. 14-cv-13000, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78229, at *3 (E.D. Mich. June 17, 2015) (unpublished) (holding high blood pressure resulting from stress satisfied § 1997e(e) at least at the pleading stage); Montemayor v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, No. 02-1283 (GK), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18039, at *17 (D.D.C. Aug. 25, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that a heart attack resulting from physical and emotional stress caused by treatment in prison would meet the physical injury requirement).

474. Compare Rahman v. Schriro, 22 F. Supp. 3d 305, 318 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (holding claim for “a serious risk of future physical harm” caused by radiation exposure was not barred by § 1997e(e)); West v. Walker, No. 06 C 4350, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 65905, at *6 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 4, 2007) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person may pursue claim of “documentably increased likelihood of future harm” from second-hand smoke); Crawford v. Artuz, 98 Civ. 0425 (DC), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9552, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. June 24, 1999) (unpublished) (holding § 1997e(e) inapplicable to claim for damages for future injury from asbestos exposure) with Brown v. Crews, No. 3:13-cv-36-J-34PDB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20518, at *5 (M.D. Fla. Feb. 20, 2015) (unpublished) (stating “the unknown future effects of [plaintiff’s] exposure to asbestos” are “insufficient to support a claim for compensatory or punitive damages under the PLRA. Although Brown is correct that he need not prove his injuries at this stage of the proceedings, he must allege facts showing that he suffered an injury.”); Smith v. U.S., No. 06-3061-JTM, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54488, at *4 (D. Kan. July 26, 2007) (unpublished) (holding claim for “future physical health, safety and well being” and “future medical expenses” did not satisfy physical injury requirement), reconsideration denied, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 94707 (D. Kan. Dec. 27, 2007), motion to amend denied, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30210 (D. Kan. Apr. 10, 2008), aff’d in part and rev’d in part on other grounds, 561 F.3d 1090 (10th Cir. 2009); Pack v. Artuz, 348 F. Supp. 2d 63, 74 n.12 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (holding proof of asbestos exposure posing a serious risk of harm would establish an Eighth Amendment violation entitling the plaintiff to nominal damages regardless of present non-physical injury); Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 462–463 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that exposure to asbestos without claim of damages for physical injury is not actionable). See also Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993) (recognizing the possibility of an Eighth Amendment claim based on future serious health problems because of a prison smoking policy). See Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 188 (2d Cir. 2003) (“[Plaintiff] correctly argues that an Eighth Amendment claim may be based on a defendant’s conduct in exposing an inmate to an unreasonable risk of future harm and that actual physical injury is not necessary in order to demonstrate an Eighth Amendment violation.”); Davis v. New York, 316 F.3d 93, 101 (2d Cir. 2002) (allowing Helling claim to proceed, after passage of PLRA).

475. See, e.g., Antrobus v. City of New York, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42468, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2014) (unpublished) (holding § 1997e(e) limited damages where plaintiff alleged kidney disease and other injuries, but claim was for interference with mail).

476. McAdoo v. Martin, 899 F.3d 521, 526 (8th Cir. 2018) (upholding claim against medical personnel for denial of pain medication for injuries inflicted by correction officers; use of force itself was not challenged); accord, Sealock v. Colorado, 218 F.3d 1205, 1210 n.6 (10th Cir. 2000) (holding that a heart attack satisfied the § 1997e(e) requirement of “prior showing of physical injury” allowing plaintiff to recover for the associated pain even if pain were deemed to constitute mental or emotional injury); Karsten v. Davis, No. 12-cv-02107-MSK-KLM, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69054, at *10 n.2 (D. Colo. Apr. 26, 2013) (unpublished) (holding year’s delay in repairing a hernia was compensable since the hernia was a physical injury), report and recommendation adopted, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 69048 (D. Colo. May 15, 2013) (unpublished); Al-Turki v. Ballard, No. 10-cv-02404-WJM-CBS, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20000, at *15 (D. Colo. Feb. 14, 2013) (unpublished) (holding pain caused by failure to treat kidney decisions,⁴⁷⁷ but these are not supported by the language of § 1997e(e). Courts have disagreed over whether mental or emotional injury can be compensated when it is caused by a claim separate from the claim involving physical injury.⁴⁷⁸

Courts initially differed over whether sexual assault, which does not always result in damage to the body, amounted to physical injury under § 1997e(e).⁴⁷⁹ However, Congress amended § 1997e(e) to add the phrase “showing of physical injury or the commission of a sexual act (as defined in section 2246 of title 18).” The definition in 18 U.S.C. § is quite specific, defining sexual act as:

(A) contact between the penis and the vulva or the penis and the anus, and for purposes of this subparagraph contact involving the penis occurs upon penetration, stones was actionable even though defendants did not cause the stones), aff'd, Turki v. Ballard, 762 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2014);

477. See, e.g. Banks v. Katzenmeyer, No. 13-cv-02599-KLM, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26256, at *13 (D. Colo. Mar. 4, 2015) (unpublished) (“Plaintiff fails to include any factual allegations that would demonstrate or even infer that he suffered physical injury caused by conduct attributable to Defendants. This omission is fatal to Plaintiff’s claim for compensatory damages.”), aff’d in part, rev’d in part on other grounds, Banks v. Katzenmeyer, 645 F. App’x 770 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished).

478. Compare Phillips v. Steinbeck, No. 06-cv-02569-WDM-KLM, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24537, at *21 (D. Colo. Mar. 26, 2008) (unpublished) (plaintiff who alleged he was labelled an informant by staff and assaulted by inmates in retaliation for complaints about staff could seek damages for both Eighth Amendment and access to courts claims (which the court said were “intertwined”) based on injuries from assault); Root v. Watkins, No. 04-cv-00977-ZLW-MEH, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 102238, at *8 (D. Colo. Aug. 28, 2007) (unpublished) (plaintiff alleged that one defendant refused to do anything about loud incarcerated persons’ conduct, and when he complained to another defendant, he was labelled a snitch and then attacked by other incarcerated people; he could seek damages against both defendants), objections overruled, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22130 (D. Colo. Mar. 19, 2008) (unpublished); Fogle v. Pierson, No. 05-cv-01211-MSK-CBS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24543, at *9 (D. Colo. Mar. 26, 2008) (unpublished) (incarcerated person complaining of injury from protracted segregation could seek damages both for due process claim for segregation placement and claim of denial of access to courts which arguably prolonged the confinement); Noguera v. Hasty, 99 Civ. 8786 (KMW)(AJP), 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2458, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2001) (unpublished) (holding that allegations of retaliation for reporting a rape by an officer were closely enough related to the rape that a separate physical injury need not be shown) with Purvis v. Johnson, 78 F. App’x 377, 379–380 (5th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person alleging assault by a staff member could not also pursue a claim for damages for obstruction of the post-assault investigation without a showing of physical injury related to that claim); Wallin v. Dycus, No. 03-cv-00174-CMA-MJW, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29099, at *13 (D. Colo. Feb. 25, 2009) (unpublished) (holding claim for damages for disclosure of confidential information was barred by § 1997e(e) despite the presence of an excessive force claim; stating physical injury requirement is “claim specific”), report and recommendation adopted, Wallin v. Dycus, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 71834 (D. Colo. Aug. 13, 2009) (unpublished), aff’d, Wallin v. Dycus, 381 F. App’x 819 (10th Cir. 2010) (unpublished).

479. Compare Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 135 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding alleged sexual assaults “qualify as physical injuries as a matter of common sense,” without much explanation); Doe v. United States, No. 12-00640 ACK-RLP, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 174413, at *8 (D. Haw. Dec. 17, 2014) (holding that “common sense and public policy dictates that Doe should be able to pursue mental and emotional injury claims arising out of [a] sexual assault” despite the absence of physical force or physical injury); Kornagay v. Given, No. 3:11cv428/LAC/EMT, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38377, at *19 (N.D. Fla. Mar. 24, 2014) (unpublished) (holding injuries from alleged rape—“rectal bleeding, rectal pain, head bruise, etc.”—were de minimis (very small), but prison staff’s disregarding a known risk of rape was actionable under § 1997e(e) for mental or emotional injury because “repugnant to the conscience of mankind . . .”); Marrie v. Nickels, 70 F. Supp. 2d 1252, 1264 (D. Kan. 1999) (“sexual assaults would qualify as physical injuries under § 1997e(e)”); citing “common sense” holding of Liner v. Goord, above) with Ashley v. Perry, No. 13-00354-BAJ-RLB, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 167863, at *1, *5–6 & n.12 (M.D. La. Dec. 15, 2015) (holding an incarcerated person who alleged that a staff member performed oral sex on him until he ejaculated did not satisfy § 1997e(e); rejecting argument that “a sexual assault is a per se physical injury because of its very nature, even when such an assault does not result in any physical pain, temporary or otherwise”); McGregor v. Jarvis, No. 9:08-CV-770 (GLS/RFT), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97408, at *1, *4 (N.D.N.Y., Aug. 20, 2010) (unpublished) (holding allegations of non-forcible oral and vaginal sex did not establish physical injury), report and recommendation adopted, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 97403 (N.D.N.Y., Sept. 16, 2010); Hancock v. Payne, No. 1:03cv671-JMR-JMR, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1648, *1, 3 (S.D. Miss. Jan. 4, 2006) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated people who alleged they were “sexually battered . . . by sodomy” did not allege a physical injury for § 1997e(e) purposes).

however slight;

(B) contact between the mouth and the penis, the mouth and the vulva, or the mouth and the anus;

(C) the penetration, however slight, of the anal or genital opening of another by a hand or finger or by any object, with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person; or

(D) the intentional touching, not through the clothing, of the genitalia of another person who has not attained the age of 16 years with an intent to abuse, humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person; . . . ⁴⁸⁰

Thus, under the amendment, anal, vaginal and oral sex—including anal or genital penetration by hand, finger, or object with the necessary intent⁴⁸¹—are actionable for compensatory damages, regardless of the presence of physical injury. Manual and other non-penetrative sexual touching of another person, compelled or otherwise, are not actionable nor are acts involving the touching of breasts. However, intentional, unclothed touching of persons under 16 years old is actionable.⁴⁸² The amendment does not include cases in which incarcerated persons are compelled or persuaded to perform sexual acts or displays for the arousal of others.⁴⁸³ Nor does the amendment include cases where incarcerated persons are subjected to sexual displays by staff,⁴⁸⁴ or to certain other kinds of shockingly intrusive but non-injurious actions.⁴⁸⁵

480. 18 U.S.C. § 2246(2).

481. See Bucano v. Austin, No. 15-67ERIE, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 33144, at *5 (W.D. Pa. Feb. 12, 2016) (unpublished) (holding allegation that officer penetrated plaintiff's vagina with his fingers, and that he made sexual comments and demands during a course of such conduct, established sexual acts under § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32332 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 14, 2016) (unpublished).

482. See, e.g., Graham v. Elliott, No. 1:17-cv-68-MW-GRJ, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126886,*1, 3 (N.D. Fla. June 27, 2018) (unpublished) (holding grabbing and twisting plaintiff's penis was de minimis under § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 126565 (N.D. Fla., July 28, 2018) (unpublished); Mengsha v. Stokes, No. 3:16-cv-446-MCR-GRJ, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 193411, at *9 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 22, 2017) (unpublished) (holding evidence that “a hand touched Plaintiff's buttocks, a finger touched—but did not penetrate—Plaintiff's anus, and a hand grabbed his testicles [did not] meet the definition of a ‘sexual act’ under § 2246. Instead, these actions constitute, at most, ‘sexual contact’ under § 2246.”), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107160 (N.D. Fla., June 27, 2018) (unpublished); Jamison v. United States, No. 1:15-CV-01678, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 181549, at *5–6 (W.D. La., Sept. 26, 2016) (holding touching of genitals through clothing during pat search not compensable under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(2)), report and recommendation adopted, Jamison v. United States, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3046 (W.D. La. Jan. 9, 2017); Holley v. Bossert, No. 3:15cv389/LAC/EMT, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19668, at *5 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 19, 2016) (holding allegation of defendant's “kissing [plaintiff], grabbing his buttocks, and touching his chest” was not a “sexual act” or a physical injury under § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted, Holley v. Bossert, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19667 (N.D. Fla. Feb. 18, 2016); see also Jackson v. Schaff, No. 2:17-cv-10492, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 52653, at *3 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 6, 2017) (unpublished) (holding “mere bruises” from a use of force also involving unwanted touching of breast and buttock was de minimis; no discussion of incident as sexual abuse).

The decision in Snow v. List, No. 11-3411, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96078, at *2 (C.D. Ill. July 10, 2013) (unpublished), erroneously states that the definition appears to include the “intentional touching . . . of the breast, . . . with an intent to abuse humiliate, harass, degrade, or arouse or gratify the sexual desire of any person.” That language appears in the statutory definition of sexual contact, 18 U.S.C.A. § 2246(3), rather than the definition of sexual act, found in 18 U.S.C.A. § 2246(2). The latter definition is what the VAWA amendment incorporates into § 1997e(e).

483. Johnson v. Perry, No. 2:16-cv-0367 AC P, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 142041, at *4 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 21, 2018) (unpublished) (holding sexually intrusive visual search was not a “sexual act” under VAWA amendment), report and recommendation adopted, Johnson v. Perry, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 157442 (E.D. Cal. Sept. 14, 2018) (unpublished).

484. Martin v. Byars, No. 4:12-cv-02100-DCN, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10153, at *3 (D.S.C. Jan. 28, 2014) (unpublished) (holding allegations that staff members masturbated outside plaintiff's cell did not satisfy § 1997e(e) since they amounted neither to a “sexual act” under the statute nor to physical injury).

485. See Lagarde v. Metz, No. 13-805-RLB, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14596, at *5–6 (M.D. La. Feb. 2, 2017) (unpublished) (holding compensatory damages barred where an officer shoved a broomstick between plaintiff's

A number of injuries short of visible damage to body parts have been held to satisfy Section 1997e(e), though not by all courts. These include:

- a) physical disturbances resulting from medication withdrawal, overdose, or error;⁴⁸⁶
- b) loss of consciousness;⁴⁸⁷
- c) concussion;⁴⁸⁸

buttocks but did not penetrate his anus or inflict injury; awarding $1,000 in punitive damages after a bench trial).

486. Hinton v. Mark, 544 F. App'x 75, 76 n.2 (3d Cir. 2013) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff who attempted suicide by overdose of pills and was hospitalized for two days satisfied § 1997e(e)); Munn v. Toney, 433 F.3d 1087, 1089 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding claim of headaches, cramps, nosebleeds, and dizziness resulting from deprivation of blood pressure medication “does not fail . . . for lack of physical injury”); Cook v. Illinois Dept. of Corr., No. 3:15-cv-83-NJR-DGW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1631, at *4 (S.D. Ill. Jan. 4, 2018) (unpublished) (holding claim of physical injury from not being transferred to drug treatment, resulting in being “sick,” pain and nightmares, was for a jury); Lynch v. Lewis, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35561, at *1, 13–14 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 23, 2015) (unpublished) (holding “nausea, dizziness, reflux, headaches, vomiting, and leg pain” resulting from hormone withdrawal, as well as self-mutilation injuries, satisfied § 1997e(e) at the pleading stage, subject to further factual development); Campbell v. Gause, No. 10-11371, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21870, at *7 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 1, 2011) (unpublished) (holding allegations of chest pains, spiked blood pressure, bronchospasms, migraine headaches, and dizziness resulting from defendants' confiscation of his prescription medications satisfied § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21865 (E.D. Mich. Mar. 4, 2011) (unpublished); May v. Jones, No. 1:07-CV-1787, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 113485, at *1, *4–5 (M.D. Pa. Dec. 7, 2009) (citing deprivation of medication for migraine headaches resulting in “pain, vomiting, loss of appetite, light sensitivity and an inability to sleep”); Scarver v. Litscher, 371 F. Supp. 2d 986, 997 (W.D. Wis. 2005) (suggesting that self-inflicted overdose of Thorazine, as well as self-inflicted razor cuts by a mentally ill incarcerated person being held in isolation may have been physical injury for the purposes of 1997e(e)), aff'd, Scarver v. Litscher, 434 F.3d 972 (7th Cir. 2006); Ziembra v. Armstrong, No. 3:02CV2185(DJS), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 432, at *7 (D. Conn. Jan. 14, 2004) (unpublished) (holding that allegations of withdrawal, panic attacks, pain similar to a heart attack, difficulty breathing and profuse sweating, resulting from withdrawal of psychiatric medication, may have been physical injuries for the purposes of 1997e(e)). But see Chatham v. Adcock, 334 F. App'x 281, 285 (11th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding hallucinations, anxiety, and nightmares resulting from denial of Xanax did not meet physical injury requirement); McGathey v. Osinga, No. 2:17-cv-56-FtM-29MRM, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86232, at *2–3 (M.D. Fla. June 6, 2017) (unpublished) (holding that damages for “horrendous” drug withdrawal in which “[t]he demonic spirits overtook me again. I was truly fearful for my life” were barred by § 1997e(e) absent an allegation of physical injury other than pain); Sparks v. Ingle, No. 5:14-cv-00013-MHH-JHE, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36067, at *8 (N.D. Ala. Mar. 14, 2017) (unpublished) (holding epileptic seizures occurring when defendants failed to provide his medication and resulting in the plaintiff's “body banging on the walls and door” were de minimis absent other evidence of injury), aff'd, 724 F. App'x 692 (11th Cir. 2018) (per curiam) (unpublished).

487. Waggoner v. Comanche Cnty. Det. Ctr., No. CIV-06-700-C, 2007 WL 2068661, at *4 (D. Okla. July 17, 2007). (unpublished) (holding plaintiff rendered unconscious by a shock shield after being pepper-sprayed, shaken, and punched sufficiently supported a claim of physical injury). But see Owens v. U.S., No. 5:09-CT-3167-FL, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 173093, at *2, 6 (E.D.N.C. Dec. 6, 2012) (unpublished) (holding transitory episode of dizziness and general weakness, including loss of consciousness, following deprivation of blood pressure medication, was de minimis where plaintiff resumed normal activities including exercise the next day).

488. Norfleet v. Taylor, No. 3:16cv413/MCR/EMT, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 216194, at *17 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 27, 2017) (unpublished) (“A concussion and migraine headaches may be considered more than de minimis injuries.”), report and recommendation adopted, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12182 (N.D. Fla. Jan. 25, 2018) (unpublished); Flanning v. Baker, No. 5:12cv337-MW-CJK, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121010, at *6 (N.D. Fla. Aug. 16, 2016) (unpublished) (“A concussion and migraine headaches may be considered more than de minimis injuries.”), report and recommendation adopted, Flanning v. Baker, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121007 (N.D. Fla., Sept. 7, 2016). But see Buie v. Myers, No. 4:06-81 DCN TER, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10929, at *9 (D.S.C. Feb. 13, 2007) (unpublished) (stating “other than a report submitted by the defendant which shows plaintiff complained of dizziness and blurred vision as a result of the alleged fall, plaintiff has not shown more than de minimis injury or that any injury was a result of the conditions of his confinement”).

- d) the consequences of failing to treat an illness or injury, both the immediate consequences⁴⁸⁹ and longer-term or future issues;⁴⁹⁰
- e) denial of enough food;⁴⁹¹

467. See Perez v. U.S., 330 F. App'x 388, 389–390 (3d Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding claim of untreated asthma attack resulting in “dizziness, headaches, weakness, back pain, and nausea,” which required steroids, prescription medication, and other medical treatment to recover, presented a material issue of fact under the de minimis standard); Tatum v. Helder, No. 5:15-cv-05254, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25448, at *21 (W.D. Ark. Feb. 1, 2017) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's evidence that he “suffered from sores caused by porphyria [and] was in extreme pain and had pressure sores” established “adverse health effects . . . sufficient to constitute more than a de minimis injury” under § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted, Tatum v. Helder, No. 5:15-cv-05254, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24470 (W.D. Ark. Feb. 22, 2017) (unpublished); Johnson v. Thomas, No. 4:12-cv-1899-KOB-JEO, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 41058, at *4, *7 (N.D. Ala. Mar. 31, 2015). (unpublished) (holding allegation of “continual skin disorder” that caused plaintiff's “skin to peel, bleed, and ooze pus from simply wearing cloth[els] or showering” sufficiently alleged more than de minimis injury); DeRoche v. Funkhouse, No. CV 06-1428-PHX-MHM (MEA), 2008 U.S. Dist LEXIS 31166, at *18–19 (D. Ariz. Mar. 27, 2008) (unpublished) (further liver damage and daily pain, swelling, nausea and hypertension from lack of treatment for Hepatitis C satisfied the physical injury requirement); Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1248 (D. Colo. 2006) (addressing “prolonged” pain attendant upon labor and stillbirth). But see Green v. U.S., No. 6: 13–142–DCR, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51816, at *10 (E.D. Ky. Apr. 15, 2014) (unpublished) (holding inadequately treated eczema constituted no more than de minimis injury); Owens v. U.S., No. 5:09-CT-3167-FL, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 173093, at *4–6, *16–18 (E.D.N.C., Dec. 6, 2012) (unpublished) (holding dizziness, weakness, and loss of consciousness following deprivation of blood pressure medication de minimis; emphasizing transitoriness of symptoms); Broadnax v. Escambia Cnty. Main Jail, No. 3:11cv354/LC/CJK, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160160, at *2 (N.D. Fla. Oct. 9, 2012). (unpublished) (holding allegation of staph infection “without more” does not show more than de minimis injury), report and recommendation adopted, Broadnax v. Escambia Cnty. Main Jail, No. 3:11cv354/LAC/CJK, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160159 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 8, 2012). (unpublished); Tuft v. Chaney, No. H-06-2529, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83817, at *7–8 (S.D. Tex. Nov. 9, 2007) (unpublished) (holding complaints of “generalized ‘fatigue’ and ‘stress’” resulting from MRSA and Hepatitis C were not physical injuries); Jones v. Sheahan, No. 99 C 3669, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14130, at *22–23 (N.D. Ill. Sept. 22, 2000) (unpublished) (finding no physical injury when plaintiff alleged that delay of surgery for removing tumors resulted in “anguish and worry” that the tumors might be malignant, even though there were no physical effects). But see Leon v. Johnson, 96 F. Supp. 2d 244, 248 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (finding delayed receipt of HIV/AIDS medication did not constitute physical injury when no adverse health effects from delay were shown).

468. Young v. Beard, Civil Action No. 06-160, 2007 WL 1549453, at *4 (W.D. Pa. May 18, 2007) (unpublished) (holding claim for damages for “the physical injury he has already sustained or will sustain to his internal organs” from denial of cholesterol medication, and of testing of blood pressure, diabetes, and cholesterol more often than every six months, satisfied § 1997e(e) at the pleading stage), vacated on other grounds, Young v. Beard, Civil Action No. 06-160, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48283 (W.D. Pa. July 3, 2007) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Young v. Beard, Civil Action No. 06-160, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26767 (W.D. Pa. Apr. 2, 2008); Mejia v. Goord, No. 9:03-CV-124, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32394, at *16–17 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 16, 2005) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment for the state where incarcerated person was denied a low-fat diet for coronary condition). But see Cotter v. Dall. Cnty. Sheriff, No. 3:05-CV-2225-H, 2006 WL 1652714, at *4 (N.D. Tex. June 15, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that plaintiff's allegations that he had been exposed to staphylococcus bacteria and that the bacteria still lay dormant in his blood was not a physical injury).

469. Avery v. Helder, No. 5:16-CV-5169, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 28230, at *2, (W.D. Ark. Feb. 28, 2017). (unpublished) (allegation that plaintiff was “losing weight and muscle mass” from inadequate food satisfied § 1997e(e) at the pleading stage); Hall v. Klemm, Civil Action No. 15-20 E, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14767, at *15, (W.D. Pa. Feb. 1, 2017). (unpublished) (holding evidence that lack of a nutritionally adequate religious diet resulted in weight loss, dizziness, fatigue, and headaches was “consistent with the types of physical injuries that other federal courts have recognized to be sufficient under § 1997e(e)”), report and recommendation adopted, Hall v. Klemm, Civil Action No. 15-20 E, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 31654 (W.D. Pa. Mar. 7, 2017) (unpublished); Mozden v. Helder, No. 5:13-CV-05160, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91295, at *3, (W.D. Ark. July 2, 2014). (unpublished) (holding plaintiff's allegation “that as a result of an inadequate diet, he lost substantial weight and felt weak and lacked energy” satisfied § 1997e(e) at the pleading stage); Williams v. Humphreys, No. CV504-053, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44027, at *19–21 (S.D. Ga. July 27, 2005) (unpublished), adopted by Williams v. Humphreys, No. CV504-053, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44029 (S.D. Ga. Sept. 13, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that an allegation of 12-pound weight loss, abdominal pain, and nausea resulting from denial of pork substitute at meals sufficiently alleged a physical injury). But see Clark v. Raemisch, No. 14-CV-01594-RBJ-MJW, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47159, at *9, (D. Colo. Feb. 26, 2016). (unpublished) (“Plaintiff's only alleged physical harm is weight loss caused by stress and

- f) food contamination or poisoning;⁴⁹²
- g) denial of exercise;⁴⁹³ anxiety. This is insufficient.”), report and recommendation adopted, Clark v. Raemisch, No. 14-CV-01594-RBJ, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47166 (D. Colo. Apr. 7, 2016) (unpublished); Pittman-Bey v. Clay, No. V-10-086, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 146994, at *8, (S.D. Tex. Sep. 19, 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegation of being “weak, tired, and dizzy” and unable to sleep from missing evening meals during Ramadan was de minimis), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, Pittman-Bey v. Clay, No. 6:10-CV-86, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 29668 (S.D. Tex. Mar. 4, 2013). (unpublished), aff’d, Pittman-Bey v. Clay, 557 F. App’x. 310 (5th Cir. 2014) (per curiam) (unpublished); Linehan v. Crosby, No. 4:06-CV-00225-MP-WCS, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63738, at *13, (N.D. Fla. Aug. 20, 2008). (unpublished) (holding that weight loss from denial of a kosher diet did not meet physical injury requirement).

470. Carter v. United States, No. 3:11-CV-1669, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80849, at *2, (M.D. Pa. June 11, 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegations of becoming violently ill and bed-ridden for three days after eating contaminated food sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss his FTCA claims). But see Mayes v. Travis State Jail, No. A-06-CA-709-SS, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 47317, at *14 (W.D. Tex. June 29, 2007) (unpublished) (holding diarrhea allegedly caused by spoiled food was de minimis).

471. Doolittle v. Holmes, 306 F. App’x. 133, 134 (5th Cir. 2009) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding allegation of muscle atrophy from lack of exercise sufficiently pled physical injury); Anderson v. Colorado, 848, 1298 F. Supp. 2d 1291 (D. Colo. 2012). (holding allegation of muscle weakness from lack of exercise sufficed at summary judgment stage); Williams v. Goord, 111 F. Supp. 2d. 280, 291 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that allegation of a 28-day denial of exercise by a pro se plaintiff might satisfy 1997e(e) standard for physical injury). But see Kuhbander v. Blue, No. 4:15CV-P123-JHM, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12027, at *2, (W.D. Ky. Feb. 2, 2016) (unpublished) (holding allegation of complete deprivation of exercise was de minimis absent an allegation of physical injury and a statement of how long the deprivation existed); Sarno v. Reilly, Civil Action No. 12-cv-00280-REB-KLM, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38546, at *11, (D. Colo. Jan. 17, 2013) (unpublished) (holding alleged deprivation of exercise resulting in headaches, chest pains, and other physical pain was de minimis), report and recommendation adopted, Sarno v. Reilly, No. 12-CV-00280-REB-KLM, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38544 (D. Colo. Mar. 20, 2013) (unpublished).

- h) physical disturbances resulting from exposure to harmful materials,⁴⁹⁴ including pepper spray and other chemical agents in cases of unusually serious consequences,⁴⁹⁵ and in a few cases including exposure to human waste;⁴⁹⁶ 472. Gray v. Hardy, 826 F.3d 1000, 1007 (7th Cir. 2016) (holding allegations of worsened asthma and skin rash caused by exposure to excessive dust and insect dander in unsanitary prison satisfied physical injury requirement at summary judgment stage); Smith v. Leonard, 244 F. App'x 583, 584 (5th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (stating headaches, sinus problems, trouble breathing, blurred vision, irritated eyes, and fatigue, allegedly from exposure to toxic mold, might satisfy § 1997e(e) standard); Cary v. Hickenlooper, No. 14-CV-00411-PAB-NYW, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 122134, at *8, (D. Colo. Aug. 3, 2015). (unpublished) (holding allegation of physical maladies allegedly connected to exposure to uranium in drinking water, some confirmed in medical records, satisfied § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, Cary v. Hickenlooper, No. 14-CV-00411-PAB-NYW, 2015 WL 5353847 (D. Colo. Sept. 15, 2015), aff'd, Cary v. Hickenlooper, 673 F. App'x. 870 (10th Cir. 2016) (unpublished); Rahman v. Schriro, 22 F.Supp.3d 305, 317–318 (S.D.N.Y. 2014) (holding allegations of excessive radiation exposure and associated health risks adequately alleged physical injury at the pleading stage); Enigwe v. Zenk, No. 03-CV-854 (CBA), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 66022, at *19 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 15, 2006) (unpublished) (finding that allegation of exposure to environmental tobacco smoke resulting in dizziness, uncontrollable coughing, lack of appetite, runny eyes and high blood pressure may meet physical injury requirement). But see Glover v. Haynes, No.: CV211-114, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50406, *23–24 (S.D. Ga. Mar. 21, 2012) (unpublished) (dismissing claim based on respiratory illnesses resulting from mold exposure on the ground that it was “of temporary duration and treatable”), report and recommendation adopted, Glover v. Haynes, No.: CV211-114, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 50407 (S.D. Ga. Apr. 10, 2012); Smith v. Leonard, Civil Action No. G-06-0288, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34587, *21 n.7 (S.D.Tex., Apr. 28, 2008) (unpublished) (holding headaches, sinus problems, trouble breathing, blurred vision, irritated eyes, and fatigue resulting from exposure to toxic mold were de minimis); Thompson v. Joyner, No. 5:06-CT-3013-FL, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 96515, at *15 (E.D.N.C. May 29, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that pepper spraying was de minimis), aff'd, 251 F. App'x 826 (4th Cir. 2007); Hogg v. Johnson, No. 2:04-CV-0024, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 851, at *3, *7 (N.D. Tex. Jan. 21, 2005)) (unpublished) (dismissing allegation that plaintiff was “gassed three times for asking for a mattress and standing up for his rights” for lack of physical injury).

473. Santais v. Corr. Corp. of Am., Civil Action No.: 5:16-cv-80 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 42368, *4 (S.D. Ga. Mar. 23, 2017) (unpublished) (holding allegations that plaintiff “developed an abnormality on his left side, and that he has coughed up blood two to three times per week,” and these conditions persisted for months, were more than de minimis); Taylor v. Wawrzyniak, No. 1:15-CV-104, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 181359, 14–15 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 13, 2016) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment to defendant under § 1997e(e) where plaintiff alleged he was “unable to breathe” after use of chemical agent, unlike minor “typical” effects), report and recommendation approved, Taylor v. Wawrzyniak, No. 1:15-CV-104, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2466 (W.D. Mich., Jan. 6, 2017) (unpublished); Watson v. Edelen, 76 F. Supp. 3d 1332, 1379 (N.D. Fla. 2015) (holding “intense pain, vomiting, loss of consciousness, a burning sensation for at least one week, and chemicals burns to the skin on his genitals, buttocks, arms, face, back, legs, and stomach, which caused blisters and peeling skin” caused by use of chemical agents were more than de minimis). But see Kirkland v. Everglades Corr. Inst., NO. 12-22302-CIV-ALTONAGA/White, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43681, *19 (S.D. Fla., Mar. 31, 2014) (unpublished) (“If [plaintiff] experienced temporary chemical burns and minor respiratory problems from exposure to a chemical agent, he then sustained only minor, physical injuries from the chemical spray.”); Magwood v. Tucker, No. 3:12cv140/RV/CJK, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168822, *13–16 (N.D. Fla. Nov. 14, 2012) (unpublished) (holding incarcerated person failed to show more than a de minimis physical injury resulting from officer’s use of chemical agent where he alleged he suffered bloody nose and bloody phlegm), report and recommendation adopted, Magwood v. Tucker, No. 3:12cv140/RV/CJK, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168819 (N.D.Fla., Nov. 28, 2012) (unpublished), appeal dismissed, Magwood v. Tucker, No. 12-16262 (11th Cir. Feb. 19, 2013) (unpublished).

474. Allen v. Stanislaus Cnty., No.: 1:13-cv-00012-DAD-SAB (PC), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15843, *52 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 3, 2017) (unpublished) (holding § 1997e(e) permits damages for direct exposure to urine and feces, which “in and of itself, constitutes more than de minimis injury”), report and recommendation adopted in part, rejected in part on other grounds, Allen v. Stanislaus Cnty., No. 1:13-cv-00012-DAD-SAB (PC), 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43607 (E.D.Cal., Mar. 24, 2017)(unpublished); Havens v. Clements, No. 13-cv-00452-MSK-MEH, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38417, *26–28 (D.Colo., Mar. 24, 2014) (unpublished) (holding lying in one’s own wastes might constitute physical injury if as alleged it caused a bladder infection); Hawthorne v. Cain, Civil Action No. 10-0528-BAJ-DLD, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79681, *17–20 (M.D.La., June 8, 2011) (unpublished) (holding allegation of foot ailment, vomiting, and breathing problems resulting from exposure to human waste from overrunning toilet satisfied § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation adopted, Hawthorne v. Cain, Civil Action No. 10-0528-BAJ-DLD, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 79674 (M.D.La., July 21, 2011) (unpublished). But see Moody v. Shoultes, No. 5:15-cv-325-MTT-CHW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25767, *1, *13–15 (M.D.Ga., Jan. 11, 2018) (unpublished) (holding §

- i) infliction of pain or illness through extreme conditions of confinement;⁴⁹⁷
- j) physical abuse short of blows;⁴⁹⁸
- k) stillbirth or miscarriage.⁴⁹⁹

1997e(e) barred damages where officer allegedly sprayed plaintiff with a mixture including human wastes and only other injury was a cut forehead, though court acknowledged a jury could find an Eighth Amendment violation), report and recommendation adopted, Moody v. Shoultes, No. 5:15-cv-325-MTT-CHW, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25382 (M.D.Ga., Feb. 16, 2018) (unpublished); Allen v. Louisville Metro Dept. of Corrections, No. 3:07CV-P296-S, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78948, *23–24 (W.D.Ky., Oct. 24, 2007) (unpublished) (holding plaintiff who had urine and feces thrown on him by others failed to allege a physical injury under § 1997e(e)).

475. Love v. Godinez, No. 15 C 11549, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76438, *13 (N.D. Ill., May 7, 2018) (unpublished) (holding allegation of sleep deprivation resulting from cold conditions and cockroaches walking over plaintiff raised a triable issue as to physical injury); Camps v. Nutter, Civil Action NO. 14-01498, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 98932, *7 n.1 (E.D. Pa., June 27, 2017) (unpublished) (holding allegations that overcrowded conditions caused “physical and mental suffering, sickness, loss of sleep, anxiety and emotional distress” and prevented plaintiff from receiving adequate medical care for “high blood pressure, headaches, fatigue, muscle pain, chills and problems with his heart, lung and liver” were consistent with allegations other courts had recognized as sufficient under § 1997e(e)); Ellis v. LeBlanc, 09-222-BAJ-DLD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140192, *8 (M.D.La., Sept. 10, 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegation that plaintiff was sent for retaliatory reasons to work in agricultural fields and collapsed, suffering from chest pain, nausea, dizziness and profuse sweating, and was later treated for dehydration, high blood pressure and high blood sugar, satisfied § 1997e(e)), report and recommendation approved, Ellis v. LeBlanc, 09-222-BAJ-DLD, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 140194 (M.D.La., Sept. 28, 2012) (unpublished); Rinehart v. Alford, No. 3:02-CV-1565-R, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1789, at *4 (N.D. Tex. Mar. 3, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that severe headaches and back pain, caused by bright 24-hour light and sleeping on a narrow bench, sufficiently alleged physical injury). But see Alexander v. Tippah County, Miss., 351 F.3d 626, 631 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding incarcerated person who suffered nausea and vomited as a result of exposure to noxious odors in a filthy holding cell full of raw sewage could not pursue damages since he suffered only a de minimis injury, if any); Vansparrentak v. Hall, No. 3:14cv399/MCR/EMT, 2015 WL 333075, *5 (N.D.Fla., Jan. 26, 2015) (unpublished) (holding allegation of six-day transportation with bathroom breaks only every 12 to 15 hours, leading plaintiff to suffer from “neurogenic bladder,” alleged only de minimis injury); Beasley v. LeBlanc, Civil Action No. 1:11CV2047, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170615, *4–5 (W.D.La., May 23, 2012) (unpublished) (holding allegation of athlete’s foot contracted from unsanitary floor was de minimis), report and recommendation adopted, Beasley v. LeBlanc, Civil Action No. 1:11CV2047, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 170618 (W.D.La., Nov. 30, 2012).

476. Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App’x 884, 888–889 (5th Cir. 2007) (unpublished) (holding that being jabbed with a cattle prod is not de minimis); Lawson v. Hall, No. 2:07-0334, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60924, at *10–11 (S.D. W.Va. July 16, 2009) (unpublished) (finding that the use of force may have been impermissible “even in the absence of severe injuries”); Zamoras v. Karr, No. 04-73194, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11140, at *16 (E.D. Mich. Feb. 16, 2007) (unpublished) (holding severe pain resulting from lack of moving during nine months in restraints, along with rashes and scarring on his arms, and inability to raise his arms over his head when released, were not de minimis). But see Dixon v. Toole, 225 F. App’x 797, 799 (11th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding “mere bruising” from 17.5 hours in restraints was de minimis; incarcerated person actually complained of “welts”).

477. Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1245 (D. Colo. 2006) (holding that the pain of prolonged labor resulting in a stillbirth and the death and stillbirth of a child, without physical injury, due to improper medical care meet the standard to state a claim under the PLRA).

One question that the courts have not resolved is whether the infliction of significant physical pain alone constitutes physical injury under § 1997e(e),⁵⁰⁰ or not.⁵⁰¹ If the answer is “no,” then even outright torture might not be compensable in damages as long as it is done with enough care to leave no marks.⁵⁰²

478. Burley v. Abdellatif, No. 16-12256, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44187, *6 (E.D. Mich., Mar. 19, 2018) (unpublished) (“Plaintiff’s repeated allegations of physical pain suffered as a result of Defendant’s alleged deliberate indifference constitute more than de minimis physical injuries for purposes of § 1997e(e).”; plaintiff complained of pain from heel spur and acid reflux); Clark v. Price, No. 2:16-cv-00919-KOB-TMP, 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1479, *15–16 (N.D. Ala., Jan. 4, 2018) (unpublished) (stating “the pain associated with [an] assault itself is more than a de minimis injury”); Garcia-Feliciano v. U.S., Civ. No.: 12-1959(SCC), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56688, *2–4 & n.2 (D.P.R., Apr. 23, 2014) (unpublished) (holding allegation of substantial pain from fall down stairs in restraints was sufficient to defeat summary judgment under § 1997e(e)); Andrade v. Christ, No. 08-cv-01649-WYD-KMT, 2009 WL 3004575, *4 (D.Colo., Sept. 18, 2009) (unpublished) (holding failure to treat existing traumatic injury, causing “unwarranted physical pain,” satisfied § 1997e(e)); Malone v. Runnels, No. CIV S-06-2046 GEB KJM P, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 78945, *22 (E.D.Cal., Sept. 2, 2009) (noting that testimony that plaintiff was in pain for three days after a blow to the head “describes an injury that is more than de minimis”), report and recommendation adopted, Malone v. Runnels, No. CIV S-06-2046 GEB KJM P, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90583 (E.D.Cal., Sept. 29, 2009); Bain v. Cotton, No. 2:06 CV 217, 2009 WL 1660051, *7 (D.Vt., June 12, 2009) (holding “severe chronic pain” from termination of drug regime for incarcerated person who had serious head and spinal injuries from auto accident satisfied § 1997e(e)); Lawson v. Hall, Civil Action No. 2:07-00334, 2008 WL 793635, *5–7 (S.D.W.Va., Mar. 24, 2008) (declining to apply § 1997e(e) to allegation of “severe pain” from being kneed in the genitals); Mansoori v. Shaw, No. 99 C 6155, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11670, *9–12 (N.D.Ill., June 28, 2002) (holding alleged “tenderness and soreness,” for which plaintiff was taken to a hospital for treatment and received a diagnosis of “chest wall injury,” met the standard).

479. McAdoo v. Martin, Civil No. 6:13-cv-06088, 2017 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 40009, *23 (W.D. Ark. Mar. 21, 2017) (unpublished) (noting that injury must be “more than de minimis”; “The question is whether suffering pain, only partially relieved by Tylenol and Ibuprofen, from [plaintiff’s] shoulder injury constitutes a physical injury sufficient to enable Plaintiff to recover damages for his mental pain and suffering under § 1997e(e). Reluctantly, the Court finds it does not.”), affirmed in part, reversed in part and remanded, McAdoo v. Martin, 899 F.3d 521, 525 (8th Cir. 2018) (avoiding the question whether pain standing alone is physical injury under § 1997e(e)); Jones v. F.C.I. Beckley Medical Staff Employees, Civil Action No. 5:11-cv-00530, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88571, *13 (S.D.W.Va., June 30, 2014) (“Physical pain alone is insufficient to constitute more than a de minimis injury.”); Hollingsworth v. Thomas, Civil Action No. 13-00480-WS-B, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73556, *4, 15–18 (S.D.Ala., May 30, 2014) (holding allegation of baton blows that the plaintiff said inflicted “severe pain” alleged no more than de minimis injury); Calderon v. Foster, No. 5:05-cv-00696, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24505, at *27 (S.D. W.Va. Mar. 30, 2007) (unpublished) (pain, standing alone, is de minimis), aff’d, 264 F. App’x 286 (4th Cir. 2008) (unpublished); Ladd v. Dietz, No. 4:06cv3265, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3782, at *3 (D. Neb. Jan. 17, 2007) (unpublished) (holding pain resulting from placing ear medication in plaintiff’s eye was “not enough” to constitute physical injury); Clifton v. Eubank, 418 F. Supp. 2d 1243, 1246 (D. Colo. 2006) (“Physical pain, standing alone, is a de minimis injury that may be characterized as a mental or emotional injury and, accordingly, fails to overcome the PLRA’s bar”); Olivas v. Corr. Corp. of Am., 408 F. Supp. 2d 251, 254, 259 n. 4 (N.D. Tex. 2006) (dismissing as de minimis extreme pain resulting from delay in treatment of broken teeth with exposed nerve); see also Al-Turki v. Ballard, No. 10-cv-02404-WJM-CBS, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20000, *7, 41–44 (D.Colo., Feb. 14, 2013) (unpublished) (“Pain alone may be considered a mental or emotional injury, but physical pain accompanied by physical effects necessitating medical treatment have been held to satisfy the physical injury requirement under the PLRA”; pain resulting from passing kidney stones satisfied § 1997e(e)), aff’d sub nom. Al-Turki v. Robinson, 762 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2014).

480. For example, in Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634 (6th Cir. 2005), an incarcerated person complained that he was forced to stand in a two-and-a-half-foot square cage for about 13 hours, naked for the first eight to 10 hours, unable to sit for more than 30 or 40 minutes of the total time, in severe pain, with clear, visible swelling in a portion of his leg that had previously been injured in a motorcycle accident, during which time he repeatedly asked to see a doctor. Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634, 641 (6th Cir. 2005) (dissenting opinion). The appeals court affirmed the dismissal of his claim as de minimis on the ground that the plaintiff did not complain about his leg upon release or shortly thereafter when he saw medical staff. Jarriett v. Wilson, 414 F.3d 634, 643 (6th Cir. 2005). Jarriett conflicts with Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App’x 884 (5th Cir. 2007) (unpublished), in which the court, referring both to § 1997e(e) and the 8th Amendment, held that being jabbed with a cattle prod was not de minimis, despite the lack of long-term damage, in part because it was “calculated to produce real physical harm.” Payne v. Parnell, 246 F. App’x 884, 888–889 (5th Cir. 2007).

There may be some clarification of the meaning of physical injury under the PLRA in another federal statute, 18 U.S.C. § 242, which makes it a crime for someone acting under color of state law to deprive another person of his or her federal civil rights.⁵⁰³ Section 242 requires a showing of “bodily injury,” but the statute does not define “bodily injury.”⁵⁰⁴ However, several other federal criminal statutes define “bodily injury” as meaning: “(A) a cut, abrasion, bruise, burn, or disfigurement; (B) physical pain; (C) illness; (D) impairment of a function of a bodily member, organ, or mental faculty; or (E) any other injury to the body, no matter how temporary.”⁵⁰⁵ This definition of “bodily injury,” found in other federal statutes, could also be applied in Section 1997e(e).⁵⁰⁶ As far as we know, no court has yet considered this idea. If you are faced with a claim that your injury isn’t severe enough to satisfy the PLRA, but it falls within the statutory definition (definition provided by law) of bodily injury, you could point out the definition of “bodily injury” in 18 U.S.C. §§ 831(f)(5), 1365(g)(4), 1515(a)(5), and 1864(d)(2), and argue that there is no difference between “bodily injury” and “physical injury” under the PLRA.

G. Attorney’s Fees

The PLRA limits the attorney’s fees incarcerated people can recover. These limitations do not directly affect you if you are proceeding pro se (without a lawyer), but they do affect your ability to get a lawyer.

Recovery of attorney’s fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988⁵⁰⁷ is barred in “any action brought by a prisoner”⁵⁰⁸ except when the fees are “directly and reasonably incurred in proving an actual violation of the plaintiff’s rights” under a statute that allows fees to be awarded.⁵⁰⁹ Fees cannot be awarded in cases that are settled without findings of an actual violation of rights,⁵¹⁰ though it may be that fees can be awarded when a settlement is accompanied by a finding of violation.⁵¹¹ Fees may also be

481. 18 U.S.C. § 242.

482. 18 U.S.C. § 242 (providing “if bodily injury results from the acts committed in violation of this section . . . [the defendant] shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both”).

483. 18 U.S.C. § 831(f)(5); accord 18 U.S.C. § 1365(g)(4); 18 U.S.C. § 1515(a)(5); 18 U.S.C. § 1864(d)(2).

484. “When Congress uses, but does not define a particular word, it is presumed to have adopted that word’s established meaning.” United States v. Myers, 972 F.2d 1566, 1572 (11th Cir. 1992) (citing Davis v. Mich. Dept. of Treasury, 489 U.S. 803, 806, 109 S. Ct. 1500, 1503, 103 L. Ed. 2d 891, 899 (1989)); See generally Leon v. Johnson, 96 F. Supp. 2d 244, 248 (W.D.N.Y. 2000) (using the word “physical” in § 1997e(e) interchangeably with the word “bodily” harm).

485. 42 U.S.C. § 1988 authorizes attorneys’ fees for actions filed under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

486. For purposes of these provisions, ex-incarcerated people are not incarcerated people, and a case filed after the plaintiff’s release is not governed by the PLRA fees provisions. Greig v. Goord, 169 F.3d 165, 167 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that a formerly incarcerated person does not need to meet the exhaustion requirement of the PLRA because he does not qualify as a “prisoner” under the relevant provision); Doe v. Washington County, 150 F.3d 920, 924 (8th Cir. 1998) (PLRA provisions about attorney’s fees do not apply to a plaintiff who was not an incarcerated person at the time of filing his suit). The attorneys’ fees provisions are not limited to cases about prison conditions. Robbins v. Chronister, 435 F.3d 1238, 1241–1244 (10th Cir. 2006) (en banc) (applying PLRA attorney’s fees restrictions to a case about events before incarceration); Jackson v. State Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 331 F.3d 790, 794–796 (11th Cir. 2003) (applying a PLRA provision to a case about parole eligibility hearings and length of confinement, and not restricting the provision to lawsuits about prison conditions).

487. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(A). See, e.g., Armstrong v. Davis, 318 F.3d 965, 973–974 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that fees in Americans with Disabilities Act and Rehabilitation Act suits are not governed by the PLRA fee limitations).

488. Torres v. Walker, 356 F.3d 238, 243 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that where a case was resolved by a stipulation that did not require the court’s approval and disclaimed defendants’ liability, “it cannot be said that [plaintiffs] attorneys’ fees were directly and reasonably incurred in proving an actual violation. . . .”; relying on parties’ stipulation, not the PLRA, in awarding fees); Duvall v. O’Malley, No. ELH-94-2541, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48093, *34 (D. Md. Apr. 7, 2014) (unpublished) (denying fees for obtaining a private settlement agreement that “expressly provides that [i]t does not operate as an adjudication of the merits of the litigation” . . . and that it is not “an admission of liability of or by any party”).

489. See Laube v. Allen, 506 F. Supp. 2d 969, 979–980 (M.D. Ala. 2007) (holding that fees may be awarded for injunctive settlements to the extent they first satisfy the PLRA’s “need-narrowness-intrusiveness” awarded if they are “directly and reasonably incurred in enforcing the relief ordered for the violation.”⁵¹² The statute says that fees must be “proportionately related to the court ordered relief for the violation,”⁵¹³ but this provision has little effect on fee awards in addition to that of the other PLRA restrictions on fees. Defendants may be required to pay fee awards of up to 150 percent of any damages awarded—but no more.⁵¹⁴

Hourly rates for lawyers’ fees are limited to 150 percent of the Criminal Justice Act (“CJA”) rates for criminal defense representation set in 18 U.S.C. § 3006A.⁵¹⁵ Unfortunately, this rate is much lower than the market rates most lawyers usually charge, and the amount usually awarded in non-incarcerated person cases, and it probably discourages many lawyers from taking incarcerated people’s cases.⁵¹⁶

Incarcerated people are more directly affected by the part of the PLRA that says up to twenty-five percent of a monetary judgment can be applied to the fee award. The Supreme Court has held that the phrase “not to exceed 25 percent” means that the court “must apply as much of the judgment as necessary, up to 25%, to satisfy an award of attorney’s fees,” and has no discretion to apply a smaller percentage.⁵¹⁷

The courts have rejected arguments that attorney’s fee restrictions deny incarcerated people equal protection or otherwise violate the Constitution.⁵¹⁸ requirement that the relief is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right).

490. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(B)(ii); see Ilick v. Miller, 68 F. Supp. 2d 1169, 1173 n. 1 (D. Nev. 1999), abrogated by Kimbrough v. California, 609 F.3d 1027, 1032 n.7 (9th Cir. 2010) (noting that Illick was the only case in the Ninth Circuit where a person who was incarcerated did not need to affirmatively establish an actual violation in order to recover attorneys’ fees under the PLRA, instead finding that sufficient evidence that the post-PLRA fees were “directly and reasonably” incurred.); West v. Manson, 163 F. Supp. 2d 116, 120 (D. Conn. 2001) (holding fees are recoverable for post-judgment monitoring).

491. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(1)(B)(i).

492. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(2); see Parker v. Conway, 581 F.3d 198, 201 (3d Cir. 2009); Walker v. Bain, 257 F.3d 660, 666-67 (6th Cir. 2001) (so interpreting the statute). That means when a court or jury awards $1.00 in nominal damages, Pearson v. Welborn, 471 F.3d 732, 742–744 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding fees limited to $1.50 where the plaintiff recovered only $1.00 in nominal damages); Boivin v. Black, 225 F.3d 36, 40–46 (1st Cir. 2000) (going through an extensive analysis of the constitutional basis for the fee cap and concluding that fees are limited to 150 percent of recovered nominal damages). This 150 percent limit does not apply to cases in which the plaintiff seeks and receives an injunction as well as damages. See Walker v. Bain, 257 F.3d 660, 667 n.2 (6th Cir. 2001) (noting that § 1997e(d)(2) does not apply if non-monetary relief is granted).

493. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(d)(3).

494. Although the hourly rate is higher than the Criminal Justice Act rates (up to 150 percent), lawyers defending clients under the CJA get paid for their time whether they win or lose. 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(d).

495. Murphy v. Smith, 138 S. Ct. 784, 790, 200 L. Ed. 2d 75 (2018).

496. See Wilkins v. Gaddy, 734 F.3d 344, 347–348 (4th Cir. 2013); Parker v. Conway, 581 F.3d 198, 203-04 (3d Cir. 2009); Johnson v. Daley, 339 F.3d 582, 597–598 (7th Cir. 2003) (en banc) (finding no constitutional violation of equal protection); Jackson v. State Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 331 F.3d 790, 796–798 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that § 1997e(d) passed the rational basis test and was therefore constitutional); Foulk v. Charrier, 262 F.3d 687, 704 (8th Cir. 2001); Walker v. Bain, 257 F.3d 660, 670 (6th Cir. 2001) (stating “[w]e admit to being troubled by a federal statute that seeks to reduce the number of meritorious civil rights claims and protect the public fisc at the expense of denying a politically unpopular group their ability to vindicate actual, albeit ‘technical,’ civil rights violations”; upholding statute nonetheless); Hadix v. Johnson, 230 F.3d 840, 843 (6th Cir. 2000); Madrid v. Gomez, 190 F.3d 990, 996 (9th Cir. 1999); Collins v. Montgomery Cnty. Bd. of Prison Inspectors, 176 F.3d 679, 686 (3d Cir. 1999) (en banc) (affirming by divided vote the 150% cap’s constitutionality); Carbonell v. Acrish, 154 F. Supp. 2d 552, 561–566 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (upholding 150 percent limit as a rational means to achieve Congress’s end).

H. Waiver of Reply

The PLRA states in 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g):

(g) Waiver of Reply.

(1) Any defendant may waive the right to reply to any action brought by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility under [42 U.S.C. § 1983] . . . or any other Federal law.

Notwithstanding any other law or rule of procedure, such waiver shall not constitute an admission of the allegations contained in the complaint. No relief shall be granted to the plaintiff unless a reply has been filed.

(2) The court may require any defendant to reply to a complaint brought under this section if it finds that the plaintiff has a reasonable opportunity to prevail on the merits.⁵¹⁹

This provision means that with the suits of people who are incarcerated, the defendants do not have to answer the complaint unless the court tells them to answer. Courts can do this if “the plaintiff has a reasonable opportunity to prevail on the merits.”⁵²⁰ In practice, courts generally direct defendants to answer if the case survives the court’s first screening or a motion to dismiss, which means that the complaint states a claim for which relief can be granted.⁵²¹

If you amend the complaint to add parties after the initial screening, the court might not automatically direct the new defendants to answer. When you move to amend or edit a complaint, always ask the court to direct the defendants to answer when it grants your motion to amend. If you amend the complaint as a matter of course (when no motion is required) and the defendants do not answer, then you may need to move to direct them to answer.⁵²²

The provision that “[n]o relief shall be granted to the plaintiff unless a reply has been filed”⁵²³ may limit “default judgments,” which are judgments granted in favor of the plaintiff if a defendant fails to respond to the complaint.⁵²⁴ Clearly no default or default judgment can be entered unless the defendants have been directed to answer the complaint.⁵²⁵ Although it is possible to read this provision to say that courts cannot grant default judgments if defendants refuse to reply,⁵²⁶ this view has been

497. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g).

498. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g).

499. See, e.g., Cameron v. Rantz, No. CV 08–42–H–DWM–RKS, 2008 WL 5111875, *6 (D. Mont. Dec. 4, 2008) (unpublished); Daniel v. Power, No. 04-CV-789-DRH, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17235, at *6 (S.D. Ill. July 20, 2005) (unpublished) (holding that after an initial screening, “[d]efendants [must] . . . timely file an appropriate responsive pleading to the Amended Complaint, and shall not waive filing a reply pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g)”).

522. Amendment by motion and as a matter of course are discussed in FED. R. CIV. P. 15.

523. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g)(1)

524. See FED. R. CIV. P. 55(a) (“When a party against whom a judgment for affirmative relief is sought has failed to plead or otherwise defend, and that failure is shown by affidavit or otherwise, the clerk must enter the party’s default.”).

525. Lafountain v. Martin, No. 1:07-cv-76, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 112349, at *10 (W.D.Mich. Dec 3, 2009) (unpublished) (where the court affirmed the magistrate judge’s denial of Plaintiff’s motion for default) ; Olmstead v. Balcarecel, No. 06-CV-14881, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53130, at *3 (E.D.Mich., July 24, 2007) (unpublished); Cidone v. Chiarelli, No. Civ. 1:CV-07-0746, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 51581, at *n.1 (M.D.Pa., July 17, 2007) (unpublished); Wallin v. Brill, No. Civ.A. 04-cv-00215-WDM-MJW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17674, at *5 (D.Colo., Mar. 13, 2007) (unpublished) (setting aside default); 269 F.App’x. 820 (10th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1051 (2008).

526. Johns v. Lockhart, No. 2:11-cv-458, 2013 U.S. DIST. LEXIS 45817, at *1 (W.D.Mich., Feb. 7, 2013) (unpublished) (“The only action required of any defendant is the filing of an appearance within the time allowed rejected by at least one court,⁵²⁷ and courts continue to grant default judgments in prison cases.⁵²⁸ If the defendants in your case do not respond, and the court does not want to enter a default judgment, try moving to hold the defendants in contempt of the court's order for them to reply to your complaint. Also ask the court for contempt damages equal to what you would get if the case went forward.⁵²⁹

I. Hearings by Telecommunication and at Prisons

The PLRA added a new section to the Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act ("CRIPA"):

(f) Hearings.

(1) To the extent practicable, in any action brought with respect to prison conditions in Federal court pursuant to section 1979 of the Revised Statutes of the United States ([42 U.S.C. § 1983] ...), or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility, pretrial proceedings in which the prisoner's participation is required or permitted shall be conducted by telephone, video conference, or other telecommunications technology without removing the prisoner from the facility in which the prisoner is confined.

(2) Subject to the agreement of the official of the Federal, State, or local unit of government with custody over the prisoner, hearings may be conducted at the facility in which the prisoner is confined. To the extent practicable, the court shall allow counsel to participate by telephone, video conference, or other communications technology in any hearing held at the facility.⁵³⁰ by the Court's order of service. No default will be entered against any defendant for exercising the right under section 1997(e)(1) not to respond to the complaint."), affirmed in part, vacated in part, remanded on other grounds, Johns v. Lockhart, No. 13-1720, 2014 U.S. App. LEXIS 18520 (6th Cir., Feb. 18, 2014) (unpublished); Smith v. Heyns, No. 2:12-CV-11373, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39534, at *16 (E.D.Mich., Jan. 10, 2013) (unpublished), report and recommendation adopted, Smith v. Heyns, No. 12-11373, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38148 (E.D.Mich., Mar. 20, 2013) (unpublished); Bell v. Lesure, No. CIV-08-1255-R, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 38691, at *3-4 (W.D.Okla., May 6, 2009) (unpublished) (holding the PLRA forbids entry of default judgments in prisoner cases); Vinning v. Walls, No. 01-CV-994-WDS, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 26936, at *1 (S.D.Ill., Mar. 31, 2009) (unpublished) (holding default judgment could be entered, but no relief ordered, under the PLRA).

527. McCurdy v. Johnson, No. 2:08-cv-01767-MMD-PAL, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 107171, at *2 (D.Nev., Aug. 1, 2012) (unpublished) (holding a default judgment may be entered if the court has entered an order specifically based on 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(g)(2), which authorizes requiring a reply where the court has found a reasonable opportunity to prevail on the merits).

528. See, e.g., Montez v. Hampton, No. Civ.A. H-11-1891, 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 172070, at *1-2 (S.D.Tex., Dec. 6, 2013) (unpublished) (awarding damages based on earlier default judgment); Benton v. Rousseau, 940 F.Supp.2d 1370, 1380-1381 (M.D.Fla. 2013) (entering default judgment against defendant who did not answer third amended complaint); Johnson v. MDOC, No. 4:05CV250-P-D, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6142, at *3 (N.D.Miss., Jan. 28, 2009) (unpublished); Cameron v. Myers, 569 F. Supp. 2d 762, 766 (N.D. Ind. 2008) (entering default judgment in favor of a pro se prisoner plaintiff).

529. On contempt damages, see Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 691, 98 S. Ct. 2565, 2573, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522, 534 (1978) ("If a state agency refuses to adhere to a court order, a financial penalty may be the most effective means of insuring compliance."); Benjamin v. Sielaff, 752 F. Supp. 140, 148-149 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding a prison accountable for "compensatory damages to be paid to any member of the [prisoner] plaintiff class who, in the future, as a new admission, is held in a non-housing area for more than twenty-four hours"); Feliciano v. Hernandez Colon, 704 F. Supp. 16, 20 (D.P.R. 1988) ("Sanctions in civil contempt proceedings may be employed for either or both of two purposes: to coerce defendants into compliance with the Court's order, and to compensate the complainant for losses sustained.").

530. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(f); see Moss v. Gomez, No. 97-56234, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 27753, at *4 (9th Cir.

Long before the PLRA, many federal courts were using telephones and videos in court proceedings and holding some proceedings at prisons.⁵³¹ This provision concerning hearings at the prison raises new legal and practical problems. The statute refers to holding “hearings” but not “trials” at the prison, leaving it unclear whether evidentiary proceedings are included.⁵³² Conducting a trial or evidentiary proceeding by video conferencing raises serious questions of fairness, particularly in jury trials. In United States v. Baker,⁵³³ a non-PLRA case, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals said that it was constitutional to hold incarcerated persons’ psychiatric commitment hearings by video. However, the court was careful to say that these decisions are generally based on expert testimony and don’t depend on the appearance of the witnesses or the “impression” made by the person being committed, and that the proceeding does not involve fact-finding in the usual sense.⁵³⁴ That description does not fit most evidentiary proceedings in the cases of incarcerated people, and courts have traditionally expressed a strong preference for having incarcerated plaintiffs physically present in court for trial.⁵³⁵

If the court does hold a hearing by telephone or video in your case, it is your responsibility to subpoena (call to court) any witnesses you wish to present or cross-examine or take any other action the court directs, just as in a live hearing in the courtroom.⁵³⁶

J. Revocation of Earned Release Credit

The PLRA added a new statutory section concerning earned release credit:

§ 1932. Revocation of earned release credit

In any civil action brought by an adult convicted of a crime and confined in a Federal correctional facility, the court may order the revocation of such earned good time credit under section 3624(b) of title 18, United States Code, that has not yet vested, if, on its own motion or the motion of any party, the court finds that—

- (1) the claim was filed for a malicious purpose;
- (2) the claim was filed solely to harass the party against which it was filed; or

Oct. 26, 1998) (unpublished) (holding district court should have considered teleconferencing as an alternative to producing prisoner witness who was a security risk).

531. See, e.g., Hall v. Bellmon, 935 F.2d 1106, 1109 (10th Cir. 1991) (noting use of telephone evidentiary hearing to assess frivolousness of claim).

532. But see Williams v. Forcade, No. Civ.A. 04-15 SECTION “I”(2), 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14494, at *1–2 (E.D. La. July 28, 2004) (unpublished) (directing that plaintiff participate in trial by telephone); Bickham v. Blair, No. Civ.A. 98-881, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12773, at *3 (E.D. La. Aug. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (noting that an evidentiary hearing was held by telephone), aff’d 228 F.3d 408 (5th Cir. 2000); Edwards v. Logan, 38 F. Supp. 2d 463, 466–468 (W.D. Va. 1999) (authorizing video jury trial for Virginia prisoner held in New Mexico; analogizing to PLRA’s provisions concerning pretrial proceedings).

533. United States v. Baker, 45 F.3d 837 (4th Cir. 1995).

534. United States v. Baker, 45 F.3d 837, 845 (4th Cir. 1995).

535. See, e.g., Muhammad v. Warden, Balt. City Jail, 849 F.2d 107, 113 (4th Cir. 1988) (“[C]onsideration should be given to securing the prisoner’s presence, at his own or government expense, for trial of his action.”); Poole v. Lambert, 819 F.2d 1025, 1029 (11th Cir. 1987) (“[A] district court should consider all possibilities for affording a prisoner his day in court before dismissing his case for failure to prosecute.”).

536. See, e.g., Bickham v. Blair, No. Civ.A. 98-881, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12773, at *3 (E.D. La. Aug. 16, 1999) (unpublished) (“[Plaintiffs] proposed witnesses and the defendants did not attend the telephone hearing because he did not provide the court with sufficient information to subpoena the prisoners he listed as witnesses, ...he did not list the defendants as witnesses, ... and the defense apparently chose not to call the defendants as witnesses.... Therefore, the claim that he was denied cross-examination of the defendants is without merit.”), Bickham v. Blair, 228 F.3d 408 (5th Cir. 2000).

(3) the claimant testifies falsely or otherwise knowingly presents false evidence or information to the court.⁵³⁷

This seldom-used provision, which applies only to federal incarcerated people, allows a court to take away good time credit based on what a court thinks about an incarcerated person's litigation activities, or activities during the case. Though the statute raises substantial questions about due process of law, it provides no procedural protections. It is not clear what due process requirements would apply. The only reported decisions applying this provision do not discuss due process.⁵³⁸

K. Diversion of Damage Awards

The PLRA includes two provisions about awarding damages in a successful suit brought by an incarcerated person:

Any compensatory damages awarded to a prisoner in connection with a civil action brought against any Federal, State, or local jail, prison, or correctional facility or against any official or agent of such jail, prison, or correctional facility, shall be paid directly to satisfy any outstanding restitution orders pending against the prisoner. The remainder of any such award after full payment of all pending restitution orders shall be forwarded to the prisoner.

Prior to payment of any compensatory damages awarded to a prisoner in connection with a civil action brought against any Federal, State, or local jail, prison, or correctional facility or against any official or agent of such jail, prison, or correctional facility, reasonable efforts shall be made to notify the victims of the crime for which the prisoner was convicted and incarcerated concerning the pending payment of any such compensatory damages.⁵³⁹

These provisions say that any compensatory (money) damages won by an incarcerated person in a lawsuit will be first used to pay any restitution orders or damages that the incarcerated person has not yet paid. There is very little case law about these statutes.⁵⁴⁰ One important question is whether

537. 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

538. See United States v. Williams, No. 3:09-548-JFA, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110297, at *1 (D.S.C. Sept. 26, 2011) (unpublished) (“The court finds that by filing a verified petition containing materially false statements of fact, the defendant presented false information to the court. Therefore, the court hereby revokes his earned release credit (‘good time credits’) pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1932.”); United States v. Belt, No. PJM 10-2921, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 81548, at *24–25 (D. Md. July 26, 2011) (unpublished) (denying revocation of good time credit because the government instituted the suit); Armstrong v. Zickefoose, No. CIV.A. 10-4388 RMB, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 121571, at *10 (D.N.J. Nov. 17, 2010) (unpublished) (stating an order regarding revocation of good time credit will be ordered because plaintiff misrepresented prior litigation); Townsend v. United States, No. CV410-005, 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64625, at *1, n.2 (S.D. Ga. May 19, 2010) (unpublished) (noting that, in a previous case, the court had revoked plaintiff's earned good time credit for filing a frivolous and malicious suit); Rice v. Nat'l Sec. Council, 244 F. Supp. 2d 594, 597 (D.S.C. 2001) (revoking earned good time credit and dismissing complaint as frivolous and malicious), Rice v. Nat'l Sec. Council, 46 F. App'x 212 (4th Cir. 2002) (per curiam) (unpublished); Feurtado v. McNair, No. C/A 3:99-2582-17BC, 2000 WL 34448882, at *1 (D.S.C. July 20, 2000) (unpublished) (revoking earned time credit on the grounds “that this action was malicious and intended to harass”), Feurtado v. McNair, 3 F. App'x 113 (4th Cir. 2001) (per curiam).

539. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995, Pub. L. No. 104-134, §§ 807–808, 110 Stat. 1321-66, 1321-75–1321-76 (1996). This provision is not codified, and appears after 18 U.S.C. § 3626 under the History heading.

540. See Loucony v. Kupec, No. 3:98 CV 61 (JGM), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6620, at *4–5 (D. Conn. Feb. 17, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that a person who, after his release from prison, sued medical staff for their treatment of him while in a correctional facility was not a “prisoner” and the statute did not apply to him). Cf. Hutchinson v. Watson, No. 913CV862FJSRFT, 2014 WL 11515849, at *4 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 13, 2014) (rejecting the phrase “compensatory damages awarded” includes settlements of damage claims. As a matter of plain English, it would seem not, and that is the holding of the only relevant decision we are aware of.⁵⁴¹

L. Injunctions

The PLRA contains a number of provisions restricting courts’ abilities to enter and to maintain “prospective relief” (mostly injunctions, or court orders) in prison cases.⁵⁴²

1. Entry of Prospective Relief

Under the PLRA, courts may not enter prospective relief in prison cases unless:

[T]he court finds that such relief is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right. The court shall give substantial weight to any adverse impact on public safety or the operation of a criminal justice system caused by the relief.⁵⁴³

This standard is not very different from the law in effect before the PLRA,⁵⁴⁴ though the requirement that the court make these specific findings (“need-narrowness-intrusiveness” findings) is new. The statute also bars injunctive relief that requires state or local officials to exceed their normal local authority, unless 1) federal law requires the relief, 2) the relief is necessary to fix a federal law plaintiff’s claim that notifying his victim of a settlement he received could form the basis of a retaliation suit, since the PLRA obligated the defendants to give notice), Hutchinson v. Watson, 607 F. App’x 116 (2d Cir. 2015).

541. In Dodd v. Robinson, Civil Action No. 03-F-571-N, Order, *1 (M.D. Ala. Mar. 26, 2004), in which a district attorney sought to satisfy a restitution order by moving in the court in which a case had been settled, the district court held that the PLRA provision concerning restitution orders “is not applicable in this case because the parties have reached a private settlement agreement.” The court expressed confidence that the District Attorney had ample means in state court to enforce the restitution order. Cf. Torres v. Walker, 356 F.3d 238, 243 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that a “so ordered” stipulation settling a damage claim was not a money judgment). The Hutchinson case cited in the previous footnote did treat a settlement as an award, but did not discuss the meaning of “compensatory damages awarded” in doing so.

542. One federal appeals court has held that under the PLRA’s language, punitive damages are “prospective relief” subject to the PLRA’s limitations. See Johnson v. Breeden, 280 F.3d 1308, 1325–1326 (11th Cir. 2002) (remanding to district court for determination of whether punitive damages are narrowly drawn). Other courts have mostly ignored this decision. One exception is Rieara v. Sweat, No. CV205-174, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18644, at *14–16 (S.D. Ga. Mar. 16, 2007) (unpublished) (finding that punitive damages are a form of prospective relief under the PLRA, but that the court could first determine whether a punitive damage was warranted and then later determine whether it was excessive). These two cases seem conceptually wrong because the prospective relief provisions are clearly written to deal with injunctions and make very little sense as applied to punitive damages. See, e.g., Tate v. Dragovich, No. 96-4495, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14353, at *22 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 14, 2003) (unpublished) (stating that the court could find no case applying the prospective relief provision to a punitive damage award).

543. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(1)(A); see Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 531 (2011) (“Narrow tailoring requires a fit between the remedy’s ends and the means chosen to accomplish those ends. . . . [§ 3626(a)(1)(A)] means only that the scope of the order must be determined with reference to the constitutional violations established by the specific plaintiffs before the court); Armstrong v. Schwarzenegger, 622 F.3d 1058, 1071 (9th Cir. 2010) (stating “the core concern of the intrusiveness inquiry [is] whether the district court has ‘enmeshed [itself] in the minutiae of prison operations,’ beyond what is necessary to vindicate plaintiffs’ federal rights. . . .”); Benjamin v. Fraser, 343 F.3d 35, 54 (2d Cir. 2003) (“Although the PLRA’s requirement that relief be ‘narrowly drawn’ and ‘necessary’ to correct the violation might at first glance seem to equate permissible remedies with constitutional minimums, a remedy may require more than the bare minimum the Constitution would permit and yet still be necessary and narrowly drawn to correct the violation.”). .

544. See Smith v. Ark. Dept. of Corr., 103 F.3d 637, 647 (8th Cir. 1996) (observing that the PLRA “merely codifies existing law and does not change the standards for determining whether to grant an injunction.”).

violation, and 3) no other relief will correct the violation.⁵⁴⁵ This provision also appears to be consistent with prior law.⁵⁴⁶ The PLRA limits federal courts to prospective relief (relief that is ordered now against some future event) that corrects violations of “federal rights,” which means a court cannot enter an injunction based on a violation of state or local law.⁵⁴⁷

2. Preliminary Injunctions

Preliminary injunctions must meet the same standards that apply to other prospective relief, though the court does not need to make the required need-narrowness-intrusiveness findings immediately. A preliminary injunction automatically expires after ninety days unless the court makes the required findings and makes the order final.⁵⁴⁸ However, a court may grant a new preliminary injunction after the first has expired if the plaintiff shows that the conditions justifying the first injunction still exist.⁵⁴⁹ The PLRA’s requirements for preliminary injunctions are in addition to, not instead of, the usual requirements for such an injunction.⁵⁵⁰

3. Prisoner Release Orders

The PLRA contains special rules for “prisoner release orders,” which it defines as “any order . . . that has the purpose or effect of reducing or limiting the prison population, or that directs the release from or nonadmission of prisoners to a prison.”⁵⁵¹ An order does not have to specifically direct the release of incarcerated people to be considered a prisoner release order.⁵⁵² Such orders are permitted only if previous, less intrusive relief has failed to fix the federal law violation in a reasonable time.⁵⁵³ In other words, releasing incarcerated people to correct the federal law violation may not be the first type of relief tried. A release order must be supported by clear and convincing evidence that “crowding is the primary cause of the violation of a Federal right” and no other relief will remedy the violation.⁵⁵⁴

545. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(1)(B); see, e.g., Doe v. Cook County, Illinois, 798 F.3d 558, 564 (7th Cir. 2015) (stating “under § 3626(a)(1)(B) the parties, like the court, must respect state law unless federal law leaves no other option”); Coleman v. Brown, 952 F. Supp. 2d 901, 904, 931–932 (E.D.Cal. 2013) (waiving all state and local laws that would interfere with compliance with a population limit), stay denied, Coleman v. Brown 960 F.Supp.2d 1057 (E.D. Cal. July 3, 2013), stay denied sub nom. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493 (2013); Perez v. Hickman, No. C 05-05241 JSW, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 44432, at *11, *16–17 (N.D. Cal. June 12, 2007) (unpublished) (ordering increase in salaries paid to prison dentists, contrary to state law, and finding PLRA standards met).

546. See, e.g., Stone v. City & Cty. of S.F., 968 F.2d 850, 861–865 (9th Cir. 1992) (holding, pre-PLRA, that provisions of consent decree that overrode state law were not the least intrusive option available and were thus prohibited); LaShawn A. ex rel. Moore v. Barry, 144 F.3d 847, 854 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (stating, pre-PLRA, that “[d]isregarding local law . . . is a grave step and should not be taken unless absolutely necessary.”).

547. Handberry v. Thompson, 446 F.3d 335, 344–346 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that in prison cases the PLRA overrides federal courts’ “supplemental jurisdiction” to enforce state law).

548. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2).

549. See, e.g., Mayweathers v. Newland, 258 F.3d 930, 935–936 (9th Cir. 2001) (upholding a second injunction when the defendants were then subject to a prior injunction that was being appealed, the injunctions were identical, and the granting of the first injunction raised no new issues unable to be reviewed by the court on appeal); Coleman v. Brown, 938 F. Supp. 2d 955, 990 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 5, 2013) (upholding an injunction that was “necessary to correct current and ongoing violations” of prisoners’ federal rights and “extend[ed] no further than necessary to correct those violations.”).

550. Gates v. Fordice, No. 4:71CV6-JAD, CONSOLIDATED WITH No. 4:90CV125-JAD, 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13443, at *2 (N.D. Miss. July 16, 1999).

551. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(g)(4).

552. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 511 (2011) (holding that an order that limited prison population to a percentage of the prisons’ design capacity, but did not necessarily require release of any prisoners since the defendants could comply by expanding capacity or transferring prisoners to county jails or out of state, was a prisoner release order because “it nonetheless has the ‘effect of reducing or limiting the prison population’”); accord, Ruiz v. Estelle, 161 F.3d 814, 825–827 (5th Cir. 1998).

553. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(A).

554. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(E)(i)–(ii).

One court has held that these requirements for prison release orders do not apply when the prison is trying to modify an order that existed before the PLRA was enacted.⁵⁵⁵

The PLRA requires convening a three-judge court before a “prisoner release order” can be issued. Either the party asking for the order, or the district court itself, can request these orders.⁵⁵⁶ In order to obtain a prisoner release order, the plaintiff will have to show a few things. First, the plaintiff must show that there has been a prior, less intrusive order that failed to correct the federal law violation that the plaintiff is seeking a remedy for. Second, the plaintiff must show that the defendants had a reasonable time to comply with the previous order.⁵⁵⁷ Finally, the plaintiff will have to show that “(i) crowding is the primary cause of the violation of a Federal right; and (ii) no other relief will remedy the violation of the Federal right.”⁵⁵⁸ Since the statute is clearly most concerned with crowding, requests to remove incarcerated people from a particular prison for reasons unrelated to crowding are not governed by the prisoner release provisions.⁵⁵⁹ However, in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, most courts have held that requests to reduce prison populations to protect incarcerated people from the virus would be considered prisoner release orders.⁵⁶⁰

The PLRA permits state and local officials to intervene to oppose prisoner release orders.⁵⁶¹

4. Termination of Judgments

Under the PLRA, court orders in prison litigation, including consent judgments (a judgment the parties agree to), may be terminated after two years unless the court finds that there is a “current and ongoing violation” of federal law that, “extends no further than necessary” to correct a current the violation of federal law, and the “prospective relief” is narrowly drawn and the least intrusive means to correct the violation.⁵⁶² After this two-year period, orders may be challenged every year.⁵⁶³ An order may be challenged at any time if it was entered without the court finding that it “is narrowly drawn, extends no further than necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right, and is the least intrusive means necessary to correct the violation of the Federal right.”⁵⁶⁴ Orders without these findings may be terminated immediately unless a current and ongoing federal law violation is shown. A “violation of the Federal right” means a violation of the federal Constitution, statutes, or regulations. Violation of the court order itself is not enough.⁵⁶⁵ “Current and ongoing” violation of federal law means one that

555. Berwanger v. Cottey, 178 F.3d 834, 836 (7th Cir. 1999) (citing 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(A) and finding that the prison official’s request to modify an order could not be based on the PLRA because the order existed before the PLRA; however, the PLRA rules about terminating relief could still apply).

556. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(B)–(D).

557. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(C). See Coleman v. Schwarzenegger, No. S-90-0520 LKK JFM P, U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56043, at *2–5 (E.D.Cal., July 23, 2007) (unpublished) (citing materials supporting the showing required by § 3626(C)).

558. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(E).

559. Plata v. Brown, 427 F. Supp. 3d 1211 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (holding an order directing removal of medically vulnerable incarcerated people from a prison where Valley Fever was prevalent did not constitute a prisoner release order).

560. See, e.g., Wilson v. Ponce, No. CV 20-4451-MWF (MRWx), 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 160346, at *5 (C.D. Cal. July 14, 2020) (holding that petitioners’ request to exercise social distancing cannot be separated from overcrowding and is therefore a prisoner release order); Alvarez v. Larose, 445 F. Supp. 3d 861, 868 (S.D. Cal. 2020); Money v. Pritzker, 453 F. Supp. 3d 1103, 1124–26 (N.D. Ill. 2020).

561. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(3)(F); see Ruiz v. Estelle, 161 F.3d 814, 818–821 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that PLRA grants individual legislators the right to intervene in litigation regarding prisoner release orders “where [such legislators’] legislative jurisdiction or function includes appropriation of funds for the construction, operation, or maintenance of prison facilities subject to the challenged prisoner release order”).

562. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(b)(1)–(3).

563. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(b)(1)(A)(ii).

564. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(b)(2); see Tyler v. Murphy, 135 F.3d 594, 597 (8th Cir. 1998) (noting that, absent the required findings, the immediate termination provision rather than the two-year provision applies).

565. Plyler v. Moore, 100 F.3d 365, 370 (4th Cir. 1996) (holding that a violation of incarcerated peoples’ rights under the consent decree was not a violation of a “federal right” under the PLRA).

is going on at the time the termination motion is litigated, not one that is anticipated to occur if the court order is terminated.⁵⁶⁶

Constitutional challenges asserting that the provision violates the separation of powers, the Equal Protection Clause, and the Due Process Clause have all been unsuccessful in the past.⁵⁶⁷

5. Automatic Stay

The PLRA provides that courts must quickly rule on motions to terminate prospective relief. The PLRA also says that the prospective relief is automatically stayed (suspended) on the thirtieth day after the motion is made. If prospective relief is stayed the court will no longer enforce a rule or ruling requiring prison officials to remedy the violation.⁵⁶⁸ The thirty days can be extended to sixty days if good cause (a good reason) is shown. The “general congestion of the court’s calendar” is not considered a good reason.⁵⁶⁹ Good cause may be established by showing that there is reason to believe there are continuing federal law violations in the prisons at issue.⁵⁷⁰ The Supreme Court has held that the automatic stay provision does not violate the principle of separation of powers in the Constitution.⁵⁷¹

6. Settlements

Under the PLRA, settlements that include prospective relief must meet the same need-narrowness-intrusiveness requirements that the PLRA establishes for other court orders.⁵⁷² In other words, the court must find that these settlements are narrowly drawn, necessary to correct federal law violations, and the least intrusive way of correcting them. In practice, however, parties who settle agree to these findings, and the court usually approves them. Parties can enter into “private settlement agreements” that do not meet the PLRA standards as long as these agreements cannot be enforced in federal court.⁵⁷³ In effect, they must be contracts enforceable in state court. The only federal court recourse for violation of a private settlement agreement is to reinstate the action as it was before the settlement, and litigate the case to conclusion. These agreements are not subject to the judgment

566. Cason v. Seckinger, 231 F.3d at 777, 784 (11th Cir. 2000); Benjamin v. Jacobson, 172 F.3d 144, 166 (2d Cir. 1999); Graves v. Arpaio, No. CV-77-0479-PHX-NVW, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 85935 (D. Ariz. Oct. 22, 2008), aff’d, 623 F.3d 1043 (9th Cir. 2010).

567. Court of appeals decisions and district court decisions upholding the statute include Ruiz v. United States, 243 F.3d 941 (5th Cir. 2001); Gilmore v. California, 220 F.3d 987 (9th Cir. 2000); Berwanger v. Cottey, 178 F.3d 834 (7th Cir. 1999); Nichols v. Hopper, 173 F.3d 820 (11th Cir. 1999); Benjamin v. Jacobson, 172 F.3d 144 (2d Cir. 1999); Imprisoned Citizens Union v. Ridge, 169 F.3d 178 (3d Cir. 1999); Hadix v. Johnson, 133 F.3d 940 (6th Cir. 1998); Dougan v. Singletary, 129 F.3d 1424 (11th Cir. 1997); Inmates of Suffolk Cty. Jail v. Rouse, 129 F.3d 649 (1st Cir. 1997); Gavin v. Branstad, 122 F.3d 1081 (8th Cir. 1997); and Plyler v. Moore, 100 F.3d 365 (4th Cir. 1996).

568. Richard J. Costa, Note, The Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995: A Legitimate Attempt to Curtail Frivolous Inmate Lawsuits and End the Alleged Micromanagement of State Prisons or a Violation of Separation of Powers?, 63 BROOK. L. REV. 319, 324 (1997).

569. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(e)(3).

570. See Plata v. Schwarzenegger, No. C01-1351 TEH, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20438, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 26, 2009) (granting less than a 60-day extension where it was undisputed that serious harm would result from delaying health care reforms but a hearing was scheduled on termination in less than 60 days); Lancaster v. Tilton, No. C 79-01630 WHA, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 89252, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 19, 2007) (holding evidence of continuing sanitary deficiencies were good cause to extend the stay). One court has held that good cause was established by “extraordinary complexity of the issues on which the parties must prepare to present evidence and the continuing opacity about what orders or provisions are being challenged.” Braggs v. Dunn, No. 2:14cv601-MHT, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 186833, at *4 (M.D. Ala. Oct. 1, 2020) (granting plaintiffs’ motion for on-site prison inspections related to mental-health care even during the COVID-19 pandemic because the minimal risk of transmission is outweighed by plaintiff prisoners’ need to gather evidence to respond to the defendant’s motion to terminate the court’s remedial orders.”

571. Miller v. French, 530 U.S. 327, 348, 120 S. Ct. 2246, 2259, 147 L. Ed. 2d 326, 343 (2000).

572. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(c)(1).

573. 18 U.S.C. § 3626(c)(2).

termination provisions.⁵⁷⁴ The PLRA does not restrict settlements that involve money damages in place of other forms of relief.

M. Conclusion

By passing the PLRA, Congress has made it more difficult for you to have your claims heard in federal court. Although you might feel that some of its provisions are unfair, you cannot ignore the PLRA's strict requirements. To give yourself the best possible chance of getting your claim into federal court and winning, you will have to get familiar with all the portions of the PLRA that are relevant for your case.

In going back through this Chapter, you should pay special attention to the “three strikes” provisions of the PLRA (see Part C) and to the administrative procedure exhaustion requirements (see Part E). The three strikes rules should encourage you to consider your decision whether to bring suit very carefully, because if a court decides you have brought a frivolous suit, your ability to bring future suits may be jeopardized. You must also be certain you fully understand the exhaustion requirements, since courts will not allow your suit to proceed unless you have made every effort to resolve your grievance through administrative procedures.

574. Shultz v. Wells, 73 F. App'x 794, 795–796 (6th Cir. 2003) (unpublished); Davis v. Gunter, 771 F. Supp. 2d 1068, 1071–1072 (D. Neb. 2011); York v. City of El Dorado, 119 F. Supp. 2d 1106, 1109 (E.D. Cal. 2000).

Chapter 15

INMATE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURES*

A. Introduction

If you have a complaint concerning your treatment at a state correctional facility, you must consult the state's formal inmate grievance procedures. According to the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), you must "exhaust" (use up) all of the available grievance procedures before you can take your complaint to court.¹ Before filing any type of lawsuit, you should carefully read JLM, Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act." In New York, for example, state law and the New York Inmate Grievance Program ("IGP") require the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services and Community Supervision ("DOCCS") to establish a committee in each correctional facility. These committees address inmate grievances (complaints about the way the Department of Corrections applies a policy and how it negatively affects you).² The purpose of the IGP is to "provide[] each inmate an orderly, fair, simple, and expeditious method for resolving grievances," and "to promote mediation and conflict reduction in the resolution of grievances."³ The details of this program appear in DOCCS Directives 4040 and 4041,⁴ and in Title 7 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York.⁵ Directive 4002 describes the Inmate Liaison Committee ("ILC"), which is concerned with the general welfare of incarcerated people.⁶

This JLM Chapter will help you make an informed decision about how to proceed with your grievance, using New York's IGP as an example. Part B discusses the PLRA requirement that you go through the entire complaint process in your prison before taking your claim to federal court. Part C defines the term "grievance," discusses what kinds of claims are "non-grievable" (meaning that you cannot use the IGP), and provides you with an overview on how to write your grievance. Part D describes the basic structure of the New York IGP. Part E looks closely at the relevant New York DOCCS directives, explaining specific steps to follow when filing a grievance through the New York

* This Chapter was revised by Erin LaFarge based in part on previous versions by Sarah Martinez, Samuel J. Levine, Wendy Lang, Patricia A. Sheehan, and Caroline Lim Starbird.

1. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) ("No action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under section 1983 of this title, or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted.")

2. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 139(1) (McKinney 2014) ("The commissioner shall establish, in each correctional institution under his jurisdiction, grievance resolution committees to resolve grievances of persons within such correctional institution."). This law was enacted in response to the 1971 Attica Prison uprising. The McKay Commission looked into the cause of that uprising and recommended procedures to resolve prison issues through an administrative process. See also Patterson v. Smith, 53 N.Y.2d 98, 101, 423 N.E.2d 23, 25, 440 N.Y.S.2d 600, 602 (1981).

3. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.1(a)–(b) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(a)–(b) (2016). New York Department of Corrections and Community Supervision directives can be found at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/directives.html>. (last visited Nov. 19, 2019). Directives related to inmate grievances can be found under "facility management." Directive 4040 reprints the regulations found in § 701, and Directive 4041 reprints the regulations found in § 702. The rest of the footnotes in this document will cite directly to both the regulations and Directive 4040 or Directive 4041.

4. See Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," to learn how to obtain a copy of these directives through the state Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL") and the federal Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"). In addition, ask the librarian if your prison law library has copies of these directives.

5. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701–702 (2012). Ask the librarian if your prison law library has this code.

6. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee (ILC) (2019). See JLM, Chapter 7 to learn how to obtain a copy of this directive through the state Freedom of Information Law ("FOIL") and the federal Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"). In addition, ask the librarian if your prison law library has a copy of the directive.

IGP. Part F discusses the publication of rules for other states' inmate grievance procedures and how to find these rules.

If you are a foreign national (not a U.S. citizen) and are having problems with prison conditions, or need to contact someone in your home country, you may want to contact your consulate. Consult the JLM Immigration and Consular Access Supplement for more information on how to raise these claims.

B. Exhausting Your Administrative Remedies

The PLRA requires you to go through your prison's entire complaint process before you can bring a federal court claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (a federal law that deals with incarcerated people's complaints).⁷ Therefore, even if you believe that the grievance system in your prison is unfair or pointless, you still have to go through all of the steps of the process to try to resolve your grievance before you file a lawsuit.⁸ In New York, for example, the IGP is not considered exhausted until you receive a final decision on your complaint from the highest grievance committee, such as New York's Central Office Review Committee ("CORC"). If you bring a complaint in federal court under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 without first exhausting administrative remedies, your case will be dismissed, and you might be barred from bringing a future case.⁹ Dismissal for non-exhausted claims is supposed to be "without prejudice," which means that you will be able to come back to court after you have fully pursued your prison's grievance procedures. However, some judges might dismiss a case with prejudice. Dismissal "with prejudice" means that you cannot take that particular issue back to court.

In addition to filing your grievance under federal law, some states allow you to file your grievance under state law, too. In New York, for example, you may challenge the CORC's decision under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.¹⁰ Just like the federal grievance procedures, you may not bring an Article 78 proceeding until you first pursue all administrative remedies available through the IGP.¹¹ Even if the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC") denies your

7. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a). Note that the PLRA exhaustion requirement applies only to cases filed on or after April 26, 1996 (the effective date of the PLRA), including cases where the actions complained of occurred before the enactment. It does not apply to actions or appeals filed before its passage. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 216, 127 S. Ct. 910, 921, 166 L.Ed. 2d 798, 813 (2007) (holding that while incarcerated person's claims can be dismissed because they have not yet been exhausted, there is no requirement that exhaustion be demonstrated in the incarcerated person's pleading); Ancrum v. St. Barnabas Hosp., 301 A.D.2d 474, 475, 755 N.Y.S.2d 28, 31 (1st Dept. 2003) (holding that the PLRA exhaustion requirement applies to all incarcerated people who sue while they are incarcerated—including formerly incarcerated people who are released before a ruling on their suit is issued). See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," for more information on 42 U.S.C. § 1983 actions.

8. If you receive a satisfactory remedy from the IGP, then you will not need to go to court. If you are unsatisfied with the result of the IGP, you may then file a lawsuit in federal court.

9. See Wendell v. Asher, 162 F.3d 887, 892 (5th Cir. 1998) (finding that while incarcerated person's Section 1983 claim was properly dismissed for failure to exhaust administrative remedies, the incarcerated person can still refile his action in district court once he has exhausted his administrative remedies); Wright v. Morris, 111 F.3d 414, 417 n.3 (6th Cir. 1997) (noting that where alleged violations occurred after PLRA's enactment and incarcerated people have both notice that exhaustion is required and a reasonable opportunity to file administrative complaints, the exhaustion requirement is mandatory). However, if the statute of limitations has run on your claim before you return to court, your claim may be permanently barred. See, e.g., Dorsey v. Pa. Dep't of Corr., CIV NO. 1:16-CV-588, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 166728 (M.D. Pa. Nov. 30, 2016) (unpublished) (holding that, where plaintiff "knew or should reasonably have known that she has been injured and that her injury has been caused by another party's conduct" for the duration of the two-year statute of limitations, her PLRA claim was time-barred). In addition, if you are able to bring your claim back to court, you will probably have to pay another filing fee to refile your claim in court.

10. See Chapter 22 of the JLM on Article 78 proceedings. Article 78 proceedings allow you to challenge decisions made by New York administrative bodies or officers, like the Central Office Review Committee.

11. See Patterson v. Smith, 53 N.Y.2d 98, 100–101, 423 N.E.2d 23, 24–25, 440 N.Y.S.2d 600, 601–602 (1981) (dismissing incarcerated person's Article 78 claim because he failed to exhaust prison's grievance procedures); Roberts v. Coughlin, 165 A.D.2d 964, 966, 561 N.Y.S.2d 852, 854 (3d Dept. 1990) (finding Article 78 petition should have been dismissed for failure to exhaust all administrative remedies).

grievance, you still may not bring an Article 78 proceeding until you exhaust all of your administrative remedies.¹² In New York, this means you first have to appeal the IGRC's denial to your prison's superintendent. If your grievance is again denied, you must appeal to the CORC. If the CORC also denies your grievance, only then are you allowed to bring a lawsuit in state court under Article 78. This is because the CORC is the committee designated to provide final review of your claim under the state administrative grievance procedures.¹³

As you go through the inmate grievance procedures, it is important to bring up, from the very beginning, any issues you think you might want to raise in a later lawsuit. If you fail to state a particular claim in your original grievance, a court may later consider this claim "unexhausted." As a result, the court may dismiss this unexhausted claim and hear only the claims that you brought up in your original grievance. Courts are required to hear your exhausted claims and are no longer allowed to dismiss the entire action if only some of the claims are unexhausted.¹⁴ Keep in mind that in order to exhaust all of your claims, you may have to use more than one administrative procedure. For example, you may have to go through one review process for one of your claims and a different review process for another of your claims.¹⁵

If you have exhausted your administrative remedies and wish to file a complaint in federal court, make sure that your complaint states that you have already exhausted all other remedies. Even though the Supreme Court held that plaintiffs are not required to include this in their complaints, stating that you have exhausted all other remedies will help prevent issues down the line.¹⁶

C. Grievances in New York

1. What Grievances Can Be Raised?

A grievance is defined by the New York State DOCCS as "a complaint ... about the substance or application of any written or unwritten policy, regulation, procedure or rule of the Department of Correctional Services or any of its program units, or the lack of a policy, regulation, procedure or rule."¹⁷ You may raise a grievance only if it relates to a situation that affects or will affect you personally.¹⁸ Examples of grievable issues include: prison official retaliation, inadequate medical care, and assignment of prison jobs.¹⁹

12. See People ex rel. Chapman v. Sullivan, 135 A.D.2d 675, 676, 522 N.Y.S.2d 249, 250 (2d Dept. 1987) (holding that petitioners are not entitled to an Article 78 hearing until they have exhausted all administrative remedies); Joyce v. Mann, 190 A.D.2d 922, 922, 593 N.Y.S.2d 579, 579 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding petitioner not entitled to Article 78 relief because he failed to exhaust all administrative remedies).

13. See section D(1)(c) of this chapter for more information about CORC.

14. See Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 202–203, 127 S. Ct. 910, 914, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007) (holding that judicial screening of incarcerated people's complaints requiring total exhaustion is not permitted under the PLRA).

15. For example, in New York, there is a separate claims review process for inmate personal property claims. You need to exhaust this procedure before bringing a personal property claim in court. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1700 (2012).

16. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 202–203, 127 S. Ct. 910, 914, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798 (2007).

17. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(a) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(a) (2016) ("a letter addressed to facility or Central Office staff is not a grievance,").

18. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(b) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(b) (2016). For example, a proper grievance could be a complaint about how a new prison policy negatively affects your day-to-day life. An improper grievance would be a complaint about something that may make you angry or upset, but does not actually affect your day-to-day life.

19. Examples of grievable issues in cases where the courts have required incarcerated people to exhaust administrative remedies include the following: Underwood v. Wilson, 151 F.3d 292, 296 (5th Cir. 1998) (incarcerated person brought Section 1983 suit against prison officials alleging they assigned him to jobs that forced him to perform work beyond his physical capabilities and medical work restrictions); White v. McGinnis, 131 F.3d 593, 594–595 (6th Cir. 1997) (incarcerated person alleged that prison officials retaliated against him

2. Non-Grievable Issues²⁰

An issue is “non-grievable” when the grievance system has no remedy (fix) for it. In other words, the grievance system cannot be used to resolve that type of issue. The PLRA requires that you exhaust the IGP if any remedy is available to you.²¹ This means that you must still go through the IGP even if it cannot give you the exact remedy you want. If no remedy is available through the IGP, you are not required to exhaust the grievance system.²² However, if there is some other administrative remedy for your claim, you will be required to pursue that remedy. For example, although an appeal of a temporary release ruling may be considered non-grievable by the IGP, you will still be required to pursue your appeal using the procedures for the temporary release program.²³

A grievance committee may dismiss and close your grievance as non-grievable if:²⁴

- (1) you have made no effort to resolve the complaint through procedures and officials at your prison;
- (2) you are not or will not be personally affected by the issue you are complaining about;
- (3) your grievance is about the decision of a program with already established procedures, including temporary release programs,²⁵ family reunion programs,²⁶ or media review²⁷ programs, disciplinary proceedings or time allowance committee proceedings,²⁸ central after he filed a lawsuit against another prison official); Barry v. Ratelle, 985 F. Supp. 1235, 1238 (S.D. Cal. 1997) (incarcerated person brought civil rights action against prison officers claiming deliberate indifference to his serious medical needs in violation of his 8th and 14th Amendment rights).

